The second element in the Last Supper scene is a farewell speech. Such speeches were delivered by dying patriarchs encouraging their children to remember their example of faithfulness to the Law and then predicting the childrens’ failures to do so. Luke creates Jesus’s speech out of four independent sayings: (a) oracle against the betrayer (22:21–23); (b) the disciples’ place in the Kingdom (vv. 24–30); (c) prophecy of Peter’s denial and eventual restoration (vv. 31–34), and (d) a saying about two swords (vv. 35–38). Jesus sets an example in his death. The worst sin committed by a disciple is Judas’s betrayal, which is rendered even more heinous by the reminders of God’s covenant associated with the meal.

Division and backsliding are set themes in betrayal stories. Luke relocates a dispute about greatness from the approach to Jerusalem in Mark's narrative (see Mk 10:42–45) to the Supper, to form a contrast with Jesus's example as "one who serves" (22:27). The sayings critique benefactor and client obligations that dominated social relationships in ancient society (vv. 22–25). Jesus's earlier instructions to invite persons to your banquet who cannot repay you rather than invite those, like you, who can afford it, and Jesus's own appearance as slave rather than master, provide additional illustrations of status reversal in the Kingdom.

Beyond the ominous events of Jesus's death, Judas's betrayal, and Peter's denial, the discourse presents images of fulfillment. The Twelve who stand by Jesus will occupy the twelve thrones of the tribes of Israel. (Judas will be replaced; see Acts 1:15–26.) The meal anticipates a future celebration with Jesus in glory—a communal celebration with Jesus, not the ranked banquets of those whose idea of greatness Jesus rejects. Before this banquet can occur, Jesus must suffer to enter glory. Satan makes the threatened return (4:13) in leading Judas to betrayal (22:3) and in testing Peter through his temptation to deny Jesus. Jesus's prayer prevents the sifting of the disciples from being more severe (22:31f; for sifting as an act of judgment see Am 9:9). This perception that the future will be more difficult than during Jesus's life appears in the saying about the swords. Jesus cancels the earlier rules against taking provisions (22:35–36; see also 10:1–12), meaning that missionaries may now provide themselves with purse, knapsack, and sandals.

Arrest of Jesus (22:39–53)

Jesus demonstrates his fidelity to God as obedient Son in prayer before his Passion. Luke deflects criticism of the disciples for failing to stay awake by alluding to their grief. They are warned that they must pray to avoid being tested. Jesus exhibits his freedom from fear in his words to those who come to seize him. He is no robber in hiding. They could have taken him publicly in the Temple, but the present hour of darkness is permitted by God's plan (v. 53).

Trial of Jesus (22:54–23:25)

Fulfillment of Jesus's predictions proves that God's will, not the plan of his enemies, is reflected in the events of Jesus's death. Luke puts the story of Peter's denial before the Sanhedrin trial begins. Jesus reminds Peter of the earlier prediction by looking at him; Peter breaks down in tears. When Jesus's captors challenge him to prophesy as a form of mockery (22:64), readers know from the denial episode that Jesus is a true prophet. Luke does not present a legal trial by Jewish authorities. False accusations and the verdict were fixed before the Passion story began (22:1–5). Jesus responds to the question about his messiahship with a judgment saying about the Son of Man. The Sanhedrin concludes that Jesus claims to be "Son of God" (22:66–71). Readers know (22:42) that Jesus will suffer death as the obedient Son of the Father.

Luke has Pilate insist that Jesus was innocent of the charges of stirring up political rebellion used to secure his death. Since the charges alleged that Jesus was responsible for unrest "from Galilee where he began even to here" (23:5), the account clears Jesus from guilt in Galilee by having him appear before Herod (vv. 6–12). That scene represents the climax of the earlier notices of Herod's reactions to Jesus, which shifted from fascination to opposition (9:9; 13:31–33). Herod desires a miracle, but is confronted with a silent prisoner who is the object of violent accusations and mockery. Ironically, the incident creates peace between the old enemies, Herod and Pilate (v. 12). Even though Pilate recognizes Jesus's innocence, the crowd pressures him into handing Jesus over for crucifixion. As Luke tells the story, the leaders who orchestrated Jesus's death are really the ones fostering rebellion. They secure the release of a known murderer and rebel (23:25).

Crucifixion and Burial of Jesus (23:26–56a)

As he is led to his death, Jesus prophesies the terrible fate awaiting Jerusalem once more (23:26–32; 19:41–44). Scorned as a criminal, Jesus is able to offer salvation to the repentant sinner (23:39–43). The crowd challenges Jesus to save himself from death, which, as it turns out, is the entry into paradise for both himself and those who repent and are forgiven (see 22:28–30; the disciples who feast with Jesus in the Kingdom are those who have endured with him in his trials). This episode shows that God's mercy can be experienced even in the midst of brutal hostility. Apocalyptic signs accompany Jesus's death, which is witnessed by the women and other followers from Galilee. The centurion proclaims Jesus's innocence while the crowd laments (23:44–48).

Joseph, a member of the Council, buries Jesus as an act of piety. He represents the righteous of Israel who sought the Kingdom of God (v. 51). The women prepare to anoint the body, but they are interrupted by the Sabbath. The burial scene has Jesus buried with honor, not like a criminal, in a place known to his followers. When the women return to complete the anointing, there can be no possibility that they have mistaken the place of burial.

Resurrection of Jesus (23:56b–24:53)

Jesus's departs from earth into God's presence in Jerusalem on the third day (24:21, 51). Luke has created a sequence of three scenes from earlier stories about the empty tomb and mealtime appearances of the Risen Lord. Luke arranges these scenes so that each one adds to meaning of resurrection faith. The Gospel concludes with the disciples offering prayer and praise in Jerusalem while waiting for the Holy Spirit to initiate the next stage in the drama of salvation, the spread of the Gospel from Jerusalem to the whole world.

The Women at the Tomb (23:56b–24:12)

The first scene opens when the women return to the tomb. Angels chide them for seeking the living among the dead (cf. 20:38). Instead of the simple proclamation of the Easter faith found in Mark 16:6b, Luke's angels remind the women of Jesus's predictions of the Passion and resurrection. The women report that the angels said Jesus was alive (24:22f). Whenever Luke repeats variants of a scene, the subsequent accounts expand on hints in the first version.

Jesus Appears on the Road to Emmaus (24:13–35)

Confirmation of the women's report about the tomb had not yet led to the disciples seeing the Risen Lord (24:24). In the second scene, Luke introduces a folktale motif: encounters with a divine being disguised as a stranger who must be shown hospitality. The stranger picks up the angelic reminder that Jesus had predicted his death, and interprets Moses and the Prophets as evidence that a suffering Messiah was God's plan. Then a new theme is introduced: the manifestation of Jesus in the breaking of bread. (Jn 21:1–14 contains a variant of the manifestation of Jesus in the guise of a stranger at a meal.) The Messiah has suffered, entered into glory, and now renews his presence to the disciples.

Jesus Appears to the Disciples in Jerusalem (24:36–43)

Luke knows the tradition that Jesus had appeared to Peter (24:34; see 1 Cor 15:5) but recounts only the appearance to the disciples at a meal. The third appearance confirms the fact that the Jesus who appears is the crucified one, raised up by God, not some ghost or other psychic phenomenon. The body that was missing from the tomb has been taken up by the risen Jesus.

Bodily transformation distinguishes Christian belief in resurrection from theories about the immortality of the soul or reincarnation. Neither near-death experiences nor so-called psychic phenomena provide support for our Christian faith in resurrection.

Jesus Commissions the Disciples (24:44–49)

In the third scene, as in the previous two, Luke repeats the conviction that the Messiah had to suffer and die to fulfill Scripture (vv. 44–46). The final story then introduces a central element in all resurrection appearance stories: commissioning the recipients. Resurrection appearances point to the future mission of the disciples and the founding of Christian communities in which Jesus remains present. The commission in verses 47–49 is a prelude to the story of the first apostles, which Luke will tell in Acts. The disciples' mission to preach repentance and baptism to all nations in Jesus's name, beginning from Jerusalem, continues the preaching that occurred during Jesus's ministry and reflects a new stage in salvation history. (Mt 28:19f reports a variant tradition in which the disciples are to make disciples of the nations, baptizing them, and teaching them to observe Jesus's teaching.)

Jesus Departs (24:50–53)

The ending of the Gospel enacts the departure that Jesus discussed with Moses and Elijah (9:31), as well as showing the Son of Man in glory at the right hand of God (22:69). Jesus's resurrection appearances are understood to be from his place of glory with God (24:26). The stories have introduced ways in which Jesus will now be present to the church, through the Spirit promised by the Father (v. 49), and in the breaking of the bread (v. 35). The church's mission will be to take Jesus's teaching throughout the world.

Things We Have Learned from Luke

Jesus Is Savior for All Peoples

From the very beginning, Luke shows that the hopes that poor, weak, suffering, righteous persons have are fulfilled in the coming of Jesus. The Gospel shows that women as well as men; foreigners and Gentiles as well as Israelites; sick, weak, sinful, and despised persons as well as the well-off and respected people can come to Jesus. God seeks to reverse the situation of the poor and suffering. Consequently, Jesus comes as a suffering-servant Messiah, not as a liberator or king, who will take his place with the powerful of this world. Jesus's parables reveal that the love and mercy of God prompts this gift of salvation.

Disciples Participate in the Mission of Jesus

The disciples do not simply preach about Jesus or the Kingdom of God, they also participate in the reversal of roles, status, and concerns that characterize the reign of God. Some disciples renounce everything that ties them to the social structures of the world. Others use their material resources in ways quite different from those around them. They do not seek exchanges between friends, which would create obligations to reciprocate. They do not try to pile up wealth or to indulge themselves and their friends in consuming luxurious goods. Their lives are not dominated by concern for acquiring and preserving material things. Instead, they aid people who will never be able to repay them. They give away wealth to meet the needs of other people.

Their only "anxiety" is acquiring heavenly treasure. All disciples are willing to follow Jesus's example of suffering service rather than demanding that others honor and serve them.

Prayer and Worship Are the Center of Christian Life

Even acts of mercy and compassion would not establish a relationship with God if people did not praise God in worship and ask God's assistance in meeting the challenges that the life of discipleship poses. Throughout the Gospel, Jesus provides the example. He worships with others in the synagogue and withdraws for prayer at critical moments. The disciples turn to prayer and praise after the Resurrection. Luke also contains examples of prayer in the Lord's Prayer and the canticles of the infancy narrative. Jesus warned his disciples in Gethsemane that they should pray to be spared testing, a reminder of the last petition of the Lord's Prayer. In Acts, the early community will continue to follow the example set by Jesus.

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

The Fourth Gospel has a double conclusion. After the Resurrection stories in Jerusalem, we are told that Jesus did many other signs but that those presented in the gospel are to promote belief in Jesus as Son of God (20:30f). After the Resurrection stories in Galilee, readers learn that the Beloved Disciple, who has since died (21:23), was the source of the Johannine tradition. All the things Jesus did could not be written down (21:24f). Expanded or revised editions of a book were not uncommon in antiquity. Both conclusions remind readers that the Gospel has been written to inspire and confirm their faith in Jesus.

Composition of the Fourth Gospel

The double ending indicates that John's Gospel went through two editions. Other additions to the narrative and awkward transitions between sections support this conclusion (see introduction to John, NABRE). For example, John 14:31 brings the discourse to an end. Yet the Gospel we possess contains three more chapters of discourse. Further, Jesus is identified with great religious symbols like light, life, water, bread, shepherd, and vine. The Gospel assumes that its readers will recognize that these symbols have roots in the Hebrew Scriptures. This symbolic way of speaking about Jesus probably developed within a community of Christians which included the Beloved Disciple, plus followers who compiled the final edition of the Gospel, and another teacher who wrote the Johannine letters.

The Fourth Gospel and the Other Gospels

John is very different from the other Gospels. For example, Jesus speaks in long symbolic discourses, not in short sayings, parables, and episodes that end with a saying of the Lord. The only ethical teaching in the Fourth Gospel is the love command. There are also major differences between John and the other gospels in the order of events. John pictures Jesus's ministry extending over three Passovers, not the one year ministry in the other gospels. The cleansing of the Temple comes at the beginning (2:13–22), not at the end of Jesus’s ministry. Jesus’s death is attributed to the following that he gained when he restored Lazarus to life. In addition John attaches symbolic discourses to miracles so that the miracle reveals Jesus’s relationship to God. Most scholars think that John draws on traditions about Jesus that were independent of those preserved in the Synoptic Gospels (Matthew, Mark, Luke), though a minority hold that the evangelist knew one or more of them or at least had contact with a pre-synoptic stream of tradition about Jesus.

Symbols, Irony, and Misunderstanding

Because the Fourth Gospel uses symbols to demonstrate that Jesus is the unique Son of God, no one who takes Jesus’s words literally can understand the truth about Jesus (see the rejection of literal understandings of Jesus’s words and deeds in 3:4–10; 4:10–15; 6:26–33). The reader knows the true meaning of Jesus’s words when the characters in the story do not. Studies of the ways in which communal response and memory formed an active part in the composition of works in antiquity point out that the symbols and misunderstandings provide dramatic possibilities. They challenge the hearers to fill in the puzzle.

The Fourth Gospel and the Jews

Though some Jews, like Nicodemus, are sympathetic to Jesus (3:1–11; 7:50–52; 12:42), the Gospel often uses the expression “the Jews” as a symbol for all those who oppose Jesus. They display a murderous desire to kill God’s envoy and will be condemned by the patriarchs and Moses, who testify to Jesus (Moses, 5:41–47; Abraham, 8:48–59). The Gospel mentions expulsion of Christian Jews from the synagogues, referred to in John 9:27 and 16:1–4a (see introduction). Though there is no historical evidence for a general expulsion of Jesus believers from Jewish synagogues at the end of the first century, memory of a traumatic local event may be responsible for this acrimony.

John often does not distinguish the various Jewish groups, such as Sadducees, Herodians, scribes, lawyers, and Pharisees. He often speaks of “the Jews” as a general term for “the bad guys” in the story. This usage creates a tension between the fact that Jesus and his followers were Jews and the pejorative word “Jews” as a dramatic role in the story. John 18:35–36 illustrates this tension. Pilate treats Jesus with scorn because Jesus is a Jew, handed over by fellow Jews. Jesus’s answer distinguishes himself and his followers from “the Jews,” that is, those opposed to him. John is not making a theological statement about the Jewish people when using “the Jews” in the role of “bad guys.” The Vatican has reminded Catholics that anti-Semitism is one of the worst forms of racism. In the past people have not distinguished between John’s use of “the Jews” as characters and the Jewish people. In order to avoid confusion, it might be appropriate to substitute another phrase like “Jesus’s enemies” or a more literal rendering of the term used for “the Jews,” “the Judeans,” when retelling the Johannine story for an audience such as children that cannot make the distinction easily between “the Jews” as characters in a story and their Jewish neighbors.

READING THROUGH JOHN

John uses symbols, irony, and misunderstanding repeatedly. Characters who interact with Jesus are at different levels of understanding as to who Jesus is. The disciples begin with faith that Jesus fulfills the messianic promises to Israel, but this faith is not yet knowledge of Jesus as the revelation of God. Their faith must be completed by the post-Resurrection process of coming to understand Jesus, the perspective which the evangelist shares with the readers (16:25). Jewish sympathizers and the crowds have a vague idea that Jesus might be “from God” or even be the Messiah. John often divides the opinions of the crowd in two. One opinion is wrong or literal-minded; the other is partially correct (12:27–29). Unlike the Jewish crowds, who sometimes accept Jesus, “the Jews,” as religious authorities hostile to Jesus, reject all testimony to the truth that Jesus comes from God. Those authorities are the ones responsible for his death.

Signs and Faith in the Fourth Gospel

John’s account of miracles relies on symbolism (see introduction). Taken literally, miracles cannot lead a person to faith (2:23–25), but seen as “signs” pointing to Jesus’s identity with God, his “glory” (2:11), they are the beginning point for faith. John attaches discourses, which interpret the symbolic meaning of four of the miracles. The symbols of life, light, and bread point to Jesus as the source of eternal life for all who believe.

Today, people continue to wonder about miracles and faith. Jesus was well known as a healer. The Gospels insist that Jesus used his healing power to bring people closer to God. He never used miracles to enrich himself. Even though miracles can be a sign that God is working through Jesus, they can also be a trap. Sometimes people try bargaining: if God will heal them or help them out of a jam, then they will become faithful Christians. John points out that faith is not based solely on miracles. Our relationship with God is based on what Jesus has shown us about God's love for the world. Sometimes God will express love by a miraculous healing, but we should not think that miracles are anything more than a small sign of God's greatness.

Dualism in the Fourth Gospel

The Gospel uses several dualistic expressions, such as light/dark, life/death, from above (heavenly)/from below (earthly), not judged/condemned. They illuminate a process of division that occurs within the story. Persons confronted with Jesus's word either believe and become children of God who will inherit eternal life, or they reject Jesus and are condemned by God. This dualism makes the gospel sound harsh. There is no middle ground between belief and unbelief (12:44–50). Believers are united with Jesus and the Father. They even experience the larger world as hostile (15:1–27). Dualistic imagery and a negative picture of the nonbelieving world often appear in sectarian groups. The notes in the NABRE point out significant parallels between Johannine symbols and those used by the sectarian Jewish community at Qumran.

Belief and Eternal Life

Christians usually think of salvation or eternal life as a reward that comes when they join Jesus in heaven (14:2f; 17:24) or when Jesus returns to judge the world (5:27–29). John retains this traditional language but introduces a new perspective on salvation. Belief brings persons into unity with Jesus. Therefore, they can be said to have passed through death to life (5:24–26; 3:16–21). Those who reject Jesus are already condemned. Judgment really occurs when Jesus, who has come into the world as light, is accepted or rejected. Though various witnesses provide testimony—the Baptist, Scripture, and the deeds which Jesus does—the believer must accept Jesus's word about God. Only Jesus comes from heaven to reveal God (3:31–36).

Jesus as God in the Fourth Gospel

The Gospel presents Jesus “from above” by identifying him with the Word, which is always present to God and through which God created the world (1:1–5). John defends the claim that Jesus is equal to God in functional terms: (1) Jesus makes God known; (2) Jesus exercises functions attributed to God, giving life and judging; (3) humans ought to respond to Jesus with the honor appropriate to God. John also emphasizes the special Father/Son relationship between Jesus and God. Jesus is obedient to the mission the Father has given him. Jesus's death will be a sign of God's love for humanity. The disputes between Jesus and “the Jews” (chaps. 5–12) turn on the issue of Jesus's relationship to God. This section ends with the ironic fact that Jesus's opponents seek to kill the source of life.

AN OUTLINE OF JOHN

The plot of the Fourth Gospel follows a pattern of descent and ascent. Jesus comes into the world from the Father seeking “his own,” those who will believe. Then, Jesus confronts the world. His ministry separates believers from unbelievers. The hostility of unbelief leads to the “hour” of Jesus's crucifixion, which John treats as an exaltation. At his death Jesus returns to the glory that he had enjoyed with the Father from the beginning. The Gospel is clearly divided into two parts: first, the account of Jesus's confrontation with the world, which scholars refer to as the “book of signs” (chaps. 1 through 12); and second, the account of Jesus's return to the Father when the destined hour arrives, referred to as the “book of glory” (chaps. 13 through 20).

- Prologue (1:1–18). A hymnic section introduces us to Jesus as God's Word, which has come into the world.

- The Book of Signs (1:19–12:50). Jesus's confrontation with the world represents God's judgment against unbelief. This section falls into two parts:

- Gathering Witnesses to Jesus (1:19–4:54). Jesus demonstrates his glory to disciples and others who will believe in him before the confrontation with unbelief begins.

Confrontation with the World (5:1–12:50). The light has come into the world for judgment. Jesus confronts those who refuse to believe with testimony to his divine origin.

- The Book of Glory (13:1–20:31). Jesus's whole life has been moving toward the hour of his glorification and return to the Father. This section falls into two parts:

Preparing the Disciples for the Hour (13:1–17:26). At the Last Supper, Jesus delivers lengthy discourses about his return to the Father and its meaning for the disciples.

Jesus's Arrest, Crucifixion, and Resurrection (18:1–20:31). John understands the crucifixion as the moment of Jesus's life-giving exaltation and return to the Father.

- Epilogue: Resurrection Appearance in Galilee (21:1–25). A second conclusion reports further appearances of Jesus and points toward the destiny of two leading disciples, Peter and the Beloved Disciple.

Now it is time to read through the Gospel. Notice the symbols and the sharp divisions between characters in the story. Remember that John wrote to encourage faith in Jesus as Son of God, because that faith is the source of eternal life. What happens to faith in each episode? Why do some characters move toward a more complete faith in Jesus while others pull away and become hostile?

THE PROLOGUE (1:1–18)

A Hymn to the Divine Word

The introduction to John is different from the other Gospels. It begins even before creation, recalling the opening words of Genesis in which God creates the world by speaking. John presents a new insight about the divine Word. The Word is not simply speech or a power that God can use to create. The Word actually became known in a person, Jesus. We speak of the Incarnation, of God becoming human. This idea of God is the special revelation of Christianity. It differs from the monotheism of Judaism and Islam, which insists that the unity of God cannot be shared. The claim that Jesus can be spoken of as God is at the core of the controversies in the Fourth Gospel. The Gospel's prologue speaks about God under two distinct aspects, God as the ultimate source of all things (that is, the Father) and the Word, through whom God creates and sustains the world and guides humans (that is, the Son). Later in the Gospel we will also learn that the Spirit comes from God to those who believe. Christians believe that the Father, Son, and Spirit are three distinct persons that make up the one God.

Many of the verses in the prologue have a poetic quality made up of short parallel lines that employ the symbols of life, light, darkness, and glory. But other verses use the narrator's voice to describe John the Baptist as witness to the light (1:6–8, 15). Still other verses speak in the first person plural of what "we" have received from the coming of the light (vv. 12, 14b, 16). "We" means the Christian community that believes in Jesus. They have received the power to become children of God (v. 12). Many scholars think that the poetic verses belonged to an early hymn, which John has used for the introduction. The NABRE prints these verses in a poetic form to distinguish them from the prose comments that the author inserted to create the introduction.

Salvation, a Gift from the Word

This opening makes it clear that only those people who receive Jesus as the incarnate Word can attain salvation. The Word actually existed before anything was created, but people may still fail to receive the Word when it comes to them. The Prologue contains hints about the fate of the light when it comes into our world. People who should have received Jesus, do not.

But those who do, receive the grace of becoming children of God and coming to know God as revealed by Jesus. The contrast between the Law that came through Moses and the “grace and truth,” probably a rendering of the Hebrew expression for God’s love and fidelity to the covenant (see note to 1:14), anticipates the conflict between Jesus and the Jewish leaders. Jesus will establish a new covenant between God and those people who come to believe in him.

THE BOOK OF SIGNS (1:19–12:50)

John uses the word “signs” to emphasize the symbolic role of Jesus’s miracles in pointing to Jesus’s true, divine origin. In order to understand the truth revealed by the signs, a person must think of their symbolic reality, not of the literal words or events. The “Jews,” that is, Jesus’s opponents, will be portrayed as persons who are unable to see the symbolic truth of Jesus’s words.

Gathering Witnesses to Jesus (1:19–4:54)

The Prologue told us that the Baptist was sent to testify to Jesus. He opens this section with that testimony (1:19–34). Although there are hints of hostility to come, the first four chapters are generally positive. Jesus gathers followers who believe in his divine mission.

John Testifies to Jesus (1:19–34)

The Baptist testifies to two different groups of officials that he is not the Messiah. He is preparing the way for the one who is coming (1:19–28). The Synoptic Gospels contain a scene in which Jesus is baptized and then hears God announce to him that he is God’s beloved Son (see Mk 1:9–11). Jesus has no need of such a revelation in the Fourth Gospel. The evangelist transforms the traditional scene into another example of testimony about Jesus. The Baptist sees the Spirit descend from heaven like a dove and remain on Jesus. God has given him that sign to identify the Messiah, who will baptize with the Spirit and will take away the sin of the world (1:29–34).

Jesus Gathers Disciples (1:35–51)

A series of brief scenes shows Jesus gathering additional disciples. They follow a set pattern. Persons who come to Jesus through the testimony of others have their own experience with Jesus, which makes them his disciples. The Baptist sends Jesus the first disciples (vv. 35–37). Notice that this chapter is collecting all of the titles that early Christians used for Jesus: Lamb of God (v. 36); Messiah (v. 41); the one predicted by Moses and the prophets (v. 45); Son of God (v. 49); King of Israel (v. 49); and Son of Man (v. 51). The final verse is enigmatic. It recalls the story of the ladder, which Jacob saw in a dream vision (Gn 28:12). But Jesus as the heavenly figure, the Son of Man, has replaced the ladder connecting earth and heaven. According to John's gospel, no one sees God except through Jesus (see 1:18).

Cana Miracle Manifests His Glory (2:1–12)

Now that he has gathered disciples, Jesus's first miracle shows them his divine glory. The defining revelation of Jesus's glory, however, cannot come until the Crucifixion. Therefore, Jesus first appears to reject his mother's request (vv. 4f). A wedding feast symbolized the time of rejoicing to follow God's judgment. Jesus has provided the wine for such a feast. As the story proceeds Jesus replaces many important Jewish feasts and customs. By the time this gospel was composed Christians no longer followed those traditional Jewish patterns of worship. Here, Jesus replaces the water, which was to be used for ritual purification.

Cleansing of the Temple (2:13–25)

Unlike the Synoptic Gospels, which include only one visit to Jerusalem in Jesus's ministry, John has three different Passover visits as well as episodes during other feasts. The other Gospels link the cleansing of the Temple with the Passover at the time of Jesus's death. John puts that episode at the beginning of his public activity. It enables the evangelist to tell the Christian reader that Jesus will also replace the Temple. The evangelist reminds readers that Jesus's disciples could not have understood the saying until after the Resurrection (2:22). The end of the chapter warns against faith that is based simply on miracles (vv. 23–25). Many attracted by Jesus's miracles will not remain faithful.

Dialogue with Nicodemus (3:1–21)

The next two dialogues, with Nicodemus and with the Samaritan woman, employ the technique of misunderstanding in which the person with whom Jesus converses provokes further comment by taking Jesus's words literally. Notice that Jesus always responds with an even more difficult statement than the one that provoked the original misunderstanding. In this case, Jesus's words appear to leave Nicodemus clueless, but Nicodemus will reappear as someone sympathetic to Jesus (7:50–52) who will also be present at the burial of Jesus (19:39). Since Jewish writings also speak of a cleansing of the righteous by the Holy Spirit, Nicodemus might have been expected to understand that Jesus was speaking about a rebirth “from above,” that is, through the Spirit rather than “again” (see note to 3:3). John’s Christian readers probably saw an allusion to baptism in the reference to entering the Kingdom through being reborn. The verbal exchange marks a clear distinction between the teacher of Israel who cannot even understand the idea of spiritual rebirth, and Jesus who is, in fact, the very source of life.

A sudden shift to the plural “we” and “you people” echoes the confrontation between Christians and their synagogue opponents in the evangelist’s time (v. 11). Verses 12–15 follow a pattern similar to 1:50f. Belief on the basis of some “earthly” sign is challenged by the heavenly reality, revealed in Jesus. In both cases a saying about the Son of Man represents the higher truth. Drawing upon the story of Moses lifting up a bronze serpent in the wilderness (Nm 21:9), the evangelist asserts that Jesus will have to be “lifted up” (on the cross) to become a source of eternal life for all believers. Verses 16–21 speak to the Christian reader about the coming of Jesus. Elsewhere in the Gospel “world” is a negative symbol for those who are hostile to the Word. Here the world refers to all humans as the object of God’s love. Though darkness did not overcome the light (1:5), humanity can still reject the light. The passage offers one explanation for the tragic fact that people will prefer darkness to light; they would rather hide their evil ways than “live the truth,” a Semitic expression for following the will of God revealed in the Law.

This human tendency to “prefer darkness to light” is just as evident in situations calling for radical moral or personal reform today. For example, people addicted to drugs or alcohol find that the most difficult step is breaking their habitual denial of the problem. It can seem that they would rather destroy their lives and those of others than accept help. Certainly, we should not write off people who need our help, but this passage shows us that we cannot always expect positive results.

Jesus and John the Baptist (3:22–4:3)

The Baptist again testifies to Jesus as the one to come. The saying about the Bridegroom appears in the Synoptic Gospels as part of an exchange over fasting. John's disciples fast while Jesus's do not (see Mk 2:18–19). In John's Gospel the emphasis lies on the identity of the two men. The Baptist's role ends once he has given witness to Jesus. Verse 27 points to the importance of grace in the Gospel: no one can have anything that God has not given to that person. Verses 3:31–36 summarize the entire chapter. The Son has been given “everything” by the Father (v. 35). His mission is to give the Spirit—or eternal life—to those who believe (vv. 33f, 36). The contrast between the “one from heaven,” who testifies to the truth and speaks the words of God, and those who belong to earth, who reject the Son, returns to the motif of the coming of the Son as the critical time of judgment (v. 36b).

The Samaritan Woman (4:4–42)

John has divided this story into scenes that progressively reveal the truth about Jesus and his mission. Jesus comes to be known as greater than the patriarch Jacob, who met his future wife at a well. Legend had it that in the new age, the water would bubble to the top of Jacob's well so that people did not have to labor at drawing water. Jesus is more than a messiah figure who would vindicate the Jews by exalting Jerusalem. Jesus is more than the prophet like Moses whom the Samaritans expected to establish their version of the Law and place of worship against the claims of their Judean neighbors. Readers know that when Jesus speaks of a gift of living (that is, flowing) water, he speaks symbolically of the gift of the Spirit (3:8). The woman persists in treating Jesus's words literally until the enigmatic reference to her marital status persuades her that Jesus is a prophet. When Jesus responds to her challenge to settle the old dispute between Jews and Samaritans over where to worship God by speaking of worship in “Spirit and truth,” Jesus is alluding to himself as the replacement of the Temple (see 2:13–22). The woman finally accepts Jesus as Messiah. Like the disciples in chapter 1, she puts that insight into action by bringing others to Jesus (v. 29).

Jesus's dialogue with his disciples about mission and harvest (4:31–38) indicates that, like the woman, they too are sent to preach to others. Along with the previous episode, in which Jesus was said to be baptizing more people than the Baptist (4:1), this story shows that Jesus could evoke faith by conversing with people. The hostile controversies of the next section might otherwise give the impression that Jesus's mission was largely a failure. The large numbers of Samaritans who come to Jesus indicate the truth of Jesus's words to the disciples about the rich harvest. The story concludes with the ringing affirmation that Jesus is "Savior of the world."

Healing the Royal Official's Son (4:43–54)

The section on gathering followers concludes with a second miracle in Cana. Jesus's word spoken at a distance is enough to heal the official's son (4:53). Now that Jesus's identity as the Son sent from God to save the world has been established, the story line shifts to confrontations between Jesus and those who do not believe.

Confrontation with the World (5:1–12:50)

The hostile confrontations in this section of the Gospel do not represent failure, since the narrative is driving toward the hour of Jesus's exaltation and return to the Father. Jesus succeeds in gathering as children of God those persons who believe his words despite all the obstacles that others put in their way.

Healing on the Sabbath: Jesus Gives Life and Judges (5:1–47)

The tradition that Jesus provoked hostility among religious leaders by healing a paralyzed man on the Sabbath and associating that healing with the forgiveness of sins is well established in the tradition (see Mk 2:1–12). John uses the discourse that follows such a miracle to lay out what the real issue is: Jesus's claim to equality with God (5:16–18). Opposing teachers could appeal to the Law of Moses to argue that no human being can claim to do things which are God's alone, to give life to the dead and to judge (see notes to 5:21, 22). In John's view the decisive encounter with Jesus is the moment of judgment (see vv. 24–26). Jesus defends his claim to give life and judge by appealing to the special relationship he enjoys with God. As "Son," Jesus does what the Father has given him to do. He does not act on his own authority (v. 30). Furthermore, those who question his behavior should consider the witnesses on his behalf: the Baptist (vv. 31–35), the deeds which God has enabled him to do (v. 36), and the witness that God has given through Scripture (vv. 37–39). Jesus accuses his opponents of failing to acknowledge that he is from God because they are not really concerned with the glory that belongs to God. They are only interested in the honor they receive from other people. He warns them that their confidence in Moses is misplaced. Moses witnesses to Jesus and will condemn anyone who rejects that testimony (vv. 40–47).

Jesus Is the Bread from Heaven (6:1–71)

Chapter 6 is based upon a traditional cycle of material that included the feeding of the multitude, calming the storm at sea, a demand that Jesus give people a sign, a challenge to Jesus based on his human origins, and Peter's confession of faith in Jesus as Messiah. John reshapes this material by including a lengthy discourse on Jesus as the bread of life, which has come down from heaven (vv. 22–59). Those who fail to see the symbolism of the feeding miracle or who focus on earthly facts about Jesus will not receive Jesus as the bread of life. Just as Jesus had promised the Samaritan woman a gift of water that would lead to eternal life, he now promises bread that will give life to the believer. But the "Jews" are going to copy the behavior of their ancestors, who murmured against Moses. John explains that those who do come to believe in Jesus have been brought to him by God (vv. 37–39, 44f). The comment that Jesus will not cast out those who come to him (v. 37) probably refers to Christians who had been expelled from local synagogues by officials. That experience is mentioned in the story of the blind man (9:22).

Jesus's words are the source of eternal life in the first part of the discourse. Christian tradition associates the manna and the "bread of life" with the Eucharist. This tradition appears in 6:51–59. It is necessary to consume the life-giving bread and wine, the flesh and blood of Jesus. This meal establishes a special relationship between Jesus and the believer: they "abide in" one another. Just as the Father is the source of Jesus's life, so Jesus becomes the source of life for the Christian. Consequently receiving eternal life is not the result simply of thinking that Jesus is God's Son. It requires an entirely new relationship with God that becomes possible in Jesus. John 6:51–58 places the Eucharist at the center of that relationship. If Jesus's words about eating his flesh and drinking his blood were taken literally, they would be a blasphemous participation in a human sacrifice.

Even if Jesus's audience understood that Jesus was speaking symbolically, they might be horrified at the idea that Jesus could identify himself with God so closely.

The chapter concludes with a shocking reaction among some of Jesus's followers: these words were too difficult for many to accept. Faced with the possibility of abandoning Jesus, Peter confesses that there is no one else to whom they could turn. Only Jesus has the words of eternal life.

Conflict and Division at the Feast of Tabernacles (7:1–8:59)

The episodes in this section occur at the Feast of Tabernacles and at an unnamed feast that follows it. The symbolism of light and water were part of the Tabernacles ritual, and Jesus uses them to express his identity (7:37–39; 8:12). Throughout the section officials are seeking Jesus's death even when they deny that fact (7:1, 19f, 25; 8:39f). Jesus is accused of “leading the people astray.” He is also accused of being possessed by a demon. Since it is not yet Jesus's hour, however, attempts to arrest (7:32, 44), legally condemn (7:45–52), and stone (8:59) Jesus fail. Several scenes picture divided opinions among the crowd. These scenes may be intended to provide readers with answers to common Jewish objections against Jesus: (a) Jesus did not keep the Law in healing on the Sabbath, but the Law permits activities like circumcision on the Sabbath (7:19–24); (b) Jesus's origins make it impossible for him to be the Messiah, yet Jesus's real origins are “from heaven,” and the signs he has done testify to that fact (7:25–31, 40–44); (c) Jesus is not an established teacher of the Law, yet Jesus has received his words and teaching from God so that he does not seek personal glory as human teachers do (7:15–18).

Jesus begins to prepare the reader for his departure. He speaks of it in a symbolic way, which the crowd cannot fully understand. Jesus will go to a place where they cannot follow him (7:32–36). The crowd thinks that Jesus will go to the Jewish communities outside Palestine. There is a symbolic truth in that statement: Christianity will spread in those communities. Or, perhaps, Jesus intends to commit the blasphemous act of killing himself (8:21f). The ironic truth of that statement is that Jesus will give up his life on behalf of others. He predicts that when his enemies have executed him, they will find that Jesus is the one who comes from the Father. Jesus even bears the divine name “I am” (8:28). The bitter conflict between Jesus and the Jewish leaders in chapter 8 repeats this identification of Jesus with God's divine "I am" in a dispute over descent from Abraham. Those who seek to kill Jesus cannot be descendants of Abraham, since what Abraham saw and rejoiced in was Jesus. Therefore, they are branded children of Satan (8:39–59). The story acknowledges the difficulty of Jesus's words. He is asking us to identify a human being with the God revealed to Abraham and to Moses.

The Blind Man Believes in Jesus (9:1–41)

This story shows how a blind man moved from the miracle by which Jesus gave him sight to true faith in Jesus as the one who has come from God. He does so as the religious authorities pressure him to condemn Jesus. In resisting their interrogation, the man comes to recognize clearly that Jesus cannot be a sinner, but must have come from God. Fear that "Jews" (= authorities) expel them from the synagogue keeps the man's parents from testifying (9:22f). At one level, the story may incorporate experiences suffered by some in the Johannine community. Jesus reappears at the end of the story to show the man his identity and condemn the blindness of the Jewish leaders (vv. 39–41).

True Shepherd Gives His Life (10:1–42)

Readers were told early on that Jesus's death reflects God's love for the world (3:16). Religious authorities in the story alleged that Jesus deserves death for leading people astray (7:45–52). Here, parables of the shepherd and his sheep demonstrate that Jesus is the true leader of the people—at least for those whom God has enabled to respond to his call (10:1–30). Jesus will even give his life for the sheep, something that none of the hired hands who claim authority over the people will do. This Johannine image echoes the portrayal of the leaders as false shepherds in Ezekiel 34. Offended by his claim to identity with God (vv. 30–39), the crowd again tries to stone Jesus. Highlighting earlier failures to take Jesus's life shows readers that Jesus's death is a free offering on his part, not a victory for those allied against him (vv. 17f).

Raising Lazarus: Gift of Life Means Death (11:1–57)

John has used the raising of Lazarus to bring out the irony of what the religious leaders are seeking to do. In many ways, this final miracle sums up Jesus's entire mission. Jesus is the source of life (vv. 24–26), yet they hope to silence Jesus by killing him. The Lazarus episode also reminds Christians that anyone who believes that Jesus is resurrection and life, will not mourn physical death as others do. Jesus often seems remote from those to whom he speaks, but here Jesus displays his love for Lazarus and his sisters. Ironically, the following that Jesus gained from his greatest sign led to the formal decision of the Jewish Council to arrange his death (11:45–57). Although the high priest does not know the truth of his words, it will turn out to be a good thing that one person dies for the people, and, as the evangelist points out, for all the peoples of the world (vv. 50–52).

The Light Is Departing (12:1–50)

John locates the traditional story of Jesus's anointing at Bethany (Mk 14:3–9) in the home of Lazarus and identifies the anonymous woman as Lazarus's sister Mary. She recognizes the approach of Jesus's death. Ironically, the traitor, Judas, is the one who protests (vv. 1–8). Hints of the future Christian mission are evident in the Pharisees' response to the entry, "the whole world has gone after him," (v. 19) and the coming of some Greeks to seek Jesus. Their arrival marks the hour of Jesus's death. He prophesies that when he is lifted up on the cross, he will draw all people to himself (vv. 20–32). The "Book of Signs" concludes with reflections on the tragedy of disbelief (vv. 39–43 and 44–50).

THE BOOK OF GLORY (13:1–20:31)

Readers know that Jesus offers his life out of love; that Jesus's crucifixion is the moment of his exaltation and return to the Father; that this death is the source of eternal life for all who believe and the manifestation of a new relationship between believers and God. The truth about Jesus's death lies in the revelation that occurs on the cross, not in the plots of Jesus's enemies.

The Supper Discourses (13:1–17:26)

Jesus prepares the disciples for the events to come, as well as their future life as a community of believers. The foot-washing not only reflects the service Jesus is about to perform in his death, it also sets a pattern for relationships among disciples. As the ones sent to represent Jesus they must follow the example of their teacher (13:1–20). The evangelist never lets readers forget that one of Jesus's disciples, Judas, does not really belong to Jesus. He is the agent of God's purpose even though he is in the grip of Satan (6:70–71; 12:4–6; 13:2, 11, 21–30; 17:12). Throughout this section, the evangelist points out that the disciples could not understand the significance of what Jesus said and did until after he had been glorified (13:7; 14:29; 16:4, 25). As Judas is about to depart, a new character, the Beloved Disciple, appears in the narrative. He is closer to Jesus than any other disciple (13:23) and will show special insight into events of the Passion and Resurrection. The Johannine community revered the Beloved Disciple as the source of its tradition.

The discourses in 13:31 through 17:26 may have been composed as independent units. John 13:36–14:31 treats the disciples' grief, Jesus's departure and return, and the coming of the Advocate. Jesus also returns to the disciples as an indwelling presence along with the Father. John 16:4b–33 also deals with the disciples' grief, Jesus's departure and return, and the coming of the Advocate. It lacks the development of the return theme, as the mutual indwelling of Father and Son found in chapter 14. John 15:1–16:4a encourages the disciples to remain united with Jesus the true vine and to love one another. This unity may be severely tested, since the disciples will experience hatred, persecution, and even death from the world (15:18–16:4a). Finally, John 17:1–26 contains a prayer in which Jesus speaks to the Father about the disciples he is leaving behind. They are the evidence that Jesus has completed the task he was sent into the world to accomplish.

(17:6–11a). Left in the world, the disciples are no more “of the world” than Jesus, but without Jesus they require God’s protection (17:13–19). As the Father sent him, so Jesus is sending the disciples into the world. The prayer looks beyond the immediate group of disciples to the community that will result from their preaching. Jesus articulates a vision of Christian community that runs throughout these discourses. The community is to express the love and unity, which has its source in the love and unity that exists between the Father and the Son (17:20–26).

Mutual love and unity grounded in God are the focal points of the discourses. The only explicit commandment given in the Fourth Gospel is the command to love one another (13:34f). This love expresses the love of God (14:21, 23f; 17:23) and of Jesus for “his own,” which is about to be demonstrated on the cross (13:1; 14:21b; 15:11–15). These discourses also suggest that the mutual love and unity of the church will be severely tested. The disciples do not yet fully understand what Jesus has revealed to them. The Advocate, who comes from God, must continue the process of bringing about understanding (14:25f; 16:13–15). Hatred and persecution from outsiders can also take their toll. The Advocate will help the disciples who have to stand trial (15:26f) and will convict the world of its unrighteousness and sin (16:8–11). Jesus prays that his disciples will remain in the “name of God,” which Jesus has revealed to them (17:11). The epistles of John show that the Johannine churches did suffer serious internal divisions. Jesus’s discourses at the Last Supper remind believers that Jesus’s revelation of God’s love is the foundation of Christian unity. Christians who follow this ideal face a hostile world in which their faithfulness to it survives only if they remember its source and persist in praying for the guidance of the Spirit necessary to achieve mutual love and unity.

Jesus’s Arrest, Crucifixion, and Resurrection (18:1–20:31)

Throughout his Passion, Jesus is in complete control of his destiny. Jesus lays down his life; others do not take it from him (see 10:18). When Jesus identifies himself with the name “I am,” used of God in the Old Testament, all those who came to seize him fall to the ground (18:1–14). Jesus confronts his accusers with the evidence of his public teaching. He demands that they bring evidence against him, which they are unable to do (18:19–24). Jewish officials try to hand Jesus over to Pilate without a formal charge (18:28–32). Consequently, the inquiry that Pilate conducts picks up the theme of kingship. John's use of double meanings throughout the Gospel has prepared us for the dialogue that follows. Jesus both denies any earthly kingship yet affirms that he is a king of an entirely different sort, one sent by God to testify to the truth (18:33–38). Nor are we surprised to find the soldiers' mockery turn Jesus into a king symbolically and then to see Pilate present the "king" to the Jewish people (19:1–5).

When Jesus is presented as "king," the trial scene erupts in vicious hostility. Pilate recognizes that Jesus is innocent but can only speak to the Jewish officials and to Jesus with bitterness and sarcasm. He knows nothing about truth (18:38). Jesus rejects Pilate's claim to authority (19:10f). Pilate is the one who fears the political power of others. He will yield to threats of being denounced to Caesar and execute an innocent man. At the same time, Pilate retaliates against those responsible by insisting that the charge read "King of the Jews." The chief priests demonstrate how far away from God they are by proclaiming that they have no king but Caesar (19:12–22). The violent cruelty and bitterness of this scene show readers what brute force and political power are like when those in power have no awareness of their responsibilities toward God. Pilate is interested only in asserting Roman control over the conquered Jews. The death of an obscure Galilean is of no concern to him. This passage, reminds Christians of their responsibility to protest such abuses of power and not stand by when innocent people are brutalized and even killed to support tyrannical regimes.

Details in the crucifixion scene, which fulfill passages of Scripture, demonstrate that everything is happening according to God's plan (19:23f, 28, 33–37). Jesus provides for those faithful to him by entrusting his mother to the Beloved Disciple as "son" (19:25–27). Unlike the others crucified with him, whose legs were broken to hasten their death (19:31–33), Jesus departs to the Father as soon as his mission is accomplished (19:30).

Jesus's crucifixion and death are witnessed by friends and enemies alike. When Pilate releases the body to Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus for burial, readers know that Jesus has really died and been buried according to accepted customs (19:38–42). Consequently, Mary's reaction to discovering the tomb open is fear that "they" (possibly hostile authorities) have taken the body (20:1f). Though the Beloved Disciple arrives at the tomb first and is said to believe, all he and Peter discover is the grave wrappings in one pile and the face cloth rolled up in another place. The evangelist comments that they could not understand what had happened because they did not know the Scripture about Jesus's resurrection (20:9).

Mary of Magdala's encounter with the Risen Lord combines the old tradition of an angelic appearance to the women at the tomb, announcing the Resurrection, with the tradition that Jesus himself appeared to the women in the vicinity of the tomb (20:11–18; see Mt 28:1–10). As in the other tomb stories, Mary receives a message for the disciples. She is not to cling to the Lord but to announce Jesus's return to God. John's account puts the occurrence of all the events—resurrection, ascent to the Father, and bestowing the Spirit on the disciples—on Easter. When Jesus appears among the disciples, the marks on his body prove that the Risen Lord is the one who had been crucified. The disciples are now officially sent to the world as Jesus had been, and they receive the promised gift of the Spirit, a sign that Jesus's mission has been completed (7:39; 3:34). Forgiveness of sins as an activity of the Spirit within the Christian community (21:23) appears only here in John's Gospel, but it is familiar from the Synoptics (see Lk 24:47; Mt 18:18). The First Letter of John presupposes some form of "forgiveness" available within the community (see 1 Jn 1:8–2:2; 5:16f).

John creates a second episode from the tradition of Thomas's doubt. The demand for physical evidence is a sign of weak faith. Christians who have not seen and yet believed are the ones who are really blessed (20:28f).

EPILOGUE (21:1–25)

This chapter seems to have been added to the Gospel sometime after its completion (see introduction, p. 1486). It elaborates on a tradition of Resurrection appearances in Galilee. The miraculous catch of fish has a parallel in the miracle associated with the calling of Peter in Luke 5:1–11. This chapter focuses upon the two heroes from the apostolic age: Peter, who inherited Jesus's role as shepherd, and the Beloved Disciple, who established the Johannine tradition. Peter had died a martyr's death. The Beloved Disciple lived a long time but has also died. Johannine Christians can look back upon that generation of disciples as faithful witnesses to Jesus.

THINGS WE HAVE LEARNED FROM JOHN

John has presented a unique story of Jesus. Instead of collecting sayings and parables in which Jesus spoke about the Kingdom of God, the evangelist focuses on the special relationship between Jesus and God. This special relationship between Jesus and God reminds believers that they should not think of Jesus as though he were just another human religious leader. Otherwise Jesus becomes something of a hero perhaps but also someone who could just as easily be replaced by another person whose life and message seemed more inspiring at some other time in one's life. Jesus is more than a great human being. Jesus is our revelation of God.

Jesus Is the Unique Son of God

No one can come away from the Fourth Gospel without recognizing that Jesus is identified with God. The Prologue described that relationship as the Word, which is always with God and through which God acts in the world. In the narrative, Jesus appears as the unique Son of the Father. The Son is the only one who can reveal the Father. Father and Son are united by a common love and by the Son's obedience to everything the Father requires.

Salvation Comes through Belief in the Son

Salvation, which John usually describes as eternal life, requires belief in Jesus as God's Son. It cannot be delivered by human institutions such as those the Jewish leaders or Pilate think will provide security. Salvation consists in a new relationship to God through Jesus. This relationship is open to anyone to whom God has given the grace to believe in Jesus. Sometimes evangelical Christians suggest that other Christians who do not have their experience of accepting Jesus Christ as their personal Lord and savior, will not be saved. Reading the Gospel of John makes it clear that anyone who believes that his or her salvation has come through the revelation that Jesus brought has already accepted Jesus as Lord and Savior. That special relationship is what we mean when we talk about faith.

Jesus's Death Expresses God's Love for Humanity

Jesus is not the victim of human injustice even though those who killed him were unjust people. Jesus chose to offer his life for others so that they could see God's love revealed on the cross (3:16). The other gospels present the cross as God identifying with the lowly and suffering people of the world by entering into their situation. John's gospel never treats the cross as Jesus's humiliation. Instead it represents the Son's triumphant return to the glory he possessed with the Father from the beginning. However Jesus's exchange with Pilate shows that God does not approve of the injustice that creates such suffering. Jesus insisted that his death was an "offering," not evidence of Roman power. Commanded to love each other as Jesus did (13:34–35) Christians must look for ways of relieving human suffering,

Mutual Love and Unity in the Church Express the Love of God

The love shown by Christians is not simply an expression of a moral virtue. Christians always have the example of Jesus's love to follow. They also have the experience of the Father and Son dwelling in the community to inspire their efforts to achieve unity.

ACTS

[see pages 1526–1575 of the New Testament]

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

The story of Jesus's disciples after his resurrection is told in the New Testament book called "The Acts of the Apostles." It stands in the middle of the New Testament, between the four Gospels, of which it is the continuation, and the Epistles of Paul, whose mission is one of its chief subjects.

The book of Acts is the sequel to the Gospel according to Luke, the third Gospel, and both may originally have formed two parts of a single work. Its dating therefore depends on the date assigned to the Gospel. Both works share many points of style, vocabulary, and theological ideas, and their unity is suggested by the two prologues that introduce them (Lk 1:1–4 and Acts 1:1). The author of both the third Gospel and Acts is the same, and the tradition of the Church has always identified him as Luke.

The theme of Acts is announced in 1:8, in which the Risen Christ tells his disciples: "You will receive power when the holy Spirit comes upon you, and you will be my witnesses in Jerusalem, throughout Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth." The holy Spirit plays a central role in the book, to the point that it has sometimes been referred to as "the Acts of the Holy Spirit." On several occasions the Spirit comes in manifest power on groups of disciples: miracles and other wonders worked by Christ's disciples are many signs of this power. The holy Spirit directs the mission of the young Church. At several important moments in the story, God's Spirit takes the initiative and shows his servants the path to take. An atmosphere of excitement and wonder pervades the book.

The disciples of Jesus have a task: they are to be his witnesses. Throughout the story they testify that he is risen from the dead, and that God has made him Lord and Christ (Messiah). The signs of the Spirit's power working in them are God's testimony to the truth of what they proclaim. Beginning with Stephen, they may have to seal their testimony with their own blood (the Greek word for "witness" is martyr).

Acts 1:8 also indicates the plan of the book. Jesus's disciples are to be his witnesses "in Jerusalem . . . and to the ends of the earth." The narrative of Acts is structured according to this program, revealing a progressive expansion of the Gospel speeding out from Jerusalem. The book ends, rather abruptly, when Paul arrives in Rome. This city was not "the ends of the earth," even in terms of the geographical knowledge of the time, but it was the capital of the empire that dominated the Mediterranean world. The good news of Jesus Christ was now being proclaimed in the heart of that empire (28:31).

The book of Acts tells the stories not of all the apostles, as we might expect, but principally of two, Peter and Paul. (Other noncanonical "Acts" contain traditions concerning other apostles, notably Andrew and Thomas.) Peter is the principal actor in the first part of the book (chaps. 1–12), which could be called the "Acts of Peter." He is not, however, alone. John is at Peter's side in the early chapters, and Stephen and Philip are the heroes of chapters 6 through 8. Chapters 13 through 28 are the "Acts of Paul." He too has partners in mission, notably Barnabas. Luke takes care to unify the two parts of his book. Paul (under the name of Saul) is already introduced in the "Acts of Peter" with the account of his conversion (chap. 9), and Peter reappears in the "Acts of Paul" to take part in the Council of Jerusalem (chap. 15). Throughout the book Luke draws many parallels between his two heroes, whom he presents as complementing one another in a fundamental unity.

The Acts of the Apostles intends to be a history of the origins of the Church, but the type of history that it relates differs throughout the book, depending on which source Luke uses at any particular point, and also on the way in which he uses it. The accounts of Paul's missionary journeys reflect quite faithfully the world of the eastern Mediterranean in the first century AD: Roman administration, Greek cities, religious cults, roads and means of transportation, political geography, local topography. Here Luke describes the world that he knew firsthand, whether or not he was an eyewitness to events. By contrast, the earlier chapters have the feeling of stories told of places with which Luke himself was less familiar and in a past that now seems remote. A great part of the book is taken up with speeches. This is in accordance with the practice of ancient historians, who used speeches in order to reveal a person's thoughts or character, to analyze or reflect upon a situation, and to present clearly the issues at stake. The historian would, or should, try to make these speeches resemble as closely as possible what was really said, or what could fittingly have been said, on the occasion.

Such a practice reminds us of the differences between ancient and modern ideas about what historical writing should be. There were ancient historians, such as Thucydides in the fifth century BC, whose ideal of history came close to ours, namely to write down what really happened as accurately and as impartially as possible. Many of these ancient historians took liberties with their sources, liberties that today one would associate rather with the historical novel than with a work of history in the strict sense of the word. Even Thucydides did not mean to record the past for its own sake but to serve instead as a lesson for future generations, and the ancients took for granted that history should serve a purpose. By these standards Luke comes out well.

Ancient Greek historians were not Luke's only models. Like biblical and Hellenistic Jewish writers before him, he sees God acting in history. He does not distance himself from accounts of miracles and supernatural events, but he narrates them as a believer.

Luke's history of the early Church is "edifying," in the literal sense that he intends thereby to "build up" the unity of the Church. He tends, therefore, to pass over or play down some of the tensions and conflicts among the believers of the first and second generations found elsewhere in the New Testament. Where he does relate them, he wants to show how they were (or might have been) resolved. Luke's version of certain events invites comparison with Paul's. This subject goes well beyond the scope of this study guide. The reader should, however, remember that Paul is arguing a case (his own) and is not always writing a dispassionate account. Finally, this is a book to be enjoyed, full of good stories well told.

Reading through Acts

After the ascension of Jesus and the coming of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, the disciples carry out their task in Jerusalem. We read of the life of the first community in Jerusalem, the witness given to Jesus by Peter and the apostles, their clashes with the authorities in charge of the Temple (Acts 1–5). The martyrdom of Stephen (Acts 6–7) is a watershed event in the Acts of the Apostles. From Jerusalem, persecution, like a violent wind, scatters the seed of the Word. This pattern will be repeated throughout the book of Acts, where so often opposition drives the missionary on to new fields.

Many of the disciples leave Jerusalem, but they continue to give witness to Jesus in Judea and Samaria (Acts 8–12). The good news is not restricted to Jews. In chapter 8, it is imparted to Samaritans and to an African, and the Roman Cornelius is baptized in 10:48. The movement out from Jerusalem under the impulsion of persecution carries the Gospel as far as Phoenicia, Cyprus, and Antioch, the greatest city of the region, where it is preached, according to 11:19–21, to both Jews and Gentiles (“Greeks”). Paul and Barnabas travel through Cyprus and parts of Asia Minor (Turkey), preaching not only to the Jewish communities in those places but also to the Gentiles (Acts 13–14).

That God “opened the door of faith to the Gentiles” (14:27) was not without its problems for Jewish believers. Luke deals with these problems in his account of the Council of Jerusalem, which takes up most of Acts 15. The issue of how to receive the Gentile believers was resolved in accordance with a solution put forward by James, who had become the leader of the Jerusalem community.

Paul’s story continues (chaps. 16 through 20), with his great missionary journeys in Asia Minor, Macedonia, and Achaia (Greece.) On his return to Jerusalem, he becomes a prisoner of the Romans (chap. 21) and remains a captive until he is finally brought to Rome (22–28.) In the book of Acts, the image of Paul the missionary is matched by that of Paul the prisoner, to which equal space is devoted. This shows what importance Luke attached to this part of Paul’s story, in which he is called to be a witness to Christ before religious and civil authorities, both Jewish and Roman. It is a position in which at least some of Luke’s readers have also found themselves, down to the present day, and Luke intends for them to draw courage and inspiration from the example of Paul.

Luke breaks off his story unfinished. We do not even learn what happened to Paul. For this reason, some scholars argue that the book of Acts was written at this time, that is, about AD 62. Luke’s ending is “open.” The story goes on until today and beyond, as the Church tries to carry out the commission given by Jesus at his ascension, to “be his witnesses to the ends of the earth.”

The Preparation for the Christian Mission (1:1–2:13)

The Promise of the Spirit (1:1–8)

At the end of Luke's Gospel, Jesus ascends into heaven soon after his resurrection, perhaps even the same day. At the beginning of Acts, the risen Jesus continues to appear to his disciples for forty days, instructing them about the kingdom of God (think of Moses spending forty days on Mount Sinai receiving instructions from God, Ex 24:18). They are not to leave Jerusalem but must wait there for God's promise to be fulfilled. Could this be the time for God to free his people from Roman rule? Jesus's resurrection has demonstrated to his disciples that he is the "One Anointed" by or on behalf of God, through whom God is going to restore the kingdom to Israel. The only question is, when?

Jesus first reminds his disciples that it is not for them to know times or dates fixed by God. He then proceeds to broaden their horizons. They "will receive power when the Holy Spirit comes upon" them. This power at work in the apostles will be God's witness to support their preaching. Their task will be to witness to Jesus "in Jerusalem, throughout Judea and Samaria, and to the end of the earth."

The Ascension of Jesus (1:9–12)

The narrative of Christ's ascension into heaven in Luke 24:50–51 demonstrates that the risen Jesus is High Priest and King. The account in Acts has different emphases: Jesus is the New Elijah, whose ascension into heaven is told in 2 Kings 2:1–18, and the Son of Man, whose entry into the presence of God is described in Daniel 7:13–14. The angels foretell the return of Jesus in the same way as the disciples have seen him go to heaven.

The First Community in Jerusalem (1:13–26)

As in Luke's Gospel, the disciples after the ascension wait for the Spirit in continual prayer. The community gathered in the upper room is diverse but united. The Eleven are present "together with some women," who are probably the same as those mentioned in Luke 8:1–3; 23:49, 55–56; 24:1–10, the first witnesses to the resurrection. Here they include "Mary the mother of Jesus," who is not expressly mentioned in the other Lucan texts referring to the women. Luke may wish to reinforce the analogy between the birth of the Church and the birth of Jesus, by the power of the Spirit.

More surprising is the presence of the brothers of Jesus. In the Gospels the members of Jesus's family do not believe in him (cf. Mk 3:21; Jn 7:5) and are contrasted with his disciples (Mt 12:46–50). Here they have joined the disciples, so they are now believers. Mary occupies a central position: she is the closest of Jesus's relations, but she is placed among the faithful women and, in Luke's perspective, she was the first believer and model disciple (Lk 1:38, 45).

The community numbers about 120. Even before the Holy Spirit comes in power, it proceeds to repair the loss to the Twelve caused by the defection of Judas. The decision between two candidates is made, after prayer, by lot, a method of election frequently employed in ancient times, which gave expression to the divine will. Matthias joins the Eleven, to make up the full number.

The Coming of the Spirit (2:1–13)

The Jewish feast of Shavuot ("Weeks") was originally a first-fruits festival seven weeks (fifty days) after Passover (Lv 23:15–22). Here it is called Pentecost (Greek for fiftieth). The assembled disciples receive the promised Spirit. As in similar episodes later in Acts (cf. 4:31; 10:44–46; 19:6–7), there is an outward sign of the coming of the Spirit. That the disciples have received the Spirit is shown by their speech: here they "speak in different tongues."

The wind and fire that manifest the Spirit's coming recall the prophecy of John the Baptist in Luke 3:16 concerning the One who will follow him and the baptism he will administer. Here the gift of the Spirit is a remedy for the confusion of languages at Babel and the resulting dispersion of the human race (Gn 11:1–9). In the new age inaugurated by the coming of the Spirit, the good news proclaimed by the apostles can be understood by people of every nation on earth, whose representatives have assembled in Jerusalem. God's Word and Spirit are drawing all into unity.

For the Jewish people today Shavuot commemorates the giving of the Law on Mount Sinai. If it already had that significance when Acts was written, Luke may intend us to see the giving of the Holy Spirit as the divine seal on the new Covenant, and the Spirit as the new Law (cf. Jer 31:31–34; Ez 36:25–27; Rom 5:5; 2 Cor 3:6). The coming of the Spirit in Acts 2 has certain points in common with the theophany on Sinai (Ex 19): “noise” and “fire.”

The Mission in Jerusalem (2:14–8:3)

Peter's Speech at Pentecost (2:14–36)

Unsympathetic onlookers laugh at the ecstatic speech of the disciples as the ravings of drunken men. Peter defends his fellow believers (not without humor) by pointing out that it is only nine o'clock in the morning, so too early to be drunk. More seriously, he turns to the prophecy of Joel (Acts 2:17–32), which is being fulfilled.

The heart of Peter's message to the crowd is that the Jewish authorities disowned Jesus and had him put to death by the Romans, but God raised him to life: “of this we are all witnesses” (2:32). So it is clear that “God has made him both Lord and Messiah, this Jesus whom you crucified” (2:36). This was the constant theme of the preaching of the first disciples. They witness to the resurrection of Jesus by their speech, which shows they have received the Spirit of prophecy. That in turn is the proof that Jesus is now in glory at the right hand of God, from where he has sent the Spirit.

Peter's listeners are “cut to the heart” when they hear him speak and ask, “What are we to do, my brothers?” (2:37). They realize that, now that Jesus is king, the world has entered a new age. People can no longer continue to live and behave as they have done. Peter tells them to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. In that way they will receive the forgiveness of their sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit. God's promise is for them and their children and for "all those far off," that is the Jews of the Diaspora, or possibly for the Gentiles since some Old Testament texts refer to Gentiles also as "those far off" (2:39).

Peter's hearers accept what he has said and are baptized, with the result that about three thousand are added to the community. Growth in numbers is a constant theme in the early part of Acts.

Life in the Newborn Church (2:42–47)

At this point we are given a portrait of life in the Jerusalem church: "They devoted themselves to the teaching of the apostles and to the communal life, to the breaking of the bread and to the prayers."

The "teaching of the apostles" would have been their instruction to the disciples, explaining the Scriptures in the light of Christ and recalling Jesus's teaching. The Greek word koinonia, translated here as "communal life," is also used by St. Paul to mean the sharing of resources and specifically the collection of money for the poor of Jerusalem (Rom 15:26). The two meanings are closely related, the financial contribution being the bond and proof of fellowship.

"The breaking of the bread" seems to refer to the celebration of the Eucharist. "The prayers" would have meant especially the singing of psalms, the great prayers of the Bible, which Christians share with Jews.

The first believers have an impact on those around them, as "many wonders and signs were done through the apostles." These were the visible proof that the Holy Spirit was at work in the apostles. The "awe" of the bystanders is their reaction to this breaking-in of the power of God.

Embedded in this description of the first disciples is a brief account of their community of life and goods: "All who believed were together and had all things in common." They lived together, sold their possessions, and paid the proceeds into a common fund. For this to be literally true, they had to be much fewer in number than the three thousand mentioned in Acts 2, at most the 120 mentioned in 1:15. The Essenes, a Jewish reform group described in the first century by the Jewish philosopher Philo and the Jewish historian Josephus, practiced a comparable community of goods.

At the end of his Gospel, Luke shows us the disciples after the ascension “continually in the Temple praising God.” In Acts 2:46 he picks up this brief statement and expands it: “Each day, with one heart, they regularly went to the Temple; they praised God and were looked up to by everyone.” Into this description of the first Christians taking part in the public worship of the Temple, Luke inserts a description of their own life of worship apart: they “met in their houses for the breaking of bread; they shared their food gladly and generously.” Luke seems to have in mind the “Love Feast” or “Agape,” where the early Christians celebrated the Eucharist and shared a meal. There seem to have been several houses in Jerusalem in which they gathered; from Acts 12:12 we know of one such house, belonging to Mary, the mother of John Mark.

The Cure of a Lame Man (3:1–26)

Peter and John go up to the Temple for the afternoon prayer. There they find a lame man being carried to the position outside the “Beautiful Gate” of the Temple where he was used to begging. Peter tells him: “Look at us.” He restores the strength of the lame man and raises him up “in the name of Jesus Christ the Nazorean.” “Jesus” is the Greek form of Joshua and means: “The Lord saves” (cf. 4:12). The cure of the lame man is the sign that a new age has begun, in which God saves human beings through Jesus.

What does salvation mean? That is not expressly said, but the “lame man” who eventually “walks and jumps and praises God” shows it symbolically. Luke seems to allude here to Isaiah 35:6 where the desert is transformed into a verdant land and the “lame will leap like a stag.” According to the rules safeguarding the holiness of the Temple, the blind and lame (and others with physical handicaps) were ritually impure and forbidden to enter the Temple precincts (see, e.g., the strictures imposed on those with physical disabilities in Lv 21:16–20). Thanks to the name of Jesus, the lame man is freed from ritual impurity and has access to the Temple, which is the house of God. So Jesus frees from the impurity of sin and opens the way to God.

Not surprisingly, a crowd gathers, and Peter takes the opportunity to speak to the people. He makes it clear that the cure has been worked not by virtue of any power that the apostles had, but by virtue of the name of Jesus. God has glorified his Servant Jesus. The people and their rulers accused

“the Holy and Righteous One,” but God raised him from the dead, and to that the apostles are witnesses. By faith in Jesus’s name, the lame man has been restored to health.

In the second part of his speech Peter once again appeals to his listeners to repent and turn to God in order to obtain the forgiveness of their sins. The ancient prophets had exhorted the people to turn away from idolatry and back to God, promising that God would restore them in their own land (cf. Is 43:25; Hos 11:11). Jesus is being kept in heaven until the time comes for him to return as a new Elijah in order to bring about the “restoration of all things.” He is indeed the prophet whom Moses had foretold (Dt 18:18). The passage concludes with a reference to the Covenant of Abraham, to whose descendants the Servant has been sent in the first place.

Peter and John before the Sanhedrin (4:1–22)

The cure of the lame man and Peter’s speech got the apostles into trouble with the priests and Sadducees. The religious authorities responsible for the Temple did not want the apostles to proclaim the resurrection of Jesus, which showed that they had been wrong in refusing to listen to him. The Sadducees, who were strictly traditional in such matters, were opposed to the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead.

Peter and John are put in prison overnight and must appear before the Sanhedrin, as Jesus had foretold (cf. Mt 10:17). This may be a development of an earlier version of the story, in which Peter and John debate with the Temple authorities (see vv. 10 and 14, in which the cured man is still at the side of the apostles, and v. 21, in which the crowd is still giving glory to God for what has happened.) Peter once again proclaims that salvation is now given in the name of Jesus crucified and raised from the dead. The authorities are at a loss to know how to deal with the apostles who, as laymen, cannot be punished for a first religious offense. They warn them not to speak or preach in Jesus’s name. Peter replies that it is impossible for the disciples not to proclaim that to which they are witnesses.

The Prayer of the Church and the Gift of the Spirit (4:23–31)

Peter and John go back to the community and tell them of the threats of the chief priests and elders. The whole assembly then joins in a prayer that is modeled on that of King Hezekiah when his country was threatened with the invasion of the Assyrian forces under Sennacherib (Is 37:16–20).

Peter and John have already worked a cure by the power of God. Then, “filled with the Holy Spirit,” Peter has been able to proclaim the resurrection of Jesus with an assurance that even his opponents recognized, and they were incapable of contradicting him. Now the disciples pray that they, too, may be given the same power. In answer to their prayer, God sends them his Spirit, and they proclaim the Word of God “with boldness.”

The Unity of the Jerusalem Church (4:32–5:11)

A second portrait of the Jerusalem church depicts its unity and its practice of holding goods in common. This has attracted many Christians over the ages and inspired those who have tried to recapture the way of life of the first followers of Jesus. Both 2:44 and 4:32 describe the way in which the Christians shared their material resources, and in almost identical terms: “they had everything in common.” Meanwhile, however, growth in numbers has made it impossible for all to live literally together. New ways must be found of practicing community of goods.

In the later situation, “no one claimed that any of his possessions was his own.” They remained the legal owners of their possessions, as is made clear in 5:4. But instead of treating their goods as their private property, for their own exclusive use, they put them at the disposition of all. Such a way of life appealed to Greek notions about friendship: friends were expected to share everything, and to be prepared to make their own property available to one another. Similar practices are found among those Essenes who did not live in community.

Luke conveys by means of two contrary examples that the reality might not always be perfect. In 4:36–37, Barnabas carries out what has just been said about the group as a whole. By contrast, Ananias and Sapphira tell a lie about the price they obtained for their property and secretly withhold part of it. From Peter’s words to Ananias, it appears that there was no obligation on members of the community to sell their property and, even after the sale, no obligation to hand over all the money received. The sin of Ananias and Sapphira was their lie, presumably told in order to have the glory of handing over the whole sum while in fact keeping something for themselves. Their deaths may symbolize their exclusion from the community (cf. 1 Cor 5:1–5.)

The Apostles before the Sanhedrin (5:12–42)

A summary depicts in some detail the wonders and signs worked by the apostles and the reactions of the people.

Moved by jealousy, the high priest and his supporters among the Sadducees put “the apostles” in prison, from which they were released during the night by an angel, who told them to go to the Temple and “tell the people everything about this life.” There follows a comic interlude in which the apostles are found to be missing from the prison, then to be preaching in the Temple. They are brought before the Sanhedrin and reminded that they have already been warned not to preach in the name of Jesus.

The reply of Peter and the apostles resumes the themes of 4:8–12 and 19–20: “We must obey God rather than men.” Neither Jesus nor his disciples are opposed on principle to lawful authorities, but their ultimate loyalties lie elsewhere. Hence they are likely to come into conflict with those who wield power, whether religious or secular, and who tend to demand total loyalty and absolute obedience. Peter once more proclaims: God has raised up Jesus, to be leader and savior, through whom repentance and forgiveness of sins will be granted to Israel. “We are witnesses of these things, as is the holy Spirit.”

This reply so infuriates the authorities that they want to put the apostles to death. However, a leading Pharisee, Gamaliel (well-known in Jewish tradition), persuades the Sanhedrin to wait and see whether this movement is of merely human origin, in which case it will fail like others in the past, or whether it is from God, in which case they would be fighting against God. The apostles are flogged and released with another warning. They leave the Sanhedrin “rejoicing that they had been found worthy to suffer dishonor for the sake of the name.”

The Choice of the Seven (6:1–7)

The occasion of the choice of new ministers was dissension between Greek-speakers (“Hellenists”) and Hebrew- or Aramaic-speakers (“Hebrews”) over the care of the widows, who were looked after by the community and benefited from “the daily distribution” (cf. 4:34–35). The Hellenists complain that their widows are being unfairly treated. It is easy to surmise that, as numbers grew, systems previously set in place no longer worked so well, and disputes would arise.

A new ministry is instituted, that of the Seven, to “serve at table.” They were to relieve the Twelve of these material concerns, so that the Twelve could “devote themselves to prayer and to the ministry of the word.” All seven (Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, Nicholas) have Greek names and are, presumably, “Hellenists.”

Despite the designation that the deacons (from diakonos, a Greek word meaning “servant”) were to perform acts of service for the community, two of those chosen, Stephen and Philip, are shown active in “the ministry of the word,” preaching and working miracles, like the Twelve. Later in Acts, “Hellenists” carry the Word to non-Jews: Philip to Samaria and to an Ethiopian; Greek-speakers from Cyprus and Cyrene to Gentiles at Antioch.

Stephen’s Witness (6:8–8:3)

The martyrdom of Stephen is the turning point in the story of the first twelve chapters of Acts. It is closely linked with the events of Acts 3–4: Peter and John were finally not punished because the priests and Sadducees were afraid of the people. Now, by turning the people against Stephen, his enemies are able to put him to death. The parallel with Jesus is clear and detailed.

There are inconsistencies in the story of the martyrdom of Stephen. It begins with a mass movement against him and ends with something that looks like a lynching, but which also has features of a judicial execution. In between comes a trial before the Sanhedrin, whose members are suddenly transformed into a murderous mob. The speech that Stephen gives is suitable neither for confronting an angry crowd nor for defending himself before a court. There may have been an original story in which the people were turned against Stephen and stoned him to death. To this were added the trial before the Sanhedrin and the speech.

Stephen’s enemies are, like himself, Hellenist Jews, who, however, have not become believers in Jesus. When they cannot overcome Stephen in argument, they plot his death. Up till now the people have been favorable toward the followers of Jesus. Stephen’s enemies turn the people against him by instigating some men to say: “We have heard him speaking blasphemous words against Moses and against God.” Stephen is dragged outside the city and stoned (like Naboth, whose unjust execution is told in 1 Kgs 21:11–13).

Before the Sanhedrin Stephen is accused of speaking against the Temple and the Law, by claiming that Jesus the Nazarene would destroy “this place” and change the customs they had received from Moses. A great part of Stephen’s speech is taken up with convicting the Israelites of continual rebellion against God. He takes up biblical history from Abraham (with some variations from the biblical narrative). The Israelites rejected Moses and so revolted against God. No sooner were they released from captivity in Egypt than they fell into idolatry with the Golden Calf. This set the pattern for their subsequent behavior. Stephen’s hearers, he implies, are now behaving like their ancestors. They too are “stiff-necked” and “uncircumcised in heart and ears.” The implicit argument is that the same judgment will be passed on them as on their forebears: their Temple will be destroyed.

At the end of his speech Stephen “sees the heavens opened and the Son of Man standing at the right hand of God.” This declaration provokes the murderous onslaught on Stephen. The “witnesses,” who had accused Stephen and were required by law to lead the proceedings, lay down their cloaks at the feet of a young man named Saul.

Stephen continues to follow Jesus to the end. The story concludes with his twofold prayer: “Lord Jesus, receive my spirit” and “Lord, do not hold this sin against them.” Then he “fell asleep.” Stephen can rest in peace. God will give him back the spirit, which he committed to Jesus, as Jesus had committed his own Spirit to his Father. A “severe persecution” breaks out, in which Saul takes part. As a result, all, except the apostles, “were scattered throughout the countryside of Judea and Samaria.” This dispersion was the occasion of a further stage in the mission.

The Mission in Judea and Samaria (8:4–9:43)

Philip Evangelizes Samaria (8:4–8)

Philip, one of the Seven, goes to a Samaritan town. This is the first time in Acts that the Gospel is preached to people who are not Jews (the Samaritans were closely related to the Jews, but by this time were regarded as separate). Philip proclaims to them the good news, which is guaranteed by the miracles he works. The people of the Samaritan town receive his words with joy, and many are baptized.

Simon the Magician (8:9–25)

A certain Simon (who is known from other early literature) had attracted a following in Samaria by working wonders, attributed here to magic arts, and he was identified with “the ‘Power of God’ that is called ‘Great.’ ” He is impressed by the miracles worked by Philip and is baptized. At this point Peter and John come from Jerusalem to see what is happening in Samaria. They lay hands on those who have been baptized so that they may receive the holy Spirit. Simon offers money so that the apostles may give him too the power to confer the holy Spirit, but Peter rebukes him: money cannot buy what God gives for nothing. The apostles return to Jerusalem, “preaching the good news to many Samaritan villages.”

Philip and the Ethiopian (8:26–40)

After leaving Samaria, Philip comes across the treasurer of the queen of Ethiopia, who has been on pilgrimage in Jerusalem. He was probably not a Jew, but had leanings towards the Jewish religion. He is reading the book of Isaiah and asks Philip to explain the passage in 53:7–8, where the prophet speaks of God’s servant as “like a sheep led to the slaughter,” suffering silently and patiently, humiliated, treated unjustly, his life “taken from the earth.” Was this passage about the prophet himself or about another? Philip shows how it was fulfilled in Jesus, and goes on to proclaim the “good news.” The Ethiopian official receives baptism.

The Conversion of Saul (9:1–30)

This dramatic story follows more or less what Paul himself tells us in Galatians (Gal 1:11–24) about his persecution of the Church and his conversion. Luke does not, however, include all the information given by Paul and adds important details that are not in Galatians.

Saul’s conversion is completed by his incorporation into a community, through the ministry of Ananias, who lays hands on Saul, to give him back his sight, to confer the holy Spirit and to appoint him for mission. His baptism is preceded by a three-day fast and followed by a meal, which may allude to the pre-baptismal fast and post-baptismal Eucharist of the early Church. His blindness and recovery of sight are an apt symbol of the effect of baptism, which was often referred to as “Enlightenment.”

Immediately after his conversion, Saul begins to preach in the synagogues, that “Jesus is the Son of God.” Jews at Damascus react against Paul’s preaching and want to put him out of the way; the disciples help him escape. In Jerusalem, the same sequence recurs and Paul goes to Tarsus.

Peter on Mission (9:32–43)

Peter too leaves Jerusalem and comes to Lydda (Lod), a town on the coastal plain northwest of Jerusalem, where he cures a man who has been bedridden for eight years. The cure of Aeneas recalls that of the lame man at the Beautiful Gate of the Temple: it is a new beginning for the ministry of Peter.

Then he is summoned to the town of Joppa (Jaffa), where a woman disciple named Tabitha has died. He restores her to life. The raising of Tabitha suggests a likeness between Peter and the prophets Elijah and Elisha (cf. 1 Kgs 17:17–24 and 2 Kgs 4:18–37). It also suggests a likeness between Peter and Jesus himself, who raised up the son of the widow of Nain and the daughter of Jairus (cf. Lk 7:11–17 and 8:41–56).

Inauguration of the Gentile Mission (10:1–15:35)

Peter and Cornelius (10:1–11:18)

From Jaffa, Peter is called to Caesarea Maritima, the seat of Roman power in Judea, by a Roman army officer (centurion) who believes in the God of Israel, prays, and leads a good life. Such Gentiles are sometimes referred to in Acts as “godfearers,” that is, Gentiles who admired the traditions and moral values of Judaism and frequented their synagogues, yet did not become proselytes. These Gentiles seem to have been a significant part of the first converts to Christianity in the Gentile world. Seeing that God’s Spirit is with Cornelius and his household and friends, Peter orders them to be baptized, then stays some days with them. Those Jewish believers who cannot see what place non-Jews might have in the Church challenge this action.

The earliest disciples of Jesus could easily have settled for being a pious group of Jews, with a special devotion to him and a commitment to a way of life based on his teachings and example. Alternatively, they could have engaged in a mission exclusively to their fellow Jews, to win them to their view of the place of Jesus in the expectations of Israel. Any mission to non-Jews would involve close social relationships with people who were considered to be impure. If individual Gentiles sought admission to the Church, they would first have to accept conversion to Judaism.

On the contrary, Peter goes among Gentiles, receives them into the Church without prior conversion to Judaism, and then justifies his action to the community in Jerusalem. This new move turned out to be decisive in the development of Christianity. Peter did not take this step on his own initiative or because he had been won over by argument to another point of view. He is only the docile instrument of the Spirit, who cuts the knot, which endless discussions would not have succeeded in untying. The Spirit, through an angel, prompts Cornelius to send for Peter. While Peter is at prayer, the Spirit orders him to go with the messengers without making difficulties. While Peter is still speaking, the Spirit comes upon the group around Cornelius in the same way as on the disciples of Jesus shortly after the ascension.

So the Holy Spirit resolves the problem about the Gentiles. They are to be admitted into the community, because the Spirit has sent them to it. They are no longer to be considered as impure people, contact with whom renders one impure, since the Spirit has commanded Peter to go with them and has even come personally to dwell within them. The second point, that Gentiles are no longer impure, is underlined by the vision of ritually clean and unclean animals, which Peter is commanded to eat, with the revelatory word: "What God has made clean, you are not to call profane." Peter undergoes a profound change of heart and outlook. The problem will, however, recur.

Stories about the Church at Antioch (11:19–30)

Luke interrupts the "Acts of Peter" to insert a condensed account of the origins of the Church at Antioch (which may have been his own place of birth). Hellenistic Jewish believers have preached with success to both Jews and Gentiles in the third greatest city of the Roman Empire (after Rome and Alexandria). Barnabas is sent from Jerusalem and fetches Saul from Tarsus; together they spent a year teaching at Antioch. Luke remarks that it was at Antioch that the disciples were first called “Christians” (i.e., partisans of “Christus”; cf. “Herodians”).

Prophets come from Jerusalem, and one Agabus predicts a universal famine, which, Luke remarks, occurred during the reign of Emperor Claudius (AD 41–54), a period in which a series of famines affected wide areas of the empire. The new church at Antioch decides to send money to the brothers and sisters in Judea as a sign of solidarity, as well as a practical help, and chooses Barnabas and Saul to deliver it. It is the first example we have of “inter-Church aid.”

Peter Freed from Prison (12:1–25)

In or about AD 43 King Agrippa I of Judea decided to persecute the newborn Church, as his grandfather King Herod the Great had tried to do away with the newborn Jesus. He put James the brother of John to death and imprisoned Peter, intending to condemn him to death after the Feast of Passover. In the meantime the whole Church was praying for Peter. During the night before he was due to be executed, Peter is freed from prison by an angel. He goes to the house of Mary, the mother of John Mark, where a number of believers are assembled, to show that he was alive and free. Then, after giving instructions to “report this to James and the brothers,” Peter “went to another place.” In the way this story is told, there are echoes of the Exodus of Israel from Egypt and also of the death and resurrection of Jesus.

Luke adds an account of the death of Agrippa I that can be compared with that given by Josephus: the arrogant monarch is punished by God for his vainglory. This first part of Acts ends with a summary recording the spread of the Word of God and the return of Barnabas and Saul to Antioch, bringing with them John Mark.

Barnabas and Saul Sent on Mission (13:1–14:28)

Under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, the church of Antioch sends out Barnabas and Saul as missionaries. They go first to Cyprus and one of the places from which the Gospel had been brought to Antioch. The church of Antioch is now engaged in a “reverse mission,” helping those through whom it had originally received the faith to continue the evangelization of their own country.

In Cyprus, Barnabas and Saul, assisted by John Mark, preach in Jewish communities, which were very numerous on the island. They show that their power is stronger than a Jewish “magus” (“wise” man, claiming occult powers) of high repute and impress the Roman governor, Sergius Paulus.

Paul emerges as leader of the mission. From Paphos in Cyprus, he and his companions set sail for the southern coast of what is now Turkey. They push on through difficult, mountainous country until they reach Antioch “of Pisidia” to distinguish it from other towns of the same name. The family of Sergius Paulus had lands in this region, and the governor may have given the apostles some introductions. This Antioch was also a key city in the system of road communications that the Roman administration was building across Asia Minor. The Christian missionaries follow these Roman roads from Antioch to Iconium (Konya), Lystra, and Derbe. Luke has information about their activity in all these places, but especially in Antioch, where Paul preaches in the synagogue on two successive Sabbaths to mixed audiences of Jews and Gentile godfearers. In Lystra the cure of a lame man leads the crowds to acclaim the missionaries as gods. But they soon turn against Paul, who goes on to Derbe.

Throughout this first missionary journey, a pattern emerges: the missionaries preach, initially with success, until opposition, sometimes violent, forces them to move on. In each place, they leave behind communities of believers. From Derbe, Paul and his companions retrace their steps through Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch of Pisidia. Their concern is now to strengthen and encourage the new believers, telling them: “It is necessary for us to undergo many hardships to enter the kingdom of God.” They also see to the future pastoral care of these new churches by appointing presbyters (the Greek word for “elders”), on whom they lay hands.

On returning to their home base in Syrian Antioch, Paul and his companions report to the Church all that God has done through them, and how God has “opened the door of faith to the Gentiles.”

The Council of Jerusalem (15:1–35)

The adherence of Gentile believers poses problems for some Jewish believers, who come to Antioch from Jerusalem and teach that the Gentile believers must be circumcised. What is at stake is the possibility for Jews and Gentiles to share meals, including the Eucharist. In order to resolve the controversy, Paul and Barnabas with other delegates go up to Jerusalem to discuss the matter. On arrival in Jerusalem they are received by the Church and by the apostles and presbyters, to whom they report “what God had done with them.” All seems to be serene, until some Pharisees who have become believers repeat the demand that the Gentiles be circumcised and observe the Law of Moses.

After lively debate, Peter recalls his experience with the Gentiles at Caesarea and argues against the imposition of circumcision. The assembly then listens to Barnabas and Paul telling of the great things that God had done through them among the Gentiles.

James implicitly endorses what “Symeon” has said and quotes the prophecy of Amos that God will raise up again “the fallen hut of David,” so that “the rest of humanity may seek out the Lord.” This has been fulfilled, through the resurrection of Jesus and these “Gentiles who turn to God.” James is opposed to “troubling” them, by imposing circumcision. They cannot, however, continue to live exactly as they had before. He proposes to write telling them to “avoid pollution from idols, unlawful marriage, the meat of strangled animals, and blood.” In other words, they do not have to observe the Law of Moses, but the laws given to the “children of Noah” (cf. Gn 8:20–9:17). The Mosaic Law will continue to be observed by those to whom it was given, namely the Jews and the Christian Jews who remained faithful to law observance along with their fidelity to Christ. James’s proposal is adopted, and the “apostles and presbyters, in agreement with the whole church,” choose delegates, Judas, called Barsabbas, and Silas, to send to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas bearing a letter containing their resolution.

Scholars debate the relationship of this narrative in Acts to passages in Paul’s Letter to the Galatians that appear to deal with similar problems (Gal 2:1–15). In Galatians Paul states that no conditions were imposed on Gentile converts other than that Paul himself would be “mindful of the poor,” which, he observes, “is the very thing I was eager to do” (Gal 2:10).

The Mission of Paul to the Ends of the Earth (15:36–28:31)

A New Journey (15:36–18:23)

After continuing their ministry at Antioch for a while, Paul suggests to Barnabas that they should revisit the communities established on their previous missionary expedition. There is a difference of opinion, apparently because of Paul's frustration with their missionary companion John Mark who had abandoned the missionary trail in Pamphylia (Acts 15:37–39), and thus they go their separate ways. Barnabas returns to Cyprus with Mark, while Paul and Silas travel through Syria and neighboring Cilicia, encouraging the churches there and communicating the decisions of the Council of Jerusalem. They go on to Derbe and Lystra, where Paul includes Timothy in the missionary team, after having him circumcised, as he was of mixed Jewish-Gentile parentage. Paul probably intended to extend his evangelizing campaign to other parts of Asia Minor, but the Holy Spirit had other plans. In a vision God makes it clear that he should go to Macedonia. In this way, the good news arrives in Europe.

The story is now told for a time in the first person plural ("we"). There are four passages in Acts in which this is the case: 16:10–17; 20:5–15; 21:1–18; and 27:1–28:16. The group sails from Troas, on the west coast of Asia Minor, to the Macedonian port of Neapolis (Kavalla), and from there comes by road to Philippi, which was a city in the first district of Macedonia (the better reading of the Greek text and historically accurate) and a settlement of Roman citizens. On the Sabbath Paul and his companions go to the Jewish place of prayer, where they find a group of women, including Lydia, a dealer in cloth dyed in purple, who is a godfearer and receives Paul's message. After being baptized along with all her household, she offers hospitality to the missionaries.

Their next encounter leads to trouble. When they drive out a divining spirit from a young slave woman, whose fortunetelling makes money for her owners, the latter accuse the missionaries of subverting the good old Roman ways of the town. The magistrates administer the usual summary punishment of those found to be disturbing the peace: Paul and Silas are beaten with sticks and put in prison for the night. After being liberated by a wondrous earthquake, they convert their jailer. Next morning, Paul announces to the magistrates that he and Silas are Roman citizens. Since they might complain to higher authorities that they have been beaten and imprisoned without due trial and sentence, the magistrates beg their pardon and ask them politely to leave their city.

From Philippi, Paul and Silas take the road, through Amphipolis and Apollonia, to Thessalonica, the capital of the Roman province of Macedonia. There Paul tries to persuade the Jews, on three consecutive Sabbaths, that the Messiah had to suffer and rise from the dead, and that this Messiah is Jesus. Some believe, as do a great number of Gentile godfearers and some women of the upper classes. Other Jews rouse the rabble to create a public disturbance alleging that the missionaries are revolutionaries, who act against the emperor by proclaiming another king, namely Jesus. The magistrates seem not to take the charge very seriously.

Paul and Silas are smuggled out of Thessalonica by night. They go to Beroea, where the Jews eagerly receive the missionaries' message and search the Scriptures daily to verify it. It was, however, too good to last. Jews from Thessalonica, who heard that Paul was preaching at Beroea, come and create a public disturbance. His disciples spirit him out of the city in the direction of the coast, while Silas and Timothy remain. Paul's escorts finally bring him to Athens.

Luke shows himself to be aware of the historical and cultural importance of Athens and knowledgeable about places in the city. When he describes Athens as a city full of statues of the gods, and the Athenians as always eager to hear something new and "very religious" because of their many altars to various divinities, he is echoing other ancient authors. Much of the action can be located quite precisely in the great public area at the heart of the city known as the Agora, especially at its northwestern corner, where were to be found both the "Painted Stoa" (Portico), a favorite meeting place for philosophical discussion that gave its name to the "Stoics," and the "Royal Stoa," where the governing body of Athens, the "Council of the Areopagus," held its regular meetings. So far no precise evidence of an altar bearing a dedication "To an Unknown God" has been found, even though there were altars "of unknown gods" in and near Athens. Paul's speech, designed to win over the Athenians to faith in the true God and in Jesus, has only limited success.

From Athens Paul goes to Corinth, a wealthy commercial center and capital of the Roman province of Achaia. There he joins forces with a Jewish couple, Aquila and Priscilla, who have recently come from Italy. Luke connects their migration with the expulsion of "all the Jews" (in reality, probably only some) from Rome under Claudius, probably dated to AD 41 (alternatively 49).

Paul debates in the synagogue, eventually with the assistance of Silas and Timothy who have come from Macedonia. He meets with vehement opposition, and declares that he will go to the Gentiles, whereupon he moves to the house of a godfearer.

The only episode at Corinth of which we are informed in some detail took place “when Gallio was proconsul of Achaia.” Gallio is a well-known historical figure, brother of the philosopher Seneca, and was governor (“proconsul”) of Achaia in AD 51–52, which is one of the few secure dates in the book of Acts, known through the finding of an inscription at Delphi that mentions the dates of Gallio’s term as proconsul. Paul’s opponents among the Jews denounce him on a vague charge of persuading people to worship God contrary to the law, which they hope that Gallio will consider as a crime or a misdemeanor. The proconsul, however, expressing an aristocratic Roman’s contempt for Jews, in which Paul is certainly included, refuses to take notice of quarrels concerning “doctrines and titles and your own law” and drives them all away from the tribunal.

Paul, along with Priscilla and Aquila, sets sail for Syria from the Corinthian port of Cenchreae on the Aegean. On the way he calls at Ephesus, where his discussions in the synagogue earn an invitation from the Jewish community to stay longer. Paul promises to return.

Paul at Ephesus (18:23–21:17)

In 18:21 and 19:1 we have a compressed account of Paul’s return to Ephesus. These two verses serve to frame an episode (18:24–28) concerning Apollos, who came to Corinth. He is mentioned several times in Paul’s letters (cf. 1 Cor 3). He was a learned Jew from Alexandria, where he had received the baptism of John and also learned about Jesus. Aquila and Priscilla instruct him concerning “the Way.”

At Ephesus Paul finds “disciples” who have received only John’s “baptism of repentance.” When Paul reminds them that John had told the people to believe in the one who was to come after him, they are baptized in the name of Jesus. Paul lays his hands on them, and they receive the Holy Spirit with the gifts of tongues and prophecy.

Paul goes to the synagogue, where, for three months, he debates about the kingdom of God. Those who oppose him speak ill of “the Way.” Paul takes his disciples to a public lecture hall, where he holds daily discussions for two years. The word of the Lord spreads throughout the region (“Asia,” the western region of modern-day Turkey), among both Jews and Gentiles. Paul also gains a reputation as a wonder worker. One result of his bold preaching of the gospel is the renunciation of magical practices and the burning of books of spells, for which Ephesus was famous (see Acts 19:19), a result that would eventually bring troubles for Paul.

Paul now proposes to return to Macedonia and Achaia, and from there go to Jerusalem and on to Rome. This itinerary corresponds to plans about which Paul wrote several times in his letters, to bring an offering from the Gentile Churches to the mother-Church (cf. Gal 2:10; 1 Cor 16:1–4; 2 Cor 8–9). Paul intended this collection as a sign of homage, gratitude, and solidarity on the part of the Gentile churches, as well as a practical act of charity for the poor of Jerusalem.

At this point, Luke gives us one of the great scenes in the Acts of the Apostles, namely the public commotion stirred up by silversmiths, who feared that Paul’s preaching against idols threatened their income from manufacturing silver models of the great temple of the goddess Artemis at Ephesus.

Paul makes a brief return to Macedonia and Achaia. Meanwhile, his companions cross over to Asia Minor and waited for him at Troas, where Paul joins them immediately after Passover. This begins the second section in Acts in the first person (“we”), 20:5–15.

At Troas, the group passes the night of the first day of the week in vigil in an upper room with the local community, listening to Paul speaking, no doubt explaining how the Scriptures refer to Jesus. The assembly is interrupted by the fall of young Eutychus (“Lucky”) from the third floor, but when he is found to be living, Paul “breaks the bread” and continues speaking until dawn, when he departs. This story is told with clear overtones of the resurrection of Christ and of the Eucharist.

Arriving at Miletus, Paul sends for the presbyters of the Church at Ephesus. His long address of farewell serves as his spiritual testament. He is concerned for the welfare of the new Christian community, after he himself has disappeared from the scene, and wishes to give a final instruction to its pastors. He also declares his own freedom from self-interest in all his dealings with them. At the end, Paul quotes an otherwise unknown saying of the Lord Jesus: “It is more blessed to give than to receive.” His listeners are moved, especially by his statement that they will not see him again.

The travelers leave Miletus and sail, via Rhodes and Patara, to Tyre, and on to Ptolemais (Acre, present-day Akko) and then to Caesarea Maritima. This is the third “we” section, 21:1–18. There, in this seat of the Roman governance of the province of Judaea and Samaria, they stay with Philip the evangelist, one of the Seven, whom we have met before; his four daughters are prophets. The prophet Agabus foretells that at Jerusalem Paul will be bound and handed over to the Gentiles. Paul’s companions and the local believers beg him not to go up to Jerusalem. He replies that he is willing, not only to be bound but even to die there.

Paul a Prisoner (21:18–26:32)

The day following his arrival in Jerusalem, Paul visits James, who explains that many observant Jews have become believers. They have heard that Paul has been teaching Jews not to circumcise their sons and they will cause trouble. James proposes that Paul should demonstrate his fidelity to Jewish tradition by undergoing ritual purification and by paying the heavy expenses of four local Jewish men who took a Nazirite vow (see Nm 6:1–21). This was a specific, time-limited promise on the part of a Jewish man to follow certain practices for religious reasons. At the end of the period covered by the vow, the adherent would offer sacrifices in the Temple. Since these sacrifices involved heavy expense, James suggests that Paul’s offer to assume responsibility for them would show his loyalty to Jewish law.

In the Temple precincts Paul is set upon by a mob, which has been stirred up by some Jews from “Asia” (i.e., Ephesus), who accuse him of speaking against the people, the law, and the Temple. They also charge that Paul has violated the Temple by bringing Gentiles into the sacred area. According to notices displayed in the Temple, the penalty for this offence was death. The riot is eventually reported to the officer commanding the Roman garrison in the adjoining Antonia fortress. He and his guard rescue Paul from the mob but then arrest him as a presumed troublemaker. He remains a prisoner of the Romans for the rest of the book.

Paul asks to speak to the crowd. From his opening words he emphasizes his Jewish identity and upbringing, then recounts his early persecution of “the Way” and what happened to him on the road to Damascus. When he declares that the Lord has sent him “far away to the Gentiles,” his hearers interrupt him with renewed cries that he be put to death.

The commander orders Paul to be taken inside the fortress and questioned under the lash. Paul once again reveals that he is a Roman citizen from birth, who consequently cannot be dealt with in this way. Next day he is brought before the Sanhedrin, which is composed of both Pharisees and Sadducees. He cries out that he is a Pharisee, the son of Pharisees, on trial for his hope in the resurrection of the dead. This causes a violent dissension in the council, with the Pharisees taking Paul’s side against the Sadducees. That night, still in custody in the fortress, Paul has a vision of the Lord who reassures him: Paul has borne witness concerning him in Jerusalem, and he must now do so also in Rome.

The commander decides to send his troublesome prisoner to the governor at Caesarea. Governor Felix agrees to give him a hearing when his accusers have arrived. This takes place five days later, with a speech for the prosecution and Paul’s defense. Felix puts off making a decision, perhaps hoping to be given a bribe to let Paul go. Paul is still in custody at Caesarea when a new governor, Porcius Festus, arrives.

Festus eventually asks Paul if he is willing to go up to Jerusalem and be tried there. Paul demands first to be heard by the governor at Caesarea, and then appeals to the emperor. Festus agrees that he should go to the imperial court in Rome. First, however, he is heard by King Agrippa II, son of Agrippa I, who ruled over certain areas in the north of the country. Paul makes his final speech in Acts, in which he once again tells how he became a believer in Jesus. Festus and Agrippa agree that Paul has done nothing deserving death or imprisonment, and that he could be released if he had not appealed to the emperor. The stage is set for Paul’s journey to Rome.

Paul Goes to Rome (27:1–28:31)

Paul sets sail for Rome with other prisoners and some of his own friends. This section of Acts provides remarkable details about sea travel in the ancient world. The story reads as if told by one of his traveling companions (“we”), and is the fourth and last of these sections, 27:1–28:16. The prisoners are under the responsibility of a centurion named Julius, another of the “good centurions” of the New Testament. The reader can easily follow on the map the progress of the ship as she makes her way westward along the north coast of Cyprus and under the lee of the southern coast of Asia Minor, then southwestward to the southern coast of Crete. This roundabout route was made necessary by northwesterly winds that prevail in the eastern Mediterranean during most of the summer. These made the more direct route via Alexandria impractical for ships that had only limited ability to sail against a head wind.

By the time the travelers make port at Fair Havens in Crete, Yom Kippur, the Jewish Day of Atonement (“the Fast”), which falls in late September or October, has gone by, and with it the settled good weather has ended, and so has the safe sailing season in the Mediterranean. Paul warns against sailing on, but the pilot and the ship’s owner are anxious to move to a more sheltered harbor for wintering over, while the centurion wants to press on with the journey.

The vessel sets out with an initially favorable breeze, making for Phoenix farther along the coast. The onset of winter in the eastern Mediterranean is marked by sudden storms. A violent storm, described here as a “North-easter,” from the high mountains that lie just behind the southern coast of Crete blows the ship off course and she flies before it, despite the best efforts of the crew to bring her back under control before she runs aground on sand bars off the North African coast. The whole episode of the storm at sea is one of the most vivid passages in Acts, told with attention to precise details and exact nautical terminology and a sense of drama and emergency.

Paul encourages crew and passengers to keep in good heart. Even if the ship is lost, they will save their lives, as an angel has assured him that he will stand before the emperor. Land is near, and Paul foils an attempt by the sailors to abandon ship. He advises the ship’s company to eat some food, and he himself takes bread, gives thanks for it to God, then breaks bread and eats. The ship runs aground and begins to break up. The soldiers want to kill their prisoners in order to prevent them escaping, but the centurion forbids this, in order to save Paul, and organizes the operation by which all safely reach land.

They find they have reached the island of Malta. The inhabitants treat the survivors kindly (not always the fate of the shipwrecked) and are amazed when Paul is not harmed by a viper. Paul cures the father of the chief person of the island and also others who are ill. When the time comes to leave, the islanders supply the travelers with provisions for the onward journey.

Winter is over, and Paul and his companions board the Castor and Pollux and sail to Sicily, then on to Puteoli (Pozzuoli), south of Naples, where they find believers with whom they stay before carrying on to Rome. The last stage of the journey resembles a triumphal progress, as Christians from Rome meet them on the way and escort them into the city. In Rome Paul is allowed to live privately under guard.

Paul invites the leaders of the Jewish community at Rome to meet him. He explains that he has committed no offense against “our people or our ancestral customs.” He had been handed over to the Romans, who wanted to set him free as being guilty of no capital crime. But when “the Jews” objected to his release he was compelled to appeal to the emperor. He wants to meet the Jewish leaders of Rome because “it is on account of the hope of Israel that I wear these chains.” They reply that they have received no report about him, but they would like to find out more concerning “this sect,” which is denounced everywhere.

On the day arranged, the leaders of the Jewish community return to Paul’s lodging, and from morning to evening he bears witness to the kingdom of God and tries to “convince them about Jesus from the law of Moses and the prophets.” As so often in the past, Paul’s hearers are divided: some believe, while others refuse. As they leave, he quotes Isaiah 6:9–10 to explain such lack of understanding and announces that this salvation of God has been sent to the Gentiles, who will listen. This statement is not, however, a rejection of his own people.

Acts ends with Paul still under house arrest in Rome. For two years he welcomes all who come to him and proclaims the kingdom of God and teaches about the Lord Jesus Christ “with complete assurance and without hindrance.” Despite leaving the reader in suspense, this is a suitable ending for a book that tells how the gospel was brought from Jerusalem to Rome.

Things We Have Learned from Acts

- The Church’s story told in the Acts of the Apostles continues Jesus’s story and follows its pattern; thus a fundamental assertion is made—the life of the Church is to be patterned on the life of Jesus himself.

- Christianity is rooted in Judaism of the “Second Temple” period. Luke proclaims a fundamental reality that is more and more appreciated in modern Christianity, namely the profound debt of Christianity to Judaism.

- The Church’s essential structure and principal institutions existed from the beginning. Acts shows how from the very beginning the Church was both local and “global”—a network of Christian communities, different in culture and location, but bound together in their faith in Christ.

- The Church is called to proclaim the gospel to all. The entire program of Acts is to demonstrate the dynamic missionary impulse of the Church. The disciples are to be “missionary disciples” in the spirit of Jesus and of the apostles.

- The holy Spirit guides the Church and the individual Christian. The Acts of the Apostles is truly the book of the Spirit and demonstrates that the Spirit moves freely and often ahead of the Church itself. In accord with the Scriptures, the Spirit of God is portrayed as creative, dynamic and embracing the entire world.

- Adversity, even persecution, can become a chance to spread the Gospel. The pattern of Jesus’s own death and resurrection is played out in the story of the early Church—through suffering and adversity, the gospel is proclaimed. The final words of Acts state that Paul, even though under house arrest, proclaims the gospel “with complete assurance and without hindrance” (Acts 28:31). This is the hope-filled message that the Acts of the Apostles wants to proclaim to the Church.

PAUL AND HIS WRITINGS

MARY ANN GETTY AND CAROLYN OSIEK

Paul's life as well as his works are significant for understanding how the church grew from a small Jewish sect to a global faith. Paul's education, background and experience uniquely prepared him to become the apostle to the Gentiles. Before he became an ardent missionary for Christ, Paul went to great lengths to try to eliminate the fledgling Christian movement. Yet, after experiencing a revelation of the risen Christ, Paul himself joined the followers of "the Way" as a young adult, about AD 34. He firmly believed that his conversion included a call to preach the Christian message of salvation to all people, including the Gentiles. Paul spent the rest of his life, about thirty years, in pursuit of this mission. After some years working in the Eastern Mediterranean area as far west as Philippi and Corinth, he visited Jerusalem to deliver relief funds collected in Asia Minor and Greece. He then intended to visit Rome and Spain. But in Jerusalem he met with increasing opposition from some Jewish leaders and was arrested and brought to Rome around AD 60. Between AD 48 and his death around AD 64, Paul wrote letters to communities with which he had worked, answering their questions and preaching the gospel as he understood it to have been revealed to him.

SOURCES

Some of what we know about Paul comes to us from the biographical sections of Paul's own letters. We also learn about Paul's life from Luke's account in the Acts of the Apostles (cf. Acts 9:1–30; 11:1–28:31). Acts tells us that Paul was from Tarsus, a city on the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea, in what is now Turkey, and that he was a Roman citizen, a status that carried certain privileges. Further, according to Acts, Paul was a student of the renowned rabbi Gamaliel, who taught in Jerusalem. Paul himself says that he was a Pharisee, that is, a member of a strictly observant Jewish party. Paul's writings indicate that he was well educated in the Greek language and in Pharisaic methods of biblical interpretation. Both Paul and Acts say that he was so zealous for the Jewish Law before his conversion that he persecuted those who, he believed, had strayed from the Law by believing that Jesus was the Christ. During this earlier part of the sketch of Paul's life in Acts, he is called by his Jewish name "Saul." When the narrative begins to describe his extensive travels throughout the Empire, Luke calls him by his Roman name "Paul" (the first time at Acts 13:9).

There are some discrepancies between what Paul says and what Luke records about certain incidents of Paul's career. For example, Luke and Paul do not agree about whether the Council of Jerusalem, around AD 50, stipulated that the Gentiles should keep some aspects of the Jewish Law (see Acts 15:20 and Gal 2:1–10). We must remember that when Luke writes about Paul's life, his account is a secondary source: it was written more than a generation after Paul (about AD 85), at a time when the major issue of non-Jewish converts was no longer as pressing. Luke generally minimizes the tensions involved in integrating the Gentiles into the church.

The Epistles of Paul

There are thirteen letters or epistles ascribed to Paul. But most commentators recognize only seven of these as definitely written by the apostle; the others are attributed to disciples of Paul. The seven letters certainly written by Paul himself are Romans, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Galatians, Philippians, 1 Thessalonians, and Philemon. The remaining six letters (Ephesians, Colossians, 2 Thessalonians, 1 and 2 Timothy, and Titus) are often called "Deutero-Pauline." Among the latter group the Pauline authorship of 2 Thessalonians and Colossians is most disputed. For various reasons commentators believe that these six letters were not actually written by Paul but instead were written by later Christians familiar with his teachings. Disciples could have claimed to be writing in Paul's name in order to gain authority for their own adaptations of his teaching, an accepted practice among the ancients. In the New Testament, the Pauline writings are arranged in two groups: first, letters to communities; second, letters to individuals. Within each group they run roughly from the longest to the shortest. The letters are not arranged in the order in which they were written.

Paul's letters follow the fairly simple structure of a letter in Greek or Roman culture. Such letters were not placed in envelopes, so the address is given right at the start. Then follows the body of the letter; finally, the conclusion contains personal greetings and instructions. Some scholars have suggested a distinction between more formal, systematic "epistles" and informal "letters." In this way of thinking, Romans would be an example of a formal epistle, whereas Philemon or Titus would be examples of an informal letter. However, even some of those letters supposedly written to individuals may really be formal "epistles" intended for wider circulation. Many interpreters have also noted a fundamental structure discernible in many of Paul's writings, but most clearly in Romans. Paul first outlines his most basic teachings in a section sometimes called the doctrinal or "indicative" part. This is followed by an application of these teachings in Paul's exhortations to the community, a section sometimes called the "imperative" or "paraenetical" (that is, exhortatory) part of the body of the letter.

THE APOSTLE AND HIS GOSPEL

Much of the Christian vocabulary we have become so familiar with and associate with the ministry of Jesus actually originated with Paul. For example, Paul was, as far as we know, the first to coin a Christian meaning for the words "apostle," "gospel," "charism," "ministry," and many doctrinal phrases such as "justification," "faith," and "church." As the first Christian writer, Paul began to develop specifically Christian terminology, even though many of the terms he uses will have roots in Judaism, or other meanings in secular Greek.

Paul's writings predate our written Gospels. Paul is the first to speak about preaching the "gospel," although he does not conceive this as a narrative story about the life and ministry of Jesus. The idea of the "gospel," which appears even in the Old Testament (see, e.g., Is 61:1–2), means the "good news." For Paul this is the message of salvation now accessible to all through faith in Jesus Christ. In Romans, Paul describes the gospel as the "power of God" to save all who believe (Rom 1:16). Thus, Paul does not think of the gospel as a story of the events in Jesus's life, nor even as a set of beliefs about Jesus. Rather, the gospel is the "good news" that all who believe in Jesus are already justified and all have access to salvation in Christ.

Paul speaks infrequently of any actions or words of Jesus during his lifetime. Rather, he focuses on God's power, working through the death and resurrection of Jesus, to save Jews and Greeks (that is, all people) alike. While reading Paul it is well to remember that for him the term "gospel" means the proclamation of faith in God's forgiveness or the realization in human life of the "good news" that Jesus Christ has come to bring salvation to all people.

In his writings, Paul usually identifies himself as an "apostle" (Rom 1:1; 11:13; 1 Cor 1:1; 4:9; 9:1f, 5; 15:9; 2 Cor 1:1; 11:5, 13; 12:11, 12; et al.). The term "apostle" literally means "one sent," who represents the sender and is entrusted with the sender's authority and message. God is the source of Paul's apostleship.

The Letters in Circulation

Paul's authority was based in a revelation from God and exercised in the apostle's words and example. In his letters, Paul teaches, exhorts, encourages, and corrects. The communities revered his instructions, reading and preserving them. They circulated these letters, sharing them with other communities. In this way the letters eventually gained the authority of Christian scriptures as the believing communities were increasingly strengthened, formed, and informed by a common tradition. Most people in the communities Paul evangelized probably could not read, so someone among them would read Paul's letter aloud to the assembly of believers. There they reflected together on its contents. From Paul's writings we can get a picture of how the early church operated, how it worshipped and governed itself, and how it grew.

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

The placement of Romans at the beginning of the New Testament letters is appropriate not only because it is the longest of Paul's letters but also because it may very well be his most comprehensive and important work. Romans has always held a special place among Paul's writings. Especially since the time of the Protestant Reformation in the sixteenth century, the importance of the doctrine of "justification by faith in Christ," which Paul develops in Romans (and, in a more succinct version, in Galatians) has been recognized by Catholics and Protestants alike as one of the most significant teachings of Paul and, in fact, of Christianity.

Paul and the Roman Christians

The Roman Christian community must have been fairly large by the time of Paul's arrival there. It is estimated that the Jewish community of Rome in the early first century numbered 50,000. Among Christians, it seems from Paul's letter that there were both Jews and Gentiles. Some of the information given in Romans 16 indicates quite a few house churches. Of course, Paul did not intend to arrive in Rome as a prisoner but as a free missionary. Yet according to the account in Acts, Paul had been arrested in Jerusalem, awaited trial in Caesarea and finally was sent to Rome. In the closing verses of Acts, Paul is pictured under house arrest in Rome for more than two years, while the gospel continues to spread.

Several unique characteristics of Romans distinguish this letter from the other writings of Paul. In this letter, Paul addresses a community he has not founded. In the first chapter of Romans, Paul indicates his great appreciation for this important and robust community of faith. The strength of their faith is well known, Paul says. He longs to visit them and has often planned to do so (1:13). He writes to introduce himself and his gospel, and to seek the Roman community's acceptance and help. Before fulfilling his desire to come to Rome on the way to Spain (cf. Rom 15:22–33), Paul must first deliver the collection of money from the Gentile churches for the “poor saints of Jerusalem” (15:26), who have been suffering from a famine. When these funds are delivered, his sights will be set for Rome. Some have speculated that in Rome Paul intended to equip himself for his mission to Spain, which was on the outer reaches of the Roman Empire.

So it is that both the Jewish mission field represented by the church in Jerusalem and the open-ended Gentile mission represented by Rome and Spain are on Paul’s mind as he writes this letter. Paul is concerned about unity among Christians. Although he has not founded the Roman church, he refers to the common faith he shares with believers there. He stresses the common fund of teaching from which both he and they draw. The issues of community in faith and of reconciliation permeate all of Romans and contribute to its perennial appeal to believers of every age.

Except for chapter 16, which may have been added later (cf. our commentary on this chapter and the notes of the NABRE), Romans lacks the personal tone characteristic of most of Paul’s letters. Some manuscripts omit the words “in Rome” in 1:7 and 15. Without this designation and the greetings of chapter 16, Romans might be considered as a circular letter, a general development of Paul’s most basic theological ideas. In Romans, Paul expounds upon universal salvation, upon the notion of justification by faith, and the relationship between Israel and the church as transformed by Christ. These are some of the most important and generally applicable aspects of all of Paul’s theology. The general nature and universal applicability of the content of Romans contribute to its wide appeal as an introduction to Paul.

Romans as “Diatribes”

More than any other Pauline writing, Romans is like a formal treatise, a summary of Paul’s theology that serves both as a self-introduction to a community not yet personally acquainted with Paul and as a summary for the message Paul preaches. Even though Romans has the formal features of an epistle, it can also be understood as a philosophical diatribe, a written exposé that tries to anticipate real or supposed objections or rebuttal. The diatribe, used by some ancient philosophers in teaching and writing, often interjected traces of dialogue in order to answer questions expected of opponents. For example, Paul brings his arguments forward by interspersing throughout Romans such rhetorical questions as “What advantage is there then in being a Jew?” (3:1) or “Well, then, are we better off?” (3:9) or “What then can we say that Abraham found, our ancestor according to the flesh?” (4:1). Thus, in comparison to Paul’s other works, Romans is structured more as a philosophical treatise. Most of the other letters reflect the give and take of real dialogue among people actually working and interacting together.

Paul’s Fundamental Teaching in Romans

Romans is probably best known for its teaching on justification. This key idea is expressed with a number of different terms including salvation, reconciliation, and redemption, all of which sometimes seem almost interchangeable (e.g., Rom 5:9–11). These terms originally belonged to the world of finance. The “debit” columns of sin and guilt and punishment are converted by God into the “credit” columns of forgiveness, redemption, and reconciliation. Through faith we are reconciled to God and to one another. We are redeemed by the blood of Christ, and our sins are forgiven.

The verb “save” refers to God’s intervening action when human beings are in need. It connotes actual, sometimes physical, rescue, as well as deliverance in spiritual distress. The Old Testament often refers to God as “Savior.” Gentiles would be familiar with the notion that a king or ruler, preserving and protecting a town or region under his care, might be called “savior.” In the New Testament, the term “save” is often used in connection with Jesus. The disciples, for example, prayed “Lord, save us” (e.g., Mt 8:25; 14:30). Paul assumes we are familiar with the long Old Testament tradition of God’s saving actions on behalf of people. But Paul, in relating God’s action to the death and resurrection of Christ, gives a new emphasis in the theology of salvation or “soteriology.” Many scholars point out that all of Paul’s Christology or thinking about Christ is really a soteriology or doctrine of how God saves through Christ.

In Paul’s letters, salvation usually refers to an eschatological, future reality based in Jesus’s intercession for us before God. Typically Paul distinguishes between the present reality of justification, already won for us in Jesus’s death, and the salvation that we hope for in the future. Romans focuses primarily on the notion of justification accessible to all through faith.

The Greek words that we translate “just,” “justice,” “justify,” and “righteousness” are all derived from the same root word, *dikaio*s (just), dikaiosynē (justice, righteousness, or justification). Paul connects the justice of God with God's power and will to "justify" all people, that is, to regard them as just. Believers understand that to be justified means that they act justly. This is a new application to the old covenant idea that living according to the Torah is a consequence of being part of the covenant community.

The Scriptures show that God's justice is revealed, that is, it cannot be attained merely through human effort or study. Isaiah reminds us that God's thoughts are not human thoughts and God's ways not our ways (see Is 55:7–8). Yet the Scriptures also tell us that we are to be just, that we must act in imitation of God, that we are to walk blamelessly before God and be perfect (see Gn 17:1; Hos 6:6). Thus, justice is not completely foreign to us. The God-fearing Israelite seeks to act justly, that is, in ways that are acceptable to God and in accord with God's covenant. These ways are also revealed through the Jewish "Torah" ("instruction") or Law. The Torah was handed down from Moses and interpreted throughout the history of the Jewish people, who revered it as the revealed will of God. So, for example, Abraham in Genesis (Gn 15:6) and Joseph in the infancy narrative (Mt 1:19) are described as "righteous" (dikaioi).

It is not that acting justly or keeping the Law earns salvation or God's approval, but rather the opposite. The covenant is God's gift to Israel. Israel's response is to keep the Law. The Jewish person seeking justice is enjoined to study and to follow the Torah or the instruction of God. In the covenant is the hope of being justified, that is, "made just" in God's sight. Thus, for the Old Testament as for Paul, the related terms "justice," "just," and "justified" all originate in God, who reveals how we are to act and thus judges us accordingly. Although all people are sinners, Jewish theology teaches that we may expect to learn the way of justice through a faithful following of the Law in all things. This is the background for Paul's understanding of justification through Jesus Christ.

In Romans Paul insists on two main ideas about justification. The first has to do with trying to attain justification or salvation by obeying the Law; the second main idea pertains to Paul's explanation of how the Gentiles or those who do not have the Law are justified.

First, for Paul, justification through the works of the Law is a false hope for several reasons. The idea that the Law held the key to justification was the position of the Jews who did not become Christians as well as of the Christian-Jewish group, led by Peter and James, who constituted the majority of the church when Paul began his mission. The theological challenge Paul faces is that his experience of the risen Christ, and his mission to preach that justification is available to all, convinced Paul that justification is an act of God, given freely to all who believe. Like many of his Jewish contemporaries, Paul himself was zealous for the Law (cf. Rom 10:1–3; Phil 3:3–7; Gal 1:11–14), but now he realizes that this is not the way to go. Indeed, although he himself was “blameless” according to the Law, neither Paul nor anyone is justified by keeping the Law. The Law defines sin but does not enable us to overcome sin. The Law does not justify even those who keep it. Paul uses the Jewish Scriptures, particularly the Psalms and Habakkuk, to support the idea that the just live by faith and not by works of the Law (e.g., Pss 14:1–3; 53:2–4; 143:2; Hb 2:4).

Second, justification through the Law is insufficient because it excludes the Gentiles, who, as Paul has described in Romans 1:18–3:31, are in the same sinful predicament as the Jews. But both Abraham and Christ show that the Gentiles, no less than the Jews, are now justified through faith. According to the Law, Jesus was condemned to death. But God overturned the Law’s verdict in raising Jesus to life (see Gal 3:10–14). Thus, for Paul, the Law has been superseded by the death and resurrection of Jesus. A consequence of this is that now the Gentiles are included among the justified. By accepting Jesus’s gift of justification, and consequently living in accord with God’s will, Jews and Gentiles both are saved. Following the just requirements of the Law or the precepts of the church are not a prerequisite for but a result of being justified.

Paul understands justification as already having taken place through the death and resurrection of Christ. Salvation is in the future, promised to those who believe in Christ and live according to this belief. As Paul himself says it, “Indeed, if, while we were enemies, we were reconciled to God through the death of his Son, how much more, once reconciled, will we be saved by his life” (Rom 5:10).

Paul’s idea of faith is also central to the argument of Romans. It may seem that he is simply replacing one human action, obedience to the Law, with another human action, faith in Jesus Christ. But for Paul faith is trust: the belief that it is God’s power, not our own, and our reliance on God, not on our own abilities, that saves us. Paul saw the obvious danger for sinful people: the temptation to continue in their wrong behavior and so close themselves off from God forever. Paul also saw a problem for people who seemed moral and upright: the danger that they would believe God was forced to save them because they had earned their way into God's love. For Paul, such thinking is a fatal mistake. It assumes that we can manipulate God by our actions. Paul breaks through this misunderstanding by his assertion of the necessity of faith. Faith is our acknowledgment that it is God's power that saves us, not our own efforts; that we are helpless, in that we are all sinners; and that we can trust in God.

We should note that Paul begins with the affirmation of faith in God's work of salvation to which all have access in Christ. He does not start with the premise of defeat nor emphasize that each person must individually become convicted of sin. Rather, Paul stresses first the goodness and power of God to save, and then sets out to demonstrate the universal need for salvation to be given.

Paul came to believe that the revelation of the Law was fulfilled and superseded by the death and resurrection of Christ. In Romans, Paul will develop a dichotomy between what was "formerly" and what is "now." For Paul, God's justice is only fully revealed in Jesus. The emphasis on "now" also implies an emphasis on the accessibility of God's justice to all through faith. The Law (or Torah) formerly divided humanity into "Jews and Gentiles," the latter not sharing in the promise represented by the Law. This division is overcome, and all now have equal access to God's revelation of justice expressed in Christ.

WORKING THROUGH ROMANS

The typical Greco-Roman letter form applied to Romans yields the following divisions: the address, consisting of a greeting and a thanksgiving, is contained in Rom 1:1–15; the body of the letter comprises 1:16–15:13. It contains the essential message of Paul, basically following what has helpfully been called the "indicative-imperative" structure. The indicative or doctrinal section in 1:16–11:36 shows that the gospel is God's power to save all by faith in Christ. Paul's imperative or ethical teachings in 12:1–15:13 flow from this. The conclusion in 15:14–16:27 contains Paul's travelogue, his personal greetings, and a final doxology.

A working outline of Romans follows:

READING THROUGH ROMANS

The Address (1:1–15)

The address typically includes greetings and a thanksgiving. The greeting of Romans, identifying the sender, Paul, and his addressees, is an elaboration of the standard form of Greco-Roman letters (see NABRE note on 1:1–7). Here and in some other letters, notably Philippians, Paul has woven this brief feature into an extended prayer. In no other authentic Pauline letter besides Romans does Paul write in his name alone. He usually includes some co-worker known to the recipients. But even in Romans, Paul is not entirely independent. He needs the Roman community's acceptance. He is grateful for their perseverance and he looks forward to being strengthened by them through their common faith (1:11). Paul says that although he is personally unknown to the Romans, the gospel or Christian message he preaches is the same as that which they have received from other Christian missionaries.

Although Paul usually refers to his addressees as “the church in _____,” he does not use the term “church” in the address of Romans. But he does remind the Roman Christians of their vocation to holiness. In developing a Christian terminology in the Greek language, Paul will consistently draw upon images and phrases that appear in the Hebrew Scriptures. An example is Paul’s description of the believing community as holy, as saints, called and sanctified by God (see 1 Cor 1:2). Israel is a “kingdom of priests, a holy nation,” according to Exodus 19:6. The Law sets Israel apart, making it distinct from its neighbors because it has a covenant relationship with God. This holiness has nothing to do with the virtue of the members, but arises from the fact of God’s call. Their personal holiness is then a response to that call.

The Body of the Letter (1:16–15:13)

In Romans Paul sets out to describe the gospel as the power of God to save all who have faith. This is theme of Romans (1:16–17). The doctrine itself is developed in 1:18–8:39. Paul inserts a special consideration of how this doctrine affects Israel in chapters 9 through 11. Consequences or ways of being and acting that flow from the reality of justification in the lives of believers appear in 12:1–15:13. To be justified means that to respond adequately, we must act justly. In this respect, Paul’s teaching on justification is derived from Jewish thinking about the covenant.

The Theme (1:16–17)

Romans 1:16–17 states the theme of Romans. Paraphrased, Paul says that the gospel is the power of God for universal salvation. In Romans, this theme is developed in both its positive and negative implications. Positively, Paul insists that faith is accessible to all through Christ. But Paul also realizes some negative implications, even of his belief that all are saved in Christ. For example, it is clear that all have sinned and are in need of salvation. The emphasis on universal sinfulness deserving of God’s wrath is the negative pole of the theme of Romans. There are no human means of achieving salvation for ourselves; it must be given by God.

Note that for Paul the starting point is not that all have sinned but rather that all have been saved. This is the conviction of faith. Paul considers sin to be an illustration of the universal need for salvation. This explains why Paul's hope, eloquently expressed especially in chapters 5, 8, and 15, is so deep and certain. No human sin is sufficient to separate us from the love of God that saves us.

Doctrinal Section: Universal Access to Salvation and Universal Sin (1:18–11:36)

The doctrinal or teaching section of Romans presents the gospel as universally inclusive and accessible. There are three main parts. In the first, 1:18–4:25, Paul conducts a dialogue with an imaginary Jewish interlocutor whom he tries to convince that faith in Christ is the sole source of righteousness. The second main part, 5:1–8:39, describes Christian life in the Spirit, liberated from sin and death. A third part of the teaching section, 9:1–11:36, shows that God's promises to Israel will be fulfilled and "All Israel will be saved" (11:26).

The Common Predicament of Gentiles and Jews (1:18–4:25)

Having stated his conviction that the gospel is God's power to save all through faith (1:16–17), Paul proceeds to demonstrate the need of all for salvation. Universal sin illustrates this need. The example of Abraham shows that righteousness is accessible not through the Law but by faith (4: 1–25).

All Have Sinned, Jews and Gentiles Alike (1:18–3:20)

Paul shows that "all," both Gentiles and Jews, have sinned and incurred the wrath of God. The "wrath of God" is being revealed in that the Gentiles are experiencing disastrous consequences of their own behavior (Rom 1:18–32). The "wrath of God" is an image borrowed from the Old Testament prophets (see Is 9:8–12; 10:5; Jer 50:11–17; Ez 5:13; 36:5–6). It depicts God's rejection or "abandonment" (Rom 1:24, 26, 28) of people to their own sin. The story of Saul's disobedience to God in 1 Samuel 15 dramatizes this dynamic: once he no longer walks with God, Saul's downfall is certain.

Although the Gentiles could know God through creation, the evidence of their godless lives means that they have rejected knowledge of God. Belief in God is no mere intellectual affair but involves a conversion to “the living and true God” (see 1 Thes 1:9) expressed in a virtuous life. Paul adopts the Old Testament notion of the relationship between idolatry and immorality evident among the pagans. (But see the NABRE note on 1:18–32 that cautions that the lives of many in the Greco-Roman culture could serve as models for Christians today.) Paul goes on to use a series of scriptural quotations to show the universal bondage of sin. All, Jews and Gentiles alike, are under sin’s domination. While the law reveals the consciousness of sin, no human being is justified before God by keeping the law (3:20). Paul speaks in generalities here, trying first to indict the Gentiles (1:18–2:16) and later (in 2:17–3:20) the Jews, in an effort to show the effects of universal sin and the need of all humanity for God’s salvation.

God’s Righteousness Revealed Apart from the Law (3:21–31)

Paul summarizes his previous demonstration of universal sinfulness (3:23) but prefaces it with the way out, accomplished by God through Christ, then makes the central assertion: we are justified by faith apart from the works of the Law (3:28). He emphasizes that God’s just judgment comes upon all people, for God shows no partiality (2:11; see also Dt 10:17; 2 Chr 19:7; Sir 35:12f; Acts 10:34; Gal 2:6; Eph 6:9; Col 3:2, 5; 1 Pt 1:17). Paul adopts the language of the prophets, who not only charged sinfulness to the pagans but also accused the Jews of having stubborn and impenitent hearts. Paul’s ample quotations from the Law and the prophets demonstrate that his whole argument here is familiar to the Jewish community and within the scope of traditional internal prophetic critique. There is no justification here for a charge of “anti-Judaism” against Paul.

Abraham, Model of Faith (4:1–25)

Abraham lived long before the Law was revealed to Moses. Paul seizes on this to show that Abraham is a model of one who is justified apart from the Law. Indeed Abraham’s faith was recognized by God as justice. This idea is so central that Paul quotes a verse from Scripture (Gn 15:6) three times in this chapter (Rom 4:3, 9, 22). According to the “flesh,” Abraham is the father of the Jews. But because of his faith Abraham became the Father of all. For Jews, circumcision symbolizes the individual's membership in the people of God, and therefore the individual's acceptance of God's law and teaching. Since Abraham was justified before his circumcision, he was justified independently of the Law. Therefore Abraham is the ancestor of both Jews and Gentiles. Further, God promised Abraham he would become the Father of many nations. That promise is fulfilled in Christ. Abraham's example illustrates the theme of Romans: all have access now to salvation through faith. (For further discussion of the image of Abraham for Paul, see the RG to Galatians.)

Liberation from Sin and Death through the Gift of the Spirit (5:1–8:39)

Having demonstrated the need of all for salvation, Paul proceeds to show how those who are justified through faith in Christ are liberated from the effects of sin and death. Chapter 5 begins, "Therefore since we have been justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Turning from the imaginary, skeptical Jew he was addressing in chapters 1 through 4, Paul focuses on the experience of believers in chapters 5 through 8. If the sin of Adam caused death for everyone, how much greater is the effect of grace in Christ (5:1–21). If we have died with Christ as symbolized by our baptism, we are no longer alive to sin, and we shall be resurrected with Christ. Our lives in Christ have already begun (6:1–23). Yet we know that knowledge of what is right does not give us the power to do what is right. That can only come through Christ (7:1–25). Finally, echoing chapter 5, Paul begins chapter 8 saying, "Hence, now there is no condemnation for those who are in Christ Jesus." Life in the Spirit is our hope, assuring us that "nothing can separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord" (8:39).

The Two Adams (5:1–21)

In chapter 5 Paul contrasts Christ's saving actions (that is, his death and resurrection) with the devastating consequences of the sin of the first Adam. The first human beings were created for immortality (Wis 2:23f) but their sin brought death into the world. Subsequent generations continue the sentence of death by multiplying their sinfulness (Rom 5:12). Adam represents all people under sin with its curse of death. But Adam is also a figure drawing out God's promise of redemption. The writer of Genesis portrays the situation of Adam as obviously in need of some divine action: even before the curse for sin is pronounced in Genesis 3:16–19, God promises to save the human family (Gn 3:15). The early church fathers, above all Augustine, used these passages (especially Rom 5:12) as a basis for description of the devastating effects of “original” sin, although Paul does not use this terminology. Rather, he argues that if the first sin had such widespread effects that ever since Adam all people have been under its influence, how much more effective and powerful is the gift of salvation won through Jesus Christ. That gift is called grace, which brings eternal life (5:21). The mode of argument here is a familiar rhetorical construction: from lesser to greater. If so much damage was caused by the first human being, Adam, how much greater is the grace and redemption won by the ultimate human being, Christ.

Paul insists Christ’s death and resurrection have affected all of human history. His argument is basically this: If the sin of Adam was so far reaching, how much more encompassing is the gift of God in Christ for all? Paul’s thinking is at the basis of the church’s ecstatic thanksgiving, “O happy fault that has merited so great a redeemer!” The Roman liturgy recalls this prayer during the Easter Vigil each year in the recitation of the Exultet.

Baptized into Christ (6:1–23)

Paul’s view of humankind, that is, his theological anthropology, is evident in this chapter. He considers all people to be under some dominant influence, living either for God under grace or living for sin. This is a different perspective from our contemporary one that considers human freedom as an autonomous, absolute ideal. For Paul, freedom is related to life for God (6:10) in contrast with slavery to sin (6:6). By means of the opposites of death and life, Paul contrasts the former condition of sin and death to the new life of freedom won by Christ and obtained by the believer through baptism.

The term “baptism” means “immersion” and Paul plays on this original sense even as he has the initiatory rite in view. He coins several expressions in chapter 6: compounding verbs with the prefix syn- (meaning “with”) that signify believers’ solidarity with Christ. We have “died with” him and are “buried with” him; therefore we will be “raised with” him and now “live with” him. This incorporation into the death and resurrection of Christ by means of baptism necessarily has implications for the moral life. As a result of this incorporation, we “walk” (a term designating moral living) in the newness of life (6:4). Paul will postpone a fuller discussion of the moral implications of this “newness of life” until chapters 12 through 15.

Life without the Spirit (7:1–25)

The major part of chapter 7 follows the style of a diatribe (see the NABRE notes on chap. 7 and introduction). Paul anticipates the objections of real or imaginary opponents in a kind of dialogue designed to present his own ideas in an orderly fashion. The most important aspects of Paul’s argument are three. First, the Christian views the Law differently now, having been freed from its service (Paul says “bondage”) by participation in the death of Christ. Second, the function of the Law is to specify what is sinful. Thus the Law did not encourage grace or freedom but only identified sin. Third, anticipating an objection that the Law is therefore sin, Paul responds emphatically, “No!” Yet knowledge of what is good does not enable us to do what is good. The Law is one more factor, then, in the judgment against humanity, convicting all of sin. The Law concurs with human conscience, judging us as sinners. This is the meaning of the expression, “the good that I want to do I avoid and the evil I wish to avoid I do” (see 7:19–21). But it is important to realize that his statements about this unhappy predicament are rhetorical, not autobiographical. They are not merely expressions of his personal conscience, but of the situation of humanity without God.

Life in the Spirit (8:1–39)

Romans 8 celebrates the message of salvation. Nowhere is Paul’s understanding of the role of the Spirit more eloquently expressed than in Romans 8. Paul begins this chapter with a consideration of the opposition between the flesh and the spirit. He often tries to illustrate his meaning by opposing two poles of thought. This is a way of showing the mutually exclusive categories of sin and death versus grace and life. Paul adapts the Greek notion of “the flesh” in order to express the sinful condition of humanity before grace. In the Greek philosophical tradition, “flesh,” like “spirit,” had several connotations. The “flesh” means, of course, that which pertains to the body. But it can also mean the inferior aspect of human existence, whatever in human life is weak or limited. For the Greeks, the “flesh” referred to what they regarded as baser desires, which for them included sensual and sexual instincts. The flesh is mortal and must be controlled by the “spirit” (that is, the mind and will), which in Greek thought is immortal. Paul adapts this notion to sometimes speak of the “flesh” as the moral equivalent of “sin.” For Paul, however, sins of the “flesh” include not just bodily sins, such as gluttony, but also “spiritual” sins, such as pride.

Drawing on the same tradition, Paul uses the term “spirit” to refer to the new life accessible to all through Christ. In stressing the life of the spirit, Paul contrasts the present with the past that was characterized by sin, death, and slavery to the dictates of the “flesh.”

The holy Spirit is an advocate, coming to our aid and strengthening us. Like the Israelites in Egypt, we formerly could only groan in the suffering and weakness caused by sin. The Spirit converts our incoherent cries into a prayer that recognizes God as Father and ourselves as children of God. Thus, through the Spirit we are liberated from slavery to sin and enabled to pray as the children of God, saying “Abba” (8:15). From Paul’s use of this prayer, we can assume that he is indirectly referring to the Gospel tradition that tells us that Jesus himself addressed God as “Abba, Father” (Mk 14:36). We are confident, too, that the suffering we experience and witness is as nothing compared to the glory that is to come. All creation shared in the sin of Adam and groans with humanity in its suffering. Now all creation awaits the revelation of the children of God (8:20–25).

But What of Israel? (9:1–11:36)

At the end of chapter 8, Paul exclaims that nothing can separate us from the love of God. But he goes on to acknowledge in Romans 9 through 11 that the Jewish rejection of the Christian message represents a challenge to this belief. Some may say that now God has run out of patience with Israel. But if God’s fidelity to the covenant and God’s justice is limited by Israel’s rejection of Christ, what does that mean not only for Israel but for the Christian church which is adopting the prerogatives of Israel? Has God had a change of mind? These are some of the questions Paul puzzles out in Romans 9–11 in a remarkable review of the history of salvation.

The form of this three-chapter unit is a philosophical diatribe. Paul responds to anticipated questions or challenges in the form of an artificial “dialogue.” In the course of developing his views, he makes abundant use of the Old Testament. Before dealing with some ethical conclusions to the doctrines in chapters 12–15, Paul senses the necessity of taking up this personally painful question about God’s fidelity to the Jews. Israel’s rejection of Christ was clearly a problem not only for Paul but also for the early church. Paul’s consideration of this question properly belongs with the doctrinal development of Romans.

Paul’s summary of the privileges of Israel in Romans 9:1–5 prompts him to redefine the term “Israel” in chapters 9 through 11. Israel is not a mere ethnic or historical reality but one that always had theological connotations. The Jewish scriptures show, Paul argues, that “not all of Israel are Israel” (9:6). The element of divine choice was operating throughout Jewish history, illustrating that God is free to show mercy as God wishes. Not all are children of Abraham simply because they descended from him, as the preference for Isaac over Ishmael shows (see 9:7–9; Gal 4:22–3:1). God chose Jacob over Esau (Rom 9:10–13). God hardens some, as in the case of the Pharaoh; but divine mercy is shown to Moses and the Hebrews in Egypt (9:15–17). Paul also cites examples from the prophets, especially Jeremiah, Hosea, and Isaiah to support God’s freedom to choose. For Paul, God’s mercy is God’s justice. Paul carefully builds his arguments to show how God is now including the Gentiles among the new “Israel of God” (Gal 6:16).

Paul begins chapter 10 with a defense of his kinspeople as he had chapter 9. He testifies to Jewish zeal in pursuit of the Law as he himself was zealous for the Law prior to his faith in Christ (see Gal 1:14). But as “end of the law” (Rom 10:4), Christ brings justification for all who believe. Thus Christ renders the Law useless and eliminates the differences between Jew and Gentile. To support his assertion that Christ is the end of the Law, Paul develops an explanation of scripture in the style of a Jewish midrash or “running commentary.” Paul applies the Old Testament to Christ and so gives an example of how the “law and the prophets testify” to the righteousness given by God in Christ (cf. Rom 3:21–26). Paul argued that there is only one God of Jews and Gentiles in Romans 3:21–31. Similarly, here in Romans 10, Paul says that there is only one Lord who is over all and accessible to all who call upon him. That Lord is Christ. Near the end of the chapter, in 10:14–21, Paul echoes the traditional prophetic denunciation of Israel who alone is responsible for her infidelity. But God continues to stretch out hands to a “disobedient people” (10:21).

God’s fidelity, proven in the past and present (chapters 9 and 10) will ultimately be for the salvation of “all Israel” in the future (chapter 11). God has not finally abandoned Israel since a remnant remains faithful to God as a sign of the ultimate salvation of “all Israel” (Rom 11:26). Paul cautions the Gentiles, included by the action of Christ into “all Israel,” to remember that it is only by grace that they are saved. This is a mystery revealing God’s infinite mercy. The power of God is the divine compassion by which all are enfolded into the salvation of “all Israel.”

Exhortation to Christian Life (12:1–15:13)

Paul’s ethical conclusions are applications of his doctrine and thus form the “imperative” or “paraenetic” exhortatory part of the letter. This ethical part can be subdivided into two: consideration of the church and the world (12:1–13:14), and a call for reconciliation and unity (14:1–15:13).

The Church and the World (12:1–13:14)

Romans 12:1–2 has sometimes been called the center or heart of Pauline ethics. Here Christians, who do not yet have a sacrificial ritual like most of their neighbors in their respective temples and like the Jews in Jerusalem, are told that their own lives are their living sacrifice, which purifies them to be able to live not in conformity to the world (seen as being in opposition to God), but transformed “by the renewal of your mind” (Rom 12:2).

In describing the Christian community, Paul adapts the image of the “body” (12:4–8), a popular image used by Stoic philosophers, to illustrate the interdependence of members in a state. Older Catholics may be familiar with this image for the church and probably relate it to ideas developed by Pope Pius XII in the encyclical “The Mystical Body” (Mystici Corporis). This encyclical stressed the various ways members of the Christian community, both now and in past ages, are related to one another. It is also well to remember that Paul develops the image to stress the very real mutual dependency of Christians who “ought not to think of themselves more highly than others” (12:3) but as “one body” (12:4) having many parts. Paul also takes up this motif in 1 Cor 12:12–31. The image of the body provides the transition between the liturgical language referring to Christians' behavior as "spiritual worship" (12:1), and the obligations of the mutual love that is to be characteristic of Christians.

Romans 13:1–7 takes up the question of the Christian community in relation to civil government. The modern reader must remember that Paul is speaking to a minority community within an alien state. At first glance his advice appears simplistic. Paul says that all authority is ordained by God and has its origin in God. Christians in Paul's time were trying simply to survive. Society expected citizens to follow the religion of the state. Paul's instructions advise Christians to show good citizenship while not being conformed to the standards of the world around them.

Having just spoken about giving society its "due," Paul considers the question of the debt believers owe one another: "Owe nothing to anyone, except to love one another" (13:8). Clearly Paul is acquainted with the love command of Jesus (see Rom 13:8–10; also 1 Cor 12:31–13:13). He reviews the commandments from adultery to covetousness, repeating finally in verse 10 what he stated in verse 8: "Love is the fulfillment of the law."

Reconciliation and Unity (14:1–15:13)

Paul frequently enjoins his addressees to be of one and the same mind (e.g., Phil 2:1–4). Yet disputes over ethical issues threaten the unity that should characterize the Christian church. The Roman Christians disagree over dietary matters and the observance of certain feast days. In a mixed community of Jewish and Gentile Christians, such questions could not help but arise.

Referring to the different sides of this debate, Paul speaks of those with "weak" and those with "strong" faith. But his emphasis is not so much on the opinions or positions of individual believers but the common attitudes to be cultivated among believers. He refers to the faith of the community and of members' responsibility to be united with the faith of the whole body.

Paul exhorts the Christians to a fundamental harmony that is expressed in mutual respect and concern for one another. Paul reminds the Roman Christians, many of whom are Jewish, that the Scriptures are written for our instruction and encouragement. The term "encouragement" is linked to the hope that abounds in the community "by the power of the holy Spirit" (15:13). Hope, joy, and peace are linked to belief. Faith means we confess that Jesus is Lord and believe that God raised him from the dead (see 10:9). But it is also, according to 15:7–13, means acceptance of other members of the Christian community.

Conclusion (15:14–16:27)

Paul concludes with his travel plans, recommendations and greetings to believers in Rome, and a final doxology (15:14–16:27). Paul reminds the Romans again, as he did at the beginning of his letter, about their common faith and his confidence in them. In 15:14–33 the apostle speaks of his need for their hospitality soon; he requests prayers as he embarks on his mission to Jerusalem to take the collection there. Although Paul is personally unacquainted with the Romans, he has written “boldly” because he is a “minister” of Jesus Christ. He describes his ministry in liturgical language, as a “priestly” (leitourgos) duty (15:16). Paul is of course not referring to a sacramental priesthood, since Christians have not yet developed a theology of sacrificial cult, but to his mission to preach the Christian message to the Gentiles. He uses language common to the Jerusalem Temple priesthood and to other religious worship of the day.

Paul reports that his immediate plans include a visit to Rome in passing on the way to Spain, after taking the collection to Jerusalem. He understands the collection as a symbol linking Jews and Gentiles, the fulfillment of a responsibility he accepted at the Jerusalem council (Gal 2:10). There is yet only the unfinished matter of taking the offering from the Gentiles to Jerusalem. This material gift represents a “debt” owed the Jews whose spiritual heritage is now shared by the Gentiles. The term “debt” occurred in Romans 13:8–10 where Paul described love as the only legitimate debt a believer can incur. Since spiritual blessings are much greater than material things, the Gentiles owe these lesser goods to the Jews as a consequence of their inheriting Israel’s spiritual blessings now through Jesus Christ. Common faith makes kin of Jews and Gentiles and links both in mutual responsibility. Paul’s strategy, then, is twofold: to ensure that the offering is sizable and that it is accepted as symbolic of the true faith and equal status of the Gentile Christians. If the Jewish Christians accept the gift, they are thereby accepting the mission to the Gentiles.

Chapter 16 consists mostly of greetings to and from various people known to Paul. It is possible that it was originally part of a letter intended for Ephesus and was, for some reason, later added to the preceding fifteen chapters of Romans. This chapter seems almost like an afterthought, and further examination suggests it even contains some discrepancies to material stated or implied in those first fifteen chapters. Paul commends Phoebe, bearer of the letter to the Romans, speaking of her as diakonos (the earliest written use of this term “deacon” with respect to an office in the church) and prostatis, that is, his patron and benefactor. Then he greets numerous people as if he is well-known to them and as if he and the Romans have a number of mutual acquaintances. Until now the apostle has maintained a certain distance from the Roman Christians, insinuating that his introduction to himself and to his gospel could serve in lieu of the personal contact he usually has with communities he has founded. But if Paul knows as many Romans as this chapter indicates, the uncharacteristically general and impersonal tone of chapters 1 through 15 of the letter seems strange. The NABRE note on 16:1–23 draws attention to the mixture of Jewish and Gentile names, representative of the rich and varied background of the Roman community. Much valuable social information about acquaintances and collaborators of Paul, both male and female, whether in Ephesus or Rome, is contained in these verses.

The placement and originality of the final doxology or blessing is debated (see NABRE note). But its appropriateness at the end of this epistle is undisputed. The doxology echoes several themes developed in the course of the letter. Paul speaks of “my gospel” (see 1:16–17), the mystery kept secret for long ages (11:25–32), manifested through prophetic writings (numerous allusions to the Old Testament throughout this epistle), and to the obedience of faith (see 1:5; 15:28). Paul has pronounced a blessing at various points throughout his development (7:24; 8:35–39; 11:33–36), as if overwhelmed by the abundance of God’s wisdom and mercy. This reflects the Jewish custom of celebrating the wonders of God with praise. Nowhere is the doxology more fitting than after Paul has reviewed the fundamentals of his gospel, with emphasis on the universality of redemption and the imminence of God’s victory over all evil in the triumph of Jesus Christ.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Throughout our commentary on Romans we have tried to show the relevance of the major themes developed here: justification by faith, the emphasis on the present reality of justification contrasted with the former life of sin, and most importantly, the inclusion of all, Jews and Gentiles, in a new Israel of God, the church. The ethical section of Romans may be seen as a description of the church living in but not of the world. It would be hard to overestimate the influence of Romans in the development of Christian doctrine and morality throughout history.

THE LETTERS TO THE CORINTHIANS

INTRODUCTION

The letters to the Corinthians reveal Paul the pastoral theologian in ways that his other surviving letters do not. The sheer number of pastoral problems posed and answered, especially in 1 Corinthians, leads us to think that here Paul was most challenged to apply the principles he believed in, new circumstances in the lives of his community. The Corinthians could never be accused of lack of initiative. Rather, they seem to have taken (perhaps more seriously than Paul would have liked) his encouragement to find new freedom in Christ, so that his relationship with them was complex and tumultuous.

Corinth was the capital and central city of the Roman province of Achaia, which comprised southern Greece. Its location on the isthmus dividing the Peloponnesus from mainland Greece made it a major seaport and trading center. It was also a Roman freedmen's colony and therefore its population was made up of various peoples, but with a heavy concentration of Roman citizens and Roman interests. With its mixture of national and religious groups, rich and poor, Jews, pagans and Christians, and moral and immoral people, it was an exciting but difficult environment for the small Christian community, which was predominantly Gentile but probably had a small Jewish minority.

The letters we call 1 and 2 Corinthians formed part of a larger collection that originally consisted of several letters Paul wrote to the community. He speaks in 1 Corinthians 5:9 of a previous letter written to the Corinthians instructing them to avoid immoral people. Such a letter no longer exists, and nowhere do we have this instruction from Paul, unless, as has been suggested, a piece of it survives as 2 Corinthians 6:14–7:1. Similarly, the reference to a letter written in “much affliction and anguish of heart” (2 Cor 2:4) hardly fits the tone of 1 Corinthians. Furthermore, 2 Corinthians is characterized by discontinuity, suggesting that it is actually a composite of more than one letters (see NABRE introduction to 2 Corinthians).

We learn that the Corinthians also wrote to Paul (see 1 Cor 7:1), and that the Corinthian church, challenging as it was for Paul, preserved and honored his advice, undoubtedly reading his letters at liturgical gatherings as Paul had instructed them. We are left with the impression that the extant letters reflect an editing and combining of writings, compiled as the community processed and integrated the words of the apostle.

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

In writing 1 Corinthians around AD 56, Paul was responding to some disquieting reports he had received about the community. First Corinthians addressed real, not theoretical situations. Paul's knowledge of what was going on was based on verbal accounts from reliable sources, letters from members of the community, and Paul's own eighteen-month experience of living amidst this community (Acts 18:11).

First Corinthians is a particularly fruitful source of reflection for our contemporary church because it raises so many issues that are still relevant: divisions based on ideologies or different world views, incest, lawsuits among Christians, scandal, marriage and celibacy, theology of woman and the participation of women in the church, the proper way to celebrate Eucharist, charismatic gifts, and belief in the resurrection. We, like the Corinthians, are challenged to find the right roles and qualifications of leadership in a pluralistic society. Like the Corinthians we need to recognize that behavior is an indicator of what we believe.

In a sense, the singular “community” might misrepresent the Corinthians. We may tend to think of the community as a specific group that met at the house of a particular individual in a city. But the Corinthians were not a single large community. Probably there were several Christian communities in that particular city, which congregated at different houses. Apparently these communities represented different competitive factions. Each community was developing divergent expressions of Christian life and worship. Some groups were homogeneous, preferring to worship with like-minded people from similar social and religious backgrounds, who followed certain diets and enjoyed certain prestigious spiritual gifts.

A variety of liturgical celebrations developed. The Corinthians disagreed about whether Christians ought to marry or, if married, should remain married after baptism. Paul responds to these issues among the Christians at Corinth. Although our problems and divisions may be expressed somewhat differently, Paul's admonitions to the Corinthians on the importance of unity, charity, and mutual respect based on a common faith provide us with a model for approaching our own concerns today. First Corinthians discloses to us Paul the pastor, who encourages the Corinthians to imitate him as he imitates Christ (11:1).

WORKING THROUGH 1 CORINTHIANS

Our comments on the major themes and relevance of this epistle will follow the structure suggested in the NABRE introduction, with some rather minor adjustments. First Corinthians contains the usual letter format: an address in 1:1–9, the body of the letter in 1:10–15:58, and a conclusion in 16:1–24.

Since this letter is a response to the concerns of the Corinthians, there is not the same kind of formal structure we saw in Romans. Yet we can detect in 1 Corinthians a structural pattern that helps shed some light on the emphasis and meaning of Paul's message. Paul's general approach to issues follows an A-B-A' pattern by which Paul introduces and begins to develop a topic (A), disrupts his reflections by bringing up a second issue (B), and then returns to the original topic (A'). Often he uses this pattern to emphasize the middle or B statement. One illustration is Paul's discussion of abuses in the celebration of the Eucharist. He describes the abuses in 1 Corinthians 11:17–22 (A) and in verses 26–34 (A'). Paul interjects into the middle of this description his account of Jesus's Last Supper the night before he died (see 11:23–25, [B]). In this way Paul tries to remedy the abuses at Corinth by recalling what Jesus did and reminding the Corinthians that they are to act "in memory of" Jesus. Further examples of Paul's use of the A-B-A' pattern will be discussed as they appear in this letter. For the moment, though, simply note that the pattern usually has the effect of emphasizing the middle or B section as a corrective for the situations described in A and A'.

READING THROUGH 1 CORINTHIANS

The Address (1:1–9)

The address contains a greeting (1:1–3) and thanksgiving (1:4–9). In the greeting, Paul refers to himself as an “apostle of Jesus Christ” and identifies a “brother,” Sosthenes, as co-author who does not reappear in the letter. He is perhaps to be identified with the synagogue official of the same name in Acts 18:17. Paul addresses the community as a “church” (ekklesia), which has been “sanctified in Christ Jesus” and “called to be holy.” Paul thus reminds the Corinthians that they have a common vocation (ekklesia literally means “called out of”). This is Paul’s usual word for the assembly of believers, taken from the civic word for the assembly of citizens in a free city-state. It may also be a conscious translation of the Hebrew qahal, the biblical assembly of Israel. The Corinthians have a new identity, rooted in God, which distinguishes them from the world around them.

Paul’s adaptation of the thanksgiving usually found in Hellenistic letters, focuses on the blessings received by his addressees. Moreover, the thanksgiving announces themes he will develop in the letter. The Corinthians lack no spiritual gift whatsoever (1:7). The factions among them that so concern Paul are rooted precisely in their envy of and competition for extraordinary gifts.

The Body of the Letter (1:10–15:58)

The whole of 1 Corinthians addresses specific issues that caused dissension and strained the fabric of the Corinthian community. In the first section of the body or main part of the letter, Paul discusses the divisions he has heard about among the Corinthians (1:10–6:20). He then turns to address matters that the Corinthians had themselves directed to him (see 7:1–11:1). Finally, he will consider other issues relevant to the Corinthian community; namely appropriate ways of celebrating the Eucharist (11:2–14:40), and the meaning of the Resurrection (15:1–58). Following this general outline, we can now comment on the main message of 1 Corinthians.

Reported Divisions and Abuses (1:10–6:20)

Reports from Chloe's people (see 1:11) identified some problems at Corinth stemming from two matters: (1) factions (1:10–4:21) and (2) immoral behavior (5:1–6:20).

Factions in Corinth (1:10–4:21).

The variety of backgrounds of its members was the root cause of many problems in the community of Corinth, complicated additionally by the fact that the community was divided into several house churches. Various members of the community turned to different leaders, and groups began to vie with one another for superiority and recognition. Paul first takes up the slogans adopted by groups who profess allegiance to the various leaders. He names group leaders, specifically Cephas (that is, Peter), Apollos, and himself. He shows the absurdity of divisions based on leadership, which is superficial compared to the common baptism by which all Christians are sanctified and saved.

The Corinthians disagreed among themselves about which leaders were the most important and which group of Christians was the most prestigious. They may have taken their lead from disagreements among the great figures themselves. James disagreed with Paul, for example, about whether any aspects of the Jewish Law were required of Gentile Christians (Gal 2). Peter favored at least minimal requirements, while Paul advocated complete freedom from the Jewish Law for Gentile converts. First Corinthians suggests that the leaders' disagreement affected the Corinthians and caused many to side with one leader against another. But the Corinthians also had their own divisions.

Another leader was Apollos who, for very different reasons, had a following that competed for the Corinthians' loyalty. Apollos attracted many Corinthians because of his eloquence in speaking (see Acts 18:24–28). Meanwhile, some of the Corinthians cited Paul's unimpressive physical presence and speaking abilities as reason to reject him (1 Cor 2:1–5; 2 Cor 1:10). Paul chided the Corinthians for judging by human standards, not by God's as revealed in the cross of Christ. Paul reminded them that neither he nor Peter nor Apollos was crucified for them. The Corinthians were baptized in Christ's name and belonged to Christ. The formation of competitive groups within the Christian community is absurd. Paul admonishes the Corinthians to remember who they are—that by worldly standards few among them have any reason to boast (1:26–31)—but that “in the Lord” they can boast that they are saved and form a “new creation” (2 Cor 5:17). They do not have wealth or nobility or education, but they are rich in the blessings of the Spirit of God. The “not many of you” in 1:26 has been read both ways: Paul is stressing the humble origins and status of most, but in saying this he suggests that some really were of higher social status and wealth.

The first part of this letter (1:10–4:21) may be summarized as the gospel paradox: the teaching that God's wisdom is greater than human wisdom, that the power of the cross outweighs all human power. The Corinthians portrayed themselves as sophisticated, mature, and truly wise. Paul describes them as rather immature, of the “flesh” rather than spiritual (3:1), deceiving themselves and therefore lacking in the most fundamental knowledge. They erroneously judged according to standards that are transitory rather than eternal. The riches and wisdom of God surpass all understanding and may be perceived only through wisdom that is revealed by the Spirit (2:10).

Immoral Behavior (5:1–6:20). In chapters 5 and 6, Paul gives instances when judgments on the appropriate behavior for believers would be necessary. The Christian message of salvation has many implications—doctrinal, liturgical, ethical. Certain behaviors are inconsistent with belonging to the Christian community. Chapters 5 and 6 specifically mention incest, bringing lawsuits against other members of the community, and sexual promiscuity, all of which were liable to the community's judgment.

The Corinthians were complacent about keeping in their community someone who violated Jewish incest laws by living with his stepmother. Paul uses a traditional image of “yeast” to help describe the impact of the presence of such a one in their midst. The proverb “a little yeast leavens all the dough” illustrates the extent to which the sinner’s action corrupts the whole community. Jesus uses this same image to warn about the influence of the Pharisees on the disciples (Mt 16:6; Mk 8:15; Lk 12:1). Paul was concerned about the impact of the sinner on the community and the “contagion” of sinful actions. Throughout this letter, a fundamental point of Christian theology is emphasized: namely, as Christians we cannot act alone without regard for one another. Our actions affect others, for good or evil. Paul sees conversion as a “turning from idols to worship of the one living and true God.” (1 Thes 1:9). This conversion requires a readiness to change not only our hearts but also our actions so that we may live in accordance with our baptism. Continuing the yeast image, Paul cites the formula of the paschal lamb and unleavened bread, pure and free from yeast, which is usually a negative symbol as here. The connection is especially relevant at the time of the year in which Paul writes, the season of Passover (16:8).

It troubles Paul to hear that some in the community are bringing lawsuits against one another, when what they should be doing is suffering wrongs in imitation of Christ. At least they should settle such disputes among themselves. He reminds them of the eschatological scenario in which God’s holy ones will judge the earth. They therefore have no business submitting their grievances to unbelieving judges now. Nor do they know what they are doing by participation in prostitution. “All things are lawful” (6:12) to the one who is free in Christ, but this does not mean all things are acceptable. The body of every believer is a temple of the holy Spirit that must not be profaned by contact with the body of a prostitute.

Answers to the Corinthians’ Questions (7:1–11:1)

Paul then takes up the Corinthians’ own questions about how daily life is an expression of their faith. The Corinthians themselves identified certain issues within their community that were disturbing their unity. They wrote to Paul about these questions, which fall into two categories: questions about marriage and virginity (see 7:1–40), and questions pertaining to the eating of idol meats and participation at pagan meals (8:1–11:1).

Marriage and Virginit (7:1–40). In chapter 7 Paul specifically discusses three life choices that many Christians believed were affected by baptism with an advantage on one side: marriage or virginity (7:1–7, 16), fidelity to Judaism signified by circumcision versus uncircumcision (vv. 18–20), and slavery vs. manumission (vv. 21–24). According to 1 Corinthians 7, a specific question arose concerning whether married Christians ought to remain married. An understanding of baptism as initiation into the eschatological community seemed to imply that the baptized should renounce the constraints and responsibilities of marriage. Jesus’s opposition to divorce is first attested here (7:10, 11; see Mt 5:31–32; 19–12; Mk 10:2–12). There was question whether a Christian married to an unbeliever could or should remain in the marriage. Some men wondered if there was an advantage to circumcision. Some slaves thought, and perhaps expected, that they would be better off freed.

Paul’s general advice is to “remain in the state in which you were called” (see 7:17, 20, 24). His reasoning is that the time is short (7:29, 31), too short for unnecessary social entanglements. It is debatable whether Paul believed literally that the eschatological end was imminent or whether this was his way to see all of life as contingent on the absolute power and will of God. Although Christians are “in” the world, they are not “of ” it as John says (Jn 17:14–16). The particular circumstances of believers do not interfere with or lessen the effect of the new status of their identity in Christ. Christians have always sensed the need to express the implications of their new identity as baptized persons with an appropriate way of life.

Paul agreed with a position held by some in Corinth, that “it is a good thing . . . not to touch a woman” (1 Cor 7:1). He acknowledged his own preference for celibacy that leaves one “free of anxieties” (7:32). The gospels record Jesus’s saying that “in heaven there is neither giving nor taking in marriage” (see Mk 12:25 and parallel passages). Sexuality, circumcision, even slavery do not have significance in the new age. Indeed, the hope for a new society of equals was one of the reasons Christianity was so appealing to many “minority” groups, including women, slaves, and others who lacked status in the Greco-Roman world.

Paul’s response is to advocate no change in social status since it is unimportant in the Christian context. Responding to those who challenge the right of Christians to marry, he drew on the word of Jesus regarding the indissolubility of marriage (1 Cor 7:10–11). Yet Paul added an exception that considerably weakens the effect of Jesus's statement. In the case of unwillingness of the unbelieving spouse to remain married to a baptized person, they may separate. Furthermore, Paul applied the exception to both men and women, giving women the same rights as men.

We should note Paul's remarkable freedom in relating Jesus's words to the pastoral situation of Corinth. In all of the questions with which he has to deal, the apostle demonstrates a surprising creativity and flexibility.

Food Offered to Idols (8:1–11:1). Here Paul responds to three very practical situations about which the Corinthians must make everyday decisions: whether they should (1) eat meat bought in the marketplace that was probably originally offered in sacrifice at a pagan temple; (2) accept dinner invitations in rented banquet rooms in pagan temples, during which there was a sacrificial libation to the god in whose temple they were; (3) accept dinner invitations to the homes of unbelievers. He asserts a basic theological position that these gods are not really gods at all, and supports it with reference to Israel's history as recorded in the Scriptures (10:1–13) and with the example of his own experience. But the bottom line is the unity of the community. If anyone of weaker conscience will be scandalized, then it is not to be done.

Exercising Knowledge and Love (8:1–7 and 10:23–11:1). Paul quotes a Corinthian slogan, acknowledging the truth that "all of us have knowledge" (8:1). The Corinthians apparently assumed that such knowledge made some of them superior to others. So, for example, it was their "knowledge" that allowed them to overlook incest in one of their members (see chap. 5). It was the competition for the gifts considered superior that was disrupting their assemblies (14:20–33) and even the Lord's Supper (11:17–18). Paul proposes charity as a remedy for the rivalry of the various kinds of "knowledge" that inflate the ego and that were causing factions in the Corinthian church. Whereas knowledge divides, love unites, enabling the Corinthians' many gifts to supply various needs in the community, helping them to "build up" (see the description of the role of prophecy in 1 Cor 14:3), rather than destroy (1 Cor 11:17–34).

In discussing the factions between the "weak and the strong," Paul speaks of "conscience," a term that appears almost exclusively in Pauline writings with little impact on other New Testament authors (for instance, Rom 2:15; 9:1; 13:5; 1 Cor 8:7, 10, 12; 10:25, 27, 28, 29; 2 Cor 1:12; 1 Tm

1:5; 2 Tm 1:3; Ti 1:15; see also Acts 23:1; Heb 9:9, 14; 1 Pt 2:19; 3:16, 21). In biblical thinking, conscience is never an individualist function. It always has to do with how one sees oneself in relation to one's community. Paul gives a communal meaning to conscience and places it in a new Christian context. In this context, the personal consciences of both the "weak" and the "strong" are subordinate to the obligations of mutual charity. The weak must not judge the strong and the strong not scandalize the weak. For Paul, conscience is not autonomous. It cannot be the last court of appeal among Christians. It is subject to charity and concern for one "for whom Christ has died" (8:11).

In 1 Corinthians 10:23–11:1, Paul summarizes his discussion of knowledge of the specific issues regarding pagan meals and customs, and of imitation of his own example. Repeating another Corinthian slogan (see 6:12 and as he did in 8:1 where he said "all of us have knowledge"), Paul agrees "Everything is lawful" (10:23). Yet, he continues, not everything is beneficial (see also 6:12). The merit of an action is related to its effects on the community. Concrete questions about whether to eat or not should be resolved in view of their effect on the other members of the community. For Paul, the morality of a decision depends upon its impact on the conscience of other brothers and sisters. His attempt to win others over rather than to alienate them keeps their salvation in view. Thus he concludes that Corinthian Christians ought to imitate him as he does Christ (11:1). To the casual reader this might first seem like hubris. But upon further reflection we are struck by Paul's astonishing transparency and humility in laying out his whole life for examination as a worthy imitation of Christ. In the context of the discussion about knowledge and love, Paul places Christ at the center of all believers' behavioral choices.

The Example of Paul (9:1–27). To support his argument about mutual love and avoidance of scandal, Paul inserts between the two parts of the argument the example of his own conduct. (Chap. 9 represents B in the A-B-A' pattern discussed in the introduction.) Though he could demand material support and exercise a great deal more freedom and authority, he instead tries to become all things to everyone by being as much like them as possible. The hint is clear: you too do not need to exercise all the freedom to which you have a right, but for the good of the whole you may need to sacrifice some of your freedom.

In many of his letters Paul refers to the fact that he works with his hands and thus gives an example for his addressees to follow (1 Thes 2:9; 2 Thes 3:7–10). Paul freely forfeited the apostolic privilege of support in order “not to place an obstacle to the gospel of Christ” (1 Cor 9:12). He served all—Jews, Gentiles, the “strong and the weak”—so that through this service the gospel message would be available to them. No one should be denied the gospel because of inability to pay. This forfeiting of privilege makes Paul freer to serve. Yet, as he will argue in 2 Corinthians 8:1–9:15, after receiving the gospel message Christians have a responsibility to contribute to the support of other Christians in need. Here he ends this digression about his own example with an athletic image. Just like a professional athlete, he disciplines himself, training not for a perishable crown of laurel or celery, as did the athletes of the day, but for an imperishable one.

Asceticism has played an important role in Christian spirituality throughout the history of the church. Paul legitimizes asceticism or self-denial for apostolic reasons. Today we live in a world that encourages individual freedom without constraints and the pursuit of happiness almost to any length. Such a mentality is not so distant from the sophisticated world of the Corinthians. Paul’s corrective view suggests another approach altogether. The community’s pursuit of charity should be the focus of the individual’s energies and form the individual’s conscience. Freedom is for the service of the gospel message. A person’s rights are subject to God’s call to preach the gospel. The charity of God compels us, training us in the school of self-denial and the pursuit of God’s will in our lives.

Problems in Liturgical Assemblies (11:2–14:40)

Paul now turns to a number of issues affecting the ways in which the Corinthians are worshiping together. These issues fall into three categories: dress and decorum at assemblies (11:2–16), the celebration of the Lord’s Supper (11:17–34), and the unity and variety of spiritual gifts (12:1–14:40).

Dress and Decorum in the Assembly (11:2–16). This is a problematic passage that has received much attention. Throughout the ancient Mediterranean world, among Jews, Greeks, and Romans alike, the subordination of women to men was a common part of the thinking, even though by this time in Roman society women of sufficient wealth and status exercised a great deal of social and economic autonomy. It was common practice that respectable adult women veiled themselves in public, even though that custom was changing in social circles that were more sensitive to Roman norms. In more traditional circles, as is still the case in some cultures, the unveiled female head was a sign of sexual availability. It appears that some female members of the Corinthian church, however, were combining their knowledge of newer social customs with Paul's own preaching about freedom in the Spirit. They concluded that the veil was no longer necessary in some circumstances, particularly the church assembly, where others, including Paul, judged that it was. While never questioning women's right to pray and prophesy publicly (11:5), he simply judged that it must be done with traditional dress. In his attempt to provide a theological explanation, Paul draws on traditional images of headship and subordination, using as illustration three parallel examples: Christ and man, man and woman, God and Christ. He then goes on to appeal to "nature," which really means "common sense," that is, what people were used to. Finally, he realizes that he has not proved his case and simply withdraws to the position of authority: we just don't do it that way (11:16)! While affirming women's full position in the church, he capitulates on the question of dress in favor of something that will not cause scandal among conservative outsiders (and perhaps some insiders, too) who are undoubtedly watching this new movement.

Celebration of the Eucharist (11:17–34). There were divisions among the Corinthians on social and economic grounds. Wealthy Christians apparently hosted great meals at which the poor were either not welcomed or were subject to embarrassment. Some became drunk while others went away hungry (11:20–22, 33–34). Paul says that these meals are not the Lord's Supper and that the Corinthians are eating and drinking their own condemnation (see 11:27–29). Within the context of the discussion of abuses in the community's liturgical celebrations, Paul inserts his account of the institution of the Last Supper in order to put the troubles in the proper context. This is the earliest written account of the institution of the Lord's Supper in the New Testament (see the note on 11:23–25). Paul's version, also reflected in Luke 22:14–20, contains at least three significant differences from the versions given in Mark 14:22–25 and Matthew 26:26–29. These variants are in the additions of the words "for you," the command "Do this in remembrance of me" (v. 24), and the qualifier "new" before

By emphasizing that Jesus’s body was given “for you” Paul reminds the Corinthians of Jesus’s self-giving act in which they participate by receiving the bread and the cup. They are then warned that an “unworthy” reception would not bring salvation but rather condemnation. The command to do this in memory of Jesus calls the Christians to offer a fitting memorial, including calling to mind Jesus’s self-offering and imitating him in this. The insertion of “new” before “covenant” reminds the Corinthians that Jeremiah’s prophecy of a “new covenant” is fulfilled in Christ (see Jer 31:31; 2 Cor 3:3, 6). This is an inclusive covenant, one that is already proclaimed in ancient Israel and that will be extended to all, one that provides the basis for a new society and a new relationship with God. It is important to realize that Paul’s critique of the way the Corinthians celebrated the Eucharist is not about proper reverence toward the sacrament as such, but proper reverence toward the poor and all members who participate in it.

The Spiritual Gifts (12:1–14:40). The divisions among the Corinthians based on competition for the higher gifts continues to occupy Paul. Paul reminds the Corinthians that when they were pagans they were “attracted and led away” by idols (12:2). Idolatry attributes to false gods the honor and devotion that belongs to God alone. Paul advises the Corinthians that in true conversion to Jesus Christ there is unity with others who also worship the same God.

The hymn of love in 1 Corinthians 13, inserted within the context of chapters 12 and 14 on the variety of gifts, may not be entirely a Pauline composition but something adapted in part from Stoic sources that he found quite helpful to illustrate the unity that should characterize the Corinthians (see note on 13:1–13). In chapter 11, Paul alluded to the problem of the divisions between the wealthy and the poor at the common table. In chapters 12 and 14, it is not so much the social distinctions but striving for spiritual gifts that threatens the Corinthians’ unity. As remedy, Paul offers reflections on the community as the body of Christ (12:12–27), a new adaptation of an old image of social unity. A very high estimation is placed on prophecy, the action of the Spirit through members of the community. But the new context Paul provides emphasizes that love is the highest spiritual gift, one that all believers must aspire to achieve (13:13). Love remains the most important of all the spiritual gifts in the church. This is not to diminish faith and hope and the other spiritual gifts such as teaching and administration. Love is an expression of God's own love, enabling us to act mercifully and kindly toward one another. Love in action, at the service of others, is the essential message of the gospel.

The Resurrection (15:1–58)

For Paul, the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ are the central mystery of the Christian life—but not in isolation. If we are to experience death and burial, we are also to experience resurrection. Paul claims to have met the risen Christ directly, and we can assume that some of his assertions about the resurrection are derived from that experience (Gal 1:12, 15–16). Others would have come from his meeting with Cephas (Gal 1:18), who had participated in the post-Easter appearances, and from his own apocalyptic theology in his former Pharisaic context. Paul implies that if the Corinthians really grasped and accepted the resurrection and its implications, many of the problems he has addressed throughout the letter would have been resolved. In the first part of this chapter (15:1–11), he states the fundamental teaching on the resurrection of Christ and recites the earliest surviving creed and list of appearances. He stresses the appearances of the risen Christ that were the foundational experiences, beginning with Peter's and ending with his own.

A second section (15:12–28) states emphatically, “If Christ has not been raised, our faith is vain” (15:14, 17). The resurrection of Christ forms the basis of faith and causes believers to reassess all of life and death. By his resurrection Christ is revealed as the “first fruits of those who have fallen asleep” (15:20). Christ is our hope, our assurance that we too will have the same experience. Without it, perseverance in faith, including the sacrifices involved in suffering persecution, is pointless.

In a third section (15:29–34), Paul is trying to shame the Corinthians by showing them the absurdities of some Christian practices and beliefs without faith in the resurrection as the destiny of all the faithful. The slogan quoted by Paul, “Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die” (15:32 where Paul quotes Is 22:13) is the wisdom of those without hope in the life to come.

In the next section (15:35–50), he takes up discussion with those who speculate on the nature of resurrection and the risen body. He uses the example of dissimilar creatures such as birds and fish, the sun and the moon, to show the qualitative difference between bodies, as a way of stressing, without going into detail, the differences in our bodies before and after the resurrection. The seed sown in the ground is not the same as the green shoot that springs from it, yet the shoot is continuous with the life of the seed that must die in order to produce new life. Paul draws a contrast between the first Adam, the earthly, corruptible one whose image we now bear, and the last Adam, Christ, the incorruptible and eternal one, whose image we will bear in the resurrection.

The last section of 1 Corinthians 15 (vv. 51–58) incorporates a hymnic celebration of God's victory through Christ over sin and death, compiled from verses of Isaiah and Hosea. Conquered by Christ, sin and death have lost their sting. By the resurrection of Christ, God has shown us that sin and death are not the last word, but only lead to life. Therefore Paul sings God's praises for the hope that the resurrection gives. He reminds the Corinthians that "in the Lord your labor is not in vain" (1 Cor 15:58). The rousing message of the chapter is: Hang on! The best is yet to come!

Conclusion (16:1–24)

Finally, Paul speaks of the collection and how it is to be taken to alleviate the suffering of the saints (16:1–4). He then reports his travel plans, sends greetings to his friends, and concludes with a blessing. Comparison of the persons named with those mentioned in 1 Corinthians 1:10–17; 16:10–19 and Acts 18 renders an interesting profile of the Corinthian community with its mixture of notable men and women, rich and poor, powerful and ordinary citizens. He greets representatives of all categories, personally demonstrating the acceptance and unity he has been advocating.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Some readers may find it surprising to realize that in 1 Corinthians Paul deals with some of the same questions that continue to challenge the church today. Christians still struggle with whether there are more limits on the freedom allowed to women than to men. The rights and responsibilities of ministers in the church are at the heart of the renewal of the priesthood initiated by Vatican II, and continued in various important pastoral and ecclesial efforts locally and in the universal church. Issues such as the requirements for a sacramental marriage and qualifications for the ordained ministry, the possibilities for lay ministries, or the role of the sacraments (especially baptism and the Eucharist) in Christian life were not answered once and for all by Paul, or even by Vatican II. But the church continues to use Paul's pastoral approach as a guide in responding to the needs of its members.

The Corinthians comprised a church like ours—real people with real problems. They struggled for charity in the midst of disagreements, for respect for leaders without exaggerating these leaders' roles. Paul stressed the role of ministers as servants of God and Jesus Christ. He recognizes the authority of the church to discipline its members including the immoral, those in dispute, the strong as well as the weak. He tried to help remedy their problems by advising them to seek spiritual gifts, especially charity. He advocated a healthy respect for the body without failing to see the value of asceticism. He recognized roles for both women and men in the liturgy. He gave some concrete examples of practical implications of living the gospel message as a community of equals. He protests discrimination against the poor or those considered inferior because they possess lesser gifts. Further, Paul stresses already in 1 Corinthians, and more so in 2 Corinthians, the necessity of aiding the less fortunate. The first epistle to the Corinthians is truly an interpretation of the gospel message that continues to challenge us with its many implications.

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

Second Corinthians features some of the most profound moments of Paul's theology, but in a puzzling arrangement. If 1 Corinthians has a structure that is clear and easy to follow, his second letter to the same church is characterized by lack of orderly sequence, to such a degree that many scholars think it is actually a composite of several letters sent by Paul to the same church. The tone tends to be more defensive than most of his letters, and the flow of thought choppy. Some fragments (e.g., 6:14–7:1) appear completely out of context. The transition from 2:13 to 2:14 is very rough, while 7:5 seems to pick up exactly where 2:13 left off. Further, chapters 8 and 9 seem to have been originally two separate letters, each dealing with the collection, but neither assuming the other nor conditioned by the whole context of chapters 1 through 7 and 10 through 13. Finally, chapters 10 through 13 could stand alone as an "apologia," an explanation in defense of Paul's own spiritual experience, his vocation, and apostolic credentials. Certainly 2 Corinthians exhibits traces of an ongoing conversation.

Yet the lack of cohesion in Paul's thought may be only apparent. It is also possible that there is an order to the letter that demonstrates Paul's typical A-B-A' pattern, which also influenced 1 Corinthians. So, for example, Paul begins and ends 2 Corinthians with personal testimony about the painful difficulties both he and the Corinthians have experienced in the course of their relationship (see 1:12–7:16 as A, and chapters 10:1–13:10 as A'). Within this frame, the two chapters, 8 and 9, dealing with the collection for the poor in Jerusalem (B) illustrate that for Paul, the generosity of the Corinthians symbolizes the success of the Gentile mission. The older scholarship with its emphasis on literary sources and redactions is more prone to see the letter as composed of several fragments. In this case, a later editor combined the pieces into the whole that we now have. But the parts sometimes do not fit together well. If this is the case, an explanation is needed as to why the editor did such a poor job. Newer scholarship with its emphasis on literary analysis tends to try to look at the letter as a unified whole. In this case, the disruptions in the flow of the text are due to Paul's deliberate digressions for rhetorical effect.

Whatever may be the true situation, we need to work through 2 Corinthians in its final, canonical form, even if it also represents originally separate letters or letter fragments. We approach 2 Corinthians as part of the New Testament canon, a letter preserved by the early church and read at liturgical gatherings in spite of its criticisms of the Corinthians and the many challenges it raised for the church there. Despite the many troubles and misunderstandings between them, the Corinthians seem to have respected Paul's authority enough to preserve his words, reflect on them, and circulate them to other churches. Lest we think that ours is the only age in which deep divisions appear in the church, this letter reveals that Christian community in the first years was no idyllic experience. The Corinthian letters will serve as a corrective to such mistaken idealism.

WORKING THROUGH 2 CORINTHIANS

Some initial observations about connection of parts of the text will help us read 2 Corinthians with better understanding. As already indicated, 2 Corinthians follows a rather disrupted and choppy sequence. Following the usual Greco-Roman letter structure, 2 Corinthians has the three main parts of the address in 1:1–7, the body of the letter in 1:8–13:10, and the conclusion in 13:11–13. Our comments will consider each of these parts. A working outline of 2 Corinthians follows:

- I. The Address (1:1–7)
- II. The Body of the Letter (1:8–13:10)
  - A. Crisis between Paul and the Corinthians (1:8–7:16)
    - 1. Paul's Review of Their Past Relationship (1:8–2:13)
    - 2. Paul's Ministry (2:14–7:4)
      - a. The New Covenant enacted by Christ (3:1–18)
      - b. The paradox of the ministry: strength in weakness (4:1–12)
      - c. The ministry of reconciliation (5:1–21)
    - 3. Resolution of the Crisis (7:5–16)
  - B. The Collection for Jerusalem (8:1–9:15)

- C. Paul's Defense of His Ministry (10:1–13:10)
  - 1. Paul's Response to Charges (10:1–18; 12:19–13:10)
  - 2. Paul Boasts of His Labors and His Weakness (11:1–12:18)
- III. Conclusion (13:11–13)

READING THROUGH 2 CORINTHIANS

The Address (1:1–7)

In the address Paul names Timothy as co-author. Timothy and Titus (2:13; 7:6; 8:16, 23; see also Gal 2:1) were apparently more trusted by the Corinthians than Paul himself. Timothy is not named again in 2 Corinthians, although some suppose he is the unnamed “brother” who accompanies Titus with the collection. Luke tells us that Timothy was a faithful companion of Paul, especially on the second and third missionary journeys (see “The Pastoral Letters,” RG 535–544).

The greeting includes a doxology or prayer glorifying and praising God whose “encouragement” is strength in affliction (see 2 Cor 1:3–4). This encouragement (paraklesis) in noun or verbal form occurs ten times in five verses, 3 through 7. This addition gives us a hint as to the overriding mood of 2 Corinthians. Paul and the Corinthians have experienced much misunderstanding, but Paul wants to move on to great consolation. Transcending all the pain is the certainty of God's presence with them and Paul's confidence that God is at work in their lives.

The Body of the Letter (1:8–13:10)

The message of 2 Corinthians is developed in three main parts: (A) In the first (1:8–7:16), Paul reviews his past relationship with the Corinthians; (B) Chapters 8 and 9 form a second part in which Paul develops a theology of giving, speaking of the collection among the Gentiles and specifically of the generosity of the Corinthians as a symbol of the fruitfulness of the Gentile mission; (A') In the third part, 10:1–13:10, Paul returns to the theme of his credentials as an apostle, accenting his own weakness and the call of God. It is here that Paul develops a theology of suffering, speaking candidly and with great feeling about his own experience of the grace of God. Many in the history of Christianity have seen in these chapters a spiritual reality by which they are helped to interpret their own personal experience of God:

“My grace is sufficient for you, for power is made perfect in weakness” (12:9). We can read through these three parts of the body of 2 Corinthians, reflecting on the relevance of this composite letter for our own experience as Christians.

The Crisis between Paul and the Corinthians (1:8–7:16)

The whole relationship between Paul and the Corinthians seems to have been marked by crisis. This is evident from both 1 and 2 Corinthians. Paul refers to these problems in the initial part of 2 Corinthians where the apostle reviews his past relationship with the Corinthians and his ministry with them. Paul mentions several instances of mistrust and tension between himself and the Corinthians in his review of their past relationship.

Paul’s Review of Their Past Relationship (1:8–2:13)

First, Paul reviews the difficulties he had in “Asia,” meaning the Roman province that covered the western part of Asia Minor. He probably alludes to Ephesus, where because of this passage and 1 Cor 15:32, many scholars think he endured an imprisonment not recorded in Acts. He then focuses on several areas of tension with the community—a change of plans and the Corinthians’ subsequent accusation of inconstancy and insincerity, his confrontation with an offending member of the community and his plea for leniency in the punishment of this person whom he has forgiven, and his anxiety about the lack of information about the Corinthians from Titus. Paul appears frustrated at the apparent lack of communication, sympathy, and confidence. The factions that were mentioned in 1 Corinthians might have made a simple change of mind, such as these instances, a source of strife. Paul’s detractors accused him of being unreliable.

Appealing to God’s own fidelity as part of his response (1:18), Paul tries to show that his word is sincere and his care constant. Yet he decided to change his plans to go to Corinth in view of the recent painful letter (2:4) that he had found it necessary to write to the Corinthians. He postponed a promised visit only to give time for healing (2:1–4). With sufficient reflection he is confident that the Corinthians will realize the abundant love he has for them (2:4).

Apparently someone in the community publicly offended Paul (2:5–11), though the nature of the offense remains obscure. As in 1 Corinthians 5, Paul advocates a judgment not by outsiders but within the church. The action by the majority was acceptable and judged sufficient by Paul. In contrast to the case of the incestuous man of 1 Corinthians, when he had recommended expulsion from the church (see 1 Cor 5:2, 4–5), Paul says in 2 Corinthians 2:5–11 that the time has come for forgiveness and reintegration lest Satan be granted a victory in the offender. Like many other biblical writers Paul sees the world as an arena where the conflict between good and evil forces is ongoing, each vying for human allegiance. The church is entrusted with the “ministry of reconciliation” as he describes it in 2 Corinthians 5:18–19. The forgiveness of the one who offended him is a specific example of that ministry in practice.

In 2:12–13 Paul recalls his anguish while he awaited Titus’s report about the Corinthians. Such anxiety as well as his joy when he finally received the happy news from Titus described in 7:5–16 attest to Paul’s great affection for the community. Thus his change of plans (1:12–24) is one further indication of his sensitivity and love for the Corinthians.

Paul’s Ministry (2:14–7:4)

Paul interrupts his review of the events that troubled his relationship to the Corinthians in order to describe in more general theological terms his apostolic ministry. Within the overall A-B-A' structure of 2 Corinthians we see subsections like 1:12–7:16 also exhibiting this same pattern. In this instance, 2:14–7:4 (B), describing Paul’s ministry, is framed by—and grounds theologically—the practical and painful experience of Paul’s relationship with the community described in 1:12–2:13 (A) and 7:5–16 (A'). Paul’s description of his ministry develops several important themes:

1. the New Covenant enacted by Christ (3:1–18)
2. the paradox of the ministry: strength in weakness (4:1–21)
3. the ministry of reconciliation entrusted to them (5:1–21)

This description begins (2:14–17) and ends (7:2–4) with expressions of confidence in God and in the Corinthians.

The New Covenant Enacted by Christ (3:1–18). Paul’s reasoning in 3:1–18 is based on Old Testament passages and on one of his favorite contrasts, between spirit and flesh (see Rom 8:1–10; Gal 2:3; 5:17–23). It exemplifies an interpretative method familiar in rabbinical circles, taking several passages from different sources and combining them to produce a new conclusion. Jeremiah's promise of a "new covenant" (Jer 31:31–34) is combined with Ezekiel's prophecy of God's replacing human hearts of stone with hearts of flesh and giving a covenant in the Spirit (Ez 36:26–36). Exodus 34 described the relationship between God and Moses as so glorious that Moses had to come down from Mount Sinai with a veil covering his head lest the Israelites die at the sight of his glowing face (Ex 34:33–35). These passages from the prophets and the Law provide the scriptural basis for Paul's argument that the ministry (diakonia) of the new covenant, to which he is devoted, is superior to that of Moses. Using the familiar rhetorical method from lesser to greater, Paul argues that if Moses's covenant was so spectacular yet was written on stone and in hearts of flesh, how much greater is Christ's covenant which is the fulfillment of the prophetic promise of the Spirit!

Paul contrasts the Mosaic covenant written "in ink" or "on stone" with the "new covenant" written by the "spirit" on "hearts of flesh." In the process he uses the phrase "old covenant" (2 Cor 3:14), the only instance of this expression in the Scriptures. This "old" covenant was that enacted by God with Moses. Jeremiah and Ezekiel had spoken of a new enactment of the covenant reality, in which intimate access to God would be realized. Paul picks up this theme to write that this promise of a "new covenant" is realized in the work of Jesus. The difference between the covenants illustrates the contrast between Moses and Christ, and indicates the superiority of the covenant in Christ. Paul and the Corinthians are ministers or agents (diakonoi) of the new covenant that brings life and the Spirit. In the last part of the passage, Paul switches the image of the veil to apply it not as a protection on Moses's face to prevent injury to the people but as an obstacle to clear vision, now upon the faces of those who are unable to see the glory of the new covenant in Jesus (3:14–18). Christian readers today should remember that Paul was working within the Jewish context of biblical interpretation to transform the interpretation of familiar texts and images. While his gospel definitely implied that a new thing had been done in Christ so that now the Gentiles are fully included, Paul was not drawing a contrast between an old Jewish covenant, now deemed obsolete, and a new Christian covenant that would replace it. Rather, he wanted new Gentile members of the church to realize their debt to their Jewish brothers and sisters for the spiritual heritage they preserved and which is now shared in common with them. The Old Testament Scriptures continue to provide a fertile field for mutual reflection and understanding among Christians and Jews.

The Paradox of the Ministry: Strength in Weakness (4:1–21). Even though Paul is a minister of this great new covenant, he knows that the glory is God's, not his, and that the mystery of reception in faith is not within his control. He expresses the weakness and fragility of this ministry by the familiar image: "We hold this treasure in earthen vessels" (4:7), a reminder that the power is from God, not from human agents. Paul recalls the price to be paid: "We are afflicted in every way . . . perplexed . . . persecuted . . . constantly being given up to death for the sake of Jesus" (4:8–11). But Paul continuously alludes to God as the source of his own hope, confidence, and power.

Grace is given in greater and greater abundance through the mystery of Christ for the glory of God. Even while they experience diminishment of their "outer self," the "inner self" grows stronger. The afflictions they experience are passing, but the invisible power of God lasts forever.

The Ministry of Reconciliation (5:1–21). In chapter 5 Paul introduces ideas that will connect his experience with the Corinthians to the mission of spreading the gospel. He develops several implications for the redemptive implications of suffering for the sake of the gospel. He stresses that, despite the clear challenges, the weaknesses of the minister, and the obstacles encountered, the negative is never overwhelming. It is true that our earthly existence is fraught with difficulties. In Paul's words, we "groan and are weighed down" (5:4) by the difficulties of human existence and of fidelity to the work entrusted to us. We are longing to be covered not with a "tent" but with a heavenly dwelling not made with human hands. Suffering for the gospel exposes our nakedness so that we might be clothed in the Spirit that God has given us as a "first installment" toward eternal life (5:5). Paul magnifies the tension between the present and the future, saying that while we are "at home" in the body, we are away from the Lord. Like citizens in exile, we long for the homeland. We walk by faith (5:7), trying to please the Lord by whom, in the end, we will be judged (5:10) not only on our own deeds but also on the effect of those deeds on others' actions. Catholic interpretation has always emphasized the communal responsibility or the obligations believers have toward others.

Their common ministry for the gospel effects a radical change in believers, taking them out of a sinful mode of existence and introducing them to another mode of reality that is in Christ. Paul goes on to explain in the remainder of chapter 5 (vv. 11–21) that Christ’s work is a ministry of reconciling the world to God. But that work is not finished once and for all. Through Christ we have been given the astounding mission and responsibility of carrying on that work of reconciliation (5:17–20). Finally, Paul and the Corinthians, like all ministers of the gospel, are involved in the ministry of reconciliation of the whole world to God. In this context, he pleads with the Corinthians to be reconciled with God and, implicitly, with him.

Resolution of the Crisis (7:5–16)

Paul returns to the concrete situation in Corinth, alluding to his anguished wait for news about the community until he encountered his emissary, Titus. From Titus he learned good news about the Corinthians’ reception of Paul’s difficult letter (2:4 and 7:8), which many argue is actually chapters 10 through 13:10 of the present letter. Finally the conflict between Paul and the Corinthians was apparently resolved. His exuberant gratitude overshadows all of the former sadness and anxiety. It appears as though all is completely restored, and there is no more reason for concern.

As we read Paul’s heartfelt message, we note that some of the problems that afflict our church were present in the experience of the earliest Christians. Paul was an itinerant preacher who normally traveled from community to community preaching the gospel. But he lived among the Corinthians longer than he is recorded staying with any other community (eighteen months according to Acts 18:11). He invested enormous energy in this community and could not be indifferent to their problems and questions and mistakes. No one can doubt that this is a problematic relationship, yet it was not severed. The deliberate rhetorical contrast in this letter is between the apparently conflicting data of 2 Corinthians 1:12–7:16: the lofty statements about the ministry of the new covenant as well as the insinuations of distrust, discouragement, and anxiety between apostle and community. Paul describes the Christian ministry as a ministry of reconciliation, but he also reminds us of the fragility of the human agents, as earthen vessels holding the treasure of the gospel. All the hardships are apparently forgotten in his exuberant conclusion: “I rejoice, because I have confidence in you in every respect” (7:16).

The Collection for Jerusalem (8:1–9:15)

Chapters 8 and 9 appear originally to have been two independent “fund-raising letters” on the importance of a generous and substantial offering to the church in Jerusalem. This collection for Jerusalem is presumably what Paul means was the condition for acceptance there of his mission to the Gentiles in Galatians 2:10. It is thought that Jerusalem may have been a collection center for distribution of relief to other churches of Palestine and Syria. The importance of the collection, according to Paul, is that it represents the full participation of the Gentile Christians in the community of the new Israel: the Church. On the one hand he encourages the Corinthians to give generously, seeing this request as a “test [of] the genuineness of your love by your concern for others” (8:8). On the other hand he will see the acceptance of the Gentiles’ offering as evidence of the Jewish Christians’, and specifically of the Jerusalem church’s, willingness to accept the Gentile mission (Rom 15:22–33).

Paul uses the tactic of creating competition among the Gentile churches. He encourages the Corinthians to give as liberally as the Macedonians (Philippi and Thessalonica), who were generous even when they themselves were “tested by affliction” (8:2). But in 9:2 he claims that he has boasted of the Corinthians’ generosity to the Macedonians. In Romans he says that both the Achaians (the Corinthians) and the Macedonians were only too happy to contribute because they understood it as their obligation (Rom 15:27). The Gentiles were “indebted” to the “mother church” in Jerusalem and to the other Jewish Christian churches whose spiritual heritage they shared. The language of wealth and poverty in these passages is rhetorical and should not be taken as mere economic indicators. In view of the fact that the validity of the Gentile mission was questioned by some of the Jewish-Christian authorities, Paul recognized that the adequacy of the Gentiles’ offering would be especially symbolic. He also saw the collection as an opportunity for the Gentiles to take on “the same attitude . . . in Christ” (see Phil 2:2, 5) who “became poor although he was rich” (2 Cor 8:9). The Gentiles would be emptying themselves in the service of others in imitation of Christ. The collection thus has a theological and missionary dimension essentially linking Jewish and Gentile believers as one in Christ.

At the end of the chapter Paul speaks of envoys or messengers from and to the churches, among whom is Titus. The others are unnamed but probably known to the recipients of the letter. Indeed they are called “apostles” of the churches (8:23). The fact that this term is also applied to Epaphroditus in Phil 2:25 and to Andronicus and Junia in Romans 16:7 suggests that the title of apostle was held by many in the Pauline churches.

Paul begins 2 Corinthians 9 as if he has not written chapter 8. Although he has just encouraged generosity in the collection, he says in 9:1 “It is superfluous for me to write to you” about the collection. There are many other ideas repeated in chapter 9 that were raised in chapter 8. It would seem strange for Paul to say the difficult things he says to the Corinthians before and after these chapters, and even deal with their accusations against him (chap. 10), while here in the middle asking them for money! These arguments, and the apparent independence of these chapters not only from each other but also from the context of the rest of the letter, prompt many interpreters to consider them as originally separate letters or letter fragments. For us, however, they represent a crucial example of the importance of Paul’s role as apostle to the Corinthians. His insistence on the importance of the collection and on its abundance suggests that it was also a measure of the ongoing process of his reconciliation with the Corinthians. This is the role he reviewed in chapters 1 through 7 and vehemently defends in chapters 10 through 13.

Paul’s Defense of His Ministry (10:1–13:10)

In the course of defending his ministry again, Paul can be seen following the A-B-A’ pattern, introducing arguments in 10:1–18 (A), which he will continue in a concluding section in 12:19–13:10 (A’). Between these he interjects (11:1–12:18 [B]), his own experience with the Corinthians and his sufferings as an apostle. Thus Paul’s development includes responses to accusations that continue among the Corinthians: he is weak (10:1–2), and not an eloquent speaker (10:10); he is not supported by the community (11:7–10). Paul reminds the Corinthians at the beginning (10:2, 11) and end (12:20–13:2, 10) that he intends to visit them soon and deal with such issues directly in person. In the midst of his responses to charges, he develops in a famous and memorable passage (11:1–12:18) his own lived theology of the cross.

Paul's Response to Charges (10:1–18; 12:19–13:10)

Paul's impatient tone in chapters 10 through 13 suggests that he has already dealt with the Corinthians' accusations against him, and these charges ought to have been laid to rest. The Corinthians appear to be elitists, perceiving themselves to be superior in knowledge and gravitating toward those they suppose possess superior gifts. These include eloquence and an impressive appearance. Some of the Corinthians apparently favored Apollos's eloquence over the "contemptible speech" of Paul (see 1 Cor 3:4–5; 4:6–7). They noted Peter's freedom, his authority, the fact that he accepts support from the community (see 1 Cor 9:6) while they challenged Paul's reasons for refusing community support. Apparently the Corinthians are affronted by Paul's refusal to accept their patronage and continue to see his forfeiture of this "apostolic right" to support as an admission that Paul is not of the same stature as Peter.

The Corinthians' complaint that Paul is an impressive writer but that his presence is disappointing (10:1, 10) is arrogant but perhaps speaks a truth that led him to rely so strongly on the written word. Oratory was highly prized; perhaps Paul did not measure up to expectations in that regard. In response, Paul warned that he was empowered by Christ to "act boldly." He would use spiritual weapons to subdue in the end every enemy and disobedient thought in all to make all things subject to Christ (10:2–6). Paul warned the Corinthians against false pride and conceits and jealousies. He had earlier told the Corinthians to decide whether he came peacefully or "with a rod" (1 Cor 4:21). Now he promises to visit again soon and warns that he shall not be lenient with them (13:1–10). The Corinthians should examine themselves and see whether Christ is in them. For his part, Paul is confident that Christ is with him. This warning tone is difficult to imagine in the same letter with and following the reconciling tone of 7:5–10.

Paul Boasts of His Labors and His Weakness (11:1–12:18)

Since the Corinthians are attracted by knowledge, Paul proposes to speak of "foolishness," and asks their indulgence. Remember that in 1 Corinthians 1–3 Paul described the wisdom of God as folly for humans and added that God confounds the wise with the wisdom of the cross. In this section of 2 Corinthians, Paul talks about the role of the cross in his own life.

Again, it is Paul's opponents who draw out this vehement testimony about the source of his authority. There are those Paul sarcastically calls the "superapostles" (11:5), with the same tone with which one might say "supermouse" or "superrabbit"; a few verses later, they are labeled for what Paul really thinks of them, as "false apostles" (11:13; see the "false brothers" of Gal 2:4). In any case, others are leading the Corinthians astray; Paul fears that the Corinthians are like Eve (11:3), deceived by the serpent's cunning. This little aside indicated his acceptance of the prevailing male wisdom of his time, since Sirach 25:24, that Eve represented the more easily seduced segment of humankind. The comparison with Eve, so regarded, would be insulting to the lofty Corinthians, a strategy Paul uses to bring them back to humility.

Continuing his paradoxical development of knowledge and foolishness, Paul describes the wisdom he has learned through suffering. His beautiful testimony can hardly be adequately paraphrased. It must be read and reflected upon. The experiences which the Corinthians construe as "failures"—the beatings, humiliations, imprisonments, dangers—are Paul's apostolic credentials. He has experienced visions and revelations and ecstasies. He might have been tempted to pride in these (as he suggests the Corinthians would be). But he also experienced a "thorn in the flesh . . . an angel of Satan to beat me" (2 Cor 12:7). The wisdom he learned from this suffering, so beautifully expressed, is that God's power is made perfect in his human weakness. In the end we can understand why Paul says, "I will boast most gladly of my weaknesses, in order that the power of Christ may dwell with me" (12:9).

Conclusion (13:11–13)

The conclusion is brief and encouraging, and could be the conclusion to any Pauline letter. It does not reveal the depth of pain involved in some of its earlier content. By following his apparently circuitous arguments, we are enriched far beyond the effort of understanding the specific situation Paul addressed in Corinth centuries ago. An outcome of studying 2 Corinthians is the realization that all the suffering involved in creating the church among limited human beings bears fruit in fidelity and hope. From 2 Corinthians we are brought to a whole new appreciation of the role of the cross in the Christian vocation to holiness.

GALATIANS

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

Galatians is the only Pauline letter addressed to various churches of a geographical region rather than an urban center. The old territory of Galatia comprised a large central and northern area of Asia Minor. The Roman province of Galatia, to which Paul probably refers, included some of the cities, such as Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe, in which Paul worked, according to Acts.

Paul's tone in the opening lines of Galatians is defensive and emotional, evidenced by the absence of the usual prayer of thanksgiving following the address, which is a common characteristic of his letters. Paul perceives the problem in the Galatian communities as a great threat not only to his own reputation and mission but to the gospel itself. Other Christian missionaries, came into Galatia after him and claimed that Gentiles must follow some aspects of the Mosaic law, including circumcision, in order to be fully Christian. At the same time they undermined Paul's authority, charging that he only taught them the fundamentals, and they would now supply the Galatians with the fullness of the Christian message. Not only were they sabotaging his missionary efforts, they were thus challenging the sufficiency of faith in Christ that Paul preached. Consequently, he is adamant in trying to convince the Galatians that he has passed on to them the full truth of the gospel. From the heated tone of chapters 1 and 2, he passes to the complex biblical demonstrations of chapters 3 and 4, and finally to the ethical teaching of chapters 5 and 6.

The issues of freedom and faith, diversity of teaching and different ways of understanding the Gospel message, and the relationship of Christianity to Judaism are as important to us today as they were to Paul's addressees in Galatia. Yet today's reader of Galatians must sort through the combative tone of this letter, the particular circumstances of its writing; and the historical context in which Paul first developed his dichotomy between faith in Christ and works of the Law. We must comprehend the context in which he wrote if we are to understand this important epistle. It is also essential to realize that this letter in which Paul talks the most about freedom is also the letter in which he most identifies with the cross of Christ.

Jews and Gentiles in the Pauline Churches

A fundamental issue behind this letter to the Galatians involves the relationship between Judaism and the infant church that struggled to integrate the non-Jews or Gentiles into a new “Israel of God” (Gal 6:16), and between Jews and Gentiles in that church. Although this may seem like a remote issue unrelated to the problems the church faces today, it is actually quite relevant for us with our increasing ethnic diversity and ecumenical concerns. For Paul the question of “Who shall belong?” had to be resolved differently than it was in Judaism, where circumcision was the sign of initiation and observance of the Mosaic Law signified membership.

Those Christians who were already ethnically and religiously Jewish saw the message of Jesus largely within the context of Judaism. Indeed, Christianity might have remained as a sect within Judaism had it revolved only around belief that Jesus was the Messiah. Early Christianity, however, was almost immediately open to the conversion of the Gentiles (sometimes called the “nations” or the “pagans” in translations). We must also remember that before his conversion to Christ, Paul the Pharisee was so zealous for the observance of the Law that he persecuted the church (Gal 1:13). According to Acts, he obtained authorization to hunt down and bring to trial in Jerusalem those fellow Jews who had become convinced that Jesus was the Messiah (Acts 9:1–2). As a strict Jew, then, Paul had perceived along with many others that the message of Christ was a threat to Jewish claims to have unique access to the one true God through the covenant. The Pharisaism to which Paul belonged already was open to Gentile membership, based on the universal vision of the later prophets—especially second and third Isaiah—but with the requirement that they convert to Judaism. After he had accepted the messianic identity of Jesus through revelation and began to proclaim it as a missionary (1:15–16), Paul held the conviction that this new movement must be able to absorb both Jews and Gentiles, but in a new way. His own special call, based on a personal revelation, was to preach the Gospel to Gentiles, a mission that he says the leaders in Jerusalem accepted (2:7–9). Through his pastoral experience, Paul had come to the conclusion that the only way to fully integrate Jews and Gentiles into the churches was to not require conversion to Judaism on the part of the Gentiles.

In other words, Paul reassessed, as a result of his vocation, the role of the Jewish Law to which he had always been devoted. According to the Law, the Gentiles had been excluded from salvation. Through Christ, Paul taught, they are included and not as converts to Judaism. As a result of a revelation from God, Paul identified himself as an apostle to the Gentiles. Consequently he felt as committed to the Gentile mission as he ever had felt formerly with regard to the Jewish Law.

The Gentile mission, however, did not begin with Paul. Indeed, Luke tells us that Peter (Acts 10:45–48) had preached to Gentiles and baptized them. Later he justified his actions to the Jerusalem leaders saying, “God gave them the same gift he gave to us when we came to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ” (Acts 11:17). Nevertheless, not all of the leaders of the early Christian community felt the same degree of freedom from the Jewish Law as Paul did. Nor did everyone agree that Gentiles who were becoming part of the church should neglect the prescriptions of the Jewish Law. James and Peter, for example, both recognized as Christian leaders, thought that some observance of Jewish Law should be required of the Gentiles. James was a very significant figure in the Jerusalem “mother church.” Peter, of course, was one of the Twelve and a leader “of the Jerusalem community as well as a known authority to the community at Antioch where the majority of Christians were Jewish.

Representatives from James apparently were preaching at least a minimal observance of Jewish law and this was gaining a significant hearing among the Gentile converts (see Acts 11:1–26; Gal 2:1–10). Paul accuses Peter of waffling, seemingly under pressure from James, regarding the Gentiles’ freedom from the Jewish Law. Although Peter himself ate with Gentiles and professed that the holy Spirit had been given to the Gentiles with the same freedom that he and Paul and other Jews had received it, he now appeared to be backing off that freedom and allowing certain aspects of the Law to be required of Gentiles.

The matter was confusing for several reasons. Christianity incorporated the monotheism and the high ethical principles of Judaism, which were very attractive to many Gentiles. The appeal of these basics of Judaism made more reasonable the position of those who “Judaized” (a verb Paul uses only in Gal 2:14, where it is translated “live like Jews”). The “Judaizers” claimed that Gentiles should fulfill some basic requirements of the Jewish law, particularly circumcision and some dietary restrictions, in order to demonstrate that they had actually converted from pagan ways. But from the beginning of the Christian preaching, faith in Jesus crucified and raised from death by God had been the only requirement for Baptism. Luke and Paul insist that even Peter agreed that the Gentiles, like the Jews, were saved through faith and that “God shows no partiality” (Acts 15:9; Gal 2:6). Paul vehemently opposed as useless innovation any additional requirements for the Gentiles. He believed that these additions would, in fact, constitute deviation from the firm conviction that salvation is a work of God fully accomplished by Jesus Christ.

WORKING THROUGH GALATIANS

Galatians represents Paul’s effort to defend his preaching against alternative interpretations and to correct some misrepresentations about the message he preaches. Galatians exhibits the three main parts of a letter: the address (1:1–5), the body (1:6–6:10) that contains teaching (1:6–4:31), ethical applications (5:1–6:10), and a conclusion (6:11–18). A working outline of Galatians is as follows:

- I. Address (1:1–5)
- II. The Body of the Letter (1:6–6:10)
  - A. Defense of Paul’s Gospel and Authority (1:6–2:21)
    - 1. Paul’s Vocation (1:6–2:4)
    - 2. Paul and the Jerusalem Authorities (2:1–21)
  - B. Faith, Freedom, and the Scriptures (3:1–4:31)
    - 1. Abraham, Father of Faith (3:6–16)
    - 2. Example of the Human Will (3:17–23)
    - 3. Example of the Child-Minder (3:24–4:11)
    - 4. Assurance of Paul’s Affection (4:12–20)
    - 5. Allegory of the Two Wives of Abraham (4:21–31)
  - C. Exhortations for Christian Life (5:1–6:10)
- III. Conclusion (6:11–18)

READING THROUGH GALATIANS

The Address (1:1–5)

This address, in which Paul greets the recipients, is abbreviated and assertive. It lacks the usual thanksgiving characteristic of the opening of a Pauline letter. Perhaps Paul's eagerness to get to the heart of his message explains this omission. Perhaps, too, he is so distressed at what he has heard about the events in Galatia that he cannot feel thankful. He asserts from the beginning that his credentials are not from any human source, but from God and Jesus Christ.

The Body of the Letter (1:6–6:10)

In Galatians we see Paul on the defensive, strongly insisting on his loyalty to the gospel. This defense is occasioned by accusations that he seeks only to please other human beings. His opponents accuse him of abbreviating the requirements of faith in order to curry favor with converts. He develops several themes as part of his defense of the message he preached and that his authority came from God. Key themes in this defense are Paul's vocation, the coherence of his message with that of Jerusalem, and the biblical proofs of the truth of his preaching.

Defense of Paul's Preaching and Authority (1:6–2:21)

Paul expresses amazement that the Galatians have so quickly deserted the one who called them and the gospel that remains faithfully rooted in Christ, while they eagerly pursued "a different gospel" (1:6). He is about to prove to them that they and those who have taught them this way are wrong.

Paul's Vocation (1:6–24). Apparently there were those who accused Paul of lying. They claimed that he neglected to inform the Gentiles that their baptism had to be completed by following prescriptions of the Jewish Law. According to these opponents, he did not fully explain the gospel to his converts. But Paul countered that it was the opponents, rather than he, who were perverting the message of Christ. There cannot be two versions of the true gospel message. Paul understood the challenge to his authority as also a threat to the message he preached. His appeal to the divine origin of his call serves to emphasize that there can only be one gospel. Even if he himself or any other church leader or an "angel from heaven" (1:8) would teach otherwise, the one true gospel is the one the Galatians heard from Paul. It does not need to be augmented with certain prescriptions from the Jewish Law.

Although we often speak about his conversion, Paul himself describes what happened as a “vocation.” This was not merely a personal call as we might think of “vocation” today. His call from God involved also a mission specifically to the Gentiles. Paul uses language from the great prophets to describe his call, suggesting that he stands in their line. He claims that he was called from his “mother’s womb,” echoing the description of Jeremiah’s call (Jer 1:4; see also Is 49:1). First and foremost Paul underlines the divine origin of his call by contrasting it with the role played by human beings, including his own initial unwillingness to accept Christ. He reviews his own efforts to destroy the church, insisting that it was zeal for the Jewish Law that caused him to seek the authority to bring to trial in Jerusalem his fellow Jews who believed in Christ.

It is precisely because he was in conflict with many others, including leaders of the church, that Paul begins Galatians by emphasizing that his call is from God. He has received an “apocalypse” or “revelation.” Most scholars date Paul’s call around AD 34–35. Underlying the singular and immediate importance of God’s own initiative in calling him, Paul insists that he did not even go to Jerusalem nor meet any other apostle until three years after that, rather retreating instead to Arabia before returning to Damascus (Gal 1:16–17). Paul underlines the significance of this event, saying under oath that he was not lying, that on that first visit to Jerusalem as a believer, he only stayed fifteen days while conferring with Peter and meeting with “James the brother of the Lord” (1:18–19).

Paul and the Jerusalem Authorities (2:1–21).

The single gospel message, Paul argues in Galatians 2:1–10, is that faith in Jesus as the Christ is sufficient for salvation, without any other obligations under the Jewish Law. This, he adds, was confirmed and approved at a meeting in Jerusalem with all the leaders of the church (see Acts 11 and 15). Scholars place this meeting around AD 50. The only stipulation the leaders expressed was that Paul and the Gentiles be mindful of the poor. Paul indicates that this was exactly what he wanted to do, an intention at least partially fulfilled by the collection he advocated among the Gentiles to go toward a common fund in Jerusalem. He insists that he consistently taught this as a priority in Christian life, as passages such as 2 Corinthians

8:1–9:15 show. Nevertheless, concern for the poor and the needy, so stressed as part of Jewish life and morality, was not such a priority in Greek culture which tended to be less altruistic. The Gentiles would not have been familiar with the long Jewish ethical tradition that mandated taking care of the less fortunate. Although this just concern was part of Jewish Law, the Law is not the reason Paul gives for accepting this stipulation. Rather he insists that there was neither discussion nor agreement about the Gentiles following any prescriptions of the Law. This account from Paul is quite at odds with the account of presumably the same Jerusalem meeting in Acts 15:20, 29 where observance of Jewish marital and sexual customs and basic dietary laws are enjoined on the Gentiles. Scholars have always had difficulty with the two versions, some assuming that Luke invented the cultic observances that the Gentiles were expected to observe, others assuming that Paul ignored them. Here in Galatians Paul insists that no restrictions were part of the accord but were only added after the Jerusalem meeting and only because of pressure from the Jerusalem church headed by James. In Galatians 5:3 Paul will remind the Galatians that those who are circumcised must observe the whole Law, not just selected precepts.

The issue of imposing at least a minimal observance of the Jewish Law, including circumcision, on the Gentiles was introduced, Paul asserts, by “representatives from James,” only after the conference in Jerusalem, and to the Galatians only after Paul’s missionary activity among them. Paul accuses these emissaries of bad faith, saying that they had come to “spy on our freedom . . . in Christ Jesus” (2:4). The notion of Christian freedom will be more developed in Galatians 5. Here it is introduced as characteristic of Christians in the Pauline churches. Paul confronted Peter later in Antioch because Peter caved in to the pressure of the “Judaizing” delegation from James in Jerusalem. The picture Paul paints is of a change of mind on the part of James and Peter after the Jerusalem agreement, which had the impact of undermining Paul’s authority in Galatia and elsewhere. The “Judaizers” of Galatia may have been witnesses to this discrepancy and thus felt authorized to challenge Paul’s authority there. Paul had accused Peter of influencing the Gentiles to “live like Jews” in the observance of some basics of the Law, including circumcision. Peter, who had also baptized Gentiles (Acts 10), was, in Paul’s view, beginning to compromise the Gentiles’ freedom after the Jerusalem meeting.

This historical conflict provides the context for Paul's important concept of "justification by faith." Within the framework of his conflict with Peter and James, Paul reminds Peter as a fellow Jew that "we who are Jews . . . know that a person is not justified by works of the [Jewish] law but through faith in Jesus Christ" (2:15–16). Paul appeals to the faith he has in common with Peter and with other Jewish Christians. All Christians of Jewish descent share the belief that Jesus is the Christ. It is Christ rather than the Jewish Law that justifies all. Generations later in the church, when the preponderance of believers were of Gentile rather than Jewish origin, the historical context of this dispute was forgotten. Since then, Christians have sometimes mistakenly interpreted Paul's message as somehow considering faith as opposed to works. Furthermore, the word "alone" was added to the formula "justification by faith," and the phrase was understood in an absolute sense. So, for example, Luther portrayed the "gospel" as "law-free" in his famous objection to indulgences, which were undoubtedly carried to extremes in his day. The Reformers used Paul's doctrine of justification by faith to oppose any notion of salvation as dependent on good works such as they alleged the Catholic doctrine of salvation taught. They distorted the Catholic teaching of works as a response to faith. For their part, Catholics have sometimes exaggerated the role of meritorious deeds to gain grace. Both Protestants and Catholics have based their arguments in this debate on Paul, especially on Galatians and Romans, and both have distorted the Jewish understanding of Law observance as the response of the faithful to the gift of the covenant. As a result, some Christians erroneously read into his message a dichotomy between faith and works that does not accurately interpret Paul's original meaning, and likewise unfairly attribute to Paul a theological anti-Judaism that characterizes the Jewish way of life as oppressively bound to Law as contrasted with liberating Christian freedom.

We see in all of Paul's letters that his doctrine is consistently followed by ethical applications. Thus Paul teaches that faith is expressed in the moral life. Good works are a response to faith. Even in passages where he speaks of freedom (e.g., in Gal 5) he advocates at the same time the practice of good works. Paul's understanding of Christianity includes a highly developed morality. He would see no opposition between faith and freedom on one side and good works and obedience on the other, as he will show in the next major section of Galatians.

Faith, Freedom, and the Scriptures (3:1–4:31)

Here Paul begins his theological and biblical explanation of his gospel message. He appeals first to the experience of the Galatians, then to the biblical exposition of several texts, and then to several human examples.

Paul insists that his converts in Galatia have heard the true and complete gospel message from him and that, as a result of their conversion to Christ, they have received the Spirit of God. He asks them a question to which they all know the answer, in order to shame them into attention: Did you receive the Spirit through Law or through faith (3:2)? They know it was through faith in Christ rather than the Law. In order to emphasize the importance of continuing to live the life of faith, he employs a contrast between the “flesh” and the “spirit” designed to show that these are mutually exclusive. Today’s reader will find such a contrast problematic unless we understand the Greek philosophical mind-set of Paul’s audience and the special meanings he attaches to these words.

Today we tend to equate “flesh” with body or material existence, and to affirm the body as a positive and even essential expression of self-fulfillment and human happiness. But the Greeks stressed the tension between the flesh and the spirit, which presupposed the superiority of the spirit and the inferiority of the flesh. For them, the spirit represented the immortal, life-giving aspect of human experience whereas the body or flesh signified the weaker, sensual, mortal aspect that had to be subordinated to the spirit in order to find happiness. Though the Hebrews did not generally share this mind-set, still earlier biblical language will sometimes use “flesh” or “flesh and blood” to mean the weakness and vulnerability of human existence without the assistance of God (see 1 Cor 15:50). This is usually Paul’s meaning for “flesh”: human arrogance that tries to live independently of God’s grace. To further complicate our task of interpreting his meaning, we note that Paul sometimes refers to the Spirit of God or holy Spirit (at times simply called the “Spirit”) and at other times he means the human spirit. Often it is hard for the reader to distinguish the two. In English translations God’s Spirit is usually capitalized, but that is at the call of the translator, and sometimes the difference is not clear. Paul asserts that the Spirit of God was conferred upon the Galatians by faith, not by “works of the flesh” such as circumcision. He therefore concludes that it would be an absurd regression to “end in the flesh” what had begun in the spirit. Faith transferred the Galatians and all believers from the domain of the flesh to that of the spirit. The Spirit of God enables us to share fully in the inheritance of the promise made to Abraham and fulfilled already now in Christ. Thus Paul moves from a review of the Galatian experience of the gospel to an illustration of the validity of that experience taken from the Scriptures.

Abraham, Father of Faith (3:6–16). Paul reinforces his teaching on justification by grace through faith in Christ by giving examples from the Scriptures showing that faith in Christ is sufficient for salvation. Using the exegetical methods in which he was trained, he draws out several biblical passages from different places and puts them together into a new argument to show that Abraham received the promise and was considered to have been justified in God's sight before he was given the precept of circumcision (Gn 12:3; 15:6). Then the crucified Christ took upon himself the curse of the Law by hanging on a tree (Dt 27:26; Hb 2:4; Lv 18:5; Dt 21:23). Paul relates the experience of Abraham and his heirs to the experience of the Galatians. Through faith the Galatians (a predominantly Gentile community) became the "children of Abraham" (3:7). "Abraham believed God, and it was credited to him as righteousness" (3:6). God gave a promise to Abraham because of his faith. This promise included the "nations" or Gentiles who are blessed through Abraham. Now, Paul says, the Gentiles have received the blessing of Abraham. The promise has been fulfilled in Christ.

Example of the Human Will (3:17–23). Paul then uses the example of a last will or testament (in Greek, the words, will, testament, and covenant are all the same, diatheke, which helps make the analogy in a way that is lost in English). Once made and ratified, it cannot be changed by something that comes along later. In like manner, the covenant with Abraham could not be altered by the Mosaic Law that came later. The original covenant through faith is the prior one that cannot be annulled, and this is the one to which all persons of faith belong.

Example of the Child-Minder (3:24–4:11). The next human analogy that Paul uses would have been perfectly comprehensible to his contemporaries, but needs some explanation today. The "custodian" was a slave in a wealthy family who was set in authority over the minor son and responsible for his discipline and education. Once the son came of age he became the heir, so the roles were reversed. Paul uses this example to argue that the Law was a temporary custodian until Christ came, which is the time set by the Father for our spiritual coming of age. At that point, the Law has no more power over us.

As illustration for this maturity in Christ that we now have, Paul uses one of his most famous sayings, probably a baptismal formula that he quotes for effect. All who have been baptized in Christ have a new identity, so that there is no longer Jew or Greek, slave or free, male and female, but all are one in Christ Jesus (3:27–28). We would like to know how seriously this proclamation was taken in Paul's day. The tension between Jew and Greek (that is, Gentile) continued, but it was precisely to this vision of unity in Christ that Paul was devoting much of his effort. Nevertheless, Christian persecution of Jews increased rather than decreased in following centuries. Slavery certainly continued for centuries in Christian households and states. Unity has not been achieved, and problems of inequality between men and women in the church have not yet been resolved. Disparities in treatment based on ethnicity, social status, and gender are perennial. This prophetic text remains a challenge for the church in every age.

Assurance of Paul's Affection (4:12–20). In spite of the harsh things Paul had to say to the Galatians in the beginning of the letter, he now softens a bit to express his continued fondness for them and his remembrance of how well they treated him and even nursed him through some illness when he was there among them. Verse 15 leads some commentators to suppose that Paul had some kind of eye disease that seems to have marred his personal appearance (see 2 Cor 10:10), but this is speculation. He hopes to come again to be with them and to be able to speak more affectionately than he has had to do in this letter.

Allegory of the Two Wives of Abraham (4:21–31). Paul goes on to illustrate his teaching with yet another scriptural example, namely that of Abraham's two sons by two women. The first, Ishmael, is the son of a slave woman, Hagar, whose name never actually occurs here (but see Gn 21). Isaac is Sarah's son, born free. Ishmael and his mother were expelled from Abraham's sight and did not inherit the promise. Paul develops his commentary as an allegory, understanding Ishmael and Hagar to represent slavery to the covenant on Mount Sinai. Isaac represents the promise fulfilled in the freedom of faith without the restrictions of the Law. The words originally spoken to Sarah who had been barren are fulfilled in the believers who inherit the promise (Gal 4:27). Paul says of the Galatians that they, like Isaac, are children of the promise, that is, the promise of grace and with it, freedom from the Law. Thus Paul's reading of the Scriptures reinforces his insistence that the Galatians are justified without the Law and freed from the Law. Therefore to return to the Law's restrictions would be a great foolishness (see 3:1).

Exhortations for Christian Living (5:1–6:10)

In this section Paul draws implications for Christian living from his teaching. Even as he insists on freedom, he shows how faith has its consequences in Christian life. Chapters 5 and 6 exhort believers to exercise their faith in their relationships with one another. These exhortations focus on the responsibilities Christians share for developing the life of the community. We are struck by Paul's emphasis on social responsibility. Note that he does not dwell on a believer's personal, interior life so much as on the relationships that should characterize the Christian community that is living the blessings of the Spirit of God (see 5:21–23). The term "freedom" recurs here (5:1, 13). For Paul freedom is not lawlessness but the liberty to live for God (see Rom 6:4) and to serve one another through love (Gal 5:13). The choice between slavery and freedom is the choice between the works of the Law and the works of the Spirit. For Paul, all humans are under some power—either of "sin" and the "flesh," or of the Spirit of God and faith.

In 5:2–12 Paul refers again to the specific problem that occasioned this urgent letter. The Judaizers are agitating the Galatians, trying to convince them to be circumcised and follow some of the elements of the Jewish Law. Paul reminds the Galatians of a principle certainly upheld by Jews, that circumcision of itself is nothing if not a sign of commitment to follow the whole Law (5:3). The problem he confronts is the imposition of circumcision on the Gentiles. Galatians 5:11 implies that Paul, even as a Christian, did "preach circumcision" for Jews. He does not dispute the role of the Law in Jewish life. Although some accused him of undermining the Law for Jews, Paul considers himself innocent of that charge (see Rom 9:1–5; 1 Cor 9:20; Acts 21:20–26). The list of "works of the flesh" in 5:20–21 show that Paul does not equate “flesh” with bodiliness; many of the “works of the flesh” cited are toxic attitudes and viewpoints.

In Galatians 6:1–10 Paul continues to reflect on community life, advocating the virtues of charity, service, and humility. Christians are obliged to “bear one another’s burdens.” Although they are also called to “do good to all,” even those outside the church, special priority is given to those in the family of faith (6:10).

Conclusion (6:11–18)

Paul adds a final note for emphasis and concludes with a short prayer. The letter was probably dictated by Paul to a scribe. He adds his own closing remarks, beginning at verse 11. Here he adds a new dimension to the arguments against the agitators: they are insincere, since they themselves do not follow the Law. They are only trying to escape persecution by other Jews, or possibly the Romans (see note on 6:12–15). He contrasts their cowardice and hypocrisy with his own boldness and consistency, referring to the “marks of Jesus” on his body. All that matters, Paul says, is that we are created anew (6:15). He concludes with a prayer for peace and mercy, calling down a blessing on his brothers and sisters in Christ.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

The letter to the Galatians may be one of the most difficult for us to approach without prior knowledge of the historical circumstances in which it was written, yet no one knows very much about those circumstances. Paul’s message here is nevertheless especially appropriate today. Despite painful differences with other leaders, he focuses on a single gospel message that all authentic Christian missionaries preach. This message emphasizes the role of faith and the significance of community, a message Paul underscores by referring to various Old Testament biblical passages. Faith is the expression of the bond between God and us, a bond lived out in relationships with others. His exhortation to Christians is to “be free” and therefore responsible for one another. There is no conflict between faith and works. Faith is necessarily expressed in the everyday life of believers. Paul does, however, stress that the works of faith are a result of the gift of the Spirit and a response to it, not a requirement for receiving the Spirit or for meriting salvation.

EPHESIANS

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

Ephesians displays a well-developed theology of the church. Most of the surely authentic epistles of Paul are addressed to specific congregations in various important locations in the Greco-Roman world. Ephesians envisions not a single congregation but the universal church seen as a spiritual reality entrusted with the worldwide mission of Christ. Here the word “church” (ekklesia) acquires that new meaning of universal reality.

There are significant parallels between Ephesians and Colossians. The advanced Christology and ecclesiology, the apparent absence of Jewish--Gentile tensions, and, finally, the unusual vocabulary unique to these two epistles among the Pauline letters prompt many interpreters to assert that Ephesians and Colossians were written in an era after the death of Paul. If that is the case, the disciple who wrote these letters was familiar with Pauline theology and style and adapted Paul’s message to new times and circumstances. In our comments we will follow the usual practice of referring to the author of Ephesians and the other 297 “Deutero-Pauline” writings (see introduction to Paul and his writings) as “Paul,” all the while keeping in mind that nearly all Pauline scholars think of Ephesians as not from Paul himself, and a majority think the same of Colossians.

WORKING THROUGH EPHESIANS

Ephesians follows the pattern of a Greco-Roman letter, beginning with an address (1:1–14) and ending with a conclusion (6:21–24). Moreover, it follows the pattern of a Pauline letter, with initial blessing or prayer in the address and conclusion adapted to a liturgical assembly. These stylized elements enclose the body of the letter (1:15–6:20), which presents a teaching or doctrine on the church and then applies this teaching to the daily life of believers. We will follow the NABRE outline, emphasizing the major themes developed in Ephesians as follows:

I. The Address (1:1–14)

- II. The Body of the Letter (1:15–6:20)
  - A. The Teaching on the Church (1:15–4:24)
    - 1. Unity of the Church (1:15–2:22)
    - 2. World Mission of the Church (3:1–4:24)
  - B. Ethical Applications (4:25–6:20)
- III. Conclusion (6:21–24)

READING THROUGH EPHESIANS

The Address (1:1–14)

Ephesians identifies the sender as “Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God.” The absence from some manuscripts of the designation “in Ephesus” (1:1) is one reason why Ephesians is considered by some to be a circular letter intended for a wider audience rather than for the specific community at Ephesus alone. No particularities regarding the Ephesian community are mentioned as is customary when Paul writes to a community he knows as well as he should have known the Ephesians (see Acts 19:10). The lack of a personalized greeting further supports the view that this is a letter to all the churches written by a Pauline disciple.

A doxology or blessing of God replaces the personal thanksgiving characteristic of Paul’s letters (Eph 1:3–6). As if conscious of the great mystery of the church he is about to describe, the author begins by proclaiming the blessedness of God. The recurrence of the term “blessed” and the many liturgical references suggest that this prayer of praise is inspired by the Jewish liturgies in which believers, mindful of the wondrous works of God, cannot but bless the Creator. The focus is on God’s blessing in Christ in whom the divine plan for the salvation of all people is achieved. The holy Spirit is described as the “first installment” (1:14) of our inheritance toward redemption.

The Body of the Letter (1:15–6:20)

The message of Ephesians has two parts. The first or doctrinal section (1:15–4:24) unfolds the church as the fulfillment of God’s plan for salvation, inaugurated in Christ. A second section (4:25–6:20) contains ethical “imperatives” concerning the daily conduct of believers, providing practical applications of Paul’s teaching.

The Teaching on the Church (1:15–4:24)

Ephesians develops the New Testament teaching about the unity of the church and the church's worldwide mission. Integral to this mission is the significant role of the apostle in its promotion. We shall briefly consider each of these teachings as developed in Ephesians.

Unity of the Church (1:15–2:22). The ecclesiology, or theology of the church, in Ephesians is integrally linked to its Christology. That is to say that its view of the church follows from its view of Christ and Christ's saving work. Therefore, to understand the emphasis on the unity of the church that occurs in Ephesians, we must see the perspective on Christ developed there. The Christology and ecclesiology in Ephesians and Colossians are developed beyond that in Paul's major letters to the Corinthians and the Romans. Yet this development has its roots in Paul, for whom the image of the church as the body of Christ helps to express the unity of Christians and the salvific work of Christ's death and resurrection.

The description of the church as the Body of Christ appears first in 1 Corinthians 12:12–27 and Romans 12:4–8. Paul urged the Christians in Corinth and Rome to express their unity in mutual love as members of the same body, Christ. But in Ephesians and Colossians there is a major change in the image. Here Christ is referred to as the "head over all things to the church, which is his body" (Eph 1:22–23; Col 1:18). This shift in the image leads away from the mutual participation and responsibility of all the members, who as members of Christ are also members of one another (Rom 12:5), to centralized authority in the person of Christ, who is portrayed as above every principality, authority, and dominion (cf. Eph 1:21–22). Nevertheless, the recipients are still reminded that we grow more deeply into members of Christ (5:30).

In the AD 50s, when Paul was writing Galatians and Romans, it is clear that one of the major problems facing the church was the reconciliation of Jews and Gentiles under one God and one Lord. Distinctions between Jews and Gentiles were symbolized by such practices as circumcision, dietary laws, and restrictions regarding table fellowship, intermarriage, and other forms of social interaction. These, Paul insisted, were obliterated by Christ's death. Yet the apostle himself had to struggle to resolve the tensions between Israel and the Gentiles (see, e.g., Rom 9–11). The teaching about the church in Ephesians seems to reflect a time or place in which these tensions are resolved. The Gentiles are portrayed as those who were once “far off ” “strangers to the covenants of promise.” Now they have “become near by the blood of Christ” (2:13). The images of the church as the body of Christ and Christ as the head of the church serve to illustrate the intrinsic unity of the church of Jews and Gentiles, that is, of all people in Christ.

World Mission of the Church (3:1–4:24). The author of Ephesians identifies himself as “Paul, a prisoner of Christ [Jesus] for you Gentiles” (3:1). He then abruptly interrupts this self-introduction to elaborate on his role in the mystery of God’s plan for the salvation of the world. Now imprisoned, Paul continues the work of intercession. Through prayer Paul brings the Gentiles to God. The church, the body of Christ and the family of God, is entrusted with the work of salvation that is to fill all things “with the fullness of God” (3:19). Paul understands his work to be essential in God’s plan and yet he is unperturbed either by his own imprisonment or by the failure of some to accept the message of Christ. Salvation as well as creation is in God’s hands and God’s plan is being fulfilled in inscrutable mystery.

Again the language reflects that introduced by Paul in his earlier writings. But the conception of the divine plan of salvation is more developed. The church, under the impetus of the Spirit, is bringing all to the “one God and Father of all, who is over all and through all and in all” (4:6). Paul’s prayer is that “you may be filled with the fullness of God” (3:19). The mystery of God who ordained that “all Israel will be saved” (Rom 11:26) now prescribes that we “no longer live as the Gentiles do” (Eph 4:17), but “put on the new self, created in God’s way in righteousness and holiness of truth” (4:24). Having described this mystery, Paul goes on to exhort the Ephesians to express their common call to holiness and unity in their daily life.

Ethical Applications (4:25–6:20)

Ephesians 5 illustrates how the teaching of the letter on the church has practical consequences in the daily lives of believers. Ephesians 5:1 says, “So be imitators of God, as beloved children, and live in love.” This could be the summary of the whole of Christian life. The author of Ephesians draws out some implications of imitating God by living in love. Much of this section consists of general moral exhortation, a description of what the ideal Christian life with one another should look like.

Christians relate to one another in ways already established by the wider society. So, for example, wives and husbands, children and parents, slaves and masters all follow norms of the Greco-Roman society in which they live, norms that give some direction about the rights and duties of people who are in these kinds of relationships with one another. The author adopts and adapts the traditional philosophical approach to household life that is at least as old as Aristotle, and that we call “household rules.” In ordinary Greco-Roman society the lines of authority and of subservience were clearly drawn. Husbands, parents, and masters all have great power over wives, children, and slaves in a rigid social hierarchy. Of course, we must remember that the categories were not so clean: some women and children were slaves and some women owned slaves, both male and female. Some of the children referred to here may have been adults with living fathers, thus slave owners themselves.

For Paul these rules or principles become practical applications of faith for members of the “household of God” (2:19), giving directives for various segments of society in their relationships to one another. Paul does not offer a radical critique of certain social contracts, such as slavery or male dominance. Yet for him, relationships among Christians must reflect a new perspective. Christians are motivated to a new way of thinking, determined by their common Baptism. Christians share the conviction that all are one in Christ and saved by Christ. This leads to innovations in the usual treatment of household rules: here both parties in a relationship, dominant and subordinate, are addressed, whereas in the traditional form, only the male authority would be addressed, and here the subordinate party is even addressed first. The Ephesians are urged to “live in a manner worthy of the call you have received . . . bearing with one another through love” (Eph 4:1f). They are exhorted to “be subordinate to one another” (5:21), to “nourish and cherish” one another, because they are members of one body (5:29–30). The extra verses spent on the analogy of husband to Christ and wife to the church are the springboard for much later mysticism, even as they have also been justification for continued subordinate positions for women. Such a passage as this, along with the exhortations to slave obedience, are paradoxical combinations of beauty, grace, and what today can only be seen as social oppression in the name of faith. They require careful interpretation both in the context of the author's world and ours.

If we do not let these thorny problems be major obstacles, reading Ephesians today can inspire us to a powerful vision of the church. It leads us to reassess the ordinary way of approaching one another as colleagues, family, clients, and the like. We, like the Ephesians, are urged to remember our real identity and to respect others by relating to everyone in a way worthy of members of the "household of God." The ordinary hierarchical system that prevails in the world is superseded by a new way of relating to one another in Christ.

Paul finally urges the Ephesians to "pray at every opportunity in the Spirit" (6:18). He again asks for prayers for himself, that he may speak "the mystery of the gospel" with boldness and courage even though he is in chains (6:19–20).

Conclusion (6:21–24)

Ephesians does not exhibit the usual personal tone and greetings of Paul's authentic letters. In the conclusion, however, the author indicates that he sends the letter with Tychicus (6:21), the name of Paul's messenger of Colossians as well (Col 4:7). The final prayers are for peace and love and grace.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Ephesians strikes a balance between reflection on the church as a universal, spiritual reality and an application in the daily lives of Christians of their new identity as members of this spiritual creation. The letter also emphasizes the congruence between Christians' personal spirituality and their responsibilities in relationships with one another. Through Baptism we are renewed. We have put off the "old humanity," symbolized by Adam; we have been transformed into a "new humanity" in Christ. We are called to be imitators of God and to reflect God's love and compassion in our daily lives.

As part of our Christian Scriptures, Ephesians stands as a continual challenge, calling us beyond the present to a deeper reality where all things are in the care of God. The present with its trials, temptations, failures, and limitations can discourage us. The tensions and suffering of the present are temporary. Ephesians is a letter from prison, addressing a church afflicted with oppression from the outside, and confusion and dissension from within. Ephesians testifies to the author's faith and hope in God's plan for the salvation of the entire world—a plan that will be fulfilled despite and even by means of apparent obstacles. When we are confronted by the limitations of our present circumstances, or hampered by fear, the letter provides encouragement.

Ephesians is one of the most hope-filled and confident of all the Pauline letters. It may lack the usual personal tone expected of communities Paul knew well. But Ephesians expresses fundamental Christian beliefs that continue to characterize the church today. For example, despite suffering and failures, the church celebrates the reality of salvation already experienced in the daily life of Christians. Paul's advice about mutual relationships with members of God's household gives courage to serve one another in love. Like the writer of Ephesians, the modern church at Vatican Council II complemented reflection on the nature of the church with the role of the church in the modern world. The church as Christ's body, no matter what its limitations, is called and empowered to reconcile the whole world to God. Each of us, as members of the church, has a role in this mission.

PHILIPPIANS

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

Philippians is one of the most appealing of Paul's letters. Along with Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon, Philippians is traditionally "called a "Captivity Letter" because it is one of the four letters in which the author refers to his imprisonment. The authentic Pauline authorship of Philippians and Philemon is never doubted, although there is disagreement regarding the authorship of Ephesians and Colossians.

There are several theories about the location and occasion of the imprisonment from which Paul writes the letter to the Philippians. The oldest and traditional view is that he writes from Rome in his final imprisonment there; this would date the letter to the late fifties or early sixties of the first century. Some have questioned the feasibility of this location given the apparent frequent exchanges implied in the letter and the great distance from Rome to Philippi. So a second location has been suggested, Caesarea Maritima on the Palestinian coast, during the two years of confinement recorded in Acts 24–26. Still, that is a great distance, requiring a month or more of travel. A third suggestion is that Paul was imprisoned earlier in his life in Ephesus, and that Philippians and Philemon date from that time, perhaps in the middle years of the fifties. The mysterious references to trouble in Asia (Ephesus was the principal city of the Roman province of Asia) in 1 Corinthians 15:32 and 2 Corinthians 1:8–10 support this idea, as does Paul's avoidance of Ephesus on his journey to Jerusalem (Acts 20:16). In that case, travel back and forth from Paul's prison to Philippi would have been much easier and faster.

If the Pauline authorship of Philippians is unquestioned, the unity of the letter poses some challenges. The choppy nature of this letter has led many interpreters to suggest that Philippians was originally at least three letters. According to this theory, a later editor, adapting the initial and final greeting, combined the originally separate messages into one edited "letter" for the purpose of later circulation. On the other hand, many more recent interpreters, using methods derived from the principles of ancient rhetoric, argue for the unity of the letter in spite of the rough edges here and there. Whichever is the case, the end result—the “canonical letter”—provides the rich spiritual legacy called Philippians, so beloved in the Christian tradition.

Important Pauline themes are developed in Philippians, particularly that of unity. We see in the letter the deep love Paul feels for this community. Disregarding the dangers facing him, Paul focuses on the sufferings of the community caused by external persecution and internal divisions. We hear of Paul’s gratitude for the material support he has received from the community. We witness his fears about the problems within the community and the pressure from outside, but he subordinates those concerns to expressions of joy for the strength of the Philippians’ community. In a surprise vehement outburst against those who advocate a return to the Jewish Law (3:2–4), he reminds us that this issue, so central to Galatians and Romans, is not forgotten elsewhere.

WORKING THROUGH PHILIPPIANS

We can discuss the main themes of Philippians according to the following outline. The basic letter contains the usual address (1:1–11), body (1:12–3:1) and conclusion (4:21–23).

- I. Address and Thanksgiving (1:1–11)
- II. Body of the Letter (1:12–4:20)
  - A. Paul’s Situation and the Progress of the Gospel (1:12–26)
  - B. Exhortations for Community Unity; Example of Jesus (1:27–2:18)
  - C. Travel of Paul and Assistants, Example of Timothy and Epaphroditus (2:19–3:1)
  - D. Digression and Warning (3:2–4a)
  - E. Example of Paul (3:4b–21)
  - F. Specific Appeal to Unity (4:1–9)
  - G. A Thank-You Note (4:10–20)
- III. Conclusion (4:21–23)

READING THROUGH PHILIPPIANS

The Address (1:1–11)

The opening line names Paul and Timothy as senders of the letter, but note how the speaker quickly changes to “I” in v. 3, for Paul is really the author. Timothy will be mentioned as an ideal companion in 2:19–24. The address of this letter is unique among Pauline letters in its acknowledgement of local leaders by title, “overseers and ministers,” which in later use could also mean “bishops and deacons,” but there is no evidence that the connotations later brought to those words are active here. Nevertheless, the address shows the beginnings of official titles and functions in the church.

A thanksgiving (1:3–8) and a prayer (1:9–11) complete the address. This is one of the longest and most beautifully developed of the Pauline thanksgivings. It introduces the themes of joy and community, themes that recur throughout Philippians. The paradox expressed in this letter is that the intense suffering experienced by Paul and the Philippians pales in comparison with the confident joy they share. Although separated because of Paul’s imprisonment and threatened on all sides, Paul and the Philippians are “partners,” participating together in the spread of the gospel message. Paul draws strength from the Philippians’ affection and display of concern for him. He prays (1:9–11) that they will be strengthened and that their love will grow even amid hardships. Together they all await the “day of Christ,” which Paul longs for and strains forward to obtain.

The Body of the Letter (1:12–4:20)

Paul’s Situation and the Progress of the Gospel (1:12–26)

Paul links faith in suffering and the spread of the gospel. Nowhere is this link more eloquently expressed than in Philippians 1:12–26 where he refers to the effect his own imprisonment has had on the progress of the gospel message. Paul rejoices that even his competitors are using the opportunity represented by his present circumstances to energetically pursue the spread of the Christian message. For him, the priority is that “in every way . . . Christ is being proclaimed” (1:18). This position stands in some contrast to his insistence elsewhere, even in 3:2–3 of this letter, that only he has the right gospel. Paul speaks of joy even though he is in prison and the outcome is uncertain. He could be facing death. As a committed and passionate apostle, Paul worked tirelessly to promote acceptance of the gospel message by Gentiles everywhere. Now in prison Paul is equally peaceful, knowing that even should he die the preaching will be continued.

If 1 Corinthians, especially chapters 1 and 2, represents a theoretical development of Paul's theology of the cross, Philippians represents Paul's own faith as he lives this theology. The wisdom of the cross is that God's power is made perfect in weakness. By this transforming power of the cross, Paul's brothers and sisters take encouragement from his imprisonment and preach the gospel all the more fearlessly. By the wisdom of the cross Paul considers death to be "gain" and what he formerly considered "gain" to be "rubbish" (see 3:7–8). Imprisoned, Paul draws strength from the community. He speaks with confidence and joy, expressing hope that is firmly rooted in God.

Exhortations for Community Unity and the Example of Jesus (1:27–2:18)

As he does in several other letters, Paul expresses concern that the opposition experienced by the Philippians will threaten their faith. He knows of some internal divisions among these Christians. By appealing to them to "have a common mind and heart," Paul alludes first to his own suffering and imprisonment and then to the example of Christ.

The beautiful hymn about the abasement of Christ in 2:6–11 is probably taken by Paul from an already existing piece of early Christian poetry with which the Philippians are familiar. It recalls their source of encouragement and is a cherished expression of faith in the redemptive aspects of Christ's suffering and death. The example of Christ's death must, above all else, influence the believing community in its own practical acceptance of and obedience to God's will. Thus Christ who "emptied himself" is the example of behavior for the Philippians who are having trouble preserving unity in the congregation. Further, Christ by his death became "Lord" so that all who profess his Lordship are subject to him. In homage they recognize that they are brothers and sisters, members with one another of one believing community. So Christ is the example and the empowerment of selfless, mutual service in the church. Following the hymn, Paul draws out some implications: the Philippians are to remain blameless and innocent in the midst of adversity and wickedness, waiting for the "day of Christ" (2:16). Conceiving of the Christian life as a liturgical sacrifice, Paul says that even though he is "poured out as a libation" (wine that is offered in sacrifice), he rejoices. He asks only that the Philippians share his joy.

Travel of Paul and Assistants: Example of Timothy and Epaphroditus (2:19–3:1)

The travel account given here and other indications suggest relatively free and frequent exchanges between the prisoner, Paul, and the Philippians. This would be more easily understood with an imprisonment closer to Philippi than to Rome, hence the Ephesian theory. The news about Epaphroditus's illness and recovery seem to indicate different visits. He probably came from Philippi and was not able to continue his apostolic work because of illness. Timothy is extolled as an ideal assistant, a second example of unity after Jesus. The trust among Paul, Timothy, and Epaphroditus stands in contrast to the squabbling between Euodia and Syntyche and other members of the Philippian community (4:2–3).

Digression and Warning (3:2–4a)

The abrupt change of tone and content between the first two chapters of Philippians and the stark warning in 3:2–4 is one of the strongest arguments that these were originally separate communications. Yet a skilled rhetorician could also just as abruptly switch topic and tone in order to get his audience's attention. This sudden theme of resistance to those who agitate for the Gentiles to be circumcised, presented in an insulting tone, is brief and does not reappear in this letter.

Example of Paul (3:4b–21)

After presenting the example of Jesus and then in a lesser way of Timothy and Epaphroditus, Paul now proposes himself as example of one who knows how to give up privilege and status for the good of others. He gives us some of our best biographical information about himself, then reflects on the consequences of his encounter with Christ. Using athletic imagery, Paul encourages the Philippians to strain toward the goal of a "perfect maturity." He urges them not to regress into the past, seeking glory in shame (possible allusions to circumcision) or in other practices of the "flesh" such as observances of certain dietary rules. These, Paul says, are earthly things. Paul himself used to glory in his religious accomplishments; but since his acceptance of Jesus as Messiah he no longer regards these as significant. Indeed, his former system of valuing is "rubbish" compared with his new way of seeing things in Christ. This is the wisdom of the cross. Those who do not accept this wisdom are “enemies of the cross” (3:18).

Specific Appeal to Unity (4:1–9)

Paul turns to an internal crisis that is just as destructive and threatening to the community. He begins chapter 4 by urging the Philippians to live in harmony, a theme he had already developed in chapters 1 and 2. But now he is specific in his appeal to unity, and all the previous rhetoric on the subject may be leading to this climax. There is a conflict between some leading women of the community, Euodia and Syntyche, and Paul solemnly begs them to stop. What position these women occupy, we do not know, but their division is obviously central to the community’s problems, so they must be influential and may be significant leaders. Paul addresses a comrade and enlists the help of an otherwise unknown man named Clement to aid in the reconciliation of these women, for the betterment of the whole community.

A Thank-You Note (4:10–20)

Paul expresses thanks for the help received from the Philippians and sent with Epaphroditus. He adds, however, that his gratitude is not so much that he was personally aided as that the Philippians’ generosity is “profit that accrues to your account” (4:17). Paul testifies to his own indifference and ability to do without, a contemporary philosophical ideal of spiritual freedom. Yet he humbly accepts aid not only to alleviate his own need but as a symbol of the affection that links him to the Philippians. Paul speaks of this aid in terms of temple sacrifice, referring to it as “ ‘a fragrant aroma’ . . . an acceptable sacrifice, pleasing to God” (4:18–19; see also 2 Cor 2:14–16). This is the ancient language of liturgical offering and sacrifice. The idea of an offering of mutual love and aid by Christians to one another as a “liturgy” appears also in Romans 12:1–2, and 15:17–20.

Conclusion (4:21–23)

The conclusion of the letter sends greetings to everyone there from everyone here. The reference to “Caesar’s household” is to the vast imperial network of civil servants that were present in every major city. We know from this reference that there were Christians among them.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Since the writing of Philippians, the Christian community has been inspired not only by the words of the apostle but by the example of the imprisoned leader who speaks with such affection, hope, and faith. One of the most beautiful and well-known of Paul's letters, Philippians represents a reflection on the meaning of fidelity in the midst of trial. Paul's confidence that in all things "Christ is . . . proclaimed" (1:18) transcends the threat of others' jealousy and rivalry. The Christological hymn of Philippians 2 not only inspired the Philippians to greater unity but also continues to invite believers of every age to imitate Christ. Paul's prayer for his fellow Christians is that they always be happy (Phil 4:4–9). This serves as a model for our prayers for one another. Paul puts his own life before the Philippians', encouraging them to follow him in everything that he does and says. Paul then promises that the "God of peace will be with you" (4:9). Such should be our prayer in attracting others to live the Christian life.

COLOSSIANS

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

It is customary to refer to the author of Colossians as “Paul,” although many interpreters question whether Paul himself wrote this brief letter. Many characteristics of the letter seem to suggest his presence behind it. The lively style and personal greetings are typical of Paul. Most of the personal names mentioned here also appear in Philemon, a letter that has always been attributed to Paul himself. Yet there are strange speculative expressions, new terminology, and a new understanding of the church that many scholars think indicate a different author here, writing in Paul’s name with the hope of using Paul’s authority. A compromise position is that Paul entrusted the message to a secretary who composed it in his own terms and with his own style.

Paul himself did not establish the church at Colossae. Possibly Epaphras, a disciple of Paul, was the founding missionary there. The context is that erroneous teachers implied that Christ’s work of redemption was incomplete—that certain other religious practices were required to supplement Christ’s saving death and resurrection. These suggested practices were drawn from Jewish as well as non-Jewish or pagan religions. In Paul’s view, they amounted to ascetical and superstitious additions to the message Paul and Epaphras had taught. As in Galatians, but less emotionally, Paul adamantly insists in Colossians that adding to the gospel message is really subtracting from grace. Only as a member of Christ’s body and under his headship can we fill up “what is lacking in the afflictions of Christ” (1:24), that is, continuing Christ’s redemptive suffering in the world.

At issue in the discussion at Colossae is the primary role of Christ in the salvation of the world. The power and authority of Christ and his relation to the rest of creation are challenged. False teachings at Colossae suggested that other spiritual beings were rivals to Christ’s role, and that certain ascetical practices were a means of becoming more spiritual while also helping to appease these spiritual beings. Using categories and labels present in these false teachings, Paul insists on the primacy of Christ and the sufficiency of his saving action on our behalf. Ethical imperatives follow from this fundamental faith rather than from the necessity of placating angelic spirits or following some ascetical ideals.

WORKING THROUGH COLOSSIANS

The address and thanksgiving (1:1–14) and conclusion (4:7–18) enclose the body of this letter in 1:15–4:6. The body of Colossians follows the basic indicative-imperative pattern that we have seen is characteristic of Paul. The structure of Colossians then is the following:

- I. Address and Thanksgiving (1:1–14)
- II. The Body of the Letter (1:15–4:6)
  - A. Instruction about Christ and False Teaching (1:15–2:23)
    - 1. The Christological Hymn (1:15–20)
    - 2. Paul’s Ministry and Example (1:21–2:3)
    - 3. Warnings against False Teachings (2:4–23)
  - B. Ethics Characterizing the True Christian (3:1–4:6)
- III. Conclusion (4:7–18)

READING THROUGH COLOSSIANS

The Address (1:1–14)

The address includes not only the usual greeting (1:1–2) and thanksgiving (1:3–8) but also a prayer for the continued progress of the Colossians (1:9–14). Both the address and conclusion (4:7–18) contain greetings and personal references typical of Paul.

The Body of the Letter (1:15–4:6)

Colossians’ main message is to promote authentic teaching and to offer warnings against false teachings (1:15–2:23). This is followed by exhortations to exercise fundamental beliefs in daily Christian living (3:1–4:6).

Instruction about Christ and False Teaching (1:15–2:23)

Paul is confident that Epaphras has given the community a solid foundation. He reminds the Colossians that by Christ's saving death, "[God] delivered us from the power of darkness and transferred us to the kingdom of his beloved Son" (1:13). This transference from the realm of sin and error into that of grace and truth is effected in baptism and must be lived out in the daily lives of Christians. The doctrinal presentation of the first major part of Colossians falls into three sections: the Christological hymn and its implications (1:15–23), Paul's own ministry and example (1:24–2:3), and warnings against false teachers and their teaching (2:4–23).

The Christological Hymn (1:15–20).

In order to teach a correct Christology and clarify errors, Paul quotes a liturgical hymn apparently familiar to the Colossians (see also Phil 2:6–11). Many interpreters believe that this hymn predates Paul and was already in use by the early Christian communities. The poetic rhythm and language suggest that it was a hymn and was in use in the liturgy. Since Paul generally writes in prose, the insertion of a hymn here is easily discerned in the Greek. In this hymn Christians profess and celebrate the authority of Christ in whom all "fullness was pleased to dwell, and through him to reconcile all things for him" (1:19–20). Paul stresses the redemption and peace won for us through Christ. He does not badger or scold the Colossians for their errors, but instead presents Christ's role of reconciling the world to God as the basis of common faith among all believers. The text adapts a variety of traditions about the figure of Wisdom and a cosmic savior to the person of Christ, who begins, as in the prologue of John's Gospel, in the heavenly realm. But he is also the head of the church and firstborn from the dead, so that his saving action works in our history.

Paul's Ministry and Example (1:21–2:3).

Emphasis on his own example is a remarkable trait of Paul's letters, one expected of a great teacher in his day (see further 1 Thes 1:6; 1 Cor 11:1; Phil 4:8–9; 2 Cor 11–12). It is also significant that upon reviewing Christ's work of redemption, Paul immediately attaches his own example as a model for the Colossians to emulate. At first this advice may strike us as surprising and almost shocking. How can Paul claim to be a model for all to imitate? It springs from the apostle's humility and transparent confidence. Paul is so firmly rooted in God that he dares to advise his addressees to follow his example. By studying Paul's life, others may know the power of God and be converted. Paul always reveals the source of his confidence, which is not self-reliance but hope in God. This hope is best expressed in Christ's gift of salvation evidenced in the life of the apostle. The apostle glories in his vocation and fidelity while also accentuating his sufferings in the service of the gospel.

In describing his own ministry, Paul adapts categories important to the Colossians and to the false teachers who are disturbing them. They are emphasizing "wisdom" and "perfection," so Paul speaks about the "knowledge of the mystery of God, Christ, in whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (2:2–3). Paul identifies the goal of his mission to "present everyone perfect in Christ" (1:28). For this he labors and struggles in accord with "God's power working within me" (1:29).

Warnings against False Teachings (2:4–23). Paul encourages the Colossians in their faith, reminding them of their identity in Christ. He observes the "good order and the firmness of your faith in Christ." He celebrates this fidelity and encourages the Colossians to be grateful, with a thanksgiving rooted in faith. Finally, he warns against the seduction of false teaching that is according to mere human tradition and not grounded in Christ. The false teaching was probably a combination of Jewish and pagan philosophies and pagan ideals. Paul denounces the circumcision administered by human hands (2:11) and the ascetical practices regarding "food and drink" alleged to be required at certain times and days (2:16). Some teachers flaunted their visions and self-abasement, and were involved in complicated devotions to angelic beings. Paul labeled all these as transitory fads, "shadows of things to come" and "things destined to perish." By contrast, in Christ dwells the fullness of God. All are members of Christ, who is the head of the body, the church. Here and in Ephesians, this specific role of Christ within the church is introduced. Christians are united in one church under one Lord who is Christ. Their common task is the reconciliation of the world to God under Christ.

Ethics Characterizing the True Christian (3:1–4:6)

Paul does not really present a new, uniquely Christian ethical system but draws from several existing systems. Often Paul lists vices or virtues similar to lists found in Stoic or other Greek philosophers. The "household rules" found in Colossians (see Eph 5:21–6:9; Ti 2:1–3:8; 1 Pt 2:11–3:7) have parallels in contemporary Greco-Roman literature where elements of household management are discussed. The submission of wives, children, and slaves to the male household head was an expected part of the social order. A fundamental difference for Paul is the motivation and the empowerment to fulfill these ethical principles. The church as the body of Christ distinguishes itself from the outside world in that the love command operates to create a new way for Christians to relate to one another. Paul says that the Colossians once conducted themselves as pagans who practiced immorality, greed, and passion (3:5–7). Now they have “put on the new self, which is being renewed . . . in the image of its creator” (3:10). In Christ the usual sexual, social, and ethnic distinctions do not exist, “but Christ is all and in all” (3:11).

Conclusion (4:7–18)

Tychicus is the messenger entrusted with the letter to the Colossians. Many think that the Onesimus mentioned as his companion (4:9) is the former slave who returned to Colossae with the letter from Paul to Philemon (see RG to Philemon). The other companions mentioned at the end of Colossians are well-known Christians named in other Pauline letters except for Nympha (4:15), a woman who hosts a house church. This list of personal references reminds us about the common fund of Christian teaching upon which Paul depends and to which he urges the Colossians to hold firm.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Today no less than in the times of the Colossians, Christians are pulled in various directions and people are still searching for spiritual guides and nourishment. The exotic, speculative language in Colossians does not seem so strange to us when we consider the attraction of certain superstitions, the popularity of astrology, the following of television evangelists who promise reprieves from effort in the spiritual life and shortcuts to wholeness and holiness. The epistle to the Colossians stresses the reconciliation of all things in Christ as the fundamental faith assertion with enormous ethical repercussions. As the firstborn of all creation, Christ is a symbol of the value of all creation and a promise of the ultimate salvation of all. That truth translates into the church’s responsibility for stewardship in the world, assuming that in preaching reconciliation the rights of all are respected. In carrying out its mission, the church must be a symbol of peace, since Christ is the head of the church and he made peace by the blood of the cross.

THE LETTERS TO THE THESSALONIANS

INTRODUCTION

As far as we know, the Christian community at Thessalonica was among the earlier ones that Paul established and, although Paul's tone is affectionate in these letters, the apostle experienced a great deal of persecution from both Jews and Gentiles as a result of his preaching there. In his letters to the Thessalonians, Paul addresses real problems that arose in the community, such as mutual charity, the need to be responsible about work, and misunderstanding about the death of community members. The specific nature of these problems does not in any way detract from the enduring value of these letters as models for the Christian pastor and community. Before turning to the letters themselves, let us briefly describe some of the main elements of Paul's apocalyptic perspective that is so important in the Thessalonian correspondence as well as in Paul's other writings. (For more about apocalyptic literature, see the Reading Guides to Daniel and Revelation.)

Paul's Apocalyptic Perspective

Apocalyptic literature was born of the syncretistic blending of Wisdom and Prophetic traditions from the Bible with some elements of cosmic philosophy and mysticism from the Greco-Roman world. It spoke powerfully to those who were oppressed and suffering, encouraging them in the midst of their suffering. The apocalyptic writer was concerned with why the world was not as it ought to be. Jewish and Christian apocalypticism looked to God to bring about a radical transformation of the present world into something more like what God intended. We can only outline here some of the ways that the apocalyptic perspective influenced Paul.

First, is the conviction that God's reign is universal. The Jewish apocalyptic writers interpreted all of history, the good and the bad, as evolving according to a divine plan for the ultimate salvation of Israel, though some also foresaw a definite place for the Gentiles as well. Paul's call taught him to affirm and expand that insight. Throughout his writings he emphasizes that salvation is accessible to all now that Christ has come.

God shows no partiality (see Rom 1:16; 3:22, 29; 10:12; Eph 2:14; Acts 10:34; 15:9–11). Paul says, “There is neither Jew nor Greek . . . neither slave nor free person . . . not male and female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus” (Gal 3:28). The Gentiles have turned “from idols to serve the living and true God” (1 Thes 1:9).

Second, Paul’s thinking, like that of other apocalyptic writers, was characterized by a dualism that envisioned the ultimate salvation of the faithful and punishment of the wicked. He speaks of those who are “saved” and those who are “perishing” (see 1 Cor 1:18; 2 Thes 2:10). He pictures the judgment seat of Christ before whom we all must appear, “so that each one may receive recompense” (2 Cor 5:10). The faithful are delivered from the wrath of God (1 Thes 1:10), but it will not be withheld forever from the “enemies of the cross” (Phil 3:18; see 1 Thes 2:16). The basis for judgment is acceptance or rejection of the gospel. This dualism also gives rise to tensions and even hostility between the present and the age to come. The Lordship of Christ is a cosmic domain; Christ is in the process of returning all things to God (1 Cor 15:28). The role of believers is to continue in faith and faithful life.

Third, there is language of expectation that the time of transformation is imminent, another characteristic of apocalyptic literature that he shares. This conviction influences his views on the insignificance of one’s marital or social status (for example, 1 Cor 7), his warnings to prayerful vigilance (1 Thes 5:1–11), and his encouragement to endure suffering or oppression while striving to build up the community (Phil 2:12–18). The just vigilantly await the savior (Phil 3:20), believing that he is coming to transform their mortal bodies into incorruptibility (Phil 3:21). But we must be careful not to take this kind of language literally. It functioned as a reminder of the radical contingency of time and all things, and the possibility of God’s powerful intervention at any time.

Paul adapts these elements, avoiding the extremes of some apocalyptic thinkers. He introduces significant modifications based on his own experience as apostle of the Gentiles, and his conviction that the end-times have already begun in Christ.

1 THESSALONIANS

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

Thessalonica was the capital and major city of the Roman province of Macedonia, about one hundred miles southwest of Philippi along a major Roman road. The communities at Thessalonica and Philippi were among Paul's first converts in Greece. This letter indicates that he encountered many troubles there from both Jews and Greeks. The beginning of Paul's ministry in Thessalonica was characterized by suffering and humiliation. He was "insolently treated at Philippi," an incident to which he does not allude in his letter there (2:2; see also Acts 16:19–39; 20:34; 1 Cor 4:12; 9:3–18; 2 Thes 3:7–9). The Thessalonians, too, shared in some of that persecution (2:14–16). Persecution, illness, misunderstanding, and other forms of suffering plague Paul's ministry. Yet he constantly has hope of being found worthy by God to be entrusted with the preaching of the gospel (2:4).

WORKING THROUGH 1 THESSALONIANS

Following the usual letter format, 1 Thessalonians has an address and thanksgiving (1:1–10) and conclusion (5:26–28), which envelop the body of Paul's message (2:1–5:25). This message falls into two parts: the indicative (2:1–3:13) followed by the ethical exhortations (4:1–5:25).

The structure of 1 Thessalonians can be outlined as follows:

- I. The Address (1:1–10)
- II. The Body of the Letter (2:1–5:25)
  - A. Paul's Account and Defense of His Ministry (2:1–3:13)
  - B. Specific Exhortations and Instructions (4:1–5:22)
    - 1. Sexual Conduct (4:3–8)
    - 2. Death and the Need for Vigilance (4:13–5:11)
    - 3. Spirit and Order (5:12–22)
- III. Concluding Prayer and Final Greeting (5:23–28)

READING THROUGH 1 THESSALONIANS

The Address and Thanksgiving (1:1–10)

The address contains a short greeting (1:1) and an extended thanksgiving (1:2–10). A distinctive feature of Paul's letters is that the thanksgiving focuses on what God has done for Paul's addressees. In other correspondence of the time, the thanksgiving normally centers on the health and benefits enjoyed by the sender and a wish for the prosperity of the recipient. Paul's co-authors are Silvanus and Timothy. Following his custom, Paul writes not only in his own name but as a member of a team of Christian missionaries. Unlike many others of his letters that begin with several named, here the first person plural is maintained throughout the letter, Paul's "I" breaking through only at 2:18 and 5:27. In what we believe is the first extant letter from Paul, there is a greeting that will become Paul's trademark: "To the church of _____, grace and peace to you in (or from) God the Father and the Lord Jesus." This greeting is seen in its simplest form here; in later letters Paul will elaborate on this basic structure.

A function of the thanksgiving in the address is often to anticipate the themes of a letter. In the case of 1 Thessalonians, thanksgiving itself is a major theme. Paul is grateful for the reception of the word of God by the Thessalonians and for the impact that their faith has had on other communities. Paul claims that he himself does not even have to testify to the fruitfulness of the Thessalonian mission—word of it has spread throughout the Greek world (Macedonia and Achaia include the whole of Greece, 1:8). Besides the initial thanksgiving of 1:2–10 that properly belongs to the address, two other thanksgivings appear in 2:13–16; 3:9–13. In all three places, Paul speaks of the relationship between faith and charity and of the expectation of the Parousia, or second coming, of Jesus Christ. These are the major themes of 1 Thessalonians.

The Body of the Letter (2:1–5:25)

The body contains Paul's main message in two parts; his account and defense (2:1–3:13) followed by teachings and exhortation (4:1–5:25).

Paul's Account and Defense of His Ministry (2:1–3:13)

Paul states clearly that his motives are without guile in his work with them. If we can read between the lines, we can surmise there were accusations of unworthy motives on his part against which he defends himself. He stresses his gratitude to God for the success of this community and presents a defense of his ministry among them.

Thanksgiving is a persistent thread that runs throughout 1 Thessalonians. Yet Paul is not a naïve optimist. He is aware that this community is experiencing several problems. Although he will return to the theme of gratitude, he launches into a defense of his own ministry with the Thessalonians, thereby implying that some have questioned his authority or actions. Throughout Paul's ministry, he insists that he is an apostle, called by God to preach the Gospel message. Paul's defense of himself and his authority are linked to the call he had received from God. He is under a divine compulsion to preach the Gospel and his confidence derives from this vocation. His defense of his ministry is also prompted by some of the dangers represented by false teachers agitating the Thessalonians in Paul's absence. Although this is a painful and threatening problem, he interrupts this defense with thanksgivings, as if to say that he is confident in the Thessalonians' perseverance despite the interference of the agitators.

One of the most difficult yet persistent problems that faced the early church was that of false prophets or false teachers. In the ancient world, where travel was difficult and communications took time, often philosophers or religious teachers joined others who traveled for business or personal reasons. News was gathered and disseminated by such traveling groups; new converts were often made along the way. First Thessalonians reflects this kind of mobility where Paul speaks about his own past visits with the Thessalonians as well as his thwarted plans to return. He promises to visit again soon. He warns the Thessalonians about other types of ministers—those who are greedy or who flatter (2:5) or who rely on the community for support (2:9). Paul's own example stands out in contrast to these, for he has been "gentle as a nursing mother" among them (2:7).

Despite his grateful recognition of the sturdy faith of the Thessalonians, Paul found it necessary to remind them of the sacrifices and dedication they saw in him and his companions. Among his characteristic practices, Paul repeatedly notes that he is self-supporting. He "toiled day and night" among them and in so doing, he gave them an example that they ought to imitate. This practice of working with his hands and supporting himself was unusual. The Corinthians misinterpreted it, and he did accept gifts of support from the Philippians (Phil 4:10–20).

Specific Exhortations and Instructions (4:1–5:22)

Concrete ethical applications or “imperatives” follow from Paul’s grateful description of the Christian community at Thessalonica. This paraenetic or exhortatory section may be considered a specific example of Paul’s concern that faith be exercised in practical living, particularly as expressed in charity.

Sexual Conduct (4:3–8). These verses refer to sexual morality but it is not clear how. The text may refer to a man being faithful to his wife (the usual translation), or to the need for his own sexual control, with no wife mentioned, and verse 6 may refer again to marital fidelity against adultery, or to cheating in business matters. In any case, the text raises a variety of ethical concerns including sexual conduct and business ethics.

For their part, the Jews considered the obligations of marriage and the family to be linked to the covenant relationship with God. This link was an important one that Paul wished to adopt for the Gentile Christians. He therefore stresses the obligation of believers to develop relationships worthy of them, reflecting respect for one another and for their call to holiness. Charity among believers, in turn, has an effect even on those outside the community who will be impressed with the example of the high moral conduct of Christians.

Death and the Need for Vigilance (4:13–5:11). Paul and other early Christians seem to have believed that the Parousia or return of Jesus was very near. Now members of the Thessalonian community are dying before this event, which was a problem for their faith that Jesus would truly return. They wondered how the dead would participate in the triumphant day of Christ’s return. Paul encourages the Thessalonians to persevere in faith and joins to this a warning about continued vigilance. Enthusiastic faith can often wane at the onslaught of opposition, suffering, and frustrated expectations. Paul fears that the death of fellow Christians will so shake the Thessalonians’ faith that their grief will give way to doubt, discouragement, and even apostasy.

Paul's view of the second coming is influenced by his apocalyptic perspective. God is perceived as living in heaven, which is "above," beyond the clouds. An archangel and trumpets are standard apocalyptic images accompanying the end of the world and a call to judgment. The second coming of Christ, unlike the first, will be a show of power. It will be cosmic in effect, changing the entire order of creation, not only human existence.

Paul promises that their faithful dead have not been lost or forgotten. They, like us, will be gathered by Christ and judged. There will be no advantage to being either alive or dead when this happens. The righteous will be restored to God. Paul's emphasis is on the certainty of this event, not on times or manner. The exact manner of the resurrection and of judgment, Paul finally admits in 1 Corinthians 15, is unknown to us (see 1 Thes 5:1; 1 Cor 15:35–57).

The death of loved ones may pose painful faith questions for believers in any age. The death of beloved members of the community seems to have challenged the faith of the Christians at Thessalonica. Because the death of fellow believers was so threatening, Paul repeated the admonition: "console one another with these words" (4:18; 5:11). He reinforced his warning to persevere by speaking again about the certainty of Christ's coming. The images of the pregnant woman and of the thief in the night are ones that appear in Jesus's own preaching, according to the Gospel accounts (see Mt 24:43; Lk 21:23). They stress at once the need for preparedness and vigilance, the certainty of the occurrence, and the threatening aspect of suffering. Continuing his use of stock apocalyptic imagery, Paul envisions a cosmic struggle that differentiates between those who are the children of light and those who remain in darkness.

Spirit and Order (5:12–22). Paul enjoins respect for those who minister among the faithful, an unusual reference to local leaders (see also Phil 1:1). But the more important points are about the way in which believers are to exercise mutual love, not returning evil for evil but consistently seeking the good of all. Joy, prayer, and gratitude characterize their lives as they live according to the Spirit, discerning between good and evil.

Concluding Prayer and Final Greeting (5:23–28)

The concluding prayer (5:23–25) and greetings (5:26–28) suggest that this letter was intended for reading in a liturgical setting. Paul says that the Thessalonians will be kept holy and spotless as they wait for the Lord's return. The "holy kiss" with which they are to greet one another was probably the ritual exchange of peace done during the liturgical assembly.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Actions are an expression of faith. Behavior is a key to the way people think and what they believe. Therefore, if there is carelessness about others, or promiscuity or indifference to one's role in creating a livable society and universe, we have to examine the underlying faith presuppositions to these actions or omissions. Charity, chastity, and an honest, humble bearing in this life are signs for Paul of conversion to the "living and true God." Paul exhorts Christians to live according to the gospel he preaches. It is not hard to see how the message of 1 Thessalonians is appropriate for today.

2 THESSALONIANS

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

The apocalyptic perspective of 2 Thessalonians (see introduction to the Thessalonian Letters) is more pronounced than in any other Pauline letter. The Pauline authorship of 2 Thessalonians is widely disputed. This letter may be pseudepigraphical, that is, written in Paul's name by someone other than Paul, probably a disciple or admirer. There is a studied attempt on the part of this Pauline disciple to copy Paul's style. For example, the greeting differs only slightly from the greeting of 1 Thessalonians and the final greeting insists that the letter is based on Paul's authority. There is a rejection of other supposedly Pauline letters circulating (2:1). One could also say that these are signs of Paul's true authorship, but perhaps the insistence on Paul's authority seems more than a little defensive. Writing in Paul's name assured that a letter would be taken seriously. This practice of Paul's disciples was also an attempt to give continuity to the apostle's message, explicitly interpreting the Pauline traditions in a new context. Despite the reservations of interpreters about Pauline authorship, it is customary to refer to the writer of 2 Thessalonians as "Paul."

There is good reason to believe that 2 Thessalonians was written a decade or more after Paul's death. It is addressed to the same community as 1 Thessalonians but a community that is troubled by the mistaken preaching that the Day of the Lord had now arrived. The preoccupation of early Christians with the times and circumstances accompanying the return of Christ is a problem addressed by many of the New Testament writers, including the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, and the book of Revelation. The "apocalyptic" message of 2 Thessalonians is not a frightening one that heightens with fear the anticipation of Christ's return, but is instead a message of consolation and hope for the Christians suffering persecution and confusion. The term "apocalyptic" has come into vogue again in our own times as we, like the early Christians, face an uncertain future. We need to understand biblical apocalyptic as emphasizing hope for all those who persevere.

WORKING THROUGH 2 THESSALONIANS

Second Thessalonians exhibits the usual letter characteristics of an address and thanksgiving (1:1–12) and conclusion (3:17–18) enclosing the message or body of the letter in 2:1–3:16.

- I. The Address and Thanksgiving (1:1–12)
- II. The Body of the Letter (2:1–3:16)
  - A. Paul’s Teaching on Right Thinking (2:1–17)
  - B. Paul’s Teaching on Right Conduct (3:1–16)
- III. Conclusion (3:17–18)

READING THROUGH 2 THESSALONIANS

The Address and Thanksgiving (1:1–12)

The address includes a greeting (1:1–2), a thanksgiving (1:3–10), and a prayer (1:11–12). The greeting is an almost slavish imitation of the greeting of 1 Thessalonians. Paul joins himself with Silvanus and Timothy, fellow missionaries to the Thessalonians (see 1 Thes 1:1). Also similar to 1 Thessalonians is the fact that thanksgiving is not only a part of the initial address as a formal characteristic of a letter; gratitude is also a central theme in the development of Paul’s teaching (see 2:13–17).

The Body of the Letter (2:1–3:16)

Paul’s message to the Thessalonians can be subdivided into his instruction on right thinking (2:1–17) and right conduct in the daily life of the Christians at Thessalonica (3:1–16).

Paul’s Teaching on Right Thinking (2:1–17)

The early Christians’ expectation of an imminent return of Christ needed to be adjusted and corrected as the community developed. Unforeseen crises arose and answers had to be sought in the basics of the Christian preaching. Time passed and the danger was that Christians would become disenchanted and would lose faith, especially in the midst of adversity. First Thessalonians had warned the community about maintaining faith, hope, and love even amid trials such as the death of fellow Christians. In this previous letter Paul focused on the Day of the Lord which, he assured them, was coming soon. This reminder served as a warning that behavior would be judged, and the faithful would be rewarded, whereas the unfaithful would be punished.

By the time of the writing of 2 Thessalonians, it seems the eschatological expectation was being taken too seriously, and this caused new problems. As time passed, the early Christians were wondering about the accuracy of their hope that Christ would return soon. They became alarmed by prophecies and by a letter that they thought came from Paul; it seems to have said that the expected “day of the Lord” had already arrived (2:2). The author denies this and lists a number of events that must come first. This change in 2 Thessalonians 2:1–10 from the expectation of the near return of Christ seen in 1 Thessalonians is one of the main reasons interpreters suspect that 2 Thessalonians is from a later, second generation Pauline Christian. The early Christians had experienced persecution. History had already shown that any expectation that Christ would speedily return with power, to punish the oppressors of the Christians, was wrong.

The message underlying the apocalyptic references in 2 Thessalonians is “do not be alarmed.” The writer avoids any kind of futile speculation concerning times and circumstances of the Parousia. He uses standard apocalyptic images portraying the conflict between good and evil, and the ultimate victory of God over evil. Yet he studiously avoids any specific description. It is sufficient that his readers focus on the hope of God’s victory and that they remain vigilant against deception or alarm.

Paul’s Teaching on Right Conduct (3:1–16)

The admonition in 3:10 not to feed anyone who will not work, and the general exhortation against idleness are probably connected to the apocalyptic expectation discussed earlier. Some thought that there was no further point to building the human community. But Paul warns that idlers only disrupt the peace of the community. Thus he connects idleness and a lack of charity. The apostle presents himself as a model to the contrary to be imitated. His work with his hands is apparently a topic of discussion among his converts. Perhaps, like the Corinthians, the Thessalonians despise labor and prefer the leisure that is considered more conducive to the development of the mind and spirit. Paul gives both social and theological reasons showing that he was not constrained to work but does so freely. Part of the legacy he left with the community was his example of working. This may have been a form of self-abasement Paul practiced in order to “be all things to all people” (see 1 Cor 9:21–22). Paul stresses that his aim is to make the gospel accessible to all.

Conclusion (3:17–18)

The author adds a greeting “in his own hand,” apparently to insure authenticity. Yet it is such characteristics that make Pauline authorship of 2 Thessalonians suspect. There are no personal greetings and no originality to the abrupt closing of this letter. The author seems to be copying Paul’s style rather than adding a more personalized signature as Paul would have done.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Christians today after two thousand years can understand the need for restraint on the belief that the return of Christ is imminent. Perhaps more than ever before, today we can appreciate the important balance introduced by 2 Thessalonians between the belief that indeed Christ would return at the end of time and emphasis on the need to work diligently to create a better society. Second Thessalonians offers us a message of hope and encouragement. The events that must come to pass before the end of the world are opportunities inviting us to a change of heart, expressed in careful stewardship of our lives, of the church, and of the world.

THE PASTORAL LETTERS

INTRODUCTION

The two letters to Timothy and the single letter to Titus have been called the “Pastoral Letters” since they largely deal with issues regarding pastoral care in Pauline communities. Most scholars consider them not to have been written by Paul himself but by a later writer, since they reflect a degree of church organization not present in Paul’s day and in some cases reflect thinking that does not harmonize well with the earlier Pauline letters. We are indebted to these communities for preserving this distinctive correspondence that describes the initial development of church offices and organization and conveys a rich theology. The Pastorals might be read as reflections on Christian ministry. In keeping with the tradition of authorship by Paul we will refer to the writer as “Paul,” although most interpreters would agree that these letters are written at least a generation after Paul’s death. In form they are personal letters written to one disciple, but in reality, they are open letters to communities on church policy in various issues.

Paul himself traveled far and wide preaching the message of Christ, founding churches, and writing letters back to communities he had established. Throughout his missionary career, Paul was joined by others and worked with others. He depended upon others. He kept in touch with local leadership. His letters request prayers and sometimes aid for himself and for his mission. In writing letters, Paul often names co-workers as co-authors. He sends emissaries to communities, sometimes for diplomatic reasons and sometimes because he himself is prohibited from coming at the time and needs to send a messenger. Among his most trusted and reliable partners in the spread of Christianity were Timothy and Titus.

We have many references to the work and reputation of these companions of Paul in the authentic Pauline letters. Timothy was a frequent co-sender of Paul’s letters (Rom 16:21; 2 Cor 1:1; Phil 1:1; Col 1:1; 1 Thes 1:1; 2 Thes 1:1). Galatians 2:2–3 says that Titus accompanied Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem and that although he was a Gentile, the Jerusalem authorities did not insist that Titus be circumcised. Luke mentions Timothy as a companion of Paul on the second (Acts 16:1–4) and third (Acts 19:22) missionary journeys. Luke does not mention Titus, but he was a trusted messenger of Paul who eased the apostle's difficult communications, especially with the Corinthians (see 2 Cor 2:12–13; 7:7; 8:16–24).

Timothy and Titus served Christian congregations in ancient Greece. The traditional understanding, reflected in these letters, is that Timothy later became a church leader in Ephesus (1 Tm 1:3) and Titus in Crete (Ti 1:5). Both were struggling with the challenge of those who offered alternatives to the teachings of Paul. Paul writes to reinforce the faith of these pastors and to encourage them, reminding them of their own Christian vocation.

1 TIMOTHY

see pages [1684–1691 of the New Testament]

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

The two letters addressed to Timothy both struggle with the nagging threat of false teaching. This is a problem that afflicted the church from the beginning.

WORKING THROUGH 1 TIMOTHY

The content matter of this letter is diverse, and any particular outline seems arbitrary and artificial. Our discussion of 1 Timothy is based on the following structure:

- I. The Address and Thanksgiving (1:1–2, 12–17)
- II. Paul's Message to Timothy (1:3–11; 1:18–6:19)
  - A. The Warning against False Teaching (1:3–11, 18–20)
  - B. Life and Leadership in the Community (2:1–4:16)
  - C. Duties toward Others (5:1–6:19)
- III. Final Recommendation and Warning (6:20–21)

READING THROUGH 1 TIMOTHY

The Address and Thanksgiving (1:1–2, 12–17)

The address consists of a brief greeting in Pauline form (1:1–2) with the thanksgiving delayed until 1:12–17. A warning against false doctrines (1:3–11) appears between these two parts of the address. This intrusion breaks the usual structure of a letter but manifests the gravity of the author's concern. The thanksgiving section (1:12–17) recalls Paul's former blasphemy and persecution of the church, which serves as evidence that his call was unmerited and unsolicited (1:12–17). Paul's example is a primary instance of the transforming power of grace. Because he sinned grievously (though in ignorance), the grace bestowed upon Paul had to be abundant. Notice that the author does not dwell on guilt or remorse. His allusion to Paul's sinful past only serves to illustrate the gratuity of God's mercy. These reflections prompt him to praise God in a short doxology or blessing (1:17).

The Body of the Letter (1:3–11; 1:18–6:19)

Paul's Message to Timothy (1:3–11; 1:18–4:16)

The message of 1 Timothy is primarily a warning against the dangers of false teaching. The writer reminds Timothy about the qualities he should look for in assistants who are true ministers of the gospel and discusses Christians' duties toward others.

The Warning against False Teaching (1:3–11, 18–20). The teaching attacked in 1 Timothy is a form of gnosis (knowledge) that involved “myths and . . . genealogies [and] . . . speculations” (1:4). All three Pastorals, but especially 1 Timothy, are aimed at secure knowledge of the truth and secure ways of acting it out. These are reflections on the genuine applications of a teaching or knowledge that Timothy knows well.

The threat Paul combats in 1 Timothy is the pursuit of gnosis without any ethical or practical applications for living (1 Tm 1:4; see 2 Tm 2:14; 3:7; Ti 3:9). Thus the practicalities of Christian living and church life together are emphasized, along with a pastorally oriented theology. This letter attacks those who would reduce Christianity to a mere doctrine or intellectual exercise—to the neglect of the ethical implications. The letter presumes a common fund of knowledge and emphasizes that authentic Christianity should work itself out in everyday life.

Life and Leadership in the Community (2:1–4:16). The primary example of authentic Christian living is the minister of the gospel message. Timothy has a great responsibility entrusted to him by God and verified in the church (1:3, 18–20; 4:6–16; 6:11–16, 20–21). The writer impresses on Timothy the importance of his role as an example for the church.

The advice to Timothy in this letter proceeds from the admonition to draw strength from the “prophetic words once spoken about you” (1:18) and the suggestion to “attend to yourself and to your teaching” (4:16). Timothy should concentrate on “righteousness, devotion, faith, love, patience, and gentleness” (6:11). He should ignore the seduction of “profane babbling and the absurdities of so-called knowledge” (6:20). Constancy and perseverance in the faith are required in order to attract and encourage other believers. Timothy is urged to demonstrate to all his reliance on God.

The discussion of how each group of persons should act toward others is an adaptation of the “household codes” used in Ephesians 5:21–6:9 and Colossians 3:18–4:1. Here men and women, young and old, male and female should treat each other with the respect due them in traditional society (also 5:1–2; 6:1–2). The duties of bishop and deacons (3:1–13) are drawn from typical descriptions of virtue. The text speaks of a single bishop and a number of deacons, both male and female (or, possibly, of male deacons and their wives, 3:11). We know from Philippians 1:1 that these titles were used very early on. Presbyters are not mentioned here, but only in 5:17–19, and it is not certain that this is a different ministry from those described in chapter 3, since the Greek word can simply mean “elder,” or one worthy of respect. It does not seem, therefore, that there is as yet a triple-tiered ministry of bishop, presbyters, and deacons, which would fully emerge in the future.

In one way, 1 Timothy may be read as a list of role descriptions for people in various offices and positions within the community. But there is a common theme in all of Paul’s advice. Members of the Christian community should distinguish themselves by their love and service of one another. Even the decorum of men and women at the liturgy, for example, should contribute to the building up of the community (2:8–10).

The particular advice to women (2:9–14), which has been controversial throughout Christian history, should be understood in the context of charity and the importance of good example. False teachers advocating asceticism, especially in the form of renunciation of marriage or restrictions on certain foods (4:1–3), were particularly successful with women whom the author of 1 Timothy perceives as especially susceptible. The prevailing male wisdom taught that women were gullible and subject to error, as symbolized in the story of Eve who was seduced by the serpent. Contrary to the false teachers, Paul supports marriage and sees the family as conducive to holiness (contrast 1 Cor 7:8–9:40). He therefore advocates the “submission” of women, which was part of traditional views about the well-run family. This, he insists, is not a lifestyle unworthy of Christian women but a way in which women may, like Timothy, “persevere in faith and love and holiness” (2:15). The same thinking drives the advice to slaves in a later passage to honor and respect their owners (6:1–2), with the warning that believing slaves are not to think of themselves as equal to their owners but to be even more respectful. This kind of thinking, as can be imagined, has caused mayhem in later centuries when those who appeal to the authority of the Bible resist social change. In his own context, however, Paul is simply trying to uphold human dignity within a social structure, which he takes for granted and which he cannot change.

Duties toward Others (5:1–6:19)

This is really a rather artificial division, since the whole letter is preoccupied with community relationships. There is ambiguity and even contradiction in the discussion about widows (5:3–16), perhaps indication of uneven editing. First, widows who have no other means of support are to be supported by the church (5:3–8:16). Then, there is some kind of enrollment of widows who are at least sixty years old, distinguished for practicing virtue, and resolved to remain unmarried—hardly issues to consider if a widow is starving. Some kind of service organization is envisioned in 5:9–15, returning again in verse 16 to the assistance of needy widows. Given lower life expectancy, few women would live beyond sixty, and younger widows are to remarry, so they could not hope to qualify later to be enrolled as those married only once (5:9).

The concrete advice regarding bishops and deacons and other ministers to the community stresses the power of example. This is especially important in those offices that have visibility in the community and represent a community trust. Many interpreters assume that the degree of development of the offices mentioned suggests a late composition of 1 Timothy. It would seem to have taken some years for the church to develop such a variety of roles and recognized ministries. On the other hand, we know that these ministries were beginning to develop already in Paul's day. They pertain to basic needs that arose as the church struggled to respond to its mission in the world. The office of bishop or overseer developed out of the custom of holding all things in common so that the surplus of the rich would supply for the needs of the poor in the Christian community (see 2 Cor 8 and 9). The ministry of deacons reflected the priority of preaching the word while not neglecting the physical and material needs of the church's members (Rom 16:2; Acts 6:1–6). The earliest writings of Paul, and in fact all of the New Testament, stress the social dimension of the Christian message. Therefore the stewardships that would assure this dimension were created as soon as the priority was recognized.

Final Recommendation and Warning (6:20–21)

The conclusion (6:20–21) is in the form of a final recommendation and warning. First Timothy ends by restating the main message of the letter: “Guard the trust” (see 1:3–10; 4:7; 6:3–5). Authority is stewardship. Many have been deceived by false knowledge (gnosis). Timothy is urged to hold firm to what he knows and to live it quietly.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

First Timothy represents several challenges for the modern interpreter. The author’s view that women are more susceptible to error than men, for example, betrays the bias of a male-dominated culture. Changing attitudes throughout history facilitated the education of women. Consequently the underlying premise of women’s greater gullibility has been proven false. The New Testament writings come from a world in which slavery was taken for granted. Later generations were able to change oppressive structures of slavery. First Timothy stresses the responsibility of leaders to interpret the essentials of the Christian message and to ensure charity as distinctive of the Christian community. Interpreters today distinguish between such practices as the culturally based bias against women or toleration of slavery, and the essential message that included all in the life of charity to be lived by the community. This is a life in which all may grow and mature, women as well as men. The responsibility of leaders and pastors is to nurture that life, providing in their own lives a model of charity for other Christians to emulate.

2 TIMOTHY

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

The same preoccupations appear here as we saw in 1 Timothy: warnings about false teachings and Paul's exhortation to Timothy as a minister of the gospel like himself. Second Timothy is written in a warmer, more personal tone than 1 Timothy and therefore its lack of formal structure is understandable. It is really a testament in the form of a letter. Like Moses in Deuteronomy 29–30 or Jesus in John 14–16, the elder Paul, imprisoned in Rome (1:16–17), looks back on his life with the knowledge of his imminent death (4:6–8) and gives the younger man the benefit of his wisdom. He begins and ends the letter with references to his own experiences and the vocation of Timothy, linking the two. Their ties of affection and of common vocation are deep and very significant for Paul. The elder apostle speaks of his own life, his loneliness, his lack of confidence in other human beings. Yet he is not discouraged. God is the source of strength for both Paul and Timothy. The deeply personal tone of this letter has led some recent commentators to reevaluate the question of Pauline authorship, and to suggest that while 1 Timothy and Titus are of a later era, perhaps 2 Timothy is not.

WORKING THROUGH 2 TIMOTHY

The address and thanksgiving (1:1–5) and conclusion (4:9–22) envelop the body of the letter in 1:6–4:8. The main themes of 2 Timothy are the minister's experience of God and warnings against false teaching.

- I. The Address and Thanksgiving (1:1–5)
- II. The Body of the Letter (1:6–4:8)
  - A. Instructions to Timothy (1:6–2:13)
  - B. Warnings about False Teaching (2:14–3:9)
  - C. Final Advice (3:10–4:8)
- III. Personal Requests and Final Greeting (4:9–22)

READING THROUGH 2 TIMOTHY

The Address and Thanksgiving (1:1–5)

The address (1:1–5) consists of a greeting (1:1–2) and a thanksgiving (1:3–5), following the authentic Pauline style.

The Body of the Letter (1:6–4:8)

We have noted previously that Paul generally follows a basic pattern of first presenting his fundamental teaching on various issues and then drawing ethical conclusions from this teaching, though these two parts do not always follow one another in neat order. First Timothy does not follow this pattern very well, and 2 Timothy even less so, primarily because it is more of a personal communication that combines reminders about teaching with advice in an informal way. The informal structure of this letter focuses on two main themes that are developed here: the minister's experience of God and warnings against false teaching.

Instructions to Timothy (1:6–2:13)

Timothy is not to be ashamed of the gospel or his commission to testify to the truth at all times. He also has the responsibility to guard that truth intact as he has received it. The apostle often uses himself as an example, as a source of inspiration and motivation. Paul lives with such integrity that he urges Christians to imitate him in everything (see Phil 4:8–10). Timothy is reminded that those who follow Christ will suffer persecution. This echoes Jesus's warning to his disciples (Mt 24:9–14; Mk 13:9–13; Lk 21:12–19; Jn 15:11–27). In the face of such pressure, Timothy is to remain constant.

Warnings about False Teaching (2:14–3:9)

While such warnings are also present in other parts of the letter, here they are concentrated and seem aimed at a specific group of people, although they could also be intended more generally. The disparagement of women's intellectual ability that we have seen surface in 1 Timothy is again present (3:6–7), with perhaps the opposite effect: in fact, the author is telling us that missions among women were very successful, which means that the women were intellectually alert and responsive.

Like the other Pastorals, 2 Timothy is aimed at false teachings that promote a certain gnosis or knowledge and a consequent asceticism or strict discipline. These false teachings value those who are “enlightened” with such knowledge and practice stringent customs regarding sexuality and diet. These practices set them apart from others, contributing to their sense of superiority. In all three letters, Paul was assuming that his addressees held the right beliefs, so that it was not necessary to review the correct teaching or doctrine that the writer and recipient hold in common. Therefore Paul spoke in vague and abstract terms about the false teaching, concentrating instead on the appropriate ethical applications that follow from true gospel preaching.

Paul urges Timothy not to become embroiled in debates: “Charge [people] . . . to stop disputing about words . . . avoid profane, idle talk” (2:14, 16). One of the false teachings actually identified is that baptized Christians are already risen with Christ and that there is no future bodily resurrection (see note on 2:14–19). Paul understands Christians as living in the last days when there are many dangers and threats to faith.

Final Advice (3:10–4:8)

Paul describes his life and impending death as a liturgical sacrifice; he is being poured out like a libation, an offering of wine (4:6). He has run and finished the course (4:7). He awaits with longing the reward of God (4:6–8). Such confidence is based in God and meant to serve as encouragement to Timothy who still runs the course. Like other biblical heroes (including Moses and Jesus), Paul is represented in 2 Timothy as giving a kind of farewell address near the end of his life (4:6–8). In this speech the hero warns his followers about impending dangers and threats to fidelity. His disciples are commissioned with authority and reminded about the source of their confidence. They are promised that God will remain with them and that they will endure. Paul reminds Timothy to hold to the essentials of sound doctrine: Scripture, and the example of Christ and of other Christians. He warns Timothy that those who live the gospel message will be persecuted. Paul urges Timothy to be faithful in waiting for the appearance of Jesus Christ.

Personal Requests and Final Greetings (4:9–22)

The personal tone and greetings of 2 Timothy mark this as the Pastoral Letter closest to Paul's own style. Paul often experienced failure in his relationships with others. The author of 2 Timothy experiences similar problems. Like Paul, he says that such difficulties are the occasion for more converts to the gospel message. The letter ends with a prayer for God's spirit to be with Timothy (singular). The plural in the last line may indicate the letter's being read and reflected upon in the assembly.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

The church is not a perfect society nor are its ministers without human faults and failings. Conflicts over a variety of issues have plagued believers from the beginning, making it sometimes difficult to discern between authentic and false teaching and practice. The church has experienced crises of leadership and problems with authority and obedience. Relationships among Christians have often been strained. Paul and other New Testament authors are not strangers to such tensions and problems. The author of 2 Timothy manifests a remarkable vulnerability to the strains in his own relationships with others. But this does not in any way detract from his visions or hopes for the church. In fact, with amazing confidence and humility, the author of 2 Timothy shows that even his failures are opportunities for the spread of the Christian message.

TITUS

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

The third Pastoral Letter is addressed to Titus, who is charged with the administration of the church in the large area of Crete (1:5). The letter to Titus has many parallels with 1 Timothy and manifests the same concerns for the maintenance duties of those entrusted with the care of the local communities. They are to give particular care to the appointment of reliable assistants and to the presentation of sound church teaching, protecting it from the many threats and dangers of false teaching.

WORKING THROUGH TITUS

The address in 1:1–4 is not followed by the usual thanksgiving, but the text goes directly into the body of the letter in 1:5–3:11. This message describes the responsibilities of a pastor, especially that of working with others in the preaching of the Christian message. The entire letter may be seen as an exhortation of encouragement from one pastor to another. A short conclusion (3:12–15), giving personal information, brings the letter to a close. The simple structure proposed by the NABRE follows:

- I. Address (1:1–4)
- II. The Body of the Letter (1:5–3:11)
  - A. Pastoral Charge (1:5–16)
  - B. Teaching the Christian Life (2:1–3:11)
- III. Conclusion (3:12–15)

READING THROUGH TITUS

The Address (1:1–4)

The address follows the usual Pauline pattern, consisting of a greeting and a thanksgiving. The greeting is more elaborate than Paul's usual greetings but exhibits many of the features of Paul's thinking. As in the other Pastorals, the author emphasizes the apostle's role in the spread of the worldwide mission of Christ. This mission is now entrusted to Paul's "child," Titus, a fellow worker encouraged through this letter to ensure the continuing line of good pastors and to preserve the faithful teaching of Christian life. The great danger that faces Titus and the church of Crete is false teachers and those who would corrupt the Christian message.

The Body of the Letter (1:5–3:11)

Pastoral Charge (1:5–16)

Verses 5 through 9 are parallel to the instruction of 1 Timothy 3:1–7. Paul is an itinerant preacher who, nevertheless, is keenly aware of the need for stabilized leadership, especially to protect the church against heretical or false teaching. Therefore the instructions given to Titus concerning the administration of the church at Crete concern most importantly the appointment of trustworthy and reliable pastors for the various duties required for the growth and development of the church there.

One of the important offices was that of presbyter (elder, v. 5), a term that in meaning is quite close in this letter to episkopos (overseer or bishop, v. 7). The two statements seem to be about the same people, as they could also be in 1 Timothy 3:1–7; 5:17–20. The main function of the bishop was apparently the overseeing of the financial or material matters in the church. Again, as in Philippians 1:1, we have difficulty to accurately translate episkopos, since the title "bishop" has such different connotations today. This bishop is God's "steward," entrusted with the distribution of goods and accountable to the members of the community. Therefore his own life ought to be exemplary. He must not only avoid excesses but also represent a model Christian life in his own family. As in 1 Timothy 3:2–13, the description of the virtues of officeholders is taken from similar descriptions of the qualities of military and civic leadership found in Greco-Roman literature.

Leaders of the church are to offer an alternative example to that of the false teachers who preach for personal gain, living off the support of the community and seeking personal recognition and recompense. These kinds of accusations against one's opponents are also part of traditional rhetoric and should not be taken at face value. But the conduct of the presbyters or bishops should be above reproach. Primary among the false teachers are the Judaizers who continue to advocate observance of certain aspects of the Jewish Law, a custom that was attractive to some Christians for many centuries. The writer stoops to an ethnic slur by quoting an earlier author to the effect that Cretans are by their very nature prone to deceit, dishonesty, and laziness, thus making them all the more susceptible to falsehoods (1:12).

Teaching the Christian Life (2:1–3:11)

Titus is encouraged to hold on to sound faith in teaching, while resisting pressures from all sides. Since the imagery of moral preaching often depicted the church as the new family, its members are here taught to relate to one another as older and younger people would in a well-ordered family in which respect dominates. Groups singled out include older men and younger men, older and younger women, slaves, and those in authority. Christians must not act in accordance with the world around them. Yet they must survive in an alien world. Paul's instructions focus on how to survive while offering an alternative lifestyle and developing integrity as Christians. The domestic role for women is reinforced. The author reminds them of their duties to be examples within the marital context. Likewise slaves are directed not to rebel against the control of their masters (2:9–10). The author urges them to fidelity and kindness within the context of slavery. Citizens were also inclined to see Christianity as an alternative to obedience to a corrupt state. The author of Titus advocates exemplary citizenship based on the status of Christians as already justified and relying on the mercy of God. Paul summarizes his advice to Titus, reminding him to avoid controversies and to maintain his integrity in the true faith. The false teachers disturb the community and its ministers. Paul exhorts to vigilance and constancy.

Conclusion (3:12–15)

The final lines include very specific travel directives and recommendations for travelers passing through Crete. Titus is told to come with an assistant whom he will send to join Paul at Nicopolis, a common city name; probably the one in western Greece is intended. Mediterranean sea travel shut down from November 10 to March 10, and a traveler thus had to “winter” somewhere waiting out the passage of those months. Paul closes with personal greetings. The final greeting “grace be with you all” is the simplest of closing forms. Some manuscripts add “of the Lord” or “of God” and “Amen,” which are closer to the usual elaborations of Paul himself.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Christians continue to wrestle with questions relating practice or behavior to belief. Christianity, like Judaism, has always emphasized the importance of deeds rather than mere knowledge or doctrine alone. Ministers of the gospel are entrusted with the responsibility to preserve teaching while also presenting exemplary lives. The letter to Titus reminds us of the difficulties, yet the importance, of working with others for the advance of the gospel message.

The challenge of the Pastoral Letters for today’s church can hardly be overestimated. The Catholic view of Paul has long been strongly influenced by his heroic portrait in these letters. Yet Catholic Christians in particular have inherited a long tradition stressing the communal dimensions of Christian teaching. We do not receive the Christian message individually nor can we live it in isolation from each other. This emphasis on communal responsibility is part of the legacy of the Pastoral Letters.

PHILEMON

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

Paul's letter to Philemon is a gem of early Christian exchange, and the only true personal letter that we have from Paul. No one seriously challenges Philemon as an authentic Pauline letter and an integral part of the New Testament. As contrasted with an "epistle" that embodies more stereotypic, stylized forms and features (for instance, Romans), Philemon appears to be a letter between individuals, dealing with a very concrete matter rather than with generalized, abstract theological principles. Neither Paul nor the early Christian community intended to attack slavery directly, so we may well wonder why this letter was preserved at all and why it might be significant for us.

Despite its brevity and apparent succinctness, Paul's letter to Philemon is full of interpretive problems and has been intensively studied in recent years. The traditional story line behind it since the fourth century has been that Onesimus, a slave, had run away from his master, Philemon, and had come to Paul for protection. Paul had converted Onesimus to belief in Jesus, and now sent him back to Philemon, carrying this letter. But more recently, this interpretation has been questioned and several other possible scenarios proposed. One is that, according to Roman law, a slave who goes to a third party to mediate a dispute with his or her owner is not to be considered a fugitive. If one reads the letter from this perspective, it also fits. A third proposal is that Onesimus is not a slave at all but Philemon's brother, whom Philemon is treating like a slave (16). Paul asks him to reconcile and treat him as he deserves. The interpretation that Onesimus is indeed a slave is the majority one, but why he went to Paul remains an open question, as does what Paul really wants Philemon to do. The only parts of the story that are clear are that the relationship between Philemon and Onesimus is not good, and that Paul is trying to patch it up.

The informal conversational tone does not detract from the letter's impressive significance within the Christian context. Each part of this letter underscores its ecclesial or community context and gives us a glimpse into the structure of relationship and exchange in the early church. Because nearly all the names mentioned in the letter also occur in Colossians, the usual supposition is that Philemon's house church is located in Colossae.

WORKING THROUGH PHILEMON

The letter to Philemon has the usual features of a Pauline letter: an address and thanksgiving (1–6), body (7–22), and conclusion (23–25). Philemon follows a simple outline:

- I. Address and Thanksgiving (1–6)
- II. Body of the Letter (7–22)
- III. Conclusion (23–25)

READING THROUGH PHILEMON

The Address and Thanksgiving (1–6)

It is not Philemon alone who is addressed, but Apphia, perhaps Philemon's wife, Archippus, another member of the household, and the whole "church [that meets] at your house" (1–2). The thanksgiving (4–6) notes the renowned love and faith Philemon has always shown the "holy ones," a reference to his fellow Christians. Paul also names Philemon a "partner" in faith, emphasizing the common life in Christ that they share, which is the basis for the new society that Paul envisions.

The Body of the Letter (7–22)

The varied expressions of Paul's complex relationship with Philemon serve as a model for the new relationship Philemon now has with Onesimus. Their common baptism provides a basis for Philemon and Onesimus (as well as for the whole church) to create an entirely new way of relating to one another and to resolve the tensions between them. In no other Pauline letter is the relationship between the "indicative" or statement of Christian reality (signified by a common baptism) so integrally bound up with the "imperative" implications or exhortations that flow from this reality. From a structural viewpoint, it is impossible to separate the "indicative" from the "imperative" in this letter as we have done in others.

In 1 Corinthians 7:21–23, Paul says that slavery or freedom is indifferent in the Christian life. It is not clear in this letter whether Paul appeals to Philemon to manumit Onesimus, that is, to free him from slavery. He may expect that the two of them now continue in a good relationship of master and slave. But if Onesimus is a runaway, normal punitive measures against an errant slave (who perhaps also stole from his master, 18–19) are prohibited by Paul. Master and slave are fellow Christians. The community context should help them work out a new way of relating to one another as “brothers.” Because of whatever way Onesimus has wronged Philemon, Philemon is in a delicate position. If he does not punish Onesimus, he is lacking in necessary discipline, and his social peers will think him weak. If he does insist on punishment, he will violate his Christian obligation to forgiveness and Paul’s express desires. The whole house church is watching to see what he will do! Unfortunately, we do not know the answer.

Paul describes himself as a prisoner (9), as Philemon’s brother (7, 20), and as father of Onesimus (10). Paul says he is an old man (9), an anticipated guest of Philemon (22) and one to whom Philemon is indebted (19). These descriptions illustrate the various ways in which the patronage system of the culture interacted with Christian expressions of interdependence and ultimately equality in Christ. They are a way of redefining Paul’s relationship to Philemon and to the church in Colossae. They also serve as a model for Philemon to develop a new relationship between himself and Onesimus. The letter is a masterpiece of rhetorical strategy. Paul does not mandate any specific set of actions, but rather appeals to Philemon and to the whole community to read and reflect on this letter in light of their common baptism, and to discern a course of action toward Onesimus that will reflect the common faith they share.

Conclusion (23–25)

The final greetings mention names of Paul’s co-workers also found in Colossians (1:7; 2:1; 4:12–13) and 2 Timothy (4:9–13). Together with the liturgical blessing (Phlm 25), these greetings underscore once again the communal context in which this letter was written and in which it ought to be reflected upon and acted upon. Philemon draws out some implications of the baptismal formula quoted in Galatians 3:28: “There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free person, there is not male and female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus” (see also Col 3:11).

CONCLUDING REMARKS

The letter to Philemon raises interesting challenges for its original recipients and for us. Apparently Onesimus himself is bearer of this letter from Paul to his master. The letter is to be read in the assembly when the community will help Philemon reintegrate Onesimus back into his household as a fellow Christian. The very fact that the community preserved this letter—and that it comes down to us included in the canon of the New Testament—testifies to the spirit of openness, humility, and generosity of Philemon and his congregation that must have successfully resolved this matter. Today the church as a whole and local churches are faced with perplexing social problems, especially with regard to social expectations and their clash with faith values. We can take hope that what was written long ago was written for our instruction. We can well afford to contemplate the role of such a pastoral letter and of the community's reflection on its contents.

HEBREWS

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

Hebrews is not a real letter but a sermon (see introduction, NT, 1700–1702). The best way to experience Hebrews is by reading it out loud from beginning to end. Subtle points of Greek rhetoric—such as the alliteration in the opening verses—will still escape the contemporary reader. But oral recitation helps to catch the sermonic rhythms of Hebrews, its use of “we” and “you” (so natural to the sermon), and its alternating pattern of exposition and exhortation. Note, for example, how the opening argument of 1:5–14 leads naturally to the “therefore, we must attend all the more” in 2:1–5. Reading straight through also enables the reader to grasp the powerful argument that is the outstanding characteristic of this early Christian writing.

Toward Understanding Hebrews

Hebrews has significantly shaped the liturgy, doctrine, and spirituality of the church. Although other New Testament writings speak of Jesus’s death as a sacrifice, Hebrews’ unique reflection on Melchizedek (chap. 7) and on Jesus as the Great High Priest influenced the development of Catholic liturgy. Hebrews’ insistence on Jesus’s full divinity and equally full participation in human nature contributed to the understanding of Jesus’s identity as God’s Son (1–2). And Hebrews’ vision of faith as a pilgrimage toward God (11–12) created a symbolic framework for the Christian understanding of discipleship as a “journey.” For all its riches, Hebrews resists easy assimilation for two reasons: the first is that it presents a sustained argument from beginning to end; the second is that its symbols are hard to understand. Dealing with these difficulties clears the way to more intelligent and satisfactory reading.

The Argument

Some parts of the New Testament, such as the Gospel parables, can be read apart from their original context and still make sense. But each part of Hebrews plays a role in a complicated interplay of argument and explanation concerning Jesus and Christian life. Hebrews resists being excerpted. It uses a form of argument, found both in Greek philosophy and rabbinic Judaism, called “from the lesser to the greater.” The argument goes, “If something is true in a smaller matter, it is even more true in an analogous greater matter.” In Hebrews, the contrast is between the partial revelation of God in the past through angels, law, and priesthood, and the perfect revelation “in the last of these days” through God’s Son, Jesus, between that former “lesser” salvation and the present “greater” salvation.

The argument in Hebrews has a practical aim. The real point is the contrast between the response to God’s word by God’s people of the past, and the response demanded of believers today. A greater blessing and hope require a greater degree of obedience and loyalty, just as disobedience carries a greater penalty. The stakes are higher all around.

The Symbols

The symbols of Hebrews are sufficiently strange to shake any assumption that the New Testament world was “just like ours.” Hebrews demands of its readers, for example, a far more sophisticated grasp of Scripture than that possessed by most Christians today. Much of its argument, in fact, is based on complex modes of scriptural interpretation that, while strange to us, were common in the first century. The version of Scripture used by Hebrews (as by other New Testament writings) was the Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures known as the Septuagint, and its citations and allusions are from that version. This reading guide gives some assistance in following Hebrews’ use of Scripture by providing complete Scripture references. Citations in the text are flagged with small letters; passages are identified at the bottom of each page. To fully appreciate Hebrews’ virtuosity, study the citations in their original context as well as how Hebrews turns them to fit its argument (as in 10:5–7).

Hebrews’ view of the world is different from that of present-day readers in an even more fundamental sense. Hebrews works within a philosophical tradition called Platonism, which saw a great gulf between the spiritual realm and the material world. Spiritual things are eternal, unchanging; material things are transitory. As a result, spiritual things are both more real and better than the material. For Platonic Jews and Christians, the “spiritual” and “material” realms were understood in terms of “heaven” and “earth.”

This is the framework for grasping Hebrews’ point about the superiority of Jesus’s priesthood. By his resurrection, Jesus entered heaven, where he is a “priest forever” (5:6), in contrast to the Jewish priesthood, which could only be temporary. Likewise the “heavenly sanctuary” is superior to the physical tent of worship described in Scripture (8–9). The symbolism at times becomes dense and requires patience to disentangle, but the basic point is clear. The human Messiah Jesus now shares God’s life in heaven. His priesthood is therefore both the ultimate and eternal “source of salvation” to others (5:9).

The Readers

The original hearers of this sermon had experienced the loss of property as well as social stigma (10:32–34). They were tempted to seek a more stable basis for hope than that offered by a crucified messiah. Hebrews addresses their longing for stability by offering the hope for “a better homeland, a heavenly one” (11:16). The first readers’ experience can be translated into that of every age: all of us in various ways experience loss, shame, desperation, alienation, despair. Hebrews’ message to us is as pertinent as it was to them: “Oh, that today you would hear his voice: Harden not your hearts” (4:7). We also are called to go on pilgrimage through our troubled circumstances, looking to Jesus, who is still and always the “leader and perfecter of faith” (12:2).

The Prologue (1:1–4)

The opening sentence is elegantly constructed and introduces Hebrews' central themes. First is the contrast between God's partial revelation in the past ("to our ancestors") and the perfect revelation now ("to us") through God's Son, which establishes the basic thesis: Jesus is superior to the old dispensation, or covenant (see 8:13). Second, Jesus's divine status is clearly if metaphorically expressed by calling him the "imprint" of God. The exalted identity attributed to the Son is similar to that in John and Paul (see, e.g., Jn 1:1–4 and 1 Cor 8:6). Third, the prologue states that the way God "spoke" in Jesus was through his death for others (the purification from sins) and his resurrection.

Note the image of enthronement: Jesus "took his seat at the right hand." This alludes to Psalm 110:1, the favorite resurrection psalm of early Christians: "The Lord said to my lord: 'Sit at my right hand, while I make your enemies your footstool' " (see also 1:13). Hebrews will also exploit the fourth verse of this psalm when he develops the comparison between Jesus and Melchizedek in chapter 7. The image of enthronement runs throughout the sermon. Jesus is both priest and king. Finally, we notice that Jesus "inherits" a name better than that of the angels. Jesus is here portrayed as a forerunner. If they follow him, Christians also will enter into an inheritance (1:14; 6:12). The mention of angels, in turn, provides a transition to Hebrews' argument.

The Son Is Higher than the Angels (1:5–2:18)

A series of Scripture citations proves that the Son is superior to angels. The notes in the New Testament, pp. 1702–1704, discuss details of the citations. In the world of the New Testament, especially in the writings of Judaism, angels were regarded as the most powerful intermediaries between God and humans. The tendency to exalt their role is attested in Galatians 4:9 and Colossians 2:18. What concern does the author address? Jesus in his humanity did not appear so impressive as these "spiritual" beings. He was not only human; he suffered and died. Hebrews must overcome the scandal of a "lowly" Messiah.

Citations from Scripture do not by themselves demonstrate the author's point. As in other New Testament writings (e.g., Gal 3:1–5), Hebrews argues "the greater" from the fact of the readers' own experience. The work of God's Spirit among them is itself powerful "witness" to the salvation accomplished through Jesus (2:3f). And never content with the speculative, Hebrews drives home the exhortation. This "greater salvation" demands of the readers a greater response of alertness (2:1f ).

From the perspective of the power of the Risen Lord, then, Hebrews takes up the issue of Jesus's "lowliness." The author asserts on the basis of Psalm 8 that Jesus was "lower than the angels" only temporarily. And the reason was so that he could "taste death for everyone," that is, act as priest. On the basis of a messianic reading of Isaiah 8:18f, Hebrews next affirms the Messiah's solidarity with humanity. Then, Hebrews turns the tables, and makes Jesus's humanity a positive criterion for authentic priesthood. Because Jesus is one with those he represents before God—he shares the way they are "tested," and the way they "fear death"—he can be a compassionate and merciful priest. It is significant that Hebrews defines priesthood in terms of personal identity and experience rather than in terms of religious ceremony. Hebrews thereby anticipates an important principle of later doctrine: "what is not assumed [by God] cannot be saved." Precisely because he is human, Jesus can save humanity.

Jesus, Faithful and Compassionate High Priest (3:1–5:10)

Moses was so central a figure for Jews that he became a natural point of contrast for Christian claims about Jesus (see, e.g., Jn 1:17). Hebrews now contrasts Moses as "the servant of [God's] house," and Jesus as "son over the house" (3:4f). The real contrast in this section, however, is between the people whom Moses led out of Egypt and the Christians the author of Hebrews addresses in terms of disobedience and obedient faith (3:7–13). Hebrews agrees with Paul's argument in 1 Corinthians 10:1–13 that what happened to Israel in the desert is a warning for the present.

The argument here uses complex ancient rules for interpreting Scripture. Much is made, for example, of the occurrence of specific words, such as "rest" and "today," without regard for their original contexts. The premise for such a procedure is that Scripture speaks to every age in each of its words, and that every part of Scripture interprets every other part. On that premise, Hebrews asserts that the "rest" to which Moses led the people (the land) was not the "rest of God," namely, God's own life. For that matter, neither did all the people of old succeed even in entering that earthly rest, because of their disobedience. Christians in contrast have hope for the real rest—of God’s own life—won by Jesus’s resurrection. The point? They are to obey the call of God and not fall away (4:6). Hebrews’s message is not trivial. The readers are not engaged in a temporary conquest of territory; they are called to a share in God’s eternal life, a far more awesome prospect (4:12f).

Hebrews has identified obedient faith as the fundamental response demanded by God. The comparison to the wandering Israelites also establishes Hebrews’ basic image of the church as the people of God on pilgrimage. The image suggests that the church is not simply an institution like other institutions. It is never fully “at home” in the world. The church exists with reference to a higher goal—the “heavenly city”—toward which it must steadily move like a pilgrim, although this side of death the goal is never reached. Pilgrims need the sort of attentiveness, patience, obedience, and endurance demanded by such an exalted goal. Above all, they need hope (see 6:18). They can move lightly through this worldly existence only if convinced that their destination is truly “greater” than their present abode.

Hebrews points the reader again to the leader of the pilgrimage, the “apostle and high priest of our confession” (3:1). In the description of Jesus as priest (4:14–5:9), Hebrews combines what has come to be called both “high” and “low” understandings of Jesus. Jesus is definitely “from above”; he is God’s Son in the fullest sense, but he is also fully human, “from below.” It is his human existence that defines the path “all the children” are to follow. As priest, he is exemplar. Jesus is not only “faithful” (3:1f) as all are called to be; he “learned obedience from what he suffered” (5:8). The full implications of this statement will become clear only later (see 12:1–11), but we already understand that Jesus’s suffering deepened his faith, and his obedience was itself a form of suffering. Jesus progressively became, in his humanity, perfect Son of God, and therefore the “leader” of all who follow him.

Jesus’s Eternal Priesthood and Sacrifice (5:11–10:39)

The long middle section of the sermon argues for the superiority of Jesus’s priesthood. It begins with an extended exhortation (5:11–6:20), and then focuses on Jesus’s priestly identity and activity (7–10).

Hebrews presupposes the readers’ grasp of the “basic teaching about Christ” (6:1), but, in a rebuke as much as an exhortation, he urges them to move beyond the milk that is fit for babes to the meat that is meant for the mature (compare Paul's use of this imagery in 1 Cor 3:1–3). This “mature teaching” is by no means a matter of moving beyond Jesus or abandoning Jesus. Such apostasy from Christ Hebrews calls “recrucifying the Son of God” (6:6). Indeed, God's promise based on Jesus's resurrection is utterly reliable; Jesus is the “anchor of the soul” (6:19), to whose priesthood God has bound himself by oath (6:13). The nature and implications of Jesus's priesthood, however, are precisely what require explication. By it the Christian hope is made secure. By it Christians are able to become “imitators of those who, through faith and patience, are inheriting the promises” (6:12).

The consideration of Jesus as priest is the climax of Hebrews' “lesser to the greater” argument. But because the procedures and symbols of the ancient Jewish cult are foreign to us today, this section makes for some of the hardest reading in the New Testament. It is important to remember from the start that Hebrews' argument is based on the Christian experience of the holy Spirit and the conviction that Jesus is Risen Lord, and he has entered definitively into the life of God (2:3–4). Only this premise makes Hebrews' reinterpretation of Scripture reasonable. Once that premise is granted, however, then the major turning points of the exposition make sense.

Jesus and Melchizedek (7:1–28)

Why does Hebrews devote so much attention to a figure who appears only twice in Scripture? Because both appearances are understood as pointing forward to Christ. In Genesis 14:17–20, Melchizedek is named a priest of God (although he was a Gentile), whom even Abraham acknowledged by giving him tithes. Logically, then, a priest descended from Melchizedek would be superior to one descended from Abraham! Melchizedek's second scriptural appearance is in verse 4 of the very Psalm 110 that Christians regard as a prophecy of Jesus's resurrection. Melchizedek's being “without beginning or end” (because Scripture records neither his birth nor his death) is therefore an anticipation of the Son of God whose priesthood is eternally valid. Jesus is a priest forever, “in the manner of Melchizedek” (Ps 110:4) because through his resurrection, Jesus became priest “by the power of a life that cannot be destroyed” (7:16). He “remains forever” (7:24). His sacrifice is “once for all” (7:27). He “lives forever to make intercession” (7:25). The Jewish priesthood descended from Abraham cannot compete.

The Old and New Covenants (8:1–13)

God's revelation in Jesus does more than continue the story of God's people; it raises it to a new plane. Jesus's death and resurrection mark an absolute beginning. Here, Hebrews' Platonic worldview and its convictions concerning the resurrected Lord converge. In 8:1–6, we see the use of Platonic language, when Moses's desert sanctuary is called "the copy and shadow of the heavenly sanctuary" (8:5). Heaven is greater than earth. More dramatically, Hebrews turns this Platonism into an interpretation of history: the old covenant is likewise a "shadow" of the new, pointing to but replaced by the work of God in Jesus. Hebrews exploits Jeremiah's promise of a new covenant "in the heart" to affirm that the old order is in fact obsolescent.

The Priestly Act of Jesus (9:1–10:18)

The comparison of covenants now becomes a specific contrast between ancient cult and Jesus's death and resurrection. The complexity of the imagery here is daunting. The reader is offered some help by the notes on pp. 1711–1714. Even more helpful would be a careful reading of Exodus 25–27 (which describes the Tent of the Wilderness) and Leviticus 16 (which describes the ritual for the Day of Atonement). Hebrews hammers at two basic points. First, because Jewish sacrifices had to be repeated, it is obvious they were not effective—they could not truly purify the human conscience (9:6, 25; 10:1–3, 11). In contrast, Jesus entered "real" life, so his sacrifice is eternally valid (9:12, 24–28; 10:10–12). Second, the old cult sacrificed animals, whereas Jesus gave his own life for others in obedience to God (8:12–14; 10:5–10, 19). As both priest and victim, furthermore, he showed himself to be a personal example that others could follow. All believers have "confidence of entrance into the sanctuary by the new and living way he opened for us" (10:19f).

Exhortation to Fidelity (10:19–39)

In the light of this "greater salvation," Hebrews warns again of the consequences of apostasy (10:26–31). Despite their losses and trials, Christians are called to a still deeper loyalty (10:32–39). By mentioning endurance and faith as requisites for receiving the promises (10:36–38), Hebrews prepares for its final stirring exhortation.

Examples, Discipline, Disobedience (11:1–12:29)

The sermon's long argument reaches its climax in this exhortation to faith, understood as loyalty, endurance, and hope. The recital of heroes and heroines of the past serves to provide examples for the readers in the present to imitate. Why? Just as the readers had lost property and had been persecuted, so also had the believers who preceded them. Yet the ancestors persevered in their search for a better homeland (11:14). The repetition of the phrase "by faith" summons the readers to join ranks with those on pilgrimage to God's presence. Unlike the desert generation that fell by the way because of disobedience, these exemplars continued faithful, even though they themselves did not receive the full promise (11:39)! It was left to Jesus, the "leader and perfecter of faith" (12:2) to provide complete access to God through his death and resurrection. Because Christians can now look to him (12:2), there is solid reason to hope while still on the journey.

By summoning such a "cloud of witnesses" (12:1) to support the commitment of the readers, Hebrews states a conviction that eventually became an article of the Christian creed, "the communion of saints." Those struggling for God on earth are not alone. They are joined in a larger fellowship of faith with those who have died and who now support them with their prayers. The people of faith have solidarity in hope.

This is not blind optimism: the very real alienation, suffering, and persecution experienced by the ancients is not trivialized. And Jesus, before he could sit on the throne, had to "endure the cross, despising its shame" (12:2). Jesus's human response to God is the perfect example for the faith of Christians. Faith is always "evidence of things not seen" (11:1), which means that it is always a risk taken in the face of a pain more palpably present than the promise. Thus, also, the Christian experience of prayer has as an essential component the "dark night" of the soul when God seems more absent than present.

The connection between Sonship and suffering continues in 12:5–13. The remarks about fathers disciplining their children at first seem banal if not regressive. But when we remember that Jesus, "Son though he was, . . . learned obedience from what he suffered" (5:8), we come to appreciate the profound correspondence between Christology and Christian existence. What we suffer in our lives, if we can perceive and accept such suffering in faith, enables God to shape Jesus's own "sonship" in us. Ancient Greeks had the maxim mathein pathein, “to learn it is necessary to suffer.” Being educated as children of God requires a painful transformation, for the goal is the holy God (12:10).

Hebrews reminds its readers that they have undertaken not a pleasant stroll through a park but a terrible path toward “the city of the living God” (12:22), a pilgrimage whose completion means life eternal but whose abandonment means not seeing the Lord (12:14). Nowhere else does the New Testament give a sterner reminder of life’s tragic depths and terrifying heights than in this simple conclusion, “for our God is a consuming fire” (12:29).

Final Exhortation, Blessing, Greetings (13:1–25)

Although the final chapter is mainly practical, it is intimately joined to the theological argument of chapters 1 through 12. Notice, for example, the plea to “imitate the faith” of leaders, and the motivation of that faith being the eternal priesthood of Jesus who is “the same yesterday, today, and forever” (13:7f). The mix of advice about hospitality, marriage, and possessions (13:1–4) with the command to “go to Jesus outside the camp . . . for here we have no lasting city, but we seek the one that is to come” (13:13) is altogether typical of this sermon (see also 10:25) and of the early Christian understanding of existence. Christians live in the world like other people and participate in its structures. But they are not defined by this world or its values, even its religious values (13:9–11). No institutional cult or sacrificial priesthood is legitimated by this severe writing; everything necessary has been accomplished already by Jesus. Christians are defined not by their liturgy but by their following the one who suffered “outside the gate, to consecrate the people by his own blood” (13:12). Christians are never entirely at ease in the world or even in the church. They are pilgrims, struggling toward the “God of peace” into whose care the final blessing (13:20f) entrusts the readers of this profound and powerful sermon.

JAMES

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

James as Moral Exhortation

Letter writing was so popular in antiquity that the epistolary form became a package capable of holding many materials. In the case of James (as noted in the NABRE introduction, pp. 1721–1722), the letter format is the frame for a moral exhortation intended for a general readership.

Before turning to an analysis of the text, it is helpful to consider some of its literary features and major themes. James is not terribly difficult to understand; its style is lucid, its message is straightforward. The reader's task is putting into practice what James teaches. Our task here is simply the deeper appreciation of a clear witness.

The Writing

The form of Greco-Roman moral exhortation called parenesis was concerned with reminding readers of traditional values rather than with constructing theory. Such reminders often took the form of short maxims. James's first chapter in particular has such maxims, which are less connected to each other than to other sections of the composition. Chapters 2 through 5 take the form of short essays. The maxims in chapter 1 set themes that are developed in the essays of chapters 2 through 5. Note how the control of the tongue in 1:26 is elaborated by 3:1–12. Moral exhortation also presented models of virtue for readers to imitate. In James, the figures of Abraham, Rahab, Job, and Elijah provide examples from Scripture of the practical virtue James encourages.

James, however, is more than a moral treatise. It is a religious writing that uses the symbols of Scripture. James resembles the Wisdom tradition in its use of maxims, and in advocating a “wisdom from above” as the measure of life (3:13–18). James uses the language and perspective of the Prophets in its attack on rich oppressors (5:1–6). James also uses the Law.

For James, both the Decalogue and the Law of Love are binding for Christians. They are to be understood, however, in light of the teachings of Jesus. James has many allusions to the words of Jesus (see, e.g., 1:12; 2:5; 3:12; 5:12).

The Message

James advocates living faith and practical love. His concern is behavior. Like other moralists of his age, he is impatient with fine words that go nowhere (see, e.g., 1:22–25). Above all, faith that is not expressed in love is a charade.

James's target is the Christian who is “of two minds” (1:8; 4:8). This person wants to live by two standards at once: that of God, and that of the world. James demands a choice. Not only speech but also the use of possessions and the practice of fairness within the community lie within the range of his concern. He especially attacks envy, which perfectly illustrates the disposition of “the world” opposed to God (see, e.g., 3:13–4:10).

Readers may be surprised to find that Jesus is mentioned only twice (1:1; 2:1), with no reference at all to the messianic message of salvation through Jesus's death and resurrection. But James does not lack theology. He bases his exhortations on the one God who creates and judges all humanity. James centers attention on God rather than on Christ.

This reading guide divides the text differently than the New American Bible. No major issue is involved, only a judgment concerning what goes better with what. The paragraph headings in the NABRE are helpful, as also are the notes.

The Two Measures (1:1–27)

Although chapter 1 is made up of separate aphorisms with only loose internal connections, the opening statements also make clear that humans must live by either one sort of measure or another.

The first verses don't form an easily followed argument. Like the book of Proverbs, they offer a set of maxims linked by the repetition of words that invite testing against the reader's own experience of life. Although the same Greek word (peirasmos) is used in both verses, for example, the meaning of “trial” in 1:2 is not the same as “temptation” in 1:13.

The aphorisms are more than a random collection of wise sayings. The maxims in chapter 1 provide something of an index to the contents of chapters 2 through 5. The theme of enduring trials (1:2–4, 12–15) is developed in 5:7–11; the opposition between rich and poor (1:9–11) recurs in 4:13–5:6. Control of the tongue (1:19–21) is expanded in 3:1–12. Carrying out words in speech (1:22–26) is enlarged by 2:14–26. The theme of true wisdom (1:5–8, 16–18) is argued by 3:13–4:10. The prayer of faith (1:6f) is amplified by 5:12–18.

The aphorisms also introduce the basic pattern that structures the whole of James: the contrast between the measure of the world and the measure of God. The measure of the world is expressed by envy: “desire conceives and brings forth sin, and when sin reaches maturity it gives birth to death” (1:15). The values of the world are self-deceptive (1:16, 27), are expressed in wrathful behavior (1:19), and in every sort of excess (1:21) especially the pursuit of illusory wealth (1:11). These values are based on the perception of life as a closed system in which God has no part. Therefore all humans are in competition: one person’s gain is another’s loss.

The measure of faith is the opposite. All creation—life itself—is a gift: “all good giving and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of lights” (1:17). Because God has created humans by “the word of truth” (1:18), humans are able to receive the implanted word from him (1:21) and live in the way God does, giving “generously and ungrudgingly” (1:5). In the Greek, these words suggest the opposite of envy, which always grasps for more. Life by God’s measure is expressed by “care for orphans and widows in their affliction” (1:27). One is thereby “unstained by the world” by living according to a different value system (1:27).

The greeting in verse 1, “to the twelve tribes in the dispersion,” can therefore be understood as referring to the condition of Christians “in the world but not of the world.” As in Hebrews and 1 Peter, Christians are regarded as pilgrims and sojourners. They are not hostile to the world but neither are they defined by it. James’s whole effort is to persuade those “of two minds” (1:8) to live by God’s measure which is the perfect “wisdom from above” (see 3:15).

Discrimination and the Law of Love (2:1–13)

The first essay reveals a voice that resembles Paul in Galatians. James uses the same oral, dialogical style known as the diatribe. Vivid and lively, it is filled with rhetorical questions, exclamations, and abrupt transitions. The effect is a direct challenge to every reader—then and now. The challenge is even more clearly heard when the text is read aloud.

Christians, James says, must live consistently with their convictions. “Faith in our . . . Lord Jesus Christ” (2:1) is incompatible with any form of discrimination within the community. James sketches a lively scene that probably reflects a general situation rather than a local incident. The context is judgment within the community, like that carried out in the diaspora synagogue to settle disputes. In the background is the injunction of Leviticus 19:15 that forbids partiality in judgment. How plausible and true to life is his portrayal of a community pandering to its rich members and slighting the poor!

That James by his allusion to Leviticus 19:15 intends us to see discrimination as an offense against love as well as faith is shown immediately by his explicit citation in 2:8 of Leviticus 19:18. The “law of love” is also identified by Jesus as the summation of Scripture. James calls it the “royal” law, and he means the standard regulating relations in the community. It is the “law of the kingdom.” James spells out this commandment by alluding to the Ten Commandments (2:11), and also to the specific commandments found in the original context of Leviticus 19 that accompany the original exhortation, “love your neighbor as yourself” (see Jas 4:11; 5:4, 9, 12, 20). James says that breaking any commandment means breaking the whole law, because sin is not against a law but against a lawgiver. Faith in the one God excludes picking and choosing between commandments, just as it excludes picking and choosing between fellow Christians!

Active Faith (2:14–26)

This section is often misunderstood. Because James speaks of “faith” and “works” (terms often used by Paul), people think James is responding to Paul’s teaching. In fact, his perspective is entirely different. James speaks not of the commandments of the law but of active faith. He is a moralist and is concerned with the way speech gets translated into action. Like all moralists, his concern is efficacy: “of what use is it?” The examples of Abraham and Rahab illustrate James’s point. Their faith expressed itself in effective action. Abraham was willing to sacrifice his son; Rahab showed hospitality to God’s scouts. James is not debating with Paul over the question of how people are saved. His exhortation is intensely practical and arises from the situation pictured in 2:14–16: pious talk does not feed or clothe the needy. Such faith is as “dead” as a corpse; such religion is fraudulent (see 1:26f).

We discover here two distinctive aspects of James. His teaching is not based on what is specifically Christian, but on faith in the one God shared by other monotheistic traditions. For James, the “faith of Christ” and teachings of Jesus do not oppose but refine Torah. James therefore also contains an opening to genuine social ethics. His moral teaching is not confined to the Christian community; it can be extended to the world. If there is no partiality in the community, based in the law of God, then forms of discrimination in the wider world can be combated on the same basis. If sister and brother in the community are to be fed, then the community as such should also feed the needy of the world in every changing circumstance.

James also warns us that this can cut both ways. If the Christian community does not live up to its own calling, and is unjust, then it bears no witness to the world and is itself subject to condemnation (2:5–7).

The Power of the Tongue (3:1–12)

James’s concern for the proper use of speech (see 1:19, 26) now becomes thematic. Preoccupation with speech is typical of ancient moralists. Taciturnity as a sign of wisdom was proverbial (see, for example, Prov 10:19; 11:12). That such “control of the tongue” was almost insurmountably difficult to achieve was also well known. James therefore considers control of speech to be a mark of perfection (3:2).

James makes two related points, using conventional imagery from Greek philosophy. The first compares the tongue to a horse’s bit or a ship’s rudder, showing not only how a small organ can direct a large body but also how much that organ itself, with its disproportionate power, needs to be controlled by someone with a sense of direction! James’s second point concerns the potential for harm in uncontrolled speech. It is like a flame “setting the entire course of our lives on fire” (3:6).

The capacity of speech to do evil is more impressive than its power for good: “no human being can tame the tongue. It is a restless evil, full of deadly poison” (3:8). Sadly, the story of human discourse from the Garden of Eden to the latest garden party only confirms James’s harsh judgment.

No wonder the ancients valued taciturnity: better no speech than destructive speech. The dangers inherent in speech also undergird the value of silence in the monastic/contemplative tradition of both the East and the West. Silence is the necessary precondition to “welcome the word that . . . is able to save your souls” (1:21).

The theological implications of speech are central to James’s exhortation. In 3:9–12, he contrasts the speech that “blesses God” with that which “curses human beings” who are made in God’s image. Once again James combats the “two-minded” person, who thinks that it is possible to have a relationship with God that disregards human obligations. As in 2:14–17, James insists that religious language and practical human care must go together. The same source cannot yield two kinds of water, and a Christian should not speak with two tongues. Action should follow conviction; speech should conform to faith.

The warning is directed most of all at those who desire to be teachers in the faith community (3:1). If care is required for all speech, it is even more necessary for those who shape the minds of others according to the measure of God and not of the world.

Friendship with God or the World (3:13–4:10)

Although the paragraph division of modern translations hides what is clearer in Greek, 3:13–4:10 is a self-contained essay stating the central theological framework for understanding James as a whole.

Formally, it is a call to conversion. In 3:13–4:6, James presents an indictment. In 4:7–10, he exhorts his readers to repentance. A powerful spatial metaphor governs both parts, a contrast between what comes “from above” (true wisdom, God’s gift), and that which originates “from below” (false wisdom, human arrogance). Correspondingly, the readers are told to “humble” themselves, so that God can “exalt” them (4:10). The spatial metaphor points to differing measures of reality. That “from below” James calls “the world.” It treats life as though God had no claim; human success is measured by human accomplishment and acquisition. But God’s measure says that everything comes as a gift from “the Father of lights” (1:17), and that arrogance is empty pretence. James, as always, has as his main target the “two-minded” person (4:8) who wants to live by both measures at once.

Within this call to conversion, James develops the theme of envy as exemplifying the measure of the world. Notice the occurrence of “jealousy” in 3:14, 16; 4:2 and climactically in 4:5. This last verse is notoriously difficult to translate, not least because we have no verse of Scripture saying what James suggests. The best solution is to render 4:5 as two rhetorical questions (a technique common in this essay part of James's letter): "Do you think the scripture speaks in vain? Is the spirit God has made to dwell in us for envy?" The word for "envy" here is never used of God (whereas "jealous" sometimes is), and never occurs in Greek with a positive connotation. The point clearly is that God's spirit has nothing to do with envy. Envy comes from the "wisdom from below." James associates with envy all the vices commonly attributed to it in Greek moral discourse, especially social unrest, murder, and war.

Why is envy so singled out? Because its underlying assumption is that your gain is my loss. This is the opposite of the Spirit of community, where everyone gains by anyone's growth and everyone rejoices in anyone's good fortune. Envy causes me to sorrow when another has something that I lack. And when life is measured simply in terms of what I possess—"I am what I have"—then for another to have and me to lack is intolerable. Envy drives the acquisitive instinct: "you covet" (4:2). It is a short step to conflict, war, and murder, between individuals and among nations. Like other Greek moralists, James assigns the cause of war to envy (4:1–3). It is remarkable that this passage, which alone in the New Testament analyzes the causes of human conflict, should play so little role in moral discussions of war and peace.

At the climax of the indictment (4:4), James accuses his readers of being "adulterers" because they have broken covenant both with God and with their fellow humans. The covenant is about loyalty and love. There is no connection between those attitudes and the self-seeking of envy. James also uses the language of Greek philosophy concerning "friendship." He contrasts "friendship with the world" and "friendship with God" as opposing ways of life. Here James is not condemning the world understood as the place of human activity or God's creation. Rather, it is a system of values that excludes consideration of God. To be "friends with the world" therefore means to live by a measure that leaves God's claim aside.

To this closed system James opposes the measure of faith: God is the source of "all good giving and every perfect gift" (1:17). God gives more grace to the humble even while resisting the arrogant (4:6). God is not envious of humans but gives to all generously and without grudging (see

1:5). Those who submit to God are therefore also lifted up by God (4:10). Their tears of repentance will rapidly turn to joy, because—a remarkable statement—when humans draw near to God, God also draws near to them (4:8).

Against Arrogance (4:11–5:6)

James now turns to three forms of arrogance, which exemplify life according to the measure of the world. The first is the practice of slandering a neighbor (4:11f). Such critical speech naturally involves both a condemnation of the other and an implied assertion of one's own superiority: "I am in a position to judge." James insists that such judgment breaks the law of love (see Lv 19:16) and reminds his readers that the lawgiver is also the judge. God alone can both save and destroy life (see 1:21).

A second form of arrogance is demonstrated by those who make great business plans without ever considering the fragile nature of their own existence (4:13–17). Once more, their speech gives them away; they assume control over the present and the future. James comments: "You are boasting in your arrogance. All such boasting is evil" (4:16). The speech of one living by God's measure is also revealing: "If the Lord will . . ." This is more than pious talk; it refers all of life and all of life's projects to the one who gives and can alone sustain life.

Finally, with a prophetic rage like that of Amos, James attacks the insolence of the rich who withhold wages from their laborers. The security gained by such fraud is illusory; the rich fatten themselves for the day of judgment (5:5). They sin because they "know the right thing to do but do not do it" (4:17). How do they know? Because the scriptural context for the law of love in Leviticus 19:18 states plainly, "you shall not withhold overnight the wages of your day laborer" (Lv 19:13).

Patience, Plain Speech, Prayer (5:7–20)

Having called the double-minded to conversion and excoriated the arrogant, James turns to the community's inner life. Speech is again the underlying theme, this time with reference to the proper uses of speech in the church.

The attack on oppressors (5:1–6) leads naturally to the condition of those who suffer persecution from without. James recommends patience and offers the example of Job (5:11). Patience is possible for them as it is for a farmer, because the fruitful outcome of their loyalty is certain: “the coming of the Lord is at hand.” In the meantime, nothing would be more natural than for the afflicted to turn on each other in resentment and hurt. James again uses Leviticus 19 when he tells them, “Do not complain about one another that you may not be judged” (see Lv 19:17f).

Christians should speak plainly. In 5:12 James repeats the commandment of Jesus (Mt 5:33–37) that speech should be unadorned and straightforward, without oaths. And in his last exhortation, James encourages the sort of mutual correction that can build up the identity of the church (5:20).

Because the church is constituted by the word of truth (1:18), it should above all express that truth in its communal life of prayer. James enumerates the sorts of prayer that are appropriate to the community’s diverse circumstances (5:13f) and then elaborates the prayer with anointing for a sick member. This ritual is the basis for the sacrament of anointing for the sick and has roots in the healing ministry of Jesus (see 5:15). James’s last example from Scripture is the prophet Elijah, whose prayer demonstrates the power of faith for those who live by God’s measure (5:17f; cf. 1:6–8). These final exhortations, down to earth and humane, summarize beautifully the character of James, who from beginning to end finds wisdom in practical faith and active love.

1 PETER

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

First Peter bears all the marks of a real letter. It was written to Christians scattered throughout the provinces of Asia Minor. Although written in clear and even elegant Greek, and although containing an exhortation and witness (5:12) at once simple and profound, 1 Peter is given far less attention than it deserves. Partly this is because many contemporary scholars think that the letter is pseudonymous and a product of second generation rather than primitive Christianity (see, for example, NABRE introduction, pp. 1728–1729). There are, however, excellent reasons for considering Peter the disciple to have been the author of 1 Peter. In any case, the authority of New Testament writings does not derive from the identity of the author. Whether it was the apostle or someone writing in his name, this letter speaks powerfully to a situation of early believers and retains enduring value for readers in every age.

A Letter to the Gentile Christians

Since the letter is addressed to Christians spread over a large geographical area (1:1), we do not expect the detailed treatment of local problems. By reading between the lines, however, we are able to learn something about the shared characteristics of First Peter's readers. They seem to have been recently converted. Peter reminds them repeatedly of their former life of vice (1:18–20; 4:3–4), as well as their initiation into the messianic community through baptism (1:3; 1:22–2:3). They seem, furthermore, to be direct converts from paganism rather than from Judaism. They were themselves Gentiles and continued to live among the symbols and social structures of the Roman Empire. They inevitably felt pulled between an allegiance to their new calling and an attraction to the values of the world they had left. They were, finally, converts who were experiencing suffering. On the basis of 4:12, some have considered this to be a state-sponsored persecution such as was later the lot of Christians. But Peter's positive view of the state (2:12–17) does not fit that reconstruction. It is more likely that Peter's readers were experiencing the sort of verbal abuse and social ostracism that Christians experienced from the beginning. The suffering was no less serious. Martyrdom is painful but swift. The corrosion of confidence is slower but terribly effective.

Christian Apologetic

First Peter can best be understood as a form of apologetic literature. This form of writing originated among Diaspora Jews and was taken over by Christians. Ostensibly it explains one's distinctive beliefs to the wider world in terms outsiders can understand. Indirectly, it supports community identity. First Peter has many of the characteristics of this genre. It is positive and open to the dominant culture. Christians are not to flee the world or its structures. They are to be good citizens within those social structures. And they are to be ready to demonstrate by their behavior and their speech that they pose no threat to others (3:15–16).

At the same time, Peter works to build up the identity of the community. He reminds his readers that they are called to holiness and a standard of behavior higher than that of their neighbors (2:11–12; 4:1–2). He reminds them of the fundamental transformation they had undergone in their baptism. He assures them that although they are “sojourners” in the world (2:11), they are part of the “household of God” (2:4–5; 4:17). In so doing, Peter appropriates for these new Gentile believers all the scriptural titles and symbols used of Israel, to give them a sense of continuity with God's people, even though once they were “no people.” In 1 Peter we observe a thoroughly Gentile Christianity regarding itself as the “New Israel,” taking up a place in the Diaspora not against the world but as a witness to the world.

The Greeting (1:1–2)

The greeting of this circular letter establishes more than the simple identification of author and addressees. No need to elaborate the simple designation, “Peter, apostle of Jesus Christ,” for Peter's authority is unquestioned (see, in contrast, 2 Peter). But the “diaspora” of Asia Minor has religious as well as geographical connotations. We see here a theme found also in James and Hebrews and in the Christian literature of the second century: Christians are in exile from their true homeland in heaven so long as they are on earth. They are, in fact, “sojourners” precisely because they have been “chosen” by God and have an identity distinct from that of their neighbors. They should therefore cultivate attitudes appropriate to exiles and pilgrims (see, e.g., 2:11). The greeting also reminds the readers of the rich complexity of their experience of God: The Father has chosen them; the Son saved them by his obedient sacrifice; and the Spirit has sanctified them.

The Gift and Call of God (1:3–21)

The opening prayer (1:3–9) is based on the blessing formula of Jewish worship: God is blessed for his gifts to humans. In this case, Peter gives thanks for the new life his readers have been granted through the resurrection of Jesus. Their new life is real, yet not complete. Their inheritance is one that is kept for them in heaven (1:4f). They, of course, still remain on earth. This tension establishes them as pilgrims and sojourners. As their salvation “waits for them,” so also must they “wait for it.” In the meantime, they must experience the trials and sufferings inherent to the life of faith (1:6f). Peter places his readers between the “already” of God’s grace and the “not yet” of salvation fully achieved (1:9), in a manner typical of New Testament writings. But what they hope for is secure, a “living hope” (1:3) because it is based not simply in human longing but in the “power of God” at work among them (1:5).

Despite the fact that his readers have converted from paganism, Peter inserts them into the story of Israel. In speaking of an “inheritance in heaven,” Peter implies a contrast to the “inheritance of the land,” which was the hope of Israel. Likewise, 1:10–12 develops a contrast between stages in the story. Peter asserts that the prophets of old did not speak of their own times (1:12) but spoke of the “sufferings destined for Christ and the glories to follow them” (1:11). Three aspects of this striking statement deserve notice. First, the superiority of the Christians’ present experience is clearly asserted; as in Hebrews the claims of the earlier covenant are made secondary. What the Christians have received in the gospel transcends even what angels can know (1:12)! Second, Scripture is taken over completely as messianic prophecy. Everything in Scripture points to Jesus. Third, as in Luke-Acts, the pattern of the Messiah is spelled out in terms of “suffering, then glory.” That his readers must follow after this same pattern becomes explicit later in the letter.

Having asserted the reality of God's gift, Peter now sketches the demands it places on those who receive it (1:13–21). They are to direct their lives by the new form of existence given to them. This means a radical obedience to the giver of the gift, an obedience spelled out in terms of holiness (1:15f). As their lives have changed, so must their behavior. They must not act as they formerly did but are to become “different.” They are to shape themselves in a manner consonant with the one who called them with the gift of the “precious blood of Christ” (1:19). Peter again calls his readers “sojourners” (1:17). Jews of the Diaspora were to be different from pagans; Christians are to be “different” (holy) in the world as they wait for the fulfillment of their salvation (see 1:9). They are not defined by the norms of others (1:14, 18) but by their allegiance to God, so that “your faith and hope are in God” (1:21).

A Gospel People (1:22–2:10)

To strengthen their grasp on their special identity Peter reminds his readers of the basis of their new life in “the living and abiding word of God” (1:23). By this, Peter explicitly means the good news (1:25). This is the message of a crucified Messiah who was raised to new life. By the obedient acceptance of that strange proclamation, they were given “new birth” (1:23). Immediately, however, Peter asserts the need for them to grow. The “spiritual milk” they now imbibe is appropriate to new converts who have just “tasted and seen that the Lord is good” (see also 1 Cor 3:1–3; Heb 6:13), but they are to mature “in Christ” by patterning their life according to a new standard of moral behavior. They must leave aside deceit in favor of truth, envy in favor of love.

Peter is not only concerned with the transformation of individuals, but, like Paul, with the identity of the community also. In 2:4–10, therefore, he reminds them of their communal identity as God's house and people. This section interweaves scriptural passages and allusions. The references at the bottom of New Testament pages provide valuable assistance. The choice of passages is strikingly similar to that in Romans 9:25–33. It is less likely that Peter used Romans than that both Paul and Peter used community traditions of scriptural interpretation developed from the first days of the church.

The first set of passages (2:6–8) portrays the paradox of Christian faith. The stone that God intended to be the basis for his people Israel was rejected by them; yet the rejected one became the basis of a new people, a “spiritual house” made up of living persons (2:4). The reference here is clearly to the crucified Jesus who was a scandal (a stone of stumbling) to his fellow Jews who expected a messiah with more obvious and impressive credentials than suffering for others (see 1 Cor 1:18–23).

For the Christian community, however, the rejected Messiah is the basis for a new life and shared identity. In a second set of texts, Peter strings together the most precious epithets of Torah applied to Israel as God’s people. Now, they apply to these Gentiles, “once no people, but now God’s people.” In the messianic community, these aliens have a home (see also Eph 2:19–22).

Where is the place of the historical Jewish people? It must be confessed that 1 Peter simply does not take them into account. He appropriates the symbols of Torah for the exclusive use of Gentile believers. Readers today cannot expect to find in this text an answer to the many questions concerning the relations of Christians to Jews, for 1 Peter does not address them.

Life within the World’s Structures (2:11–3:7)

Christians are to maintain distance from the values of this world as “aliens and sojourners” (2:11). At the same time, they must live within the social structures of the world. Peter is convinced that if they are good citizens, they will turn away from slander and persecution. The practice of “good works” is the community’s basic witness (2:12).

Peter uses the traditional form of “household ethics” to sketch the Christians’ social obligations. Greek philosophy had elaborated the mutual duties of people who lived in a stratified social order. Over the empire as a whole, the emperor was considered head of the household. In individual families, husbands ruled wives, parents ruled children, and masters ruled slaves. This was simply the conventional arrangement of that time. Neither Paul (see Col 3:18–4:1) nor Peter thought that the Christian message demanded the dismantling of society’s structures.

In 2:13–17, Peter portrays the empire and its agents in positive terms. Submission to legitimate authority is both right and expedient, since the state punishes only the wicked. Such an outlook is inconceivable if Christians were in fact being harassed by the state as such. Yet, even here, the relationship with God is primary. Social obligations, if they conflict with that relationship, must give way to it: “Be free, yet without using freedom as a pretext for evil, but as slaves of God” (2:16). Obedience to God comes before all; and before God, all are slaves.

We might expect in the next section exhortations to both masters and slaves (compare Col 3:22–4:1). Perhaps the absence of masters says something about the Christians’ social status. But since Peter thinks of all Christians as slaves (2:16), this exhortation to servants becomes a general teaching to the community at large. The most striking aspect of this teaching is the invocation of Jesus as an explicit example to be imitated, for all who suffer unjustly (2:21–23). Jesus not only won salvation for others by his death on the cross. In his very manner of suffering, he provided the model for how Christians were to act. Not only what Jesus did but also how he did it becomes a source of life to the community.

The exhortation to wives (3:1–6) is much more extensive than that to husbands (3:7). Traditional Jewish and Greek motifs, which stress the value of internal virtue over external adornment, are used to support the command to be submissive. Women are to be subordinate, we notice, not to all men, but to their husbands (3:1, 5). In return, men are to regard women as fully equal in their relationship before the Lord. Women are “joint heirs of the gift of life” (3:7).

In these instructions, we do not find a divinely inspired blueprint for the ideal social order or Christian family structure. What we find is the best available moral teaching applied to the real world of that age. Just as the social structures of the past cannot be transferred directly to the present, neither can the relationships appropriate to those structures be directly imitated. Yet for families both ancient and modern, for societies then and now, good order, mutual respect, obedience, and authority are very much required. The style of those structures, happily, is left to human creativity.

Witness in a Hostile World (3:8–4:6)

The Christians of Asia Minor were not suffering persecution, torture, and death. Their suffering was nevertheless real and painful. Social ostracism works a slow and insidious poison into a community’s sense of identity. They were being “insulted” (3:9), maligned and defamed (3:16), and “vilified” (4:4). Why? Probably they were abused because they no longer followed the ways of their neighbors (4:3f). They have become different (holy), and people who insist on being different generate resentment.

Peter's response to the community's experience of suffering is remarkable. He does not advocate withdrawal from society or hostility toward outsiders. Instead, Christians are to remain in the world (see 2:13–3:7) and are to engage outsiders in dialogue. They are to be ready to “give an explanation to anyone who asks you for a reason for your hope” (3:15). The expectation that such explanation would be helpful pays a high compliment to the basic reasonableness and goodwill of outsiders. Christians are also to follow the exhortation of Jesus to return a blessing for a curse (see Mt 5:44). In order to act in this way toward outsiders, they must cultivate the same qualities of sympathy and love toward each other in the community (3:8). Within their own hearts, furthermore, they are to “sanctify Christ as Lord” (3:15), which, Peter asserts, will free them from fear of outsiders (3:14). How will this happen?

They are to remember how Jesus not only “suffered for sins once” (3:18) but also how he was raised from the dead in power. Using traditions found in apocalyptic literature (such as 1 Enoch), Peter symbolically expresses the conviction that the resurrection was not simply an event concerning the person Jesus but had cosmic extension. “In the spirit” Jesus went to the spirits in prison to preach the good news (3:19–22). This dramatic announcement is the basis for the statement in the Apostles’ Creed that says Jesus “descended into hell.” It means that God’s power to save reaches everywhere, even to the farthest reaches of human sin and alienation.

Peter’s immediate point, however, is that by baptism (3:21), the Christians of Asia Minor have been given the same power. They need not fear human slander, for the power of God is at work among them. They are like those to whom Jesus preached after his resurrection, “though condemned in the flesh in human estimation . . . alive in the spirit in the estimation of God” (4:6).

Community Attitudes (4:7–5:14)

First Peter does not portray the Christians’ moral situation in stark black-and-white tones, but like most New Testament writings it has a keen sense that the time for decision is now. The final exhortations are colored by the conviction that “the end of all things is at hand” (4:7). The time of judgment is soon (4:17). Therefore, Christian life means “resisting the devil” who through affliction such as they are experiencing “seeks to devour them” (5:8f). Such circumstances call for a “serious, sober” attitude and one that is “vigilant” (4:7; 5:8). Those who experience affliction are to regard their sufferings as a share in Christ’s own (5:13f), knowing that they will share in his glory (4:13; 5:10). Within the community, attitudes of mutual service are to prevail (4:9–11), demonstrated by good order and humility (5:1–16).

When exhorting the community’s leaders, Peter forbids lording it over the flock. Leaders are rather to provide a positive example (5:3). The image of the shepherd recalls the portrayal of Jesus as the “shepherd and guardian of your souls” (in 2:25). The connection is made explicit in 5:4: with characteristic optimism, Peter promises such good leaders that, “when the chief Shepherd is revealed, you will receive the unfading crown of glory.”

The New Testament contains no writing more positive in its evaluation of the world yet more compelling in its call to holiness than 1 Peter. As Martin Luther correctly noted, it is one of the New Testament compositions that truly “show thee Christ.”

2 PETER

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

An appreciative understanding of 2 Peter demands more than ordinary effort. Hard work is necessary to uncover the situation addressed by the letter. Perhaps even more difficult is the hurdle presented by the letter's sustained argumentative tone. Such effort finds its rewards, however, in the surprising discovery that a writing which at first appears as the New Testament's most irrelevant can emerge as having perennial pertinence.

The circumstances of 2 Peter's composition are obscure (see NABRE introduction, pp. 1735–1736). The same author did not write both 1 and 2 Peter. The style, outlook, and concerns of the two letters are too disparate for a common authorship. The main thing they have in common is the mention of Noah and the flood. Second Peter has far more in common with Jude (with which it shares the polemical material of chap. 2) than with 1 Peter. In all likelihood, 2 Peter is a pseudonymous composition. Despite the self-presentation of chapter 1, it is not "Symeon Peter" who writes, but someone who invokes his authority as a support for shared traditions being threatened by deviance. This sermon in the form of a letter may have been addressed to a single church, but it may also have been intended for a larger audience, namely all "those who have received a faith of equal value to ours" (1:1). It is thus considered a "general" epistle. The title "Catholic Epistles" was applied to 1 and 2 Peter, James, 1, 2, 3 John, and Jude because they were written for a broader audience than a local church (in Greek, "catholic" = "pertaining to the whole"). Some readers also consider 2 Peter "catholic" in another sense: they see its concern for tradition as anticipating the emergence of the Catholic Church in the second century.

A Defense of God's Judgment

At first reading, 2 Peter seems to be a loose collection of observations within which talk about Jesus's second coming plays a particularly significant part. Some scholars have therefore thought that the "delay of the Parousia” was the crisis that stimulated composition. Closer analysis, however, shows that “Peter” and his opponents are debating a deeper and more perennial problem: does God judge the world? Underlying that issue, in turn, is a still more fundamental one concerning the reality of God and God’s relationship to the world. The debate, in short, is between living faith and practical atheism. It is a debate still in progress. The contribution of 2 Peter is worth hearing.

Far from a random collection of statements, the letter as a whole presents a coherent argument. Chapter 1 establishes the authority of the writer and of the Scripture that will be used as the source of proof. Chapter 2 attacks the opponents’ “destructive teachings” on the basis of Scripture. Chapter 3 presents the proper understanding of the tradition concerning God’s judgment.

The Common Tradition (1:1–21)

The first section of the letter establishes the authority of the writer and of the shared tradition (1:1) that the author represents. Extraordinary emphasis is put on the person of Peter and on the fact that he will soon die (1:13f). These touches recall the literary genre popular in early Christianity called the “Farewell Discourse.” In this sort of composition, a figure from the past, speaking shortly before his death, predicts catastrophes to come and enjoins fidelity on his followers. We notice in this case, however, an equally strong emphasis on memory (1:9, 12, 13, 15). The opponents “forget” the proper knowledge, and Peter seeks to “remind” his readers of it. The emphasis on memory makes the letter resemble as well the form of moral exhortation called. The connection to parenesis is most obvious in 2 Peter 1:5–8. Parenesis spelled out moral obligations in terms of maxims. Here, Peter lists the sort of qualities that should follow upon the readers’ faith. More important even than the specific items is the overall point made by the list: more than knowledge or faith is involved in being Christian. A whole way of life is demanded. Those who have “forgotten” this lead lives that are “idle and unfruitful” (1:8f). There is a sharp polemical edge to this comment. In chapter 2, Peter will show that the opponents’ “destructive heresies” bring about destructive behavior, which in turn brings down God’s judgment.

A complex statement provides the basis for Peter’s overall argument and a transition to his attack on opponents (1:16–21). In a passage that clearly corresponds to the Synoptic Gospels' story of Jesus's transfiguration (see Mt 17:1–8), he asserts the reality of the Christian experience of God. The tradition out of which Peter writes is not speculation (“cleverly devised myths,” 1:16), but is a power he and others experience personally; “we” saw and heard on the mountain (1:16–18)! The community's tradition is based not in fancy but in fact. The experience, moreover, was of “the power and coming” of the Lord Jesus Christ. As we will learn, the promise concerning Jesus's return is the bone of contention in chapter 3. Peter claims that the expectation of his return is based on the reality of his already having come.

The disciples' experience of Jesus also grounds the “prophetic message” about Jesus's return for judgment. Peter places this prophecy of Jesus (see Mt 24:29–31) among the prophecies of Scripture. As with scriptural prophecies, interpretation is not to be personal or idiosyncratic but a decision of the community that is guided by the same Spirit that gave utterance in the first place. With this alignment, Peter has provided the basis for arguing the whole issue of God's judgment (and therefore of Jesus's return) on the truthfulness of Scripture as properly interpreted by the tradition.

Condemnation of False Teachers (2:1–22)

The claim to a true “prophetic message” in 1:19 provides a transition to the attack on “false teachers” (2:1) who are placed in the line of “false prophets.” As we will learn more fully in chapter 3, the opponents are denying the power of God to judge, that is, to intervene in the affairs of the world (3:4). By denying God's ability to judge, they bring judgment on themselves! Their “destructive heresies” bring on them “destruction” (2:1). But their teaching has proven successful, convincing many (2:2); Peter's response must therefore be vigorous and pointed.

We saw in 1:5–8 that Peter was concerned with the moral consequences of faith. The ancient world knew what our world sometimes ignores, that people act on their ideas, and that bad ideas can lead to bad behavior. A real misconception of what life is about leads to a distorted existence. Showing how certain teachings lead to immoral behavior is a way of proving that the ideas are false. Peter therefore pays particular attention to the way of life generated by these doctrines. He attacks the “licentious ways” of the opponents (2:2), their “greed” and “lies” (2:3). They are people of “depraved desires” (2:10), are “irrational” (2:12) and “adulterous” (2:14). The catalogue of vices reaches a rhetorical climax in 2:17f, then takes a sharp turn: “They promise them freedom, though they themselves are slaves of corruption, for a person is a slave of whatever overcomes him” (2:19).

What sort of “freedom” did the opponents promise? Apparently, it was freedom from the fear of punishment. If God does not intervene in human affairs to punish the wicked and reward the good, then (they said) one can live immorally, looking out only for oneself, indulging in antisocial behavior.

Peter’s first rebuttal is based on the nature of vice. They are slaves of their dominating appetite, which controls their behavior. They are not sophisticated or liberated. They are as compulsive as dogs returning to their vomit, these Christians who once knew righteousness but have now turned back to a novel version of an old atheism: “The fools says in his heart, ‘There is no God’ ” (Ps 14:1).

The second part of Peter’s rebuttal is based on the conviction that Bible stories relate the facts of history. When Scripture says therefore that God punished and rewarded, that is proof of God’s ability still to do so. Peter relates the cases of the wicked angels (2:4), of Noah (2:5), of Sodom and Gomorrah (2:6–10) and of Balaam (2:15f) as evidence of God’s intervention. In contrast to the letter of Jude (with which much of this material is shared), Peter not only emphasizes punishment; God also rewards those who are faithful. Here, the issue is whether God acts in human history at all. Peter’s recitation from Scripture asserts that in fact God does.

The Coming of the Lord (3:1–18)

The specific nature of the debate emerges for the first time in this final section. Here, not simply a question of fact but a matter of principle is at stake.

The question of fact is not really in dispute. Jesus clearly had not yet returned to judge the world as all Christians had been expecting. But quite different conclusions were being drawn from that undisputed fact. The “scoffers” challenge the very promise of his coming (3:4).

They base their denial on the immutability of the world “from the beginning.” They hold the position of ancient skeptics such as the Epicureans and (among the Jews) Sadducees, who denied divine providence. If there was a god, he did not meddle with the world, which was, therefore, a closed system of natural forces and human desires. God was not a factor to be considered, never had been, never would be. The failure of Jesus to return, therefore, was only one more piece of evidence proving that all such prophecies were empty.

Theirs is a real threat to the whole structure of faith. They challenge not only the reality of the Parousia but the very reality of a living God! Is God, then, merely a figment of the imagination, a projection of human longing, a societal superego? The whole concept of revelation is obviously challenged as well. There can be no real “promise” if there is no living God to speak, or to act.

In this argument, both sides base their position on a claim of experience, which then interprets reality as a whole. The skeptics say that experience shows no evidence for God’s activity: “nothing has changed.” Peter argues that Scripture (which is after all the record of human history) proves that God does intervene (see all of chap. 2). God created by a word and can destroy by a word (3:5f). Furthermore (and this is the significance of 1:16–19) Peter and his companions themselves experienced such an intervention in the transfiguration of Jesus! Thus, their tradition is based on the prophets, on the Lord Jesus, and on the apostles (3:2).

If God does intervene, how is his apparent absence to be interpreted? Peter invokes the arguments used by other defenders of divine providence. God’s time cannot be measured by human time: there is an infinite distance between God and humans (3:7). God’s apparent delay is to bring people to repentance (3:8f).

Ultimately, those whose experience is different are not likely to be convinced. Peter appeals not to the opponents but to those attracted to their position. He reasserts the conviction that Jesus will come “like a thief in the night” (see Mt 24:43; 1 Thes 5:2; Rev 3:3), and that his coming will inaugurate “new heavens and a new earth in which righteousness dwells” (3:13; see Rev 21:1). His concern throughout this letter, however, has been most of all with the behavior of his readers, and he reasserts “what sort of persons they are to be” during this time of waiting (3:11). After all debate is over, only the truth of human existence validates doctrine.

The letter concludes with a reference to Paul’s letters that the opponents are distorting (3:15f). The fact that the author refers to “all” of Paul’s letters, that he makes them equivalent to “Scripture,” and that there is already a history of interpreting (or misinterpreting) them, are strong indications that this “Peter” is a writer of the second generation who defends a tradition common to the historical Peter and Paul against the threat of doctrinal and behavioral deviance.

1 JOHN

[see pages 1740–1746 of the New Testament]

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

Exhortation to a Divided Church

The New Testament contains three letters attributed to John. How these letters connect to the Gospel according to John and the book of Revelation is not easy to determine. Scholars agree that all came from a community of “Johannine Christianity” in the late first century, but neither their precise authorship nor sequence has been established. We are not even sure of the location of this “Johannine Christianity,” although Asia Minor seems most likely. In such a state of ignorance, hypotheses abound. The introductions to each of these letters in the NABRE give some sense of the options (cf. pp. 1740–1741, 1746, 1747–1748).

What we can learn of “Johannine Christianity” derives from the writings themselves. Apart from the connection to John, what common characteristics marked this version of messianism? First, the figure of Jesus played a central role in the identity of the community. Second, these churches had experienced tragic division. In the Gospel and Revelation, there is conflict between these messianists and the Jews. In the letters and Revelation, there is also evidence of divisions within the churches. Third, this experience of division sharpened the community’s symbols into a stark dualism: light and darkness, life and death, truth and falsehood, flesh and spirit.

The Three Letters

In the three letters, we see conflict happening within the churches. Disputes involve the proper understanding of Jesus. The letters provide a window on this early Christian conflict, revealing at once its multiple dimensions and its seriousness. It is impossible to say at this distance exactly how the letters relate to each other or to the situation. Second and 3 John are real letters and claim to come from “the Elder.” First John is anonymous and not really a letter so much as a sermonic exhortation.

Some think that the three letters show three stages of the community’s conflict. This hypothesis is possible, but a better one is that the three documents were written at the same time by the same author and sent to a single church aligned with “The Elder.” Each letter fulfills a specific function: 3 John recommends the mailman, Demetrius, to the church leader, Gaius. Second John is a cover letter to be read publicly to the church. First John is the centerpiece, an exhortation to a community divided by conflict. The reading guides for 2 and 3 John will describe how they fulfill their functions. Let us concentrate first on 1 John.

The Character of 1 John

Because it is not so closely tied to the particulars of a specific community’s life, 1 John lends itself readily to every time and place. For a document generated by bitter conflict, it is amazingly positive and loving in tone. Christians through the ages have rightly considered it one of the great spiritual witnesses of the New Testament.

The structure of this writing is not obvious. Certainly it is not a genuine letter. Even as a sermon, it tends to wander a bit, repeating the same points. First John at times has the appearance of an argument but none of the substance. Readers are sometimes shocked at the lack of consistency. What is stated positively is sometimes denied only a short time later. The reason for this alternation of ideal and real lies in the circumstances being addressed.

The Johannine Christians saw their lives defined by a choice. Their first and basic choice was to follow Jesus. They considered that truth, life, and light characterized them; while falsehood, darkness, and death characterized those who did not follow Jesus. The Christians were the community of true prophecy. But now, the community finds itself divided into two hostile camps, and the cause of division is precisely what should have been the centerpiece of this unity: the proper understanding of the nature and role of Jesus.

First John’s apparent indecisiveness reflects the chastened perspective caused by the trauma of division. The symbols of unity and perfection need reshaping. The author urges his readers away from a smug sense of their own perfection, to an awareness of their need to repent. Not only “those who went out from us” have sinned; all have sinned and need the expiation offered by Jesus.

Opening Exhortation (1:1–2:17)

First John opens with a poetic prologue (1:1–4) that resembles the prologue to the Fourth Gospel (Jn 1:1–8) in its deliberate allusion to Genesis 1:1 (“in the beginning”), and its emphasis on the “word of life.” In the epistle’s prologue, however, the stress is placed on the community’s experience of the Word in Jesus. The writer testifies to what he has “seen and heard and touched” (compare Jn 19:35). The experience, furthermore, is one shared by the readers. The language of fellowship dominates 1:3f. The believers have fellowship with God the Father through Jesus. They are also, by that same agency, to have fellowship among themselves. The textual variant in 1:4 illustrates the dense interweaving. Manuscripts differ on reading “your” joy, or “our” joy. For this writer, both meanings coincide.

The section closes with another deliberately rhetorical statement of purpose: “I am writing to you because” (2:12–14). Different groups in the community are addressed, but the message is basically one message and is more clearly spelled out by 2:15–17: the church is to live by the “will of God” and not by the standards of the “world.” John’s talk about “love of the world” here is very close to that in the letter of James about the “lover of the world” (Jas 4:4) and means much the same thing. The writer does not forbid love for humanity; he denounces the “worldliness” that denies God’s claim on his creation and bases existence on “sensual lust, enticement for the eyes, and a pretentious life” (2:16).

Within the framework provided by the prologue and the statement of purpose, the rest of the opening section of this sermon serves to remind the readers of the need to live by the “message we have heard from him and proclaim to you” (1:5).

The community has, to be sure, already heard that “God is light, and in him there is no darkness at all” (1:5). But now, because of the division in this community, a new sense of reality is required. Behavior must match their ideals. They can no longer simply assume that “we are the light” without hesitation. In fact, sin does occur among them, and they need to repent of it. They cannot claim to be “in the light” while their behavior shows that they “walk in darkness” (1:6). That is a lie. Likewise, they cannot claim to “know God” while not keeping God’s commandments (2:4).

With a different vocabulary than James, but with a quite similar concern, John seeks to make his readers’ actions conform to their convictions. And the great commandment of God that is to govern the life of the community is also—as in James—the law of love for neighbor, the test whether one is “in the light” or “in the darkness.” For 1 John, it is not simply doctrinal correctness that spells true fellowship in the community but ethical consistency.

First John places special emphasis on the role of Jesus as expiation for sin (1:7; 2:2) and advocate for believers (2:1). The community’s failure, demonstrated in its division into hostile parties, makes the need for intercession clear. They cannot do it alone. It also makes clear that “love” is not simply a state of mind, but something to be performed. In an atmosphere of hurt and separation, such performance is difficult.

The Divided Community (2:18–3:24)

The severity of the community’s crisis is indicated by the fact that the writer thinks the end of all things is at hand. The author calls those who have left the community “antichrists.” In apocalyptic literature, the presence of antichrist is a sign of the final tribulation (see Mt 24:24). The theme of Jesus’s return occurs again in 2:28 and 3:2. Typical of apocalyptic also is the exhortation to stand fast (“remain in him,” 2:24, 27, 28. 3:6) and to avoid being deceived (2:26).

The threat to the community is the greater because it derives from former members: “they went out from us.” It is impossible for this writer to acknowledge fully that they had ever been of one spirit with the community: “they were not really of our number.” What proof does he have? “If they had been, they would have remained” (2:19). This is desperate logic. It indicates the shock given to a church devoted to unity and opposition to a world “out there” when it experiences conflict and division from within. The very identity of the community is called into question.

We cannot be sure exactly what the bone of contention was between those who left and those who stayed, only that it involved the proper understanding of Jesus. The author uses the language of “denial” and “confession” (2:22f), and it seems clear that a formal doctrinal issue is at stake (see also 2 Jn 7). The briefest description of the deviance is that they deny “Jesus is the Christ.” This obviously qualifies them to be “antichrists” in the narrow sense, but it is hard to imagine how such people could ever have been part of the messianic community. Such a denial is more appropriate to nonbelieving Jews. To complicate matters, the author adds other features in 3:23; 4:2f; 5:1–10. These make it appear that outsiders deny either the full divine origin of Jesus (that he is “God’s son”) or his full humanity (that he “came in the flesh”). In short, John is convinced his party has the full understanding of Jesus and his opponents do not; beyond that general statement we cannot advance.

Characteristic of this writing, however, is its ability to combine a claim to possession of “the truth” (2:21), with a demand at the same time for transformation. The community is not yet perfect. They are indeed, to use one of their favorite expressions, “children of God” (see Jn 1:12), but they still need to mature. Only when he appears will they become “like him, for we shall see him as he is” (3:2). Having the truth means living the truth, which demands strict ethical norms. In 3:4–18, John develops the strongest possible contrast between the way of the world governed by the devil (4:8; 5:19) and the way revealed by God through the Messiah Jesus. The way of the world is driven by the envy that leads to murder (the example of Cain, 3:12; compare Jas 4:1–5). The way Jesus reveals is exactly the opposite. It does not take away life but gives it, and in the giving of life reveals love: “the way we came to know love was that he laid down his life for us.” The moral correlative follows at once: “so we ought to lay down our lives for our brothers” (3:16). The New Testament contains no more direct connection between the work of the Messiah and the pattern of Christian existence. And lest anyone think the giving of life can be accomplished in attitude only or once for all, John spells it out in terms of the sharing of material possessions with the needy, and concludes in a manner familiar to us from Paul and James, “let us love not in word or speech but in deed and truth.”

Finally, the claim to be in possession of the truth must be qualified by the deeper statement of humility in 3:19–21. It is because they are in the hands of the one who is “greater than our hearts and knows everything” that they know they belong to the truth. It is not their accomplishment but his gift; their adequate response is to act as he did, in love (3:23f).

The Remnant Community (4:1–5:21)

Because the community is divided, shared symbols are now being interpreted by opposing parties to the dispute. More careful judgment is therefore required. John reminds his readers of the need to “test the spirits to see whether they belong to God” (4:1). As earlier he had spoken of the opponents as “antichrists,” now he applies to them the epithet “false prophets,” another favorite designation in apocalyptic (see Mt 24:11). In this case, the proper confession of Jesus is the criterion for true and false prophecy, certifying whether the speaker belongs to God or to “the world” (4:2–4, 13–16).

Within the remnant community itself, discernment is also required. How can the church be sure that it lives by the Spirit of God? That it has the right confession of Jesus is taken for granted. But John adds the ethical dimension; keeping the commandment of God shows their love for God (5:2f). What is that commandment? It is that they are to love each other. John indissolubly joins love of God and neighbor; doing one is doing the other: “If anyone says ‘I love God’ but hates his brother, he is a liar” (4:20). As earlier in 3:15–16, John grounds such love in the way God has revealed himself to be for humans in the sending of his son and Jesus’s expiatory death: “In this is love: not that we have loved God, but that he loved us and sent his Son as expiation for our sins” (4:10). Since humans do not have direct access to God (4:12; see Jn 1:18), their relationship to God is mediated by their relationships with each other (4:12, 20f).

The last section of this sermon is filled with a mixture of confidence and caution. The community living by God’s love and faith is sure of victory “over the world” (5:4f), even though “the whole world is under the power of the evil one” (5:19). This is because the community’s testimony is not isolated. It is supported by the testimony of Father, Son, and Spirit, each working in and through the church (5:6–9). The community is confident of its gift of “eternal life” (2:25; 5:11, 13). But the victory over sin and death (see 3:7–14) is not yet complete. Idolatry is a temptation that needs to be avoided (5:21); perfect love has not yet driven out fear (4:18); mutual correction is required (5:16f). For this divided community, nothing can any longer be taken for granted; division has given new urgency to discernment (5:20).

2 JOHN

[see pages 1746–1747 of the New Testament]

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

A Cover Letter to the Church

Unless 2 and 3 John are connected to the same moment of crisis that generated 1 John, it is hard to explain their preservation by a local church, their exchange between churches, or their eventual inclusion in the New Testament canon. In the Reading Guide to 1 John (RG 562), the suggestion is made that all three letters were sent in a single packet by the emissary Demetrius to the local leader Gaius (see 3 Jn) who was still loyal to “the Elder” in the dispute dividing Johannine Christianity into hostile factions.

Whereas 1 John lacks all epistolary character and appears as a sermon to be delivered aloud to an assembly (or even a number of assemblies), 2 John bears the marks of a genuine letter. It has the formal elements of greeting (1–3), body (4–12) and farewell (13). It mentions the desire of the writer to visit the addressees (12). Unlike 3 John, however, which is addressed to an individual, 2 John is written to the “chosen Lady” and her children (1). The designation is almost certainly an honorary title for the church itself. The argument that it refers to a specific woman leader is doubtful, if the rest of the reconstruction here being suggested makes sense. The “children,” of course, are the ones really being addressed; the second-person verbs are predominantly in the plural.

The symbols of Johannine Christianity are very much in evidence. Notice the emphasis on “truth” (1–3) and on “walking in the truth” (4); on “keeping the commandment,” which is not new but from the beginning (5); on love for one another as the fulfillment of that commandment (6); on the creation of mutual joy as the mark of fellowship (12). Surely, such a cluster of distinctive themes makes best sense when read together with 1 John.

What distinguishes 2 John is its function. In 3 John 9, the Elder says that he “is writing” (or “wrote”) something to the church. In all likelihood, this refers to 1 John, the exhortation to a remnant community. Second John, then, is undoubtedly a letter of introduction to the community as such, to be read before the sermon is delivered, to identify its author, to emphasize its main teaching, and to suggest some practical actions to be taken by the community. These may or may not be fully in accord with the spirit of 1 John, but they are certainly recognizable as a response to the crisis signaled by 3 John.

Strategies for Survival

Again we meet the split between those who “walk in truth” and the “many deceivers who have gone out into the world” (7). As in 1 John, these are designated antichrists because they “do not acknowledge Jesus Christ as coming in the flesh.” In the Reading Guide to 1 John, we suggest how difficult it is to determine precisely what this denial implies. For the Elder, however, the opponents appear as “progressives” who have gone too far in their interpretation and no longer “remain in the teaching of the Christ” (or “about” the Christ). The Elder’s community is therefore portrayed as defending the traditional understanding of Jesus. The importance of right doctrine is underscored by the equation: having Christ is having God (see 1 Jn 4:3). For Johannine Christianity, the unique mediation of salvation by Jesus is axiomatic. He alone is the “way and the truth and the life” (Jn 14:6). The lesson is clear: misconstruing the mediator means missing the good news entirely. If the Elder’s readers do not hold to the proper understanding, they will “lose what they worked for.”

The community crisis is so severe that the Elder calls for the extraordinary practice of excommunication. They are neither to offer heretics hospitality nor even to greet them as brothers (10). Notice the connection, everywhere assumed in the New Testament, between message and messenger. Physical fellowship implies spiritual unanimity. Thus, “whoever greets him shares in his evil works” (11). Only those who deliver the proper doctrine (10) are to be welcomed. Here the Elder advocates the same practice of shunning and exclusion of which he accuses Diotrephes in 3 John. The battle is a bitter one.

It is difficult to know what positive instruction one should draw from these ancient fragments of hostile conflicts. Perhaps it is important for the church to remember in every age that it has never been easy to establish or to secure its identity; deviance and dispute are part of community life. Perhaps also, however, it is important for the church in every age to reflect whether proper doctrine is more important than the fellowship of love. Even in an age of ecumenism that issue remains unresolved.

3 JOHN

[see pages 1747–1749 of the New Testament]

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

A Letter of Recommendation

In addition to the letters Paul wrote to his delegates Timothy and Titus, the New Testament contains two other letters written explicitly to individuals—Paul’s letter to Philemon, and the Elder’s letter to Gaius, which we know as 3 John. Both Paul and John take up matters of community concern, while having the same specific function, that of recommending the bearer of the letter to the addressee. In the case of Philemon, Paul seeks to return a slave who had run away and to assure his welcome. In the case of 3 John, the Elder recommends to the local church leader his emissary Demetrius. He has a good reputation from all, and “we give our testimonial as well, and you know our testimony is true” (12).

The ancient world had conventions for such letters. They were widely used in early Christianity, as we learn elsewhere in Paul’s correspondence (see 2 Cor 3:1; Rom 16). It was natural for a missionary movement to certify its agents (apostles) with such letters, in order to ensure them a safe reception and the hospitality due such “co-workers in the truth” (8). Receiving such messengers, as we see also in 2 John, meant accepting their message as well, an understanding widespread in Judaism and reflected likewise in the sayings of Jesus: “Whoever listens to you listens to me. Whoever rejects you rejects me. And whoever rejects me rejects the one who sent me” (Lk 10:16). This principle became problematic when the movement itself divided into hostile parties. Paul complained of the Corinthians’ preference for apostles other than himself (2 Cor 10:12; 11:4). Third John points us directly to such a situation.

Third John is so tied to particular practical problems and so devoid of any real theology that it is doubtful that either it or 2 John would have been preserved or made part of the canon were it not associated with a writing that did transcend those circumstances by its religious message. This Reading Guide has proposed that the three letters of John were all part of the same packet delivered to Gaius from the Elder through Demetrius, and that the two smaller letters owe their preservation to the theological weightiness of 1 John.

But if its survival was accidental and its theology minimal, 3 John is all the more precious to readers today. It provides the key to the historical circumstances presupposed by 2 and 1 John. Without it, their religious emphasis would be less intelligible. And without 3 John, an appreciation for the travails of early Christianity would be appreciably diminished.

The Politics of Ecclesial Power

Third John reveals clearly that the struggle for the soul of Johannine Christianity involved structure as much as symbol, power as much as piety. Indeed, the two levels of conflict were intimately connected. On one side we see the Elder writing to his loyal colleague Gaius. On the other side is Diotrephes, who “loves to dominate.” Diotrephes not only asserts authority over Gaius at the local level, but he also refuses to acknowledge the authority of the Elder over the regional church. The author says that when he comes, he will “draw attention to what he is doing” (10), but this is a small threat to a rebellious local chieftain. The position of the Elder is threatened. He needs the personal loyalty of Gaius, and his financial assistance as well.

We are thereby brought to the political maneuvering at the heart of this battle. Diotrephes is not content to “spread evil nonsense” about the Elder. He takes positive action to suppress the Elder’s authority. He refuses himself to receive the Elder’s delegates, and, even more, Diotrephes expels from the church those who want to receive them (10). We can understand why the Elder appreciates Gaius’s reception of Demetrius, and we can grasp the significance of verses 5–8. The Elder needs to provide an alternative source of hospitality and missionary outfitting, since Diotrephes has taken up a position among those who “went out from us” (1 Jn 2:19) and no longer supports the Elder’s teaching.

Gaius is being asked to receive Demetrius (and his companions) as well as equip them for their next stage of travel. Perhaps by implication the Elder’s future emissaries are also included in the request. Since the Johannine missionaries accept nothing from the “pagans” (“the world”), the need for a network of hospitality and financial support is obvious (7). As in 2 John, financial sharing is tantamount to spiritual fellowship. Helping such missionaries is being “co-workers in the truth” (8). It is clear as well that both parties to the dispute are using the same tactics. Here, Diotrephes is the one shunning and excommunicating. But in 2 John we find the Elder advocating the same actions among his followers.

The internecine struggles of early Christianity are not terribly edifying, but they are instructive. Christians who long for a golden age of harmony should be reminded that there never was one. Among history’s benefits is liberation from myth. And edifying or not, these letters testify to another truth. The struggle for identity is never simply a matter of ideas or even symbols. It involves inevitably the messy realities of money and political power.

JUDE

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

The Obscurity of Jude

Although Jude is among the shortest writings in the New Testament, it bristles with difficulties. Some of these have to do with placing the composition in the historical development of early Christianity. Others involve grasping its language, which has a number of obscure allusions. The two sorts of problems are related. Our ignorance of the author and his circumstances prevents us from having a secure context for reading the letter. But because Jude so obviously was responding to some kind of specific crisis, every attempt must be made to construct such a context if the letter is to yield any sense at all.

The introduction in the NABRE (New Testament, p. 1749) states the majority scholarly opinion on most of the questions concerning authorship and occasion. Jude is considered a general epistle of relatively late date. It is an attack on false teachers, probably representing some form of Gnosticism (an early deviant form of Christianity stressing “self-fulfillment”). Another reading of the evidence suggests that Jude could have been written at virtually any period and was concerned less with false teaching than with bad behavior. This minority view will be developed in the paragraphs to follow. The main point, of course, is to make as good sense as possible out of the letter.

Literary Connections

Far more puzzling than the identity of Jude is the placement of his letter among other early Christian literature. The author mentions an earlier draft he had begun, when the crisis among his readers demanded his turning attention to the polemic now being read by them (3). What was that earlier version? A not entirely unrelated issue is the relation of Jude to 2 Peter.

Everyone recognizes that the material in 2 Peter 2 is similar to that in Jude 5–13. Less clear is whether one author depended on the other, or both relied on a shared earlier tradition. Neither should the resemblance be overstated. Jude is not simply a source for 2 Peter. Each sharpens the material to a different polemical point.

Further literary puzzles are provided by Jude’s literary allusions. He cites examples of sinners being punished. Some are readily apparent from the Bible, although a few (like Balaam) may derive as well from Jewish biblical interpretation. Jude also cites the apocryphal writing known as 1 Enoch as though it were Scripture (14). And his version of the dispute between Michael and Satan over the body of Moses appears to derive from another apocryphal writing, The Assumption of Moses (9). His reference to the “words spoken . . . by the apostles” (17) is no clearer, since it is more an amalgam of early Christian statements on the end-time (cf., Mk 13:22; 1 Tm 4:1–3) than a specific citation.

That an author could assume familiarity with such sources among his readers seems to presuppose either a Jewish-Christian readership, or a Gentile one familiar with Jewish apocrypha. What the ancient readers presumably understood, we do not, and the lack of literary context continues to make this letter obscure to present-day readers.

Historical Setting

Writings like 2 Peter and Jude remind us how little we know about early Christianity apart from the chronology provided by Acts and Paul’s letters. We cannot fit them into any development we know about and must rely on guesswork. Every hypothesis, furthermore, is based solely on the text itself. Precision concerning what the text does and does not say is obviously critical to the value of any reconstruction.

Jude clearly takes a polemical stand against opponents and exhorts its readers to remain steadfast. Contrary to the usual opinion, however, the text contains no clear indication that Jude was opposing “false teachers” or that they were purveying any “heresy.” Their “scorning of Lordship” (4, 8) seems to have been practical rather than theoretical. Jude attacks immoral behavior rather than false teaching. So thorough is his disparagement, indeed, that it is hard to know even what they were doing. He specifically accuses them of disrupting the community love feasts. The term is usually taken to mean eucharistic meals. They are also accused of carousing and of looking after only themselves (literally: “shepherding themselves,” 12). He also calls their behavior “divisive” (19). Otherwise, Jude uses all the standardized charges common to the polemic of the ancient world: they are sexually immoral (7), greedy (11, 16), slanderous (15), and living for their own desires (16). In short, they “live on the natural plane, devoid of the Spirit” (19). They “pervert the grace of our God into licentiousness” (4).

Living by God’s Grace

Letters of Paul such as 1 Corinthians attest how difficult it was for the early Christians to translate the gift of God (grace) into consistent patterns of moral behavior. Legitimate disagreement could exist on matters of diet, work, use of possessions, and the like. It was not immediately obvious in all cases what “life in the Spirit” meant behaviorally. In the case of Jude, however, it appears that disagreement has overstepped the boundary into true moral deviance; hence the outrage of the author. The opponents are “perverting the gift.”

Jude’s first line of defense is an attack on the immoral people. He tries to demonstrate from Scripture how there have always been such troublemakers, and they have always been punished. These will be punished as well. In contrast to 2 Peter 2, in which the emphasis is on the power of God to judge the righteous and unrighteous, in Jude the stress is entirely on the punishment of the rebellious.

The polemic is not random but carefully argued, with some rhetorical polish. Notice the repetition of “these people” in verses 8, 10, 12, 16, and 19, which brings the examples of old to bear on the present circumstances. Jude also plays on the Greek words for “keep” in verses 1, 6, 13, 21, and 24. His opponents fail to “keep their place,” but Jude’s readers are to “keep themselves in the love of God” who is, in turn, able to “keep them from stumbling.”

Jude’s second line of defense is to edify (“build up”) his readers in their “most holy faith” (20). He reminds them that God dealt with troubles like these from of old, and in fact the apostles of Jesus had foretold the emergence of such rebellious “scoffers” (18f). He reassures them that they are being “kept safe for Jesus Christ” despite this turmoil (1). Jude does not suggest that it is the believers’ role to punish the reprobate. He exhorts them to avoid such immoral behavior (23) and to build up their own faith. If the opponents are “devoid of the Spirit,” the believers are to “pray in the holy Spirit” (20). But their love for God is to be demonstrated in an attitude of mercy and care for those who waver and even for those who appear to be lost (22f).

Jude’s witness is a limited one. But the use of moral outrage is not entirely exhausted by the circumstances of the first century. The tendency to turn grace into libertinism is a perennial one. Combining justifiable outrage at license with mercy for the licentious is a delicate and difficult art. Few writings have carried it off as well as Jude.

REVELATION

see pages [1751–1778 of the New Testament]

BEFORE BEGINNING . . .

A Book of Christian Prophecy

The book of Revelation makes for difficult reading. Over the centuries, many interpretations have led to disastrous consequences both for individuals and communities. The fundamental error is to take Revelation as a literal set of predictions from the past about current events. Reading Revelation that way has been popular for a long time, but it has become an obsession for many contemporaries. Such readings have successively been disconfirmed by facts; the “end-time” has been awaited many times without occurring. Such readings have caused the distortion of lives. Many have abandoned livelihood and loved ones to meet the New Jerusalem, only to have their dreams destroyed. Such readings also miss the real religious message of Revelation. They reduce its value to that of an astrological chart.

Although the text itself virtually calls out for a futuristic reading, with its promise to reveal “what must happen soon” (22:6), it is critical to recognize that just such statements are standard features of a specific literary genre of the ancient world, called apocalyptic. Two convictions should guide faithful study of Revelation. First, as with all the biblical writings, the Word of God was addressed first to the original audience; a text’s “fuller” meaning for successive ages is secondary and never to be divorced from that first, historical, meaning. Second, as in all literature, religious or otherwise, literary genre dictates meaning. Newspapers and poetry do not communicate their respective “truths” in identical ways. Knowing the conventions of a literary form is necessary to intelligent reading.

Revelation as Apocalyptic

At least since the book of Daniel in the Old Testament, the apocalyptic style was widely used in Judaism during the New Testament period. Generated by persecution from without and the threat of apostasy from within, this “literature of the oppressed” quickly gained certain standard features: revelations about the future are experienced in dreams or visions, and the insights are communicated through a complex symbolism involving numbers, animals, and cosmic phenomena. The element of prediction is actually a fiction. The seer interprets events of his own age, using a figure of the past (such as Enoch) or an angelic being as a spokesperson.

These literary features serve to express an interpretation of history. Apocalyptic defends God's justice. Events appear to be under the control of evil people or even satanic powers, since those devoted to God are being persecuted. Such is the "present age." But apocalyptic places God's blessing in a future time, "the age to come." Just when things become humanly impossible on earth, God will intervene (e.g., through a Messiah) to save his own, and thus inaugurate the "kingdom of God." Apocalyptic reconciles the conviction that God controls history with experiences that suggest God does not. The religious message of apocalyptic is therefore simple. To the faithful, it says, "hold on"; to the wavering, "stand fast." It offers the hope of eventual vindication to those now oppressed but remaining loyal to the one God.

Revelation as Prophecy

Revelation fits within this apocalyptic genre well. It has visions, animals, numbers, and cosmic catastrophes. It has a two-age interpretation of history. And its basic religious message is a call for the "endurance of the holy ones" (13:10; 14:12). In other ways, however, Revelation transcends apocalyptic. The author is not a fictional sage from the past but a leader who is well known to his readers. In chapters 2 and 3, the voice of prophecy is directed explicitly (and not in coded fashion) to the seven churches of Asia Minor. Most importantly, for Revelation the turn of the ages has already begun. The victory of God over evil has in principle been accomplished through the death and resurrection of Jesus; even more impressively, the faithful who have been killed already share in God's victory in heaven.

The self-understanding of the church in this writing is thoroughly prophetic. Those who follow Jesus are "servants and prophets and holy ones" (11:18). Their witness is the "spirit of prophecy" (19:10). Jesus is the first and "faithful witness" (1:5) whose mission they continue. The nature of their prophecy is to bear witness to the reality of God in the world. In the letters of chapters 2 and 3, this is expressed as fidelity in face of corruption or apostasy. In the visions of chapters 4 through 21, it is expressed as loyalty in face of the idolatrous claims of the state and even of possible death.

The Opening Vision (1:1–20)

The prologue (1:1–3) and the epilogue (22:6–21) provide an explicit prophetic framework for the entire work and reveal a self-conscious literary awareness as well (cf. 1:3; 22:18). The understanding of prophecy as witness, which becomes the major theme of the book, is sounded at once (1:2).

The popularity of letter writing in early Christianity is shown by the fact that this apocalyptic writing contains letters to the seven churches of Asia Minor (Rev 2–3), and even has an epistolary greeting to introduce the work (1:4–8). The author identifies himself as one known to his readers and recounts the vision that provides the basis for the rest of the book. The phrasing of 1:9 suggests that John is on the Greek island of Patmos as a punishment for his witness to Jesus. The vision that now comforts him becomes an exhortation to all who are likewise oppressed.

The Risen Jesus is encountered as the Son of Man (the central figure in much apocalyptic), described in the most transcendent terms available. The reader is now in the realm of visions, which means the realm of symbols. The terms are obviously not meant literally, any more than the later fantastic descriptions of heaven. The terms used here and elsewhere are not fresh-minted but are the coinage of biblical symbolism. Of all apocalyptic writings, Revelation most artfully weaves together the themes of classical prophecy, especially from the prophet Ezekiel. The footnotes and cross-references in the NABRE will repay the effort required to trace out such themes. One should quickly realize that Revelation is a self-conscious and complex literary construction.

The Son of Man appears with the stars in his hands, standing amid seven lampstands. Revelation makes clear from the start that it is the risen and powerful Lord (in cosmic control) who is revealed, and that he is present to the churches (1:20), the concerns of which are taken up in the letters that follow.

Letters to the Seven Churches (2:1–3:22)

In what are literally “spirit letters” (see 2:7) from the Risen Jesus, seven churches of well-known cities in Asia Minor receive individualized prophecies. Revelation understands “prophecy” as exhortations to remain faithful to the integrity of their calling. The trials and lapses of the Christians in these communities are here put on remarkable display. We also hear fragments of sayings (such as in 2:3) that occur elsewhere in the New Testament literature (see 1 Thes 5:2 and Mk 13:33).

The letters all follow the same format. There is a greeting, followed by an elaborate designation of Jesus. The Risen Lord analyzes each community's spiritual condition and concludes with words of warning or of promise. The description of the church's struggles show how they faced opposition from without (as from the Jews), but even more, division within (as with the Nicolaitans). Corruption, too, appears as a vivid possibility. Typical for Johannine literature, the opposition is pictured in terms of false prophecy (2:20). The focus of praise and of persuasion in these letters is endurance.

The imagery of the letters is lush. Who can resist the almost fairy-tale quality of this statement: "I shall also give a white amulet upon which is inscribed a new name, which no one knows except the one who receives it" (2:17)? Beneath the poetry, however, lies grim reality. The difficulty in these letters of maintaining loyalty in the face of social exclusion and human laxity is raised, in the visions that follow, to the level of a cosmic conflict between the Lord and the forces of evil.

God and the Lamb in Heaven (4:1–5:14)

John is "caught up in spirit" (4:2), and the rest of Revelation consists in the visions he experienced in his ecstatic state. The vision is a staple of apocalyptic. It is found with equal frequency in early Jewish mysticism, called Merkabah, or "throne-chariot" mysticism. In prayer, the adept ascended through the heavens to the throne of God's presence. Much of the celestial scenery here resembles that of the Merkabah: the jewel-encrusted throne room (4:3f); the sea of glass (4:6); the angelic creatures (4:6–9), and the numinous hymns sung in praise of God (5:9–13).

A dramatic departure from standard symbolism is the appearance of "the Lamb that seemed to have been slain" (5:6). Jesus is also called "Lamb of God" in John's Gospel (1:29; see also Jn 19:36, a reference to the Passover lamb). It is a bold stroke to picture Jesus in such paradoxical animal terms. The salient aspect of the lamb is its sacrificial function: Jesus was slain. But this lamb is also "the lion of the tribe of Judah," who has triumphed over death (5:5). In a powerful assertion of Jesus's status after his resurrection, the lamb is at "the right hand of the one who sat on the throne" (5:7; see Ps 110:1). Both figures receive the praise of the heavenly creatures (5:9–11) and indeed of all creation (5:13f).

The special character of the visions of Revelation is shown by the problem of the “scroll” (5:1). It contains the secrets to be revealed, and because of its use in Ezekiel it is immediately recognizable as a symbol for prophecy (10:8–11 and Ez 2:9–3:4). Because of his resurrection, Jesus is empowered to open the scroll (5:5). What follows, therefore, is both a revelation of and from Jesus Christ (see 1:1). The visions will show “what must happen afterwards” (4:1), but the reader is not frightened, knowing from this first vision that the fundamental victory has already been accomplished.

Visions of Cosmic Conflict (6:1–16:21)

The next section of Revelation is the most difficult to make sense of, and, not surprisingly, the most worked over for signs of the end. The candidates selected to fit the profile of the “Beast” with the number 666 (13:18) have ranged from Nero to Hitler.

The visions are so structured as to give the illusion of temporal sequence, linked together as they are by the phrase “and then I saw . . .” It is indeed tempting to translate a series of visions into a sequence of historical events, so readers have tried to compute the overlapping series of sevens: seals (6:1–17; 8:1), trumpets (8:1–9:21; 11:15), plagues (15:1–8), and bowls (16:1–20). But neither the events reported by headlines nor elaborate literary analyses have ever satisfactorily unlocked this dense poetry. It is in fact more likely that all the visions repeat the same basic message. The saints on earth, locked in conflict with hostile forces, find a cosmic counterpart in the struggle between God and Satan.

Thus, on one side we see all the “beasts” who oppose the faithful: the dragon (12:1–8), the first beast (13:1–10), and the second beast (13:11–17). These are not separate enemies but successive masks of the one force of evil. As in modern horror films, the destruction of one gives rise to another more horrifying still. Beneath the different manifestations, one visible enemy is most prevalent: the idolatrous state that persecutes the saints, enslaves them, and seeks to kill them (13:7–18).

On the other side are those loyal to God, the “servants, prophets, and holy ones” (11:18; 19:9f). They continue Jesus’s own faithful witness to God by witnessing to Jesus. By so doing, they reject the idolatrous claims of the state on their obeisance. They suffer the consequences, some of them by shedding blood. Revelation establishes the connection between “witness” and “martyr” by the disciples’ imitation of Jesus’s death. The prophetic self-consciousness of this church is most clearly stated in the account of the two witnesses (11:1–13). This earthly interlude shows two people, who both “witness” and “testify” (the terms are interchangeable). They are killed in imitation of Jesus (11:7). They are also called into heaven (11:12). The vignette describes the conviction of Revelation that those who share Jesus’s death also share his triumph in heaven. Thus, alternating with scenes of suffering on earth below are serene descriptions of the saints in heaven celebrating the anticipated and certain victory of the Lamb (5:9f; 6:9–11; 7:4–7; 14:1–5; 15:2–4). In standard apocalyptic, history moves downward to ever more dismal circumstances, until God finally intervenes. In Revelation, however, the final outcome is not in doubt. Not only Jesus but also those “defeated” with him by evil already share in the resurrection triumph. The earthly conquest is just a matter of tidying up.

It is useless to tease such poetry into a train schedule. The vision here is not one of history unfolding like clockwork; it is a religious vision of God’s ultimate conquest despite current appearances. Once the reader lets go of the obsessive “need to know” that twists beauty into charts and tables, it is possible to wonder at the powerful poetic and religious imagination at work in these glorious images. On the side of evil, what genius to make the second beast, who is a “false prophet,” mimic the features but betray the nature of the true prophet: “it had two horns like a lamb’s but spoke like a dragon” (13:11). On the side of good, what beauty in the prayer that speaks to the suffering of all humankind, that hopes “the Lamb who is in the center of the throne will shepherd them and lead them to springs of life-giving water, and God will wipe away every tear from their eyes” (7:17).

Punishment of Babylon (17:1–20:15)

The masks fall away, revealing as the real enemy of God’s people the Roman Empire, “the great harlot who lives near the many waters” (17:1). Rome is called Babylon (17:5) because in the biblical tradition it was Babylon above all that symbolized the desecration of the Temple and the exile of the people. In typical apocalyptic fashion, the sequence of events is laid out: God has given temporary rule to this evil empire to accomplish his ends. It does battle against the Lamb and the people.

The persecution and suffering were undoubtedly real. These Christians were faced with the choices of all who suffer oppression. Were they to resist violently and seek the overthrow of Rome? That was futile as well as contrary to their ethos. Were they simply to cooperate? That would be to lose their identity. They chose the path of passive resistance. They did not fight the beast, but neither would they do its bidding. The path of martyrdom, however slow or fast, is not easy. For those who survive, the psychic toll is considerable. Anger at the enemy can easily turn inward; patient endurance is hard. They were convinced that “the Lamb will conquer” (17:14), but in their earthly condition they had not yet seen it happen. Rome’s fall is therefore described in delicious detail. The pent-up fury of the oppressed is released in glee over the degradation of the oppressor. Much of this is obviously and literally wish fulfillment, the stuff of fantasy. The anger of a downtrodden people is deflected to a punishing God.

The end-time reveals how “the words of God are accomplished” (17:17). The “Word of God” himself (19:13) leads the climactic battle and inaugurates the messianic age, when the saints “will reign with Christ for a thousand years” (20:4–6). But this is not yet the end. There is another outbreak of demonic destruction (20:7–10) and the tossing of the Devil into the fire, then the resurrection of the dead for final judgment (20:11–15). These stages lack poetry, but the final vision overcomes this deficiency.

The New Creation (21:1–22:21)

The conclusion to Revelation is a fitting conclusion to the Bible as a whole. The vision of a new creation (21:1) is central to the New Testament (see, e.g., 2 Cor 5:17). The Christian experience of Christ was an absolute beginning, rooted in the ever-new life of God himself. God can say, “Behold, I make all things new” (21:5) because God is “the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end” of all things (21:6; 22:13). As Genesis began with the creation by a word, so the vision of the end-time recapitulates that beginning: creation is renewed.

The hope expressed by Revelation is not simply that souls be saved after death, or that evil be conquered, or even that saints reign for a thousand years over a burned-out terrain. The hope is that creation itself be transformed. So the sight of a “New Jerusalem coming down out of heaven from God” is the vision of a civilized order, one that is intrinsically holy in the proper sense. Human society is based on the recognition of God's power and presence. No place for those, now, who refuse the "dwelling place of God with the human race" (21:3, 7f).

In this city, there is not even need for "religion" as a separate compartment of life. The temple of the city is "the Lord God almighty and the Lamb" (21:22). And all the city's people will be priests of [the Lord] God (20:6), showing at last that the fundamental human vocation is praise of God (22:9). There need be no division between peoples. Nothing is here accursed (22:3). The nations will walk by the light of the Lamb (21:24), and the trees of the city "serve as medicine for the nations" (22:2). And what medicine! There will be "no more death or mourning, wailing or pain, [for] the old order has passed away" (21:4).

Great harm has come to those millenarians who have tried by force to make this vision a reality, and establish a thousand-year reign of the saints on earth. Great despair has come to the utopians who have tried on the basis of goodwill to construct a society like the New Jerusalem.

The vision has its value precisely as challenge, as ever-receding prophecy to all human effort for renewal. This does not come about by human cunning but by God's gift. The transformation is not technical but organic. But so compelling is the vision that no one who hears it can help joining in the plaintive cry of the epilogue, "Amen! Come, Lord Jesus!" The epilogue also reminds us that we are still in the in-between time when the world is not re-created. There is still need for the witness of prophecy and for endurance of the saints, for "the wicked still act wickedly, and the filthy still be filthy. The righteous must still do right, and the holy still be holy" (22:11). Here is a call to the saints.

THE OLD TESTAMENTNEW AMERICAN BIBLE

PREFACE TO THE NEW AMERICAN BIBLE

Old Testament

On September 30, 1943, His Holiness Pope Pius XII issued his now famous encyclical on scripture studies, Divino Afflante Spiritu. He wrote: “We ought to explain the original text which was written by the inspired author himself and has more authority and greater weight than any, even the very best, translation whether ancient or modern. This can be done all the more easily and fruitfully if to the knowledge of languages be joined a real skill in literary criticism of the same text.”

Early in 1944, in conformity with the spirit of the encyclical, and with the encouragement of Archbishop Cicognani, Apostolic Delegate to the United States, the Bishops’ Committee of the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine requested members of The Catholic Biblical Association of America to translate the sacred scriptures from the original languages or from the oldest extant form of the text, and to present the sense of the biblical text in as correct a form as possible.

The first English Catholic version of the Bible, the Douay-Rheims (1582–1609/10), and its revision by Bishop Challoner (1750) were based on the Latin Vulgate. In view of the relative certainties more recently attained by textual and higher criticism, it has become increasingly desirable that contemporary translations of the sacred books into English be prepared in which due reverence for the text and strict observance of the rules of criticism would be combined.

The New American Bible has accomplished this in response to the need of the church in America today. It is the achievement of some fifty biblical scholars, the greater number of whom, though not all, are Catholics. In particular, the editors-in-chief have devoted twenty-five years to this work. The collaboration of scholars who are not Catholic fulfills the directive of the Second Vatican Council, not only that “correct translations be made into different languages especially from the original texts of the sacred books,” but that, “with the approval of the church authority, these translations be produced in cooperation with separated brothers” so that “all Christians may be able to use them.”

The text of the books contained in The New American Bible is a completely new translation throughout. From the original and the oldest available texts of the sacred books, it aims to convey as directly as possible the thought and individual style of the inspired writers. The better understanding of Hebrew and Greek, and the steady development of the science of textual criticism, the fruit of patient study since the time of St. Jerome, have allowed the translators and editors in their use of all available materials to approach more closely than ever before the sense of what the sacred authors actually wrote.

Where the translation supposes the received text—Hebrew, Aramaic, or Greek, as the case may be—ordinarily contained in the best-known editions, as the original or the oldest extant form, no additional remarks are necessary. But for those who are happily able to study the original text of the scriptures at firsthand, a supplementary series of textual notes pertaining to the Old Testament was added originally in an appendix to the typical edition. (It is now obtainable in a separate booklet from The Catholic Biblical Association of America, The Catholic University of America, Washington, DC 20064.) These notes furnish a guide in those cases in which the editorial board judges that the manuscripts in the original languages, or the evidence of the ancient versions, or some similar source, furnish the correct reading of a passage, or at least a reading more true to the original than that customarily printed in the available editions.

The Massoretic text of 1 and 2 Samuel has in numerous instances been corrected by the more ancient manuscripts Samuel a, b, and c from Cave 4 of Qumran, with the aid of important evidence from the Septuagint in both its oldest form and its Lucianic recension. Fragments of the lost Book of Tobit in Aramaic and in Hebrew, recovered from Cave 4 of Qumran, are in substantial agreement with the Sinaiticus Greek recension used for the translation of this book. The lost original Hebrew text of 1 Maccabees is replaced by its oldest extant form in Greek. Judith, 2 Maccabees, and parts of Esther are also translated from the Greek.

The basic text for the Psalms is not the Massoretic but one which the editors considered closer to the original inspired form, namely the Hebrew text underlying the new Latin Psalter of the Church, the Liber Psalmorum (1944<sup>1</sup>, 1945<sup>2</sup>). Nevertheless they retained full liberty to establish the reading of the original text on sound critical principles.

The translation of Sirach, based on the original Hebrew as far as it is preserved and corrected from the ancient versions, is often interpreted in the light of the traditional Greek text. In the Book of Baruch the basic text is the Greek of the Septuagint, with some readings derived from an underlying Hebrew form no longer extant. In the deuterocanonical sections of Daniel (3, 24–90; 13, 1—14, 42), the basic text is the Greek text of Theodotion, occasionally revised according to the Greek text of the Septuagint.

In some instances in the Book of Job, in Proverbs, Sirach, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea, Amos, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, and Zechariah there is good reason to believe that the original order of lines was accidentally disturbed in the transmission of the text. The verse numbers given in such cases are always those of the current Hebrew text, though the arrangement differs. In these instances the textual notes advise the reader of the difficulty. Cases of exceptional dislocation are called to the reader's attention by footnotes.

The Books of Genesis to Ruth were first published in 1952; the Wisdom Books, Job to Sirach, in 1955; the Prophetic Books, Isaiah to Malachi, in 1961; and the Historical Books, Samuel to Maccabees, in 1969. In the present edition of Genesis to Ruth there are certain new features: a general introduction to the Pentateuch, a retranslation of the text of Genesis with an introduction, cross-references, and revised textual notes, besides new and expanded exegetical notes which take into consideration the various sources or literary traditions.

The revision of Job to Sirach includes changes in strophe division in Job and Proverbs and in titles of principal parts and sections of Wisdom and Ecclesiastes. Corrections in the text of Sirach are made in 39, 27—44, 17 on the basis of the Masada text, and in 51, 13–30 on the basis of the occurrence of this canticle in the Psalms scroll from Qumran Cave 11. In this typical edition, new corrections are reflected in the textual notes of Job, Proverbs, Wisdom, and Sirach. In the Psalms, the enumeration found in the Hebrew text is followed instead of the double enumeration, according to both the Hebrew and the Latin Vulgate texts, contained in the previous edition of this book.

In the Prophetic Books Isaiah to Malachi, only minor revisions have been made in the structure and wording of the texts, and in the textual notes.

The spelling of proper names in The New American Bible follows the customary forms found in most English Bibles since the Authorized Version.

The work of translating the Bible has been characterized as “the sacred and apostolic work of interpreting the word of God and of presenting it to the laity in translations as clear as the difficulty of the matter and the limitations of human knowledge permit” (A. G. Cicognani, Apostolic Delegate, in The Catholic Biblical Quarterly, 6, [1944], 389–90). In the appraisal of the present work, it is hoped that the words of the encyclical Divino afflante Spiritu will serve as a guide: “Let all the sons of the church bear in mind that the efforts of these resolute laborers in the vineyard of the Lord should be judged not only with equity and justice but also with the greatest charity; all moreover should abhor that intemperate zeal which imagines that whatever is new should for that very reason be opposed or suspected.”

Conscious of their personal limitations for the task thus defined, those who have prepared this text cannot expect that it will be considered perfect; but they can hope that it may deepen in its readers “the right understanding of the divinely given Scriptures,” and awaken in them “that piety by which it behooves us to be grateful to the God of all providence, who from the throne of his majesty has sent these books as so many personal letters to his own children” (Divino afflante Spiritu).

PREFACE TO THE REVISED *NEW AMERICAN BIBLE

Old Testament

The first step in the genesis of The New American Bible was taken in 1936 when His Excellency, the Most Reverend Edwin V. O'Hara, D.D., chairman of the Episcopal Committee of the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine, invited a group of Catholic Scripture scholars to plan for a revised edition of the Challoner-Rheims New Testament, primarily on the basis of the Vulgate; the plans soon expanded to include the revision of the Old Testament. Archbishop O'Hara's initiative resulted in the formation of the Catholic Biblical Association, whose principal activity in its early years was this work of revision and translation. (For information on the work done on the New Testament, see the "Preface to The New American Bible: First Edition of the New Testament" and "Preface to the Revised Edition.") In 1943 His Holiness Pope Pius XII issued the encyclical Divino afflante spiritu, which encouraged Scripture scholars to translate the Scriptures from the original languages. He wrote: "We ought to explain the original text which was written by the inspired author himself and has more authority and greater weight than any, even the very best, translation whether ancient or modern. This can be done all the more easily and fruitfully if to the knowledge of languages be joined a real skill in literary criticism of the same text." Although at this point work on almost twenty of the Old Testament books was completed or near completion, that work was abandoned and the new project of translating from the Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic was undertaken.

The completed books of the Old Testament were initially published, as they became available, in four volumes: Genesis–Ruth (1952), Job–Sirach (1955), Isaiah–Malachi (1961), and Samuel–Maccabees (1969). Some fifty scholars collaborated on this project; these were mainly Catholics, but, in accord with the suggestion of Vatican II that "with the approval of the church authority, these translations be produced in cooperation with separated brothers" so that "all Christians may be able to use them" (Dei Verbum, No. 22), non-Catholics also participated in the work. To this point the translation had been known under the name of the "Confraternity of Christian Doctrine" or CCD for short, but when these parts of the Old Testament were combined with the New Testament in a single volume, it was given the name “New American Bible,” in part to reflect its ecumenical character. In producing the new volume certain changes were made from the original four volumes: a retranslation of the Book of Genesis, cross-references, new and expanded exegetical notes.

New translations and revision of existing translations are required from time to time for various reasons. For example, it is important to keep pace with the discovery and publication of new and better ancient manuscripts (e.g., the Dead Sea scrolls) so that the best possible textual tradition will be followed, as required by Divino afflante spiritu. There are advances in linguistics of the biblical languages which make possible a better understanding and more accurate translation of the original languages. And there are changes and developments in vocabulary and the cultural background of the receptor language. An obvious example of this is the abandonment in English of the second person singular (use of “thee,” “thou,” “sayest,” “hearest”), which had a major impact on Bible translations. Other changes are less obvious but are nevertheless present. There have been changes in vocabulary; for example, the term “holocaust” is now normally reserved for the sacrilegious attempt to destroy the Jewish people by the Third Reich. Concerns such as these are reflected in what Pope John Paul II spoke of as the “three pillars” of good biblical translation: “A good translation is based on three pillars that must contemporaneously support the entire work. First, there must be a deep knowledge of the language and the cultural world at the point of origin. Next, there must be a good familiarity with the language and cultural context at the point where the work will arrive. Lastly, to crown the work with success, there must be an adequate mastery of the contents and meaning of what one is translating”—and he praised the translation that “utilizes the vocabulary and idioms of everyday speech” (“le parole e le forme della lingua di tutti i giorni”). (From an address to the United Bible Societies, November 26, 2001.)

This new edition is a thorough revision of the already excellent New American Bible Old Testament of 1970. Work on most books of the Old Testament, begun in 1994 and completed in 2001, was done by forty revisers and a board of eight editors. The 1991 revision of the Psalter, the work of thirty revisers and six editors, was further revised by seven revisers and two editors between 2009 and 2010. As suggested in the comments above, the revision aimed at making use of the best manuscript traditions available (see below), translating as accurately as possible, and rendering the result in good contemporary English. In many ways it is a more literal translation than the original NAB and has attempted to be more consistent in rendering Hebrew (or Greek) words and idioms, especially in technical contexts, such as regulations for sacrifices. In translating the Psalter special effort was made to provide a smooth, rhythmic translation for easy singing or recitation, and to retain the concrete imagery of the Hebrew.

Where the Old Testament translation supposes the received text—Hebrew, Aramaic, or Greek, as the case may be—ordinarily contained in the best-known editions, as the original or the oldest extant form, no additional remarks are necessary. Where the translators have departed from those received texts, e.g., by following the Septuagint rather than the Masoretic text, accepting a reading of what is judged to be a better textual tradition, as from a Qumran manuscript, or by emending a reading apparently corrupted in transmission, such changes are recorded in the revised edition of the Textual Notes on The New American Bible. Additional information on the textual tradition for some books may be found in the introduction to the book in the same Textual Notes.

In particular, important manuscripts from Cave 4 of Qumran, as well as the most useful recensions of the Septuagint, have been consulted in the preparation of 1 and 2 Samuel. Fragments of the lost Book of Tobit in Aramaic and in Hebrew, recovered from Cave 4 of Qumran, are in substantial agreement with the Sinaiticus Greek recension used for the translation of this book. The lost original Hebrew text of 1 Maccabees is replaced by its oldest extant form in Greek. Judith, 2 Maccabees, and parts of Esther are also translated from the Greek. The translation of The Wisdom of Ben Sira is based on the original Hebrew as far as it is preserved, with corrections from the ancient versions; otherwise, the Greek of the Septuagint is followed. In the Book of Baruch the basic text is the Greek of the Septuagint, with some readings derived from an underlying Hebrew form no longer extant. In the deuterocanonical sections of Daniel (3:24–90; 13:1–14:42), the basic text is the Greek text of so-called Theodotion, occasionally revised according to the Greek text of the Septuagint.

THE PENTATEUCH

See RG 109–20

The Pentateuch (Greek for “five books”) designates the first five books of the Jewish and Christian Bible (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy). Jewish tradition calls the five books Torah (Teaching, Law) because of the centrality of the Sinai covenant and legislation mediated through Moses.

The unity of the Pentateuch comes from the single story it tells. God creates the world and destines human beings for the blessings of progeny and land possession (Gn 1–3). As the human race expands, its evil conduct provokes God to send the flood to wipe out all but righteous Noah’s family. After the flood, the world is repopulated from his three sons, Ham, Shem, and Japheth (Gn 4–9). From them are descended the seventy nations of the civilized world whose offense this time (building a city rather than taking their assigned lands, Gn 10–11) provokes God to elect one family from the rest. Abraham and his wife, Sarah, landless and childless, are promised a child and the land of Canaan. Amid trials and fresh promises, a son (Isaac) is born to them and Abraham takes title to a sliver of Canaanite land, a kind of down payment for later possession (Gn 12–25). Gn 25–36 tells how their descendant Jacob becomes the father of twelve sons (because of which he is called “Israel”), and Gn 37–50 tells how the rejected brother Joseph saves the family from famine and brings them to Egypt.

In Egypt, a pharaoh who knew not Joseph subjects “the seventy sons of Jacob” (“the Hebrews”) to hard labor, keeping them from their land and destroying their male progeny (Ex 1). Moses is commissioned to lead the people out of Egypt to their own land (Ex 2–6). In ten plagues, the Lord defeats Pharaoh. Free at last, the Hebrews leave Egypt and journey to Mount Sinai (Ex 7–18), where they enter into a covenant to be the people of the Lord and be shaped by the Ten Commandments and other laws (Ex 19–24). Though the people commit apostasy when Moses goes back to the mountain for the plans of the dwelling (tabernacle), Moses' intercession prevents the abrogation of the covenant by God (Ex 32–34). A principle has been established, however: even the people's apostasy need not end their relationship with God. The book ends with the cloud and the glory taking possession of the tent of meeting (Ex 36:34–38). "The sons of Israel" in Ex 1:1 are the actual sons of Jacob/Israel the patriarch, but at the end of the book they are the nation Israel, for all the elements of nationhood in antiquity have been granted: a god (and temple), a leader, a land, and an authoritative tradition.

Israel remains at the holy mountain for almost a year. The entire block of material from Ex 19:1 to Nm 10:11 is situated at Sinai. The rituals of Leviticus and Numbers are delivered to Moses at the holy mountain, showing that Israel's worship was instituted by God and part of the very fabric of the people's life. Priestly material in the Book of Exodus (chaps. 25–31, 35–40) describes the basic institutions of Israelite worship (the tabernacle, its furniture, and priestly vestments). Leviticus, aptly called in rabbinic tradition the Priests' Manual, lays down the role of priests to teach Israel the distinction between clean and unclean and to see to their holiness. In Nm 10:11–22:1, the journey is resumed, this time from Sinai through the wilderness to Transjordan; Nm 22:2–36:13 tells of events and laws in the plains of Moab.

The final book of the Pentateuch, Deuteronomy, consists of four speeches by Moses to the people who have arrived at the plains of Moab, ready to conquer the land: 1:1–4:43; 4:44–28:68; 29:1–32:52; 33:1–34:12. Each speech is introduced by the formula "This is the law/words/blessing."

The Priestly editor used literary formulas. The formula "These are the generations (the wording can vary) of ..." occurs five times in the primordial history (Gn 2:4a; 5:1; 6:9; 10:1; 11:10) and five times in the ancestral history (11:27; 25:12; 25:19; 36:1 [v. 9 is secondary]; 37:2). In Exodus and Numbers the formula (with slight variations) "They departed from (place name) and encamped at (place name)" occurs in two groups of six: A. Ex 12:37a; 13:20; 14:1–2; 15:22a; 16:1; 17:1a; and B. 19:2; Nm 10:12; 20:1a; 20:22; 21:10–11; 22:1.

Who wrote the Pentateuch, and when? Up to the seventeenth century, the virtually unanimous answer of Jews and Christians was "Moses." Moses wrote the Pentateuch as David wrote the Psalter and Solomon wrote the wisdom literature. Though scholars had noted inconsistencies (compare Ishmael's age in Gn 16:16 and 21:5, 14) and duplications (Gn 12, 20, and 26), they assumed Mosaic authorship because of the prevalent theory of inspiration: God inspired authors while they wrote. With the rise of historical criticism, scholars began to use the doublets and inconsistencies as clues to different authors and traditions.

By the late nineteenth century, one theory of the sources of the Pentateuch had been worked out that proved acceptable in its main lines to the majority of scholars (apart from Christian and Jewish conservatives) then and now. It can be quickly sketched. In the premonarchic period of the Judges (ca. 1220–1020 B.C.), the twelve tribes had an oral form of their story from creation to the taking of the land. With the beginnings of monarchy in the late eleventh and tenth centuries, the oral material was written down, being known as the Yahwist account (from its use of the divine name Yhwh). Its abbreviation, "J," comes from the German spelling of the divine name. In the following century, another account took shape in the Northern Kingdom (called E after its use of Elohim as a divine name); some believe the E source is simply a supplement to J. After the fall of the Northern Kingdom in 722/721 B.C., the E version was taken to Jerusalem where it was combined with the J version to produce J-E. During the exile (conventionally dated 587–539 B.C.) or thereafter, an editor recast J-E to make it relevant for the exiled population. This editor is conventionally known as P (= Priestly) because of the chronological and ritual interests apparent in the work. P can also designate archival material and chronological notices. The audience for the Priestly edition no longer lived in the land and was deeply concerned about its survival and its claim on the land.

Deuteronomy (= D) stands alone in style, genre (preaching rather than narrative), and content. How did it come to be the fifth book of the Pentateuch? The J-E narrative actually ends in Numbers, when Israel arrives at the plains of Moab. Many scholars believe that Deuteronomy was secondarily attached to Numbers by moving the account of Moses' death from its original place in the J-E version in Numbers to the end of Deuteronomy (chap. 34). Deuteronomy was attached to Genesis–Numbers to link it to another great work, the Deuteronomistic History (Joshua to Kings). Deuteronomy is now the fifth book of the Pentateuch and the first book of the Deuteronomistic History.

In the last three decades, the above consensus on the composition of the Pentateuch has come under attack. Some critics are extremely skeptical about the historical value of the so-called early traditions, and a few doubt there ever was a preexilic monarchy of any substance. For such scholars, the Pentateuch is a retrojection from the fourth or third centuries B.C. Other scholars postulate a different sequence of sources, or understand the sources differently.

How should a modern religiously minded person read the Pentateuch? First, readers have before them the most significant thing, the text of the Pentateuch. It is accurately preserved, reasonably well understood, and capable of touching audiences of every age. Take and read! Second, the controversies are about the sources of the Pentateuch, especially their antiquity and character. Many details will never be known, for the evidence is scanty. Indeed, the origin of many great literary works is obscure.

The Pentateuch witnesses to a coherent story that begins with the creation of the world and ends with Israel taking its land. The same story is in the historical Ps 44, 77, 78, 80, 105, 114, and 149, and in the confessions Dt 26:5–9, Jos 24:2–13, and 1 Sm 12:7–13. Though the narrative enthralls and entertains, as all great literature does, it is well to remember that it is a theopolitical charter as well, meant to establish how and why descendants of the patriarchs are a uniquely holy people among the world's nations.

The destruction of the Jerusalem Temple and deportation of Israelites in the sixth century B.C. seemed to invalidate the charter, for Israel no longer possessed its land in any real sense. The last chapter of the ancient narrative—Israel dwelling securely in its land—no longer held true. The story had to be reinterpreted, and the Priestly editor is often credited with doing so. A preface (Gn 1) was added, emphasizing God's intent that human beings continue in existence through their progeny and possess their own land. Good news, surely, to a devastated people wondering whether they would survive and repossess their ancestral land. The ending of the old story was changed to depict Israel at the threshold of the promised land (the plains of Moab) rather than in it. Henceforth, Israel would be a people oriented toward the land rather than possessing it. The revised ending could not be more suitable for Jews and Christians alike. Both peoples can imagine themselves on the threshold of the promised land, listening to the word of God in order to be able to enter it in the future. For Christians particularly, the Pentateuch portrays the pilgrim people waiting for the full realization of the kingdom of God.

Genesis is the first book of the Pentateuch (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy), the first section of the Jewish and the Christian Scriptures. Its title in English, “Genesis,” comes from the Greek of Gn 2:4, literally, “the book of the generation (genesis) of the heavens and earth.” Its title in the Jewish Scriptures is the opening Hebrew word, Bereshit, “in the beginning.”

The book has two major sections—the creation and expansion of the human race (2:4–11:9), and the story of Abraham and his descendants (11:10–50:26). The first section deals with God and the nations, and the second deals with God and a particular nation, Israel. The opening creation account (1:1–2:3) lifts up two themes that play major roles in each section—the divine command to the first couple (standing for the whole race) to produce offspring and to possess land (1:28). In the first section, progeny and land appear in the form of births and genealogies (chaps. 2–9) and allotment of land (chaps. 10–11), and in the second, progeny and land appear in the form of promises of descendants and land to the ancestors. Another indication of editing is the formulaic introduction, “this is the story; these are the descendants” (Hebrew tōledôt), which occurs five times in Section I (2:4; 5:1; 6:9; 10:1; 10:31) and five times in Section II (11:10; 25:12, 19; 36:1 [v. 9 is an addition]; 37:2).

The Composition of the Book. For the literary sources of Genesis, see Introduction to the Pentateuch. As far as the sources of Genesis are concerned, contemporary readers can reasonably assume that ancient traditions (J and E) were edited in the sixth or fifth century B.C. for a Jewish audience that had suffered the effects of the exile and was now largely living outside of Palestine. The editor highlighted themes of vital concern to this audience: God intends that every nation have posterity and land; the ancestors of Israel are models for their descendants who also live in hope rather than in full possession of what has been promised; the ancient covenant with God is eternal, remaining valid even when the human party has been unfaithful. By highlighting such concerns, the editor addressed the worries of exiled Israel and indeed of contemporary Jews and Christians.

Genesis 1–11. The seven-day creation account in Gn 1:1–2:3 tells of a God whose mere word creates a beautiful universe in which human beings are an integral and important part. Though Gn 2:4–3:24 is often regarded as “the second creation story,” the text suggests that the whole of 2:4–11:9 tells one story. The plot of Gn 2–11 (creation, the flood, renewed creation) has been borrowed from creation-flood stories attested in Mesopotamian literature of the second and early first millennia. In the Mesopotamian creation-flood stories, the gods created the human race as slaves whose task it was to manage the universe for them—giving them food, clothing, and honor in temple ceremonies. In an unforeseen development, however, the human race grew so numerous and noisy that the gods could not sleep. Deeply angered, the gods decided to destroy the race by a universal flood. One man and his family, however, secretly warned of the flood by his patron god, built a boat and survived. Soon regretting their impetuous decision, the gods created a revised version of humankind. The new race was created mortal so they would never again grow numerous and bother the gods. The authors of Genesis adapted the creation-flood story in accord with their views of God and humanity. For example, they attributed the fault to human sin rather than to divine miscalculation (6:5–7) and had God reaffirm without change the original creation (9:1–7). In the biblical version God is just, powerful, and not needy.

How should modern readers interpret the creation-flood story in Gn 2–11? The stories are neither history nor myth. “Myth” is an unsuitable term, for it has several different meanings and connotes untruth in popular English. “History” is equally misleading, for it suggests that the events actually took place. The best term is creation-flood story. Ancient Near Eastern thinkers did not have our methods of exploring serious questions.

Instead, they used narratives for issues that we would call philosophical and theological. They added and subtracted narrative details and varied the plot as they sought meaning in the ancient stories. Their stories reveal a privileged time, when divine decisions were made that determined the future of the human race. The origin of something was thought to explain its present meaning, e.g., how God acts with justice and generosity, why human beings are rebellious, the nature of sexual attraction and marriage, why there are many peoples and languages. Though the stories may initially strike us as primitive and naive, they are in fact told with skill, compression, and subtlety. They provide profound answers to perennial questions about God and human beings.

Genesis 11–50. One Jewish tradition suggests that God, having been rebuffed in the attempt to forge a relationship with the nations, decided to concentrate on one nation in the hope that it would eventually bring in all the nations. The migration of Abraham's family (11:26–31) is part of the general movement of the human race to take possession of their lands (see 10:32–11:9). Abraham, however, must come into possession of his land in a manner different from the nations, for he will not immediately possess it nor will he have descendants in the manner of the nations, for he is old and his wife is childless (12:1–9). Abraham and Sarah have to live with their God in trust and obedience until at last Isaac is born to them and they manage to buy a sliver of the land (the burial cave at Machpelah, chap. 23). Abraham's humanity and faith offer a wonderful example to the exilic generation.

The historicity of the ancestral stories has been much discussed. Scholars have traditionally dated them sometime in the first half of the second millennium, though a few regard them as late (sixth or fifth century B.C.) and purely fictional. There is unfortunately no direct extra-biblical evidence confirming (or disproving) the stories. The ancestral stories have affinities, however, to late second-millennium stories of childless ancestors, and their proper names fit linguistic patterns attested in the second millennium. Given the lack of decisive evidence, it is reasonable to accept the Bible's own chronology that the patriarchs were the ancestors of Israel and that they lived well before the exodus that is generally dated in the thirteenth century.

Gn 25:19–35:43 are about Jacob and his twelve sons. The stories are united by a geographical frame: Jacob lives in Canaan until his theft of the right of the firstborn from his brother Esau forces him to flee to Paddan-Aram (alternately Aram-Naharaim). There his uncle Laban tricks him as he earlier tricked his brother. But Jacob is blessed with wealth and sons. He returns to Canaan to receive the final blessing, land, and on the way is reconciled with his brother Esau. As the sons have reached the number of twelve, the patriarch can be given the name Israel (32:28; 35:10). The blessings given to Abraham are reaffirmed to Isaac and to Jacob.

The last cycle of ancestor stories is about Jacob's son Joseph (37:1–50:26, though in chaps. 48–49 the focus swings back to Jacob). The Joseph stories are sophisticated in theme, deftly plotted, and show keen interest in the psychology of the characters. Jacob's favoring of Joseph, the son of his beloved wife Rachel, provokes his brothers to kill him. Joseph escapes death through the intercession of Reuben, the eldest, and of Judah, but is sold into slavery in Egypt. In the immediately following chap. 38, Judah undergoes experiences similar to Joseph's. Joseph, endowed by God with wisdom, becomes second only to Pharaoh in Egypt. From that powerful position, he encounters his unsuspecting brothers who have come to Egypt because of the famine, and tests them to see if they have repented. Joseph learns that they have given up their hatred because of their love for Israel, their father. Judah, who seems to have inherited the mantle of the failed oldest brother Reuben, expresses the brothers' new and profound appreciation of their father and Joseph (chap. 44). At the end of Genesis, the entire family of Jacob/Israel is in Egypt, which prepares for the events in the Book of Exodus.

Genesis in Later Biblical Books. The historical and prophetic books constantly refer to the covenant with the ancestors Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Hos 10 sees the traits of Jacob in the behavior of the Israel of his own day. Is 51:2 cites Abraham and Sarah as a model for his dispirited community, for though only a couple, they became a great nation. Jn 1, "In the beginning was the word," alludes to Gn 1:1 (and Prv 8:22) to show that Jesus is creating a new world. St. Paul interprets Jesus as the New Adam in Rom 5:14 and 1 Cor 15:22, 24, whose obedience brings life just as the Old Adam's disobedience brought death. In Rom 4, Paul cites Abraham as someone who was righteous in God's eyes centuries before the Law was given at Sinai.

<sup>3</sup>Then God said: Let there be light, and there was light.<sup>c</sup> <sup>4</sup>God saw that the light was good. God then separated the light from the darkness. <sup>5</sup>God called the light “day,” and the darkness he called “night.” Evening came, and morning followed—the first day.*

<sup>9</sup>Then God said: Let the water under the sky be gathered into a single basin, so that the dry land may appear. And so it happened: the water under the sky was gathered into its basin, and the dry land appeared.<sup>e</sup> <sup>10</sup>God called the dry land “earth,” and the basin of water he called “sea.” God saw that it was good. <sup>11f</sup> Then God said: Let the earth bring forth vegetation: every kind of plant that bears seed and every kind of fruit tree on earth that bears fruit with its seed in it. And so it happened: <sup>12</sup>the earth brought forth vegetation: every kind of plant that bears seed and every kind of fruit tree that bears fruit with its seed in it. God saw that it was good. <sup>13</sup>Evening came, and morning followed—the third day.

<sup>24k</sup> Then God said: Let the earth bring forth every kind of living creature: tame animals, crawling things, and every kind of wild animal. And so it happened: <sup>25</sup>God made every kind of wild animal, every kind of tame animal, and every kind of thing that crawls on the ground. God saw that it was good. <sup>26l</sup> Then God said: Let us make* human beings in our image, after our likeness. Let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, the birds of the air, the tame animals, all the wild animals, and all the creatures that crawl on the earth.

in the image of God he created them;
male and female* he created them.

The Major Divisions of Genesis

First section: 1:1 to 11:9	Primeval history, the origins of humankind, and failure through sin.
Second section: 11:10 to 25:34	Abraham, his call and response, his blessing and promise, his son Isaac and Isaac's sons Jacob (Israel) and Esau
Third section: 26:1 to 36:43	Isaac, Jacob, and the sons of Jacob (Israel)
Fourth section: 37:1 to 50:26	The sons of Israel, and Jacob and the Israelites in Egypt

<sup>28</sup>God blessed them and God said to them: Be fertile and multiply; fill the earth and subdue it.* Have dominion over the fish of the sea, the birds of the air, and all the living things that crawl on the earth.<sup>m 29* n</sup> God also said: See, I give you every seed-bearing plant on all the earth and every tree that has seed-bearing fruit on it to be your food;<sup>30</sup> and to all the wild animals, all the birds of the air, and all the living creatures that crawl on the earth, I give all the green plants for food. And so it happened.<sup>31</sup> God looked at everything he had made, and found it very good. Evening came, and morning followed—the sixth day.<sup>o</sup>

CHAPTER 2

<sup>1</sup>Thus the heavens and the earth and all their array were completed.<sup>2p *</sup> On the seventh day God completed the work he had been doing; he rested on the seventh day from all the work he had undertaken.<sup>q</sup> <sup>3</sup>God blessed the seventh day and made it holy, because on it he rested from all the work he had done in creation.<sup>r</sup>

I. The Story of the Nations

The Garden of Eden. <sup>4</sup>This is the story* of the heavens and the earth at their creation. When the LORD God made the earth and the heavens—<sup>5</sup>there was no field shrub on earth and no grass of the field had sprouted, for the LORD God had sent no rain upon the earth and there was no man* to till the ground, <sup>6</sup>but a stream* was welling up out of the earth and watering all the surface of the ground—<sup>7</sup>then the LORD God formed the man* out of the dust of the ground and blew into his nostrils the breath of life, and the man became a living being.<sup>s</sup>

“This one, at last, is bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh;
This one shall be called ‘woman,’ for out of man this one has been taken.”*

CHAPTER 3

Expulsion from Eden. <sup>1</sup>Now the snake was the most cunning* of all the wild animals that the LORD God had made. He asked the woman, “Did God really say, ‘You shall not eat from any of the trees in the garden?’” <sup>2</sup>The woman answered the snake: “We may eat of the fruit of the trees in the garden; <sup>3c</sup> it is only about the fruit of the tree in the middle of the garden that God said, ‘You shall not eat it or even touch it, or else you will die.’ ” <sup>4</sup>But the snake said to the woman: “You certainly will not die!<sup>d5</sup> God knows well that when you eat of it your eyes will be opened and you will be like gods, who know* good and evil.” <sup>6</sup>The woman saw that the tree was good for food and pleasing to the eyes, and the tree was desirable for gaining wisdom. So she took some of its fruit and ate it; and she also gave some to her husband, who was with her, and he ate it.<sup>e7</sup> Then the eyes of both of them were opened, and they knew that they were naked; so they sewed fig leaves together and made loincloths for themselves.

<sup>8</sup>When they heard the sound of the LORD God walking about in the garden at the breezy time of the day,* the man and his wife hid themselves from the LORD God among the trees of the garden.<sup>f9</sup> The LORD God then called to the man and asked him: Where are you? <sup>10</sup>He answered, “I heard you in the garden; but I was afraid, because I was naked, so I hid.” <sup>11</sup>Then God asked: Who told you that you were naked? Have you eaten from the tree of which I had forbidden you to eat? <sup>12</sup>The man replied, “The woman whom you put here with me—she gave me fruit from the tree, so I ate it.” <sup>13</sup>The LORD God then asked the woman: What is this you have done? The woman answered, “The snake tricked me, so I ate it.”<sup>g</sup>

<sup>14</sup>Then the LORD God said to the snake:

Because you have done this, cursed are you among all the animals, tame or wild;
On your belly you shall crawl, and dust you shall eat
all the days of your life.<sup>*h</sup>

<sup>15</sup>I will put enmity between you and the woman, and between your offspring and hers;

They will strike at your head, while you strike at their heel.* i

<sup>16</sup>To the woman he said:

I will intensify your toil in childbearing;
in pain* you shall bring forth children.
Yet your urge shall be for your husband, and he shall rule over you.

<sup>17</sup>To the man he said: Because you listened to your wife and ate from the tree about which I commanded you, You shall not eat from it,

Cursed is the ground* because of you!
In toil you shall eat its yield all the days of your life.j

<sup>18</sup>Thorns and thistles it shall bear for you, and you shall eat the grass of the field.

you shall eat bread,
Until you return to the ground,
from which you were taken;
For you are dust, and to dust you shall return.k

<sup>21</sup>The LORD God made for the man and his wife garments of skin, with which he clothed them. <sup>22</sup>Then the LORD God said: See! The man has become like one of us, knowing good and evil! Now, what if he also reaches out his hand to take fruit from the tree of life, and eats of it and lives forever?l <sup>23</sup>The LORD God therefore banished him from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from which he had been taken. <sup>24</sup>He expelled the man, stationing the cherubim and the fiery revolving sword east of the garden of Eden, to guard the way to the tree of life.

CHAPTER 4

Cain and Abel. <sup>1</sup>The man had intercourse with his wife Eve, and she conceived and gave birth to Cain, saying, “I have produced a male child with the help of the LORD.”* <sup>2</sup>Next she gave birth to his brother Abel. Abel became a herder of flocks, and Cain a tiller of the ground.* <sup>3</sup>In the course of time Cain brought an offering to the LORD from the fruit of the ground, <sup>4</sup>while Abel, for his part, brought the fatty portion* of the firstlings of his flock.<sup>m</sup> The LORD looked with favor on Abel and his offering, <sup>5</sup>but on Cain and his offering he did not look with favor. So Cain was very angry and dejected. <sup>6</sup>Then the LORD said to Cain: Why are you angry? Why are you dejected? <sup>7</sup>If you act rightly, you will be accepted;* but if not, sin lies in wait at the door: its urge is for you, yet you can rule over it.<sup>n</sup>

<sup>8</sup>Cain said to his brother Abel, “Let us go out in the field.”* When they were in the field, Cain attacked his brother Abel and killed him.<sup>o</sup> <sup>9</sup>Then the LORD asked Cain, Where is your brother Abel? He answered, “I do not know. Am I my brother’s keeper?” <sup>10</sup>God then said: What have you done? Your brother’s blood cries out to me from the ground! <sup>11</sup>Now you are banned from the ground* that opened its mouth to receive your brother’s blood from your hand.<sup>p</sup> <sup>12</sup>If you till the ground, it shall no longer give you its produce. You shall become a constant wanderer on the earth. <sup>13</sup>Cain said to the LORD: “My punishment is too great to bear. <sup>14</sup>Look, you have now banished me from the ground. I must avoid you and be a constant wanderer on the earth. Anyone may kill me at sight.” <sup>15</sup>Not so! the LORD said to him. If anyone kills Cain, Cain shall be avenged seven times. So the LORD put a mark* on Cain, so that no one would kill him at sight. <sup>16</sup>Cain then left the LORD’s presence and settled in the land of Nod,* east of Eden.

Descendants of Cain and Seth.<sup>17*</sup> Cain had intercourse with his wife, and she conceived and bore Enoch. Cain also became the founder of a city, which he named after his son Enoch. <sup>18</sup>To Enoch was born Irad, and Irad became the father of Mehujael; Mehujael became the father of Methusael, and Methusael became the father of Lamech. <sup>19</sup>Lamech took two wives; the name of the first was Adah, and the name of the second Zillah. <sup>20</sup>Adah gave birth to Jabal, who became the ancestor of those who dwell in tents and keep livestock. <sup>21</sup>His brother's name was Jubal, who became the ancestor of all who play the lyre and the reed pipe. <sup>22</sup>Zillah, on her part, gave birth to Tubalcain, the ancestor of all who forge instruments of bronze and iron. The sister of Tubalcain was Naamah. <sup>23*</sup> Lamech said to his wives:

“Adah and Zillah, hear my voice;
wives of Lamech, listen to my utterance:

I have killed a man for wounding me, a young man for bruising me.

<sup>24</sup>If Cain is avenged seven times,
then Lamech seventy-seven times.”

<sup>25*</sup> Adam again had intercourse with his wife, and she gave birth to a son whom she called Seth. “God has granted me another offspring in place of Abel,” she said, “because Cain killed him.” <sup>26</sup>To Seth, in turn, a son was born, and he named him Enosh.

At that time people began to invoke the LORD by name.<sup>q</sup>

Generations: Adam to Noah. * <sup>1r</sup> This is the record of the descendants of Adam. When God created human beings, he made them in the likeness of God; <sup>2</sup>he created them male and female. When they were created, he blessed them and named them humankind.

<sup>6</sup>When Seth was one hundred and five years old, he begot Enosh. <sup>7</sup>Seth lived eight hundred and seven years after he begot Enosh, and he had other sons and daughters. <sup>8</sup>The whole lifetime of Seth was nine hundred and twelve years; then he died.

<sup>9</sup>When Enosh was ninety years old, he begot Kenan. <sup>10</sup>Enosh lived eight hundred and fifteen years after he begot Kenan, and he had other sons and daughters. <sup>11</sup>The whole lifetime of Enosh was nine hundred and five years; then he died.

<sup>12</sup>When Kenan was seventy years old, he begot Mahalalel. <sup>13</sup>Kenan lived eight hundred and forty years after he begot Mahalalel, and he had other sons and daughters. <sup>14</sup>The whole lifetime of Kenan was nine hundred and ten years; then he died.

<sup>15</sup>When Mahalalel was sixty-five years old, he begot Jared. <sup>16</sup>Mahalalel lived eight hundred and thirty years after he begot Jared, and he had other sons and daughters. <sup>17</sup>The whole lifetime of Mahalalel was eight hundred and ninety-five years; then he died.

<sup>18</sup>When Jared was one hundred and sixty-two years old, he begot Enoch. <sup>19</sup>Jared lived eight hundred years after he begot Enoch, and he had other sons and daughters. <sup>20</sup>The whole lifetime of Jared was nine hundred and sixty-two years; then he died.

hundred and sixty-five years. <sup>24</sup>Enoch walked with God,* and he was no longer here, for God took him.<sup>u</sup>

The Toledoth (“Generations”) Lists

IN THE TEXT of Genesis, the Hebrew word toledoth (pronounced “tole-uh-DOTE” and meaning “generations” or “descendants”) serves as a marker for the end of one section of the narrative and the beginning of the next. Here are the places where the word occurs:

- 2:4a The second creation story
- 5:1 Introduces the section between the first human family and the days of Noah
- 6:9 Introduces the story of the flood
- 10:1 The expansion of people over the earth
- 11:10 A new list of the nations of the earth
- 11:27 The beginning of Abraham’s story
- 25:12 The end of the story of Hagar and Ishmael, Abraham’s other family
- 25:19 Introduces Jacob’s story
- 36:1 The end of Esau’s story and the beginning of the story of Jacob’s children
- 36:9 The conclusion of the list
- 37:2 The beginning of the story of Joseph and his brothers

<sup>25</sup>When Methuselah was one hundred and eighty-seven years old, he begot Lamech. <sup>26</sup>Methuselah lived seven hundred and eighty-two years after he begot Lamech, and he had other sons and daughters. <sup>27</sup>The whole lifetime of Methuselah was nine hundred and sixty-nine years; then he died.

<sup>28</sup>When Lamech was one hundred and eighty-two years old, he begot a son <sup>29v</sup> and named him Noah, saying, “This one shall bring us relief from our work and the toil of our hands, out of the very ground that the LORD has put under a curse.”<sup>* 30</sup>Lamech lived five hundred and ninety-five years after he begot Noah, and he had other sons and daughters. <sup>31</sup>The whole lifetime of Lamech was seven hundred and seventy-seven years; then he died.

CHAPTER 6

Origin of the Nephilim. * <sup>1</sup>When human beings began to grow numerous on the earth and daughters were born to them, <sup>2</sup>the sons of God* saw how beautiful the daughters of human beings were, and so they took for their wives whomever they pleased.<sup>x</sup> <sup>3</sup>Then the LORD said: My spirit shall not remain in human beings forever, because they are only flesh. Their days shall comprise one hundred and twenty years.

<sup>7</sup>So the LORD said: I will wipe out from the earth the human beings I have created, and not only the human beings, but also the animals and the crawling things and the birds of the air, for I regret that I made them.* <sup>8</sup>But Noah found favor with the LORD.

<sup>17</sup>I, on my part, am about to bring the flood waters on the earth, to destroy all creatures under the sky in which there is the breath of life; everything on earth shall perish.<sup>e</sup> <sup>18</sup>I will establish my covenant with you. You shall go into the ark, you and your sons, your wife and your sons' wives with you.<sup>f</sup> <sup>19</sup>Of all living creatures you shall bring two of every kind into the ark, one male and one female,* to keep them alive along with you. <sup>20</sup>Of every kind of bird, of every kind of animal, and of every kind of thing that crawls on the ground, two of each will come to you, that you may keep them alive. <sup>21</sup>Moreover, you are to provide yourself with all the food that is to be eaten, and store it away, that it may serve as provisions for you and for them. <sup>22</sup>Noah complied; he did just as God had commanded him.*

CHAPTER 7

<sup>1</sup>Then the LORD said to Noah: Go into the ark, you and all your household, for you alone in this generation have I found to be righteous before me.<sup>g</sup>

forth, and the floodgates of the sky were opened.

<sup>12</sup>For forty days and forty nights heavy rain poured down on the earth.

<sup>13</sup>On the very same day, Noah and his sons Shem, Ham, and Japheth, and Noah's wife, and the three wives of Noah's sons had entered the ark, <sup>14</sup>together with every kind of wild animal, every kind of tame animal, every kind of crawling thing that crawls on the earth, and every kind of bird. <sup>15</sup>Pairs of all creatures in which there was the breath of life came to Noah into the ark. <sup>16</sup>Those that entered were male and female; of all creatures they came, as God had commanded Noah. Then the LORD shut him in.

CHAPTER 8

<sup>1</sup>God remembered Noah and all the animals, wild and tame, that were with him in the ark. So God made a wind sweep over the earth, and the waters began to subside. <sup>2</sup>The fountains of the abyss and the floodgates of the sky were closed, and the downpour from the sky was held back. <sup>3</sup>Gradually the waters receded from the earth. At the end of one hundred and fifty days, the waters had so diminished <sup>4</sup>that, in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, the ark came to rest on the mountains of Ararat. <sup>5</sup>The waters continued to diminish until the tenth month, and on the first day of the tenth month the tops of the mountains appeared.

<sup>6</sup>At the end of forty days Noah opened the hatch of the ark that he had made, <sup>7</sup>* and he released a raven. It flew back and forth until the waters dried off from the earth. <sup>8</sup>Then he released a dove, to see if the waters had lessened on the earth. <sup>9</sup>But the dove could find no place to perch, and it returned to him in the ark, for there was water over all the earth. Putting out his hand, he caught the dove and drew it back to him inside the ark. <sup>10</sup>He waited yet seven days more and again released the dove from the ark. <sup>11</sup>In the evening the dove came back to him, and there in its bill was a plucked-off olive leaf! So Noah knew that the waters had diminished on the earth. <sup>12</sup>He waited yet another seven days and then released the dove; but this time it did not come back.

<sup>13</sup>* In the six hundred and first year, in the first month, on the first day of the month, the water began to dry up on the earth. Noah then removed the covering of the ark and saw that the surface of the ground had dried. <sup>14</sup>In the second month, on the twenty-seventh day of the month, the earth was dry.

<sup>15</sup>Then God said to Noah: <sup>16</sup>Go out of the ark, together with your wife and your sons and your sons' wives. <sup>17</sup>Bring out with you every living thing that is with you—all creatures, be they birds or animals or crawling things that crawl on the earth—and let them abound on the earth, and be fertile and multiply on it. <sup>18</sup>So Noah came out, together with his sons and his wife and his sons' wives; <sup>19</sup>and all the animals, all the birds, and all the crawling creatures that crawl on the earth went out of the ark by families.

<sup>20</sup>Then Noah built an altar to the LORD, and choosing from every clean animal and every clean bird, he offered burnt offerings on the altar. <sup>21</sup>When the LORD smelled the sweet odor, the LORD said to himself: Never again will I curse the ground because of human beings, since the desires of the human heart are evil from youth; nor will I ever again strike down every living being, as I have done.<sup>m</sup>

seedtime and harvest,
cold and heat,
Summer and winter,
and day and night shall not cease.<sup>n</sup>

CHAPTER 9

See RG 123–26

Covenant with Noah.<sup>1*</sup> God blessed Noah and his sons and said to them: Be fertile and multiply and fill the earth.<sup>o</sup> <sup>2*</sup> Fear and dread of you shall come upon all the animals of the earth and all the birds of the air, upon all the creatures that move about on the ground and all the fishes of the sea; into your power they are delivered.<sup>3p</sup> Any living creature that moves about shall be yours to eat; I give them all to you as I did the green plants.<sup>4q</sup> Only meat with its lifeblood still in it you shall not eat.* <sup>5</sup>Indeed for your own lifeblood I will demand an accounting: from every animal I will demand it, and from a human being, each one for the blood of another, I will demand an accounting for human life.<sup>r</sup>

human being,
by a human being shall that one's blood be shed;

For in the image of God have human beings been made.<sup>s</sup>

<sup>8*</sup> God said to Noah and to his sons with him: <sup>9</sup>See, I am now establishing my covenant with you and your descendants after you<sup>u</sup> <sup>10</sup>and with every living creature that was with you: the birds, the tame animals, and all the wild animals that were with you—all that came out of the ark. <sup>11</sup>I will establish my covenant with you, that never again shall all creatures be destroyed by the waters of a flood; there shall not be another flood to devastate the earth.<sup>v</sup> <sup>12</sup>God said: This is the sign of the covenant that I am making between me and you and every living creature with you for all ages to come: <sup>13w</sup> I set my bow in the clouds to serve as a sign of the covenant between me and the earth. <sup>14</sup>When I bring clouds over the earth, and the bow appears in the clouds, <sup>15</sup>I will remember my covenant between me and you and every living creature—every mortal being—so that the waters will never again become a flood to destroy every mortal being.<sup>x</sup> <sup>16</sup>When the bow appears in the clouds, I will see it and remember the everlasting covenant between God and every living creature—every mortal being that is on earth.

Noah and His Sons.<sup>18*</sup> The sons of Noah who came out of the ark were Shem, Ham and Japheth. Ham was the father of Canaan.<sup>y</sup> <sup>19</sup>These three were the sons of Noah, and from them the whole earth was populated.

The lowest of slaves shall he be to his brothers.”<sup>a</sup>

<sup>26</sup>He also said:

‘Blessed be the LORD, the God of Shem!

Let Canaan be his slave.

<sup>27</sup>May God expand Japheth,* and may he dwell among the tents of Shem;
and let Canaan be his slave.”

Table of the Nations.* <sup>1</sup>These are the descendants of Noah's sons, Shem, Ham and Japheth, to whom children were born after the flood.

<sup>24</sup>Arpachshad became the father of Shelah, and Shelah became the father of Eber. <sup>25</sup>To Eber two sons were born: the name of the first was Peleg, for in his time the world was divided; * and the name of his brother was Joktan.

Tower of Babel.* <sup>1</sup>The whole world had the same language and the same words. <sup>2</sup>When they were migrating from the east, they came to a valley in the land of Shinar* and settled there. <sup>3</sup>They said to one another, “Come, let us mold bricks and harden them with fire.” They used bricks for stone, and bitumen for mortar. <sup>4</sup>Then they said, “Come, let us build ourselves a city and a tower with its top in the sky,* and so make a name for ourselves; otherwise we shall be scattered all over the earth.”

<sup>5</sup>The LORD came down to see the city and the tower that the people had built. <sup>6</sup>Then the LORD said: If now, while they are one people and all have the same language, they have started to do this, nothing they presume to do will be out of their reach. <sup>7</sup>Come, let us go down and there confuse their language, so that no one will understand the speech of another. <sup>8</sup>So the LORD scattered them from there over all the earth, and they stopped building the city. <sup>9</sup>That is why it was called Babel,* because there the LORD confused the speech of all the world. From there the LORD scattered them over all the earth.

II. The Story of the Ancestors of Israel

Terah. <sup>27</sup>These are the descendants of Terah.* Terah begot Abram, Nahor, and Haran, and Haran begot Lot. <sup>28</sup>Haran died before Terah his father, in his native land, in Ur of the Chaldeans.* <sup>29</sup>Abram and Nahor took wives; the name of Abram's wife was Sarai,* and the name of Nahor's wife was Milcah, daughter of Haran, the father of Milcah and Iscah.<sup>h</sup> <sup>30</sup>Sarai was barren; she had no child.

Abram's Call and Migration. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Abram: Go forth* from your land, your relatives, and from your father's house to a land that I will show you.<sup>j</sup> <sup>2*</sup> I will make of you a great nation, and I will bless you; I will make your name great, so that you will be a blessing.<sup>k</sup> <sup>3l</sup> I will bless those who bless you and curse those who curse you. All the families of the earth will find blessing in you.*

<sup>4m</sup> Abram went as the LORD directed him, and Lot went with him. Abram was seventy-five years old when he left Haran. <sup>5*</sup> Abram took his wife Sarai, his brother's son Lot, all the possessions that they had accumulated, and the persons they had acquired in Haran, and they set out for the land of Canaan. When they came to the land of Canaan, <sup>6*</sup> Abram passed through the land as far as the sacred place at Shechem, by the oak of Moreh. The Canaanites were then in the land.

<sup>7</sup>The LORD appeared to Abram and said: To your descendants I will give this land. So Abram built an altar there to the LORD who had appeared to him.<sup>n</sup> <sup>8</sup>From there he moved on to the hill country east of Bethel, pitching his tent with Bethel to the west and Ai to the east. He built an altar there to the LORD and invoked the LORD by name. <sup>9</sup>Then Abram journeyed on by stages to the Negeb.*

Abram and Sarai in Egypt. * <sup>10</sup>There was famine in the land; so Abram went down to Egypt to sojourn there, since the famine in the land was severe.<sup>o</sup> <sup>11</sup>When he was about to enter Egypt, he said to his wife Sarai: "I know that you are a beautiful woman. <sup>12</sup>When the Egyptians see you, they will say, 'She is his wife'; then they will kill me, but let you live. <sup>13</sup>Please say, therefore, that you are my sister,* so that I may fare well on your account and my life may be spared for your sake."<sup>p</sup> <sup>14</sup>When Abram arrived in Egypt, the Egyptians saw that the woman was very beautiful. <sup>15</sup>When Pharaoh's officials saw her they praised her to Pharaoh, and the woman was taken into Pharaoh's house. <sup>16</sup>Abram fared well on her account, and he acquired sheep, oxen, male and female servants, male and female donkeys, and camels.*

was your wife? <sup>19</sup>Why did you say, ‘She is my sister,’ so that I took her for my wife? Now, here is your wife. Take her and leave!”

<sup>20</sup>Then Pharaoh gave his men orders concerning Abram, and they sent him away, with his wife and all that belonged to him.

CHAPTER 13

Abram and Lot Part. <sup>1</sup>From Egypt Abram went up to the Negeb with his wife and all that belonged to him, and Lot went with him.<sup>r</sup> <sup>2*</sup> Now Abram was very rich in livestock, silver, and gold.<sup>s</sup> <sup>3</sup>From the Negeb he traveled by stages toward Bethel, to the place between Bethel and Ai where his tent had formerly stood, <sup>4</sup>the site where he had first built the altar; and there Abram invoked the LORD by name.<sup>t</sup>

<sup>5</sup>Lot, who went with Abram, also had flocks and herds and tents, <sup>6</sup>so that the land could not support them if they stayed together; their possessions were so great that they could not live together. <sup>7</sup>There were quarrels between the herders of Abram's livestock and the herders of Lot's livestock. At this time the Canaanites and the Perizzites were living in the land.

<sup>8</sup>So Abram said to Lot: "Let there be no strife between you and me, or between your herders and my herders, for we are kindred. <sup>9</sup>Is not the whole land available? Please separate from me. If you prefer the left, I will go to the right; if you prefer the right, I will go to the left." <sup>10</sup>Lot looked about and saw how abundantly watered the whole Jordan Plain was as far as Zoar, like the LORD's own garden, or like Egypt. This was before the LORD had destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah. <sup>11</sup>Lot, therefore, chose for himself the whole Jordan Plain and set out eastward. Thus they separated from each other. <sup>12</sup>Abram settled in the land of Canaan, while Lot settled among the cities of the Plain, pitching his tents near Sodom. <sup>13</sup>Now the inhabitants of Sodom were wicked, great sinners against the LORD.<sup>u</sup>

<sup>14</sup>After Lot had parted from him, the LORD said to Abram: Look about you, and from where you are, gaze to the north and south, east and west;<sup>v</sup> <sup>15</sup>all the land that you see I will give to you and your descendants forever.<sup>w</sup> <sup>16</sup>I will make your descendants like the dust of the earth; if anyone could count the dust of the earth, your descendants too might be counted.<sup>x</sup> <sup>17</sup>Get up and walk through the land, across its length and breadth, for I give it to you. <sup>18</sup>Abram moved his tents and went on to settle near the oak of Mamre, which is at Hebron. There he built an altar to the LORD.<sup>y</sup>

The Four Kings.<sup>1*</sup> When Amraphel king of Shinar, Arioch king of Ellasar, Chedorlaomer king of Elam, and Tidal king of Goiim <sup>2</sup>made war on Bera king of Sodom, Birsha king of Gomorrah, Shinab king of Admah, Shemeber king of Zeboiim, and the king of Bela (that is, Zoar), <sup>3</sup>all the latter kings joined forces in the Valley of Siddim (that is, the Salt Sea*). <sup>4</sup>For twelve years they had served Chedorlaomer, but in the thirteenth year they rebelled. <sup>5</sup>In the fourteenth year Chedorlaomer and the kings allied with him came and defeated the Rephaim in Ashteroth-karnaim, the Zuzim in Ham, the Emim in Shaveh-kiriathaim, <sup>6</sup>and the Horites in the hill country of Seir, as far as El-paran, close by the wilderness.<sup>z</sup> <sup>7</sup>They then turned back and came to En-mishpat (that is, Kadesh), and they subdued the whole country of both the Amalekites and the Amorites who lived in Hazazon-tamar. <sup>8</sup>Thereupon the king of Sodom, the king of Gomorrah, the king of Admah, the king of Zeboiim, and the king of Bela (that is, Zoar) marched out, and in the Valley of Siddim they went into battle against them: <sup>9</sup>against Chedorlaomer king of Elam, Tidal king of Goiim, Amraphel king of Shinar, and Arioch king of Ellasar—four kings against five. <sup>10</sup>Now the Valley of Siddim was full of bitumen pits; and as the king of Sodom and the king of Gomorrah fled, they fell into these, while the rest fled to the mountains. <sup>11</sup>The victors seized all the possessions and food supplies of Sodom and Gomorrah and then went their way. <sup>12</sup>They took with them Abram's nephew Lot, who had been living in Sodom, as well as his possessions, and departed.<sup>a</sup>

“Blessed be Abram by God Most High, the creator of heaven and earth;

<sup>20</sup>And blessed be God Most High, who delivered your foes into your hand.”

Then Abram gave him a tenth of everything.

<sup>21</sup>The king of Sodom said to Abram, “Give me the captives; the goods you may keep.” <sup>22</sup>But Abram replied to the king of Sodom: “I have sworn to the LORD, God Most High, *the creator of heaven and earth, <sup>23</sup>that I would not take so much as a thread or a sandal strap from anything that is yours, so that you cannot say, ‘I made Abram rich.’ <sup>24</sup>Nothing for me except what my servants have consumed and the share that is due to the men who went with me—Aner, Eshcol and Mamre; let them take their share.”

The Covenant with Abram.* <sup>1</sup>Some time afterward, the word of the LORD came to Abram in a vision: Do not fear, Abram! I am your shield; I will make your reward very great.

<sup>2</sup>But Abram said, “Lord GOD, what can you give me, if I die childless and have only a servant of my household, Eliezer of Damascus?” <sup>3</sup>Abram continued, “Look, you have given me no offspring, so a servant of my household will be my heir.” <sup>4</sup>Then the word of the LORD came to him: No, that one will not be your heir; your own offspring will be your heir.<sup>c</sup> <sup>5</sup>He took him outside and said: Look up at the sky and count the stars, if you can. Just so, he added, will your descendants be.<sup>d</sup> <sup>6e</sup> Abram put his faith in the LORD, who attributed it to him as an act of righteousness.*

<sup>7</sup>He then said to him: I am the LORD who brought you from Ur of the Chaldeans to give you this land as a possession.<sup>f</sup> <sup>8</sup>“Lord GOD,” he asked, “how will I know that I will possess it?” <sup>9*</sup> He answered him: Bring me a three-year-old heifer, a three-year-old female goat, a three-year-old ram, a turtledove, and a young pigeon.<sup>g</sup> <sup>10</sup>He brought him all these, split them in two, and placed each half opposite the other; but the birds he did not cut up. <sup>11</sup>Birds of prey swooped down on the carcasses, but Abram scared them away. <sup>12</sup>As the sun was about to set, a deep sleep fell upon Abram, and a great, dark dread descended upon him.

<sup>13*</sup> Then the LORD said to Abram: Know for certain that your descendants will reside as aliens in a land not their own, where they shall be enslaved and oppressed for four hundred years.<sup>h</sup> <sup>14</sup>But I will bring judgment on the nation they must serve, and after this they will go out with great wealth.<sup>i</sup> <sup>15</sup>You, however, will go to your ancestors in peace; you will be buried at a ripe old age. <sup>16</sup>In the fourth generation* your descendants will return here, for the wickedness of the Amorites is not yet complete.<sup>j</sup>

<sup>17</sup>When the sun had set and it was dark, there appeared a smoking fire pot and a flaming torch, which passed between those pieces. <sup>18*</sup> On that day the LORD made a covenant with Abram, saying: To your descendants I give this land, from the Wadi of Egypt to the Great River, the Euphrates,<sup>k</sup> <sup>19l</sup> the land of the Kenites, the Kenizzites, the Kadmonites, <sup>20</sup>the Hittites, the

and the Jebusites.

Birth of Ishmael. * <sup>1</sup> Abram's wife Sarai had borne him no children. Now she had an Egyptian maidservant named Hagar.<sup>m</sup> <sup>2</sup> Sarai said to Abram: "The LORD has kept me from bearing children. Have intercourse with my maid; perhaps I will have sons through her." Abram obeyed Sarai.* <sup>n</sup> <sup>3</sup> Thus, after Abram had lived ten years in the land of Canaan, his wife Sarai took her maid, Hagar the Egyptian, and gave her to her husband Abram to be his wife. <sup>4</sup> He had intercourse with her, and she became pregnant. As soon as Hagar knew she was pregnant, her mistress lost stature in her eyes.* <sup>o</sup> <sup>5p</sup> So Sarai said to Abram: "This outrage against me is your fault. I myself gave my maid to your embrace; but ever since she knew she was pregnant, I have lost stature in her eyes. May the LORD decide between you and me!" <sup>6</sup> Abram told Sarai: "Your maid is in your power. Do to her what you regard as right." Sarai then mistreated her so much that Hagar ran away from her.

"You are now pregnant and shall bear a son;

you shall name him Ishmael,*

For the LORD has heeded your affliction.

<sup>12</sup> He shall be a wild ass of a man, his hand against everyone, and everyone's hand against him;

Alongside* all his kindred shall he encamp."<sup>s</sup>

<sup>13</sup> To the LORD who spoke to her she gave a name, saying, "You are God who sees me";* she meant, "Have I really seen God and remained alive after he saw me?”<sup>t</sup> <sup>14</sup>That is why the well is called Beer-lahai-roi.* It is between Kadesh and Bered.

Covenant of Circumcision.* <sup>1</sup>When Abram was ninety-nine years old, the LORD appeared to Abram and said: I am God the Almighty. Walk in my presence and be blameless.<sup>v</sup> <sup>2</sup>Between you and me I will establish my covenant, and I will multiply you exceedingly.<sup>w</sup>

<sup>3</sup>Abram fell face down and God said to him: <sup>4</sup>For my part, here is my covenant with you: you are to become the father of a multitude of nations.<sup>x</sup> <sup>5</sup>No longer will you be called Abram; your name will be Abraham,* for I am making you the father of a multitude of nations.<sup>y</sup> <sup>6</sup>I will make you exceedingly fertile; I will make nations of you; kings will stem from you. <sup>7</sup>I will maintain my covenant between me and you and your descendants after you throughout the ages as an everlasting covenant, to be your God and the God of your descendants after you.<sup>z</sup> <sup>8</sup>I will give to you and to your descendants after you the land in which you are now residing as aliens, the whole land of Canaan, as a permanent possession; and I will be their God.<sup>a</sup> <sup>9</sup>God said to Abraham: For your part, you and your descendants after you must keep my covenant throughout the ages. <sup>10</sup>This is the covenant between me and you and your descendants after you that you must keep: every male among you shall be circumcised.* <sup>b</sup> <sup>11</sup>Circumcise the flesh of your foreskin. That will be the sign of the covenant between me and you.<sup>c</sup> <sup>12</sup>Throughout the ages, every male among you, when he is eight days old, shall be circumcised, including houseborn slaves and those acquired with money from any foreigner who is not of your descendants.<sup>d</sup> <sup>13</sup>Yes, both the houseborn slaves and those acquired with money must be circumcised. Thus my covenant will be in your flesh as an everlasting covenant. <sup>14</sup>If a male is uncircumcised, that is, if the flesh of his foreskin has not been cut away, such a one will be cut off from his people; he has broken my covenant.

<sup>15</sup>God further said to Abraham: As for Sarai your wife, do not call her Sarai; her name will be Sarah.* <sup>16</sup>I will bless her, and I will give you a son by her. Her also will I bless; she will give rise to nations, and rulers of peoples will issue from her.<sup>e</sup> <sup>17</sup>Abraham fell face down and laughed* as he said to himself, “Can a child be born to a man who is a hundred years old?

Can Sarah give birth at ninety?”<sup>f 18</sup>So Abraham said to God, “If only Ishmael could live in your favor!”<sup>19</sup>God replied: Even so, your wife Sarah is to bear you a son, and you shall call him Isaac. It is with him that I will maintain my covenant as an everlasting covenant and with his descendants after him.<sup>g 20</sup>Now as for Ishmael, I will heed you: I hereby bless him. I will make him fertile and will multiply him exceedingly. He will become the father of twelve chieftains, and I will make of him a great nation.<sup>h 21</sup>But my covenant I will maintain with Isaac, whom Sarah shall bear to you by this time next year.<sup>i 22</sup>When he had finished speaking with Abraham, God departed from him.

<sup>23</sup>Then Abraham took his son Ishmael and all his slaves, whether born in his house or acquired with his money—every male among the members of Abraham’s household—and he circumcised the flesh of their foreskins on that same day, as God had told him to do. <sup>24</sup>Abraham was ninety-nine years old when the flesh of his foreskin was circumcised,<sup>j 25</sup>and his son Ishmael was thirteen years old when the flesh of his foreskin was circumcised. <sup>26</sup>Thus, on that same day Abraham and his son Ishmael were circumcised; <sup>27</sup>and all the males of his household, including the slaves born in his house or acquired with his money from foreigners, were circumcised with him.

Abraham's Visitors.<sup>1*</sup> The LORD appeared to Abraham by the oak of Mamre, as he sat in the entrance of his tent, while the day was growing hot.<sup>2</sup> Looking up, he saw three men standing near him. When he saw them, he ran from the entrance of the tent to greet them; and bowing to the ground,<sup>k</sup><sup>3</sup> he said: “Sir,* if it please you, do not go on past your servant. <sup>4</sup>Let some water be brought, that you may bathe your feet, and then rest under the tree.<sup>5</sup> Now that you have come to your servant, let me bring you a little food, that you may refresh yourselves; and afterward you may go on your way.” “Very well,” they replied, “do as you have said.”

him out that he may direct his children and his household in the future to keep the way of the LORD by doing what is right and just, so that the LORD may put into effect for Abraham the promises he made about him. <sup>20p</sup> So the LORD said: The outcry against Sodom and Gomorrah is so great, and their sin so grave, <sup>*21</sup>that I must go down to see whether or not their actions are as bad as the cry against them that comes to me. I mean to find out.

<sup>22</sup>As the men turned and walked on toward Sodom, Abraham remained standing before the LORD. <sup>23</sup>Then Abraham drew near and said: “Will you really sweep away the righteous with the wicked? <sup>24</sup>Suppose there were fifty righteous people in the city; would you really sweep away and not spare the place for the sake of the fifty righteous people within it? <sup>25</sup>Far be it from you to do such a thing, to kill the righteous with the wicked, so that the righteous and the wicked are treated alike! Far be it from you! Should not the judge of all the world do what is just?”<sup>q</sup> <sup>26</sup>The LORD replied: If I find fifty righteous people in the city of Sodom, I will spare the whole place for their sake. <sup>27</sup>Abraham spoke up again: “See how I am presuming to speak to my Lord, though I am only dust and ashes!”<sup>r</sup> <sup>28</sup>What if there are five less than fifty righteous people? Will you destroy the whole city because of those five?” I will not destroy it, he answered, if I find forty-five there. <sup>29</sup>But Abraham persisted, saying, “What if only forty are found there?” He replied: I will refrain from doing it for the sake of the forty. <sup>30</sup>Then he said, “Do not let my Lord be angry if I go on. What if only thirty are found there?” He replied: I will refrain from doing it if I can find thirty there. <sup>31</sup>Abraham went on, “Since I have thus presumed to speak to my Lord, what if there are no more than twenty?” I will not destroy it, he answered, for the sake of the twenty. <sup>32</sup>But he persisted: “Please, do not let my Lord be angry if I speak up this last time. What if ten are found there?” For the sake of the ten, he replied, I will not destroy it.<sup>s</sup>

Destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah.* <sup>1</sup>The two angels reached Sodom in the evening, as Lot was sitting at the gate of Sodom. When Lot saw them, he got up to greet them; and bowing down with his face to the ground, <sup>2</sup>he said, “Please, my lords,* come aside into your servant’s house for the night, and bathe your feet; you can get up early to continue your journey.” But they replied, “No, we will pass the night in the town square.”<sup>t</sup> <sup>3</sup>He urged them so strongly, however, that they turned aside to his place and entered his house. He prepared a banquet for them, baking unleavened bread, and they dined.

<sup>4u</sup> Before they went to bed, the townsmen of Sodom, both young and old—all the people to the last man—surrounded the house. <sup>5</sup>They called to Lot and said to him, “Where are the men who came to your house tonight? Bring them out to us that we may have sexual relations with them.” <sup>6</sup>Lot went out to meet them at the entrance. When he had shut the door behind him, <sup>7</sup>he said, “I beg you, my brothers, do not do this wicked thing! <sup>8</sup>I have two daughters who have never had sexual relations with men. Let me bring them out to you,* and you may do to them as you please. But do not do anything to these men, for they have come under the shelter of my roof.” <sup>9</sup>They replied, “Stand back! This man,” they said, “came here as a resident alien, and now he dares to give orders! We will treat you worse than them!” With that, they pressed hard against Lot, moving in closer to break down the door.<sup>v</sup> <sup>10</sup>But his guests put out their hands, pulled Lot inside with them, and closed the door; <sup>11</sup>they struck the men at the entrance of the house, small and great, with such a blinding light* that they were utterly unable to find the doorway.

he told them; “the LORD is about to destroy the city.” But his sons-in-law thought he was joking.

<sup>15</sup>As dawn was breaking, the angels urged Lot on, saying, “Come on! Take your wife with you and your two daughters who are here, or you will be swept away in the punishment of the city.” <sup>16</sup>When he hesitated, the men, because of the LORD’s compassion for him, seized his hand and the hands of his wife and his two daughters and led them to safety outside the city. <sup>17</sup>As soon as they had brought them outside, they said: “Flee for your life! Do not look back or stop anywhere on the Plain. Flee to the hills at once, or you will be swept away.”<sup>y</sup> <sup>18</sup>“Oh, no, my lords!” Lot replied to them. <sup>19</sup>“You have already shown favor to your servant, doing me the great kindness of saving my life. But I cannot flee to the hills, or the disaster will overtake and kill me. <sup>20</sup>Look, this town ahead is near enough to escape to. It is only a small place. * Let me flee there—is it not a small place?—to save my life.” <sup>21</sup>“Well, then,” he replied, “I grant you this favor too. I will not overthrow the town you have mentioned. <sup>22</sup>Hurry, escape there! I cannot do anything until you arrive there.” That is why the town is called Zoar.<sup>z</sup>

<sup>29</sup>When God destroyed the cities of the Plain, he remembered Abraham and sent Lot away from the upheaval that occurred when God overthrew the cities where Lot had been living.

Moabites and Ammonites.* <sup>30</sup>Since Lot was afraid to stay in Zoar, he and his two daughters went up from Zoar and settled in the hill country, where he lived with his two daughters in a cave. <sup>31</sup>The firstborn said to the younger: “Our father is getting old, and there is not a man in the land to have intercourse with us as is the custom everywhere. <sup>32</sup>Come, let us ply our father with wine and then lie with him, that we may ensure posterity by our father.” <sup>33</sup>So that night they plied their father with wine, and the firstborn went in and lay with her father; but he was not aware of her lying down or getting up. <sup>34</sup>The next day the firstborn said to the younger: “Last night I lay with my father. Let us ply him with wine again tonight, and then you go in and lie with him, that we may ensure posterity by our father.” <sup>35</sup>So that night, too, they plied their father with wine, and then the younger one went in and lay with him; but he was not aware of her lying down or getting up.

<sup>8</sup>Early the next morning Abimelech called all his servants and informed them of everything that had happened, and the men were filled with fear. <sup>9</sup>Then Abimelech summoned Abraham and said to him: “What have you done to us! What wrong did I do to you that you would have brought such great guilt on me and my kingdom? You have treated me in an intolerable way. <sup>10</sup>What did you have in mind,” Abimelech asked him, “that you would do such a thing?” <sup>11</sup>Abraham answered, “I thought there would be no fear of God * in this place, and so they would kill me on account of my wife. <sup>12</sup>Besides, she really is my sister, * but only my father’s daughter, not my mother’s; and so she became my wife. <sup>13</sup>When God sent me wandering from my father’s house, I asked her: ‘Would you do me this favor? In whatever place we come to, say: He is my brother.’” <sup>g</sup>

<sup>14</sup>Then Abimelech took flocks and herds and male and female slaves and gave them to Abraham; and he restored his wife Sarah to him. <sup>15</sup>Then Abimelech said, “Here, my land is at your disposal; settle wherever you please.” <sup>16</sup>To Sarah he said: “I hereby give your brother a thousand shekels of silver. This will preserve your honor before all who are with you and will exonerate you before everyone.” <sup>17</sup>Abraham then interceded with God, and God restored health to Abimelech, to his wife, and his maidservants, so that they bore children; <sup>18</sup>for the LORD had closed every womb in Abimelech's household on account of Abraham's wife Sarah.

CHAPTER 21

Birth of Isaac. * <sup>1</sup>The LORD took note of Sarah as he had said he would; the LORD did for her as he had promised. <sup>h</sup> <sup>2</sup>Sarah became pregnant and bore Abraham a son in his old age, at the set time that God had stated. <sup>i</sup> <sup>3</sup>Abraham gave the name Isaac to this son of his whom Sarah bore him. <sup>j</sup> <sup>4</sup>When his son Isaac was eight days old, Abraham circumcised him, as God had commanded. <sup>k</sup> <sup>5</sup>Abraham was a hundred years old when his son Isaac was born to him. <sup>6</sup>Sarah then said, “God has given me cause to laugh, * and all who hear of it will laugh with me. <sup>l</sup> <sup>7</sup>Who would ever have told Abraham,” she added, “that Sarah would nurse children! Yet I have borne him a son in his old age.” <sup>8</sup>The child grew and was weaned, and Abraham held a great banquet on the day of the child’s weaning.

<sup>20</sup>God was with the boy as he grew up. He lived in the wilderness and became an expert bowman. <sup>21</sup>He lived in the wilderness of Paran. His mother got a wife for him from the land of Egypt.

The Covenant at Beer-sheba.<sup>22*</sup> At that time Abimelech, accompanied by Phicol, the commander of his army, said to Abraham: “God is with you in everything you do. <sup>23</sup>So now, swear to me by God at this place* that you will not deal falsely with me or with my progeny and posterity, but will act as loyally toward me and the land in which you reside as I have acted toward you.” Abraham replied, “I so swear.”

CHAPTER 22

The Testing of Abraham.* <sup>1</sup>Some time afterward, God put Abraham to the test and said to him: Abraham! “Here I am!” he replied.<sup>p</sup> <sup>2</sup>Then God said: Take your son Isaac, your only one, whom you love, and go to the land of Moriah. There offer him up as a burnt offering on one of the heights that I will point out to you.<sup>q</sup> <sup>3</sup>Early the next morning Abraham saddled his donkey, took with him two of his servants and his son Isaac, and after cutting the wood for the burnt offering, set out for the place of which God had told him.

<sup>4</sup>On the third day Abraham caught sight of the place from a distance. <sup>5</sup>Abraham said to his servants: “Stay here with the donkey, while the boy and I go on over there. We will worship and then come back to you.” <sup>6</sup>So Abraham took the wood for the burnt offering and laid it on his son Isaac, while he himself carried the fire and the knife. As the two walked on together, <sup>7</sup>Isaac spoke to his father Abraham. “Father!” he said. “Here I am,” he replied. Isaac continued, “Here are the fire and the wood, but where is the sheep for the burnt offering?” <sup>8</sup>“My son,” Abraham answered, “God will provide the sheep for the burnt offering.” Then the two walked on together.

<sup>9</sup>When they came to the place of which God had told him, Abraham built an altar there and arranged the wood on it. Next he bound* his son Isaac, and put him on top of the wood on the altar.<sup>r</sup> <sup>10</sup>Then Abraham reached out and took the knife to slaughter his son.<sup>s</sup> <sup>11</sup>But the angel of the LORD called to him from heaven, “Abraham, Abraham!” “Here I am,” he answered. <sup>12</sup>“Do not lay your hand on the boy,” said the angel. “Do not do the least thing to him. For now I know that you fear God, since you did not withhold from me your son, your only one.”<sup>t</sup> <sup>13</sup>Abraham looked up and saw a single ram caught by its horns in the thicket. So Abraham went and took the ram and offered it up as a burnt offering in place of his son.* <sup>14</sup>Abraham named that place Yahweh-yireh;* hence people today say, “On the mountain the LORD will provide.”

<sup>15*</sup> A second time the angel of the LORD called to Abraham from heaven <sup>16u</sup> and said: “I swear by my very self—oracle of the LORD—that because you acted as you did in not withholding from me your son, your only one, <sup>17</sup>I will bless you and make your descendants as countless as the stars of the sky and the sands of the seashore; your descendants will take possession of the gates of their enemies,<sup>v</sup> <sup>18</sup>and in your descendants all the nations of the earth will find blessing, because you obeyed my command.”<sup>w</sup>

Nahor's Descendants.<sup>*20</sup>Some time afterward, the news came to Abraham: “Milcah too has borne sons to your brother Nahor: <sup>21</sup>Uz, his firstborn, his brother Buz, Kemuel the father of Aram, <sup>22</sup>Chesed, Hazo, Pildash, Jidlaph, and Bethuel.” <sup>23</sup>Bethuel became the father of Rebekah. These eight Milcah bore to Nahor, Abraham's brother. <sup>24</sup>His concubine, whose name was Reumah, also bore children: Tebah, Gaham, Tahash, and Maacah.

Purchase of a Burial Plot.* <sup>1</sup>The span of Sarah’s life was one hundred and twenty-seven years. <sup>2</sup>She died in Kiriath-arba—now Hebron—in the land of Canaan, and Abraham proceeded to mourn and weep for her. <sup>3</sup>Then he left the side of his deceased wife and addressed the Hittites:* <sup>4</sup>“Although I am a resident alien* among you, sell me from your holdings a burial place, that I may bury my deceased wife.”<sup>x</sup> <sup>5</sup>The Hittites answered Abraham: “Please, <sup>6</sup>sir, listen to us! You are a mighty leader among us. Bury your dead in the choicest of our burial sites. None of us would deny you his burial ground for the burial of your dead.” <sup>7</sup>Abraham, however, proceeded to bow low before the people of the land, the Hittites, <sup>8</sup>and said to them: “If you will allow me room for burial of my dead, listen to me! Intercede for me with Ephron, son of Zohar, <sup>9</sup>so that he will sell me the cave of Machpelah that he owns; it is at the edge of his field. Let him sell it to me in your presence at its full price for a burial place.”

<sup>10</sup>Now Ephron was sitting with the Hittites. So Ephron the Hittite replied to Abraham in the hearing of the Hittites, all who entered the gate of his city: <sup>11</sup>“Please, sir, listen to me! I give you both the field and the cave in it; in the presence of my people I give it to you. Bury your dead!” <sup>12</sup>But Abraham, after bowing low before the people of the land, <sup>13</sup>addressed Ephron in the hearing of these men: “If only you would please listen to me! I will pay you the price of the field. Accept it from me, that I may bury my dead there.” <sup>14</sup>Ephron replied to Abraham, “Please, <sup>15</sup>sir, listen to me! A piece of land worth four hundred shekels* of silver—what is that between you and me? Bury your dead!” <sup>16y</sup> Abraham accepted Ephron’s terms; he weighed out to him the silver that Ephron had stipulated in the hearing of the Hittites, four hundred shekels of silver at the current market value.*

gate of Ephron's city. <sup>19</sup>After this, Abraham buried his wife Sarah in the cave of the field of Machpelah, facing Mamre—now Hebron—in the land of Canaan. <sup>20</sup>Thus the field with its cave was transferred from the Hittites to Abraham as a burial place.

Isaac and Rebekah.* <sup>1</sup>Abraham was old, having seen many days, and the LORD had blessed him in every way. <sup>2a</sup> Abraham said to the senior servant of his household, who had charge of all his possessions: “Put your hand under my thigh, * <sup>3</sup>and I will make you swear by the LORD, the God of heaven and the God of earth, that you will not take a wife for my son from the daughters of the Canaanites among whom I live, <sup>b</sup> <sup>4</sup>but that you will go to my own land and to my relatives to get a wife for my son Isaac.” <sup>5</sup>The servant asked him: “What if the woman is unwilling to follow me to this land? Should I then take your son back to the land from which you came?” <sup>6</sup>Abraham told him, “Never take my son back there for any reason! <sup>7</sup>The LORD, the God of heaven, who took me from my father’s house and the land of my relatives, and who confirmed by oath the promise he made to me, ‘I will give this land to your descendants’—he will send his angel before you, and you will get a wife for my son there. <sup>c</sup> <sup>8</sup>If the woman is unwilling to follow you, you will be released from this oath to me. But never take my son back there!” <sup>9</sup>So the servant put his hand under the thigh of his master Abraham and swore to him concerning this matter.

As she came up, <sup>17</sup>the servant ran toward her and said, "Please give me a sip of water from your jug." <sup>18</sup>"Drink, sir," she replied, and quickly lowering the jug into her hand, she gave him a drink. <sup>19</sup>When she had finished giving him a drink, she said, "I will draw water for your camels, too, until they have finished drinking." <sup>20</sup>With that, she quickly emptied her jug into the drinking trough and ran back to the well to draw more water, until she had drawn enough for all the camels. <sup>21</sup>The man watched her the whole time, silently waiting to learn whether or not the LORD had made his journey successful. <sup>22</sup>When the camels had finished drinking, the man took out a gold nose-ring weighing half a shekel, and two gold bracelets weighing ten shekels for her wrists. <sup>23</sup>Then he asked her: "Whose daughter are you? Tell me, please. And is there a place in your father's house for us to spend the night?" <sup>24</sup>She answered: "I am the daughter of Bethuel the son of Milcah, whom she bore to Nahor. <sup>25</sup>We have plenty of straw and fodder," she added, "and also a place to spend the night." <sup>26</sup>The man then knelt and bowed down to the LORD, <sup>27</sup>saying: "Blessed be the LORD, the God of my master Abraham, who has not let his kindness and fidelity toward my master fail. As for me, the LORD has led me straight to the house of my master's brother."

and he has given him everything he owns. <sup>37</sup>My master put me under oath, saying: ‘You shall not take a wife for my son from the daughters of the Canaanites in whose land I live; <sup>38</sup>instead, you must go to my father’s house, to my own family, to get a wife for my son.’ <sup>39</sup>When I asked my master, ‘What if the woman will not follow me?’ <sup>40</sup>he replied: ‘The LORD, in whose presence I have always walked, will send his angel with you and make your journey successful, and so you will get a wife for my son from my own family and my father’s house.’ <sup>41</sup>Then you will be freed from my curse. If you go to my family and they refuse you, then, too, you will be free from my curse.’*

<sup>45</sup>“I had scarcely finished saying this to myself when Rebekah came out with a jug on her shoulder. After she went down to the spring and drew water, I said to her, ‘Please let me have a drink.’ <sup>46</sup>She quickly lowered the jug she was carrying and said, ‘Drink, and I will water your camels, too.’ So I drank, and she watered the camels also. <sup>47</sup>When I asked her, ‘Whose daughter are you?’ she answered, ‘The daughter of Bethuel, son of Nahor, borne to Nahor by Milcah.’ So I put the ring on her nose and the bracelets on her wrists. <sup>48</sup>Then I knelt and bowed down to the LORD, blessing the LORD, the God of my master Abraham, who had led me on the right road to obtain the daughter of my master’s kinsman for his son. <sup>49</sup>Now, if you will act with kindness and fidelity toward my master, let me know; but if not, let me know that too. I can then proceed accordingly.”

also gave costly presents to her brother and mother. <sup>54</sup>After he and the men with him had eaten and drunk, they spent the night there.

When they got up the next morning, he said, "Allow me to return to my master."<sup>h</sup> <sup>55</sup>Her brother and mother replied, "Let the young woman stay with us a short while, say ten days; after that she may go." <sup>56</sup>But he said to them, "Do not detain me, now that the LORD has made my journey successful; let me go back to my master." <sup>57</sup>They answered, "Let us call the young woman and see what she herself has to say about it." <sup>58</sup>So they called Rebekah and asked her, "Will you go with this man?" She answered, "I will."* <sup>59</sup>At this they sent off their sister Rebekah and her nurse with Abraham's servant and his men. <sup>60</sup>They blessed Rebekah and said:

"Sister, may you grow into thousands of myriads;
And may your descendants gain possession of the gates of their enemies!"<sup>i</sup>

CHAPTER 25

Death of Abraham. <sup>7</sup>The whole span of Abraham's life was one hundred and seventy-five years. <sup>8</sup>Then he breathed his last, dying at a ripe old age, grown old after a full life; and he was gathered to his people. <sup>9</sup>His sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him in the cave of Machpelah, in the field of Ephron, son of Zohar the Hittite, which faces Mamre, <sup>m</sup> <sup>10</sup>the field that Abraham had bought from the Hittites; there he was buried next to his wife Sarah. <sup>11</sup>After the death of Abraham, God blessed his son Isaac, who lived near Beer-lahai-roi.

Birth of Esau and Jacob. <sup>19*</sup> These are the descendants of Isaac, son of Abraham; Abraham begot Isaac. <sup>20</sup>Isaac was forty years old when he married Rebekah, the daughter of Bethuel the Aramean of Paddan-aram* and the sister of Laban the Aramean.<sup>r</sup> <sup>21</sup>Isaac entreated the LORD on behalf of his wife, since she was sterile. The LORD heard his entreaty, and his wife Rebekah became pregnant. <sup>22</sup>But the children jostled each other in the womb so much that she exclaimed, “If it is like this, * why go on living!” She went to consult the LORD, <sup>23</sup>and the LORD answered her:

Two nations are in your womb, two peoples are separating while still within you;
But one will be stronger than the other, and the older will serve the younger.<sup>*s</sup>

Isaac and Abimelech.<sup>1*</sup> <sup>y</sup> There was a famine in the land, distinct from the earlier one that had occurred in the days of Abraham, and Isaac went down to Abimelech, king of the Philistines in Gerar.<sup>z</sup> <sup>2</sup>The LORD appeared to him and said: Do not go down to Egypt, but camp in this land wherever I tell you. <sup>3</sup>Sojourn in this land, and I will be with you and bless you; for to you and your descendants I will give all these lands, in fulfillment of the oath that I swore to your father Abraham.<sup>a</sup> <sup>4</sup>I will make your descendants as numerous as the stars in the sky, and I will give them all these lands, and in your descendants all the nations of the earth will find blessing—<sup>b</sup> <sup>5</sup>this because Abraham obeyed me, keeping my mandate, my commandments, my ordinances, and my instructions.

<sup>6*</sup> So Isaac settled in Gerar. <sup>7</sup>When the men of the place asked questions about his wife, he answered, “She is my sister.” He was afraid that, if he called her his wife, the men of the place would kill him on account of Rebekah, since she was beautiful. <sup>8</sup>But when they had been there for a long time, Abimelech, king of the Philistines, looked out of a window and saw Isaac fondling his wife Rebekah. <sup>9</sup>He called for Isaac and said: “She must certainly be your wife! How could you have said, ‘She is my sister’?” Isaac replied, “I thought I might lose my life on her account.” <sup>10</sup>“How could you have done this to us!” exclaimed Abimelech. “It would have taken very little for one of the people to lie with your wife, and so you would have brought guilt upon us!” <sup>11</sup>Abimelech then commanded all the people: “Anyone who maltreats this man or his wife shall be put to death.”

days of his father Abraham and which the Philistines had stopped up after Abraham's death; he gave them names like those that his father had given them. <sup>19</sup>But when Isaac's servants dug in the wadi and reached spring water in their well, <sup>20</sup>the shepherds of Gerar argued with Isaac's shepherds, saying, "The water belongs to us!" So he named the well Esek,* because they had quarreled there. <sup>21</sup>Then they dug another well, and they argued over that one too; so he named it Sitnah.* <sup>22</sup>So he moved on from there and dug still another well, but over this one they did not argue. He named it Rehoboth,* and said, "Because the LORD has now given us ample room, we shall flourish in the land."

<sup>23</sup>From there Isaac went up to Beer-sheba. <sup>24</sup>The same night the LORD appeared to him and said: I am the God of Abraham, your father. Do not fear, for I am with you. I will bless you and multiply your descendants for the sake of Abraham, my servant.<sup>e</sup> <sup>25</sup>So Isaac built an altar there and invoked the LORD by name. After he had pitched his tent there, Isaac's servants began to dig a well nearby.

<sup>26f</sup> Then Abimelech came to him from Gerar, with Ahuzzath, his councilor, and Phicol, the general of his army. <sup>27</sup>Isaac asked them, "Why have you come to me, since you hate me and have driven me away from you?" <sup>28</sup>They answered: "We clearly see that the LORD has been with you, so we thought: let there be a sworn agreement between our two sides—between you and us. Let us make a covenant with you: <sup>29</sup>you shall do no harm to us, just as we have not maltreated you, but have always acted kindly toward you and have let you depart in peace. So now, may you be blessed by the LORD!" <sup>30</sup>Isaac then made a feast for them, and they ate and drank. <sup>31</sup>Early the next morning they exchanged oaths. Then Isaac sent them on their way, and they departed from him in peace.

<sup>32</sup>That same day Isaac's servants came and informed him about the well they had been digging; they told him, "We have reached water!" <sup>33</sup>He called it Shibah;* hence the name of the city is Beer-sheba to this day. <sup>34*</sup>When Esau was forty years old, he married Judith, daughter of Beeri the Hittite, and Basemath, daughter of Elon the Hivite.<sup>g</sup> <sup>35</sup>But they became a source of bitterness to Isaac and Rebekah.

CHAPTER 27

Jacob's Deception. *<sup>1</sup>When Isaac was so old that his eyesight had failed him, he called his older son Esau and said to him, “My son!” “Here I am!” he replied. <sup>2</sup>Isaac then said, “Now I have grown old. I do not know when I might die. <sup>3</sup>So now take your hunting gear—your quiver and bow—and go out into the open country to hunt some game for me. <sup>4</sup>Then prepare for me a dish in the way I like, and bring it to me to eat, so that I may bless you* before I die.”

<sup>5</sup>Rebekah had been listening while Isaac was speaking to his son Esau. So when Esau went out into the open country to hunt some game for his father,<sup>h</sup> <sup>6</sup>Rebekah said to her son Jacob, “Listen! I heard your father tell your brother Esau, <sup>7</sup>‘Bring me some game and prepare a dish for me to eat, that I may bless you with the LORD’s approval before I die.’ <sup>8</sup>Now, my son, obey me in what I am about to order you. <sup>9</sup>Go to the flock and get me two choice young goats so that with these I might prepare a dish for your father in the way he likes. <sup>10</sup>Then bring it to your father to eat, that he may bless you before he dies.” <sup>11</sup>But Jacob said to his mother Rebekah, “But my brother Esau is a hairy man and I am smooth-skinned!<sup>i</sup> <sup>12</sup>Suppose my father feels me? He will think I am making fun of him, and I will bring on myself a curse instead of a blessing.” <sup>13</sup>His mother, however, replied: “Let any curse against you, my son, fall on me! Just obey me. Go and get me the young goats.”

<sup>14</sup>So Jacob went and got them and brought them to his mother, and she prepared a dish in the way his father liked. <sup>15</sup>Rebekah then took the best clothes of her older son Esau that she had in the house, and gave them to her younger son Jacob to wear; <sup>16</sup>and with the goatskins she covered up his hands and the hairless part of his neck. <sup>17</sup>Then she gave her son Jacob the dish and the bread she had prepared.

<sup>18</sup>Going to his father, Jacob said, “Father!” “Yes?” replied Isaac. “Which of my sons are you?” <sup>19</sup>Jacob answered his father: “I am Esau, your firstborn. I did as you told me. Please sit up and eat some of my game, so that you may bless me.” <sup>20</sup>But Isaac said to his son, “How did you get it so quickly, my son?” He answered, “The LORD, your God, directed me.”

<sup>21</sup>Isaac then said to Jacob, “Come closer, my son, that I may feel you, to learn whether you really are my son Esau or not.” <sup>22</sup>So Jacob moved up closer to his father. When Isaac felt him, he said, “Although the voice is Jacob’s, the hands are Esau’s.” <sup>23</sup>(He failed to identify him because his hands were hairy, like those of his brother Esau; so he blessed him.) <sup>24</sup>Again Isaac said, “Are you really my son Esau?” And Jacob said, “I am.” <sup>25</sup>Then Isaac said, “Serve me, my son, and let me eat of the game so that I may bless you.” Jacob served it to him, and Isaac ate; he brought him wine, and he drank. <sup>26</sup>Finally his father Isaac said to him, “Come closer, my son, and kiss me.” <sup>27</sup>As Jacob went up to kiss him, Isaac smelled the fragrance of his clothes. With that, he blessed him, saying,

is like the fragrance of a field that the LORD has blessed!<sup>j</sup> <sup>28</sup>May God give to you of the dew of the heavens
And of the fertility of the earth abundance of grain and wine.
<sup>29</sup><sup>k</sup>May peoples serve you, and nations bow down to you;
Be master of your brothers, and may your mother’s sons bow down to you.
Cursed be those who curse you, and blessed be those who bless you.”

<sup>30</sup>Jacob had scarcely left his father after Isaac had finished blessing him, when his brother Esau came back from his hunt. <sup>31</sup>Then he too prepared a dish, and bringing it to his father, he said, “Let my father sit up and eat some of his son’s game, that you may then give me your blessing.” <sup>32</sup>His father Isaac asked him, “Who are you?” He said, “I am your son, your firstborn son, Esau.” <sup>33</sup>Isaac trembled greatly. “Who was it, then,” he asked, “that hunted game and brought it to me? I ate it all just before you came, and I blessed him. Now he is blessed!” <sup>34</sup>As he heard his father’s words, Esau burst into loud, bitter sobbing and said, “Father, bless me too!” <sup>35</sup>When Isaac said, “Your brother came here by a ruse and carried off your blessing,” <sup>36</sup>Esau exclaimed, “He is well named Jacob, is he not! He has supplanted me* twice! First he took away my right as firstborn, and now he has taken away my blessing.” Then he said, “Have you not saved a blessing for me?”<sup>l</sup> <sup>37</sup>Isaac replied to Esau: “I have already appointed him your master, and I have assigned to him all his kindred as his servants; besides, I have sustained him with grain and wine. What then can I do for you, my son?” <sup>38</sup>But Esau said to his father, “Have you only one blessing, father? Bless me too, father!” and Esau wept aloud.<sup>m</sup> <sup>39</sup>His father Isaac said in response:

will be your dwelling;
far from the dew of the heavens above!”<sup>n</sup> <sup>40</sup>By your sword you will live, and your brother you will serve;
But when you become restless, you will throw off his yoke from your neck.”<sup>o</sup>

<sup>41</sup>Esau bore a grudge against Jacob because of the blessing his father had given him. Esau said to himself, “Let the time of mourning for my father come, so that I may kill my brother Jacob.”<sup>p</sup> <sup>42</sup>When Rebekah got news of what her older son Esau had in mind, she summoned her younger son Jacob and said to him: “Listen! Your brother Esau intends to get his revenge by killing you. <sup>43</sup>So now, my son, obey me: flee at once to my brother Laban in Haran, <sup>44</sup>and stay with him a while until your brother’s fury subsides— <sup>45</sup>until your brother’s anger against you subsides and he forgets what you did to him. Then I will send for you and bring you back. Why should I lose both of you in a single day?”

Jacob Sent to Laban. <sup>46</sup>Rebekah said to Isaac: “I am disgusted with life because of the Hittite women. If Jacob also should marry a Hittite woman, a native of the land, like these women, why should I live?”<sup>q</sup>

<sup>6</sup>Esau noted that Isaac had blessed Jacob when he sent him to Paddan-aram to get himself a wife there, and that, as he gave him his blessing, he charged him, “You shall not marry a Canaanite woman,” <sup>7</sup>and that Jacob had obeyed his father and mother and gone to Paddan-aram. <sup>8</sup>Esau realized how displeasing the Canaanite women were to his father Isaac, <sup>9</sup>so Esau went to Ishmael, and in addition to the wives he had, married Mahalath, the daughter of Abraham’s son Ishmael and sister of Nebaioth.<sup>v</sup>

Jacob’s Dream at Bethel.* <sup>10</sup>Jacob departed from Beer-sheba and proceeded toward Haran. <sup>11</sup>When he came upon a certain place,* he stopped there for the night, since the sun had already set. Taking one of the stones at the place, he put it under his head and lay down in that place. <sup>12</sup>Then he had a dream: a stairway* rested on the ground, with its top reaching to the heavens; and God’s angels were going up and down on it.<sup>w</sup> <sup>13</sup>And there was the LORD standing beside him and saying: I am the LORD, the God of Abraham your father and the God of Isaac; the land on which you are lying I will give to you and your descendants.<sup>x</sup> <sup>14</sup>Your descendants will be like the dust of the earth, and through them you will spread to the west and the east, to the north and the south. In you and your descendants all the families of the earth will find blessing.<sup>y</sup> <sup>15</sup>I am with you and will protect you wherever you go, and bring you back to this land. I will never leave you until I have done what I promised you.<sup>z</sup>

<sup>16</sup>When Jacob awoke from his sleep, he said, “Truly, the LORD is in this place and I did not know it!” <sup>17</sup>He was afraid and said: “How awesome this place is! This is nothing else but the house of God, the gateway to heaven!”

<sup>20</sup>Jacob then made this vow: * “If God will be with me and protect me on this journey I am making and give me food to eat and clothes to wear, <sup>21</sup>and I come back safely to my father’s house, the LORD will be my God. <sup>22</sup>This stone that I have set up as a sacred pillar will be the house of God. Of everything you give me, I will return a tenth part to you without fail.”

CHAPTER 29

Arrival in Haran. <sup>* 1c</sup> After Jacob resumed his journey, he came to the land of the Kedemites. <sup>2</sup>Looking about, he saw a well in the open country, with three flocks of sheep huddled near it, for flocks were watered from that well. A large stone covered the mouth of the well. <sup>d 3</sup> When all the shepherds were assembled there they would roll the stone away from the mouth of the well and water the sheep. Then they would put the stone back again in its place over the mouth of the well.

<sup>4</sup>Jacob said to them, “My brothers, where are you from?” “We are from Haran,” they replied. <sup>5</sup>Then he asked them, “Do you know Laban, son of Nahor?” “We do,” they answered. <sup>e 6</sup>He inquired further, “Is he well?” “He is,” they answered; “and here comes his daughter Rachel with the sheep.” <sup>7</sup>Then he said: “There is still much daylight left; it is hardly the time to bring the animals home. Water the sheep, and then continue pasturing them.” <sup>8</sup>They replied, “We cannot until all the shepherds are here to roll the stone away from the mouth of the well; then can we water the flocks.”

<sup>9</sup>While he was still talking with them, Rachel arrived with her father’s sheep, for she was the one who tended them. <sup>10</sup>As soon as Jacob saw Rachel, the daughter of his mother’s brother Laban, and the sheep of Laban, he went up, rolled the stone away from the mouth of the well, and watered Laban’s sheep. <sup>11</sup>Then Jacob kissed Rachel and wept aloud. <sup>12</sup>Jacob told Rachel that he was her father’s relative, Rebekah’s son. So she ran to tell her father. <sup>13</sup>When Laban heard the news about Jacob, his sister’s son, he ran to meet him. After embracing and kissing him, he brought him to his house. Jacob then repeated to Laban all these things, <sup>14</sup>and Laban said to him, “You are indeed my bone and my flesh.”*

Marriage to Leah and Rachel. After Jacob had stayed with him a full month, <sup>15*</sup> Laban said to him: “Should you serve me for nothing just because you are a relative of mine? Tell me what your wages should be.” <sup>16</sup>Now Laban had two daughters; the older was called Leah, the younger Rachel. <sup>17</sup>Leah had dull eyes,* but Rachel was shapely and beautiful. <sup>18</sup>Because Jacob loved Rachel, he answered, “I will serve you seven years for your younger daughter Rachel.”* <sup>19</sup>Laban replied, “It is better to give her to you than to another man. Stay with me.” <sup>20</sup>So Jacob served seven years for Rachel, yet they seemed to him like a few days because of his love for her.<sup>f</sup>

<sup>21</sup>Then Jacob said to Laban, “Give me my wife, that I may consummate my marriage with her, for my term is now completed.” <sup>22</sup>So Laban invited all the local inhabitants and gave a banquet. <sup>23</sup>At nightfall he took his daughter Leah and brought her to Jacob, and he consummated the marriage with her. <sup>24</sup>Laban assigned his maidservant Zilpah to his daughter Leah as her maidservant. <sup>25</sup>In the morning, there was Leah! So Jacob said to Laban: “How could you do this to me! Was it not for Rachel that I served you? Why did you deceive me?” <sup>26</sup>Laban replied, “It is not the custom in our country to give the younger daughter before the firstborn. <sup>27</sup>Finish the bridal week* for this one, and then the other will also be given to you in return for another seven years of service with me.”<sup>g</sup>

<sup>28</sup>Jacob did so. He finished the bridal week for the one, and then Laban gave him his daughter Rachel as a wife. <sup>29</sup>Laban assigned his maidservant Bilhah to his daughter Rachel as her maidservant. <sup>30</sup>Jacob then consummated his marriage with Rachel also, and he loved her more than Leah. Thus he served Laban another seven years.<sup>h</sup>

Jacob’s Children.* <sup>31</sup>When the LORD saw that Leah was unloved, he made her fruitful, while Rachel was barren. <sup>32</sup>Leah conceived and bore a son, and she named him Reuben;* for she said, “It means, ‘The LORD saw my misery; surely now my husband will love me.’”<sup>i</sup> <sup>33</sup>She conceived again and bore a son, and said, “It means, ‘The LORD heard that I was unloved,’ and therefore he has given me this one also”; so she named him Simeon.* <sup>34</sup>Again she conceived and bore a son, and she said, “Now at last my husband will become attached to me, since I have now borne him three sons”; that is why she named him Levi.* <sup>35</sup>Once more she conceived and bore a son, and she said, “This time I will give thanks to the LORD”; therefore she named him Judah.* Then she stopped bearing children.<sup>j</sup>

CHAPTER 30

<sup>1</sup>When Rachel saw that she had not borne children to Jacob, she became envious of her sister. She said to Jacob, “Give me children or I shall die!”<sup>k</sup>
<sup>2</sup>Jacob became angry with Rachel and said, “Can I take the place of God, who has denied you the fruit of the womb?”<sup>l</sup> <sup>3</sup>She replied, “Here is my maidservant Bilhah. Have intercourse with her, and let her give birth on my knees,* so that I too may have children through her.”<sup>m</sup> <sup>4</sup>So she gave him her maidservant Bilhah as wife,* and Jacob had intercourse with her. <sup>5</sup>When Bilhah conceived and bore a son for Jacob, <sup>6</sup>Rachel said, “God has vindicated me; indeed he has heeded my plea and given me a son.” Therefore she named him Dan.* <sup>7</sup>Rachel’s maidservant Bilhah conceived again and bore a second son for Jacob, <sup>8</sup>and Rachel said, “I have wrestled strenuously with my sister, and I have prevailed.” So she named him Naphtali.*

<sup>14</sup>One day, during the wheat harvest, Reuben went out and came upon some mandrakes* in the field which he brought home to his mother Leah. Rachel said to Leah, “Please give me some of your son’s mandrakes.” <sup>15</sup>Leah replied, “Was it not enough for you to take away my husband, that you must now take my son’s mandrakes too?” Rachel answered, “In that case Jacob may lie with you tonight in exchange for your son’s mandrakes.” <sup>16</sup>That evening, when Jacob came in from the field, Leah went out to meet him. She said, “You must have intercourse with me, because I have hired you with my son’s mandrakes.” So that night he lay with her, <sup>17</sup>and God listened to Leah; she conceived and bore a fifth son to Jacob. <sup>18</sup>Leah then said, “God has given me my wages for giving my maidservant to my husband”; so she named him Issachar.* <sup>19</sup>Leah conceived again and bore a sixth son to Jacob; <sup>20</sup>and Leah said, “God has brought me a precious gift.

This time my husband will honor me, because I have borne him six sons”; so she named him Zebulun.* <sup>21</sup>Afterwards she gave birth to a daughter, and she named her Dinah.

<sup>22</sup>Then God remembered Rachel. God listened to her and made her fruitful. <sup>23</sup>She conceived and bore a son, and she said, “God has removed my disgrace.”<sup>n</sup> <sup>24</sup>She named him Joseph,* saying, “May the LORD add another son for me!”

Jacob Outwits Laban.* <sup>25</sup>After Rachel gave birth to Joseph, Jacob said to Laban: “Allow me to go to my own region and land. <sup>26</sup>Give me my wives and my children for whom I served you and let me go, for you know the service that I rendered you.” <sup>27</sup>Laban answered him: “If you will please! I have learned through divination that the LORD has blessed me because of you.” <sup>28</sup>He continued, “State the wages I owe you, and I will pay them.” <sup>29</sup>Jacob replied: “You know what work I did for you and how well your livestock fared under my care; <sup>30</sup>the little you had before I came has grown into an abundance, since the LORD has blessed you in my company. Now, when can I do something for my own household as well?” <sup>31</sup>Laban asked, “What should I give you?” Jacob answered: “You do not have to give me anything. If you do this thing for me, I will again pasture and tend your sheep. <sup>32</sup> Let me go through your whole flock today and remove from it every dark animal among the lambs and every spotted or speckled one among the goats.* These will be my wages. <sup>33</sup>In the future, whenever you check on my wages, my honesty will testify for me: any animal that is not speckled or spotted among the goats, or dark among the lambs, got into my possession by theft!” <sup>34</sup>Laban said, “Very well. Let it be as you say.”

<sup>37</sup>Jacob, however, got some fresh shoots of poplar, almond and plane* trees, and he peeled white stripes in them by laying bare the white core of the shoots. <sup>38</sup>The shoots that he had peeled he then set upright in the watering troughs where the animals came to drink, so that they would be in front of them. When the animals were in heat as they came to drink, <sup>39</sup>the goats mated by the shoots, and so they gave birth to streaked, speckled and spotted young. <sup>40</sup>The sheep, on the other hand, Jacob kept apart, and he made these animals face the streaked or completely dark animals of Laban. Thus he produced flocks of his own, which he did not put with Laban's flock. <sup>41</sup>Whenever the hardier animals were in heat, Jacob would set the shoots in the troughs in full view of these animals, so that they mated by the shoots; <sup>42</sup>but with the weaker animals he would not put the shoots there. So the feeble animals would go to Laban, but the hardy ones to Jacob. <sup>43</sup>So the man grew exceedingly prosperous, and he owned large flocks, male and female servants, camels, and donkeys.

CHAPTER 31

Flight from Laban. <sup>1*</sup> Jacob heard that Laban's sons were saying, "Jacob has taken everything that belonged to our father, and he has produced all this wealth from our father's property." <sup>2</sup> Jacob perceived, too, that Laban's attitude toward him was not what it had previously been. <sup>3</sup> Then the LORD said to Jacob: Return to the land of your ancestors, where you were born, and I will be with you.<sup>o</sup>

<sup>4</sup> So Jacob sent for Rachel and Leah to meet him in the field where his flock was. <sup>5</sup> There he said to them: "I have noticed that your father's attitude toward me is not as it was in the past; but the God of my father has been with me. <sup>6</sup> You know well that with all my strength I served your father; <sup>7</sup> yet your father cheated me and changed my wages ten times. God, however, did not let him do me any harm.<sup>p</sup> <sup>8</sup> Whenever your father said, 'The speckled animals will be your wages,' the entire flock would bear speckled young; whenever he said, 'The streaked animals will be your wages,' the entire flock would bear streaked young. <sup>9</sup> So God took away your father's livestock and gave it to me. <sup>10</sup> Once, during the flock's mating season, I had a dream in which I saw he-goats mating that were streaked, speckled and mottled. <sup>11</sup> In the dream God's angel said to me, 'Jacob!' and I replied, 'Here I am!' <sup>12</sup> Then he said: 'Look up and see. All the he-goats that are mating are streaked, speckled and mottled, for I have seen all the things that Laban has been doing to you. <sup>13</sup> I am the God of Bethel, where you anointed a sacred pillar and made a vow to me. Get up now! Leave this land and return to the land of your birth.' "<sup>q</sup>

<sup>14</sup> Rachel and Leah answered him: "Do we still have an heir's portion in our father's house? <sup>15</sup> Are we not regarded by him as outsiders?*" He not only sold us; he has even used up the money that he got for us! <sup>16</sup> All the wealth that God took away from our father really belongs to us and our children. So do whatever God has told you."<sup>r</sup> <sup>17</sup> Jacob proceeded to put his children and wives on camels, <sup>18</sup> and he drove off all his livestock and all the property he had acquired in Paddan-aram, to go to his father Isaac in the land of Canaan.

<sup>22</sup>On the third day, word came to Laban that Jacob had fled. <sup>23</sup>Taking his kinsmen with him, he pursued him for seven days* until he caught up with him in the hill country of Gilead. <sup>24</sup>But that night God appeared to Laban the Aramean in a dream and said to him: Take care not to say anything to Jacob.<sup>t</sup>

Jacob and Laban in Gilead.<sup>25</sup>When Laban overtook Jacob, Jacob's tents were pitched in the hill country; Laban also pitched his tents in the hill country of Gilead. <sup>26</sup>Laban said to Jacob, "How could you hoodwink me and carry off my daughters like prisoners of war?*" <sup>27</sup>Why did you dupe me by stealing away secretly? You did not tell me! I would have sent you off with joyful singing to the sound of tambourines and harps. <sup>28</sup>You did not even allow me a parting kiss to my daughters and grandchildren! Now what you have done makes no sense. <sup>29</sup>I have it in my power to harm all of you; but last night the God of your father said to me, 'Take care not to say anything to Jacob!'<sup>30</sup>Granted that you had to leave because you were longing for your father's house, why did you steal my gods?" <sup>31</sup>Jacob replied to Laban, "I was frightened at the thought that you might take your daughters away from me by force. <sup>32</sup>As for your gods, the one you find them with shall not remain alive! If, with our kinsmen looking on, you identify anything here as belonging to you, take it." Jacob had no idea that Rachel had stolen the household images.

<sup>33</sup>Laban then went in and searched Jacob's tent and Leah's tent, as well as the tents of the two maidservants; but he did not find them. Leaving Leah's tent, he went into Rachel's. <sup>34</sup>* Meanwhile Rachel had taken the household images, put them inside the camel's saddlebag, and seated herself upon them. When Laban had rummaged through her whole tent without finding them,<sup>u</sup> <sup>35</sup>she said to her father, "Do not let my lord be angry that I cannot rise in your presence; I am having my period." So, despite his search, he did not find the household images.

<sup>36</sup>Jacob, now angered, confronted Laban and demanded, “What crime or offense have I committed that you should hound me? <sup>37</sup>Now that you have rummaged through all my things, what have you found from your household belongings? Produce it here before your kinsmen and mine, and let them decide between the two of us.

<sup>38</sup>“In the twenty years that I was under you, no ewe or she-goat of yours ever miscarried, and I have never eaten rams of your flock. <sup>39v</sup> I never brought you an animal torn by wild beasts; I made good the loss myself. You held me responsible for anything stolen by day or night. * <sup>40</sup>Often the scorching heat devoured me by day, and the frost by night, while sleep fled from my eyes! <sup>41</sup>Of the twenty years that I have now spent in your household, I served you fourteen years for your two daughters and six years for your flock, while you changed my wages ten times. <sup>42</sup>If the God of my father, the God of Abraham and the Fear of Isaac, had not been on my side, you would now have sent me away empty-handed. But God saw my plight and the fruits of my toil, and last night he reproached you.”<sup>w</sup>

<sup>43*</sup> Laban replied to Jacob: “The daughters are mine, their children are mine, and the flocks are mine; everything you see belongs to me. What can I do now for my own daughters and for the children they have borne? <sup>44*</sup> Come, now, let us make a covenant, you and I; and it will be a treaty between you and me.”

<sup>51</sup>Laban said further to Jacob: “Here is this mound, and here is the sacred pillar that I have set up between you and me. <sup>52</sup>This mound will be a witness, and this sacred pillar will be a witness, that, with hostile intent, I may not pass beyond this mound into your territory, nor may you pass beyond it into mine. <sup>53</sup>May the God of Abraham and the God of Nahor, the God of their father, judge between us!” Jacob took the oath by the Fear of his father Isaac.* <sup>54</sup>He then offered a sacrifice on the mountain and invited his kinsmen to share in the meal. When they had eaten, they passed the night on the mountain.

CHAPTER 32

Envoys to Esau. <sup>4</sup>Jacob sent messengers ahead to his brother Esau in the land of Seir, the country of Edom,<sup>y</sup> <sup>5</sup>ordering them: "Thus you shall say to my lord Esau: 'Thus says your servant Jacob: I have been residing with Laban and have been delayed until now. <sup>6</sup>I own oxen, donkeys and sheep, as well as male and female servants. I have sent my lord this message in the hope of gaining your favor.' " <sup>7</sup>When the messengers returned to Jacob, they said, "We found your brother Esau. He is now coming to meet you, and four hundred men are with him."

<sup>8</sup>Jacob was very much frightened. In his anxiety, he divided the people who were with him, as well as his flocks, herds and camels, into two camps. <sup>9</sup>"If Esau should come and attack one camp," he reasoned, "the remaining camp may still escape." <sup>10</sup>Then Jacob prayed: "God of my father Abraham and God of my father Isaac! You, LORD, who said to me, 'Go back to your land and your relatives, and I will be good to you.'<sup>z</sup> <sup>11</sup>I am unworthy of all the acts of kindness and faithfulness that you have performed for your servant: although I crossed the Jordan here with nothing but my staff, I have now grown into two camps. <sup>12</sup>Save me from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau! Otherwise I fear that he will come and strike me down and the mothers with the children. <sup>13</sup>You yourself said, 'I will be very good to you, and I will make your descendants like the sands of the sea, which are too numerous to count.'<sup>a</sup>

between the herds.” <sup>18</sup>He ordered the servant in the lead, “When my brother Esau meets you and asks, ‘To whom do you belong? Where are you going? To whom do these animals ahead of you belong?’ <sup>19</sup>tell him, ‘To your servant Jacob, but they have been sent as a gift to my lord Esau. Jacob himself is right behind us.’ ” <sup>20</sup>He also ordered the second servant and the third and all the others who followed behind the herds: “Thus and so you shall say to Esau, when you reach him; <sup>21</sup>and also tell him, ‘Your servant Jacob is right behind us.’ ” “For Jacob reasoned, “If I first appease him with a gift that precedes me, then later, when I face him, perhaps he will forgive me.” <sup>22</sup>So the gifts went on ahead of him, while he stayed that night in the camp.

Jacob’s New Name. * <sup>23</sup>That night, however, Jacob arose, took his two wives, with the two maidservants and his eleven children, and crossed the ford of the Jabbok. <sup>24</sup>After he got them and brought them across the wadi and brought over what belonged to him, <sup>25</sup>Jacob was left there alone. Then a man * wrestled with him until the break of dawn. <sup>26</sup>When the man saw that he could not prevail over him, he struck Jacob’s hip at its socket, so that Jacob’s socket was dislocated as he wrestled with him. <sup>b</sup> <sup>27</sup>The man then said, “Let me go, for it is daybreak.” But Jacob said, “I will not let you go until you bless me.” <sup>28</sup>“What is your name?” the man asked. He answered, “Jacob.” <sup>c</sup> <sup>29</sup>Then the man said, “You shall no longer be named Jacob, but Israel, * because you have contended with divine and human beings and have prevailed.” <sup>30</sup>Jacob then asked him, “Please tell me your name.” He answered, “Why do you ask for my name?” With that, he blessed him. <sup>31</sup>Jacob named the place Peniel, * “because I have seen God face to face,” he said, “yet my life has been spared.” <sup>d</sup>

CHAPTER 33

Jacob and Esau Meet.* <sup>1</sup>Jacob looked up and saw Esau coming, and with him four hundred men. So he divided his children among Leah, Rachel, and the two maidservants, <sup>2</sup>putting the maidservants and their children first, Leah and her children next, and Rachel and Joseph last. <sup>3</sup>He himself went on ahead of them, bowing to the ground seven times, until he reached his brother. <sup>4</sup>Esau ran to meet him, embraced him, and flinging himself on his neck, kissed him as he wept.

<sup>5</sup>Then Esau looked up and saw the women and children and asked, “Who are these with you?” Jacob answered, “They are the children with whom God has graciously favored your servant.” <sup>6</sup>Then the maidservants and their children came forward and bowed low; <sup>7</sup>next, Leah and her children came forward and bowed low; lastly, Joseph and Rachel came forward and bowed low. <sup>8</sup>Then Esau asked, “What did you intend with all those herds that I encountered?” Jacob answered, “It was to gain my lord’s favor.” <sup>9</sup>Esau replied, “I have plenty; my brother, you should keep what is yours.” <sup>10</sup>“No, I beg you!” said Jacob. “If you will do me the favor, accept this gift from me, since to see your face is for me like seeing the face of God—and you have received me so kindly. <sup>11</sup>Accept the gift I have brought you. For God has been generous toward me, and I have an abundance.” Since he urged him strongly, Esau accepted.

<sup>12</sup>Then Esau said, “Let us break camp and be on our way; I will travel in front of you.” <sup>13</sup>But Jacob replied: “As my lord knows, the children are too young. And the flocks and herds that are nursing are a concern to me; if overdriven for even a single day, the whole flock will die. <sup>14</sup>Let my lord, then, go before his servant, while I proceed more slowly at the pace of the livestock before me and at the pace of my children, until I join my lord in Seir.” <sup>15</sup>Esau replied, “Let me at least put at your disposal some of the people who are with me.” But Jacob said, “Why is this that I am treated so kindly, my lord?” <sup>16</sup>So on that day Esau went on his way back to Seir, <sup>17</sup>and Jacob broke camp for Succoth.* There Jacob built a home for himself and made booths for his livestock. That is why the place was named Succoth.

Revenge of Jacob’s Sons. <sup>13</sup>Jacob’s sons replied to Shechem and his father Hamor with guile, speaking as they did because he had defiled their sister Dinah. <sup>14</sup>They said to them, “We are not able to do this thing: to give our sister to an uncircumcised man. For that would be a disgrace for us. <sup>15</sup>Only on this condition will we agree to that: that you become like us by having every male among you circumcised. <sup>16</sup>Then we will give you our daughters and take your daughters in marriage; we will settle among you and become one people. <sup>17</sup>But if you do not listen to us and be circumcised, we will take our daughter and go.”

Now he was more highly regarded than anyone else in his father's house.
<sup>20</sup>So Hamor and his son Shechem went to the gate of their city and said to the men of their city: <sup>21</sup>"These men are friendly toward us. Let them settle in the land and move about in it freely; there is ample room in the land for them. We can take their daughters in marriage and give our daughters to them. <sup>22</sup>But only on this condition will the men agree to live with us and form one people with us: that every male among us be circumcised as they themselves are. <sup>23</sup>Would not their livestock, their property, and all their animals then be ours? Let us just agree with them, so that they will settle among us."

<sup>24</sup>All who went out of the gate of the city listened to Hamor and his son Shechem, and all the males, all those who went out of the gate of the city,* were circumcised. <sup>25</sup>On the third day, while they were still in pain, two of Jacob's sons, Simeon and Levi, brothers of Dinah, each took his sword, advanced against the unsuspecting city and massacred all the males.<sup>i</sup> <sup>26</sup>After they had killed Hamor and his son Shechem with the sword, they took Dinah from Shechem's house and left.<sup>j</sup> <sup>27</sup>Then the other sons of Jacob followed up the slaughter and sacked the city because their sister had been defiled. <sup>28</sup>They took their sheep, cattle and donkeys, whatever was in the city and in the surrounding country. <sup>29</sup>They carried off all their wealth, their children, and their women, and looted whatever was in the houses.<sup>k</sup>

<sup>30</sup>Jacob said to Simeon and Levi: "You have brought trouble upon me by making me repugnant to the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites and the Perizzites. I have so few men that, if these people unite against me and attack me, I and my household will be wiped out." <sup>31</sup>But they retorted, "Should our sister be treated like a prostitute?"

Bethel Revisited.<sup>1*</sup> God said to Jacob: Go up now to Bethel. Settle there and build an altar there to the God who appeared to you when you were fleeing from your brother Esau.<sup>l</sup> <sup>2</sup>So Jacob told his household and all who were with him: “Get rid of the foreign gods* among you; then purify yourselves and change your clothes. <sup>3</sup>Let us now go up to Bethel so that I might build an altar there to the God who answered me in the day of my distress and who has been with me wherever I have gone.” <sup>4</sup>They gave Jacob all the foreign gods in their possession and also the rings they had in their ears* and Jacob buried them under the oak that is near Shechem. <sup>5</sup>Then, as they set out, a great terror fell upon the surrounding towns, so that no one pursued the sons of Jacob.

<sup>6</sup>Thus Jacob and all the people who were with him arrived in Luz (now Bethel) in the land of Canaan.<sup>m</sup> <sup>7</sup>There he built an altar and called the place El-Bethel,* for it was there that God had revealed himself to him when he was fleeing from his brother.<sup>n</sup>

<sup>9</sup>On Jacob’s arrival from Paddan-aram, God appeared to him again and blessed him. <sup>10</sup>God said to him:

Your name is Jacob.

You will no longer be named Jacob, but Israel will be your name.<sup>o</sup>

So he was named Israel. <sup>11</sup>Then God said to him: I am God Almighty; be fruitful and multiply. A nation, indeed an assembly of nations, will stem from you, and kings will issue from your loins. <sup>12</sup>The land I gave to Abraham and Isaac I will give to you; and to your descendants after you I will give the land.<sup>p</sup>

<sup>13</sup>Then God departed from him. <sup>14</sup>In the place where God had spoken with him, Jacob set up a sacred pillar, a stone pillar, and upon it he made a libation and poured out oil.<sup>q</sup> <sup>15</sup>Jacob named the place where God spoke to him Bethel.

Jacob's Family. <sup>16</sup>Then they departed from Bethel; but while they still had some distance to go to Ephrath, Rachel went into labor and suffered great distress. <sup>17</sup>When her labor was most intense, the midwife said to her, "Do not fear, for now you have another son." <sup>18</sup>With her last breath—for she was at the point of death—she named him Ben-oni;* but his father named him Benjamin. <sup>19</sup>Thus Rachel died; and she was buried on the road to Ephrath (now Bethlehem)<sup>*r</sup> <sup>20</sup>Jacob set up a sacred pillar on her grave, and the same pillar marks Rachel's grave to this day.

Joseph Sold into Egypt.<sup>1</sup>Jacob settled in the land where his father had sojourned, the land of Canaan.* <sup>2</sup>This is the story of the family of Jacob.* When Joseph was seventeen years old, he was tending the flocks with his brothers; he was an assistant to the sons of his father's wives Bilhah and Zilpah, and Joseph brought their father bad reports about them. <sup>3</sup>Israel loved Joseph best of all his sons, for he was the child of his old age; and he had made him a long ornamented tunic.* <sup>4</sup>When his brothers saw that their father loved him best of all his brothers, they hated him so much that they could not say a kind word to him.

<sup>5</sup>* Once Joseph had a dream, and when he told his brothers, they hated him even more.<sup>e</sup> <sup>6</sup>He said to them, "Listen to this dream I had. <sup>7</sup>There we were, binding sheaves in the field, when suddenly my sheaf rose to an upright position, and your sheaves formed a ring around my sheaf and bowed down to it." <sup>8</sup>His brothers said to him, "Are you really going to make yourself king over us? Will you rule over us?" So they hated him all the more because of his dreams and his reports.<sup>f</sup>

<sup>9</sup>Then he had another dream, and told it to his brothers. "Look, I had another dream," he said; "this time, the sun and the moon and eleven stars were bowing down to me." <sup>10</sup>When he told it to his father and his brothers, his father reproved him and asked, "What is the meaning of this dream of yours? Can it be that I and your mother and your brothers are to come and bow to the ground before you?" <sup>11</sup>So his brothers were furious at him but his father kept the matter in mind.

<sup>12</sup>One day, when his brothers had gone to pasture their father's flocks at Shechem, <sup>13</sup>Israel said to Joseph, "Are your brothers not tending our flocks at Shechem? Come and I will send you to them." "I am ready," Joseph answered. <sup>14</sup>"Go then," he replied; "see if all is well with your brothers and the flocks, and bring back word." So he sent him off from the valley of Hebron. When Joseph reached Shechem, <sup>15</sup>a man came upon him as he was wandering about in the fields. "What are you looking for?" the man asked him. <sup>16</sup>"I am looking for my brothers," he answered. "Please tell me where they are tending the flocks." <sup>17</sup>The man told him, "They have moved on from here; in fact, I heard them say, ‘Let us go on to Dothan.’ ” So Joseph went after his brothers and found them in Dothan. <sup>18</sup>They saw him from a distance, and before he reached them, they plotted to kill him. <sup>19</sup>They said to one another: “Here comes that dreamer! <sup>20</sup>Come now, let us kill him and throw him into one of the cisterns here; we could say that a wild beast devoured him. We will see then what comes of his dreams.”<sup>g</sup>

<sup>21</sup>* But when Reuben heard this, he tried to save him from their hands, saying: “We must not take his life.” <sup>22</sup>Then Reuben said, “Do not shed blood! Throw him into this cistern in the wilderness; but do not lay a hand on him.” His purpose was to save him from their hands and restore him to his father.<sup>h</sup>

<sup>23</sup>So when Joseph came up to his brothers, they stripped him of his tunic, the long ornamented tunic he had on; <sup>24</sup>then they took him and threw him into the cistern. The cistern was empty; there was no water in it.

Joseph's Temptation. <sup>1</sup>When Joseph was taken down to Egypt, an Egyptian, Potiphar, an official of Pharaoh and his chief steward, bought him from the Ishmaelites who had brought him there. <sup>2w</sup> The LORD was with Joseph and he enjoyed great success and was assigned to the household of his Egyptian master. <sup>3</sup>When his master saw that the LORD was with him and brought him success in whatever he did, <sup>4</sup>he favored Joseph and made him his personal attendant; he put him in charge of his household and entrusted to him all his possessions.<sup>x</sup> <sup>5</sup>From the moment that he put him in charge of his household and all his possessions, the LORD blessed the Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake; the LORD's blessing was on everything he owned, both inside the house and out. <sup>6</sup>Having left everything he owned in Joseph's charge, he gave no thought, with Joseph there, to anything but the food he ate.

Now Joseph was well-built and handsome. <sup>7</sup>After a time, his master's wife looked at him with longing and said, "Lie with me." <sup>8</sup>But he refused and said to his master's wife, "Look, as long as I am here, my master does not give a thought to anything in the house, but has entrusted to me all he owns. <sup>9</sup>He has no more authority in this house than I do. He has withheld from me nothing but you, since you are his wife. How, then, could I do this great wrong and sin against God?" <sup>10</sup>Although she spoke to him day after day, he would not agree to lie with her, or even be near her.<sup>y</sup> cloak beside me and escaped outside.” <sup>19</sup>When the master heard his wife’s story in which she reported, “Thus and so your servant did to me,” he became enraged. <sup>20</sup>Joseph’s master seized him and put him into the jail where the king’s prisoners were confined. <sup>z</sup> And there he sat, in jail.

After they had been in custody for some time, <sup>5</sup>the cupbearer and the baker of the king of Egypt who were confined in the jail both had dreams on the same night, each his own dream and each dream with its own meaning. <sup>6</sup>When Joseph came to them in the morning, he saw that they looked disturbed. <sup>7</sup>So he asked Pharaoh's officials who were with him in custody in his master's house, "Why do you look so troubled today?" <sup>8</sup>They answered him, "We have had dreams, but there is no one to interpret them." Joseph said to them, "Do interpretations not come from God? Please tell me the dreams."<sup>b</sup>

<sup>9</sup>Then the chief cupbearer told Joseph his dream. "In my dream," he said, "I saw a vine in front of me, <sup>10</sup>and on the vine were three branches. It had barely budded when its blossoms came out, and its clusters ripened into grapes. <sup>11</sup>Pharaoh's cup was in my hand; so I took the grapes, pressed them out into his cup, and put it in Pharaoh's hand." <sup>12</sup>Joseph said to him: "This is its interpretation. The three branches are three days; <sup>13</sup>within three days Pharaoh will single you out* and restore you to your post. You will be handing Pharaoh his cup as you formerly did when you were his cupbearer. <sup>14</sup>Only think of me when all is well with you, and please do me the great favor of mentioning me to Pharaoh, to get me out of this place. <sup>15</sup>The truth is that I was kidnapped from the land of the Hebrews, and I have not done anything here that they should have put me into a dungeon."

<sup>16</sup>When the chief baker saw that Joseph had given a favorable interpretation, he said to him: "I too had a dream. In it I had three bread baskets on my head; <sup>17</sup>in the top one were all kinds of bakery products for Pharaoh, but the birds were eating them out of the basket on my head." <sup>18</sup>Joseph said to him in reply: "This is its interpretation. The three baskets are three days; <sup>19</sup>within three days Pharaoh will single you out and will impale you on a stake, and the birds will be eating your flesh.”

<sup>20</sup>And so on the third day, which was Pharaoh’s birthday, when he gave a banquet to all his servants, he singled out the chief cupbearer and chief baker in the midst of his servants. <sup>21</sup>He restored the chief cupbearer to his office, so that he again handed the cup to Pharaoh; <sup>22</sup>but the chief baker he impaled—just as Joseph had told them in his interpretation. <sup>23</sup>Yet the chief cupbearer did not think of Joseph; he forgot him.

CHAPTER 41

Pharaoh's Dream. <sup>1*</sup> After a lapse of two years, Pharaoh had a dream. He was standing by the Nile, <sup>2</sup>when up out of the Nile came seven cows, fine-looking and fat; they grazed in the reed grass. <sup>3</sup>Behind them seven other cows, poor-looking and gaunt, came up out of the Nile; and standing on the bank of the Nile beside the others, <sup>4</sup>the poor-looking, gaunt cows devoured the seven fine-looking, fat cows. Then Pharaoh woke up.

<sup>5</sup>He fell asleep again and had another dream. He saw seven ears of grain, fat and healthy, growing on a single stalk. <sup>6</sup>Behind them sprouted seven ears of grain, thin and scorched by the east wind; <sup>7</sup>and the thin ears swallowed up the seven fat, healthy ears. Then Pharaoh woke up—it was a dream!

<sup>14</sup>Pharaoh therefore had Joseph summoned, and they hurriedly brought him from the dungeon. After he shaved and changed his clothes, he came to Pharaoh.<sup>d</sup> <sup>15</sup>Pharaoh then said to Joseph: “I had a dream but there was no one to interpret it. But I hear it said of you, ‘If he hears a dream he can interpret it.’ ” <sup>16</sup>“It is not I,” Joseph replied to Pharaoh, “but God who will respond for the well-being of Pharaoh.”<sup>e</sup>

<sup>17</sup>Then Pharaoh said to Joseph: “In my dream, I was standing on the bank of the Nile, <sup>18</sup>when up from the Nile came seven cows, fat and well-formed; they grazed in the reed grass. <sup>19</sup>Behind them came seven other cows, scrawny, most ill-formed and gaunt. Never have I seen such bad specimens as these in all the land of Egypt! <sup>20</sup>The gaunt, bad cows devoured the first seven fat cows. <sup>21</sup>But when they had consumed them, no one could tell that they had done so, because they looked as bad as before. Then I woke up. <sup>22</sup>In another dream I saw seven ears of grain, full and healthy, growing on a single stalk. <sup>23</sup>Behind them sprouted seven ears of grain, shriveled and thin and scorched by the east wind; <sup>24</sup>and the seven thin ears swallowed up the seven healthy ears. I have spoken to the magicians, but there is no one to explain it to me.”

<sup>25</sup>Joseph said to Pharaoh: “Pharaoh’s dreams have the same meaning. God has made known to Pharaoh what he is about to do. <sup>26</sup>The seven healthy cows are seven years, and the seven healthy ears are seven years—the same in each dream. <sup>27</sup>The seven thin, bad cows that came up after them are seven years, as are the seven thin ears scorched by the east wind; they are seven years of famine. <sup>28</sup>Things are just as I told Pharaoh: God has revealed to Pharaoh what he is about to do. <sup>29</sup>Seven years of great abundance are now coming throughout the land of Egypt; <sup>30</sup>but seven years of famine will rise up after them, when all the abundance will be forgotten in the land of Egypt. When the famine has exhausted the land, <sup>31</sup>no trace of the abundance will be found in the land because of the famine that follows it, for it will be very severe. <sup>32</sup>That Pharaoh had the same dream twice means that the matter has been confirmed by God and that God will soon bring it about.

<sup>37</sup>This advice pleased Pharaoh and all his servants.<sup>f</sup> <sup>38</sup>“Could we find another like him,” Pharaoh asked his servants, “a man so endowed with the spirit of God?” <sup>39</sup>So Pharaoh said to Joseph: “Since God has made all this known to you, there is no one as discerning and wise as you are. <sup>40</sup>You shall be in charge of my household, and all my people will obey your command. Only in respect to the throne will I outrank you.”<sup>g</sup> <sup>41</sup>Then Pharaoh said to Joseph, “Look, I put you in charge of the whole land of Egypt.” <sup>42</sup>With that, Pharaoh took off his signet ring* and put it on Joseph’s finger. He dressed him in robes of fine linen and put a gold chain around his neck. <sup>43</sup>He then had him ride in his second chariot, and they shouted “Abrek!”* before him.

Thus was Joseph installed over the whole land of Egypt. <sup>44</sup>“I am Pharaoh,” he told Joseph, “but without your approval no one shall lift hand or foot in all the land of Egypt.” <sup>45</sup>Pharaoh also bestowed the name of Zaphenath-paneah* on Joseph, and he gave him in marriage Asenath, the daughter of Potiphera, priest of Heliopolis. And Joseph went out over the land of Egypt. <sup>46</sup>Joseph was thirty years old when he entered the service of Pharaoh, king of Egypt.

After Joseph left Pharaoh, he went throughout the land of Egypt. <sup>47</sup>During the seven years of plenty, when the land produced abundant crops, <sup>48</sup>he collected all the food of these years of plenty that the land of Egypt was enjoying and stored it in the cities, placing in each city the crops of the fields around it. <sup>49</sup>Joseph collected grain like the sands of the sea, so much that at last he stopped measuring it, for it was beyond measure.

<sup>53</sup>When the seven years of abundance enjoyed by the land of Egypt came to an end, <sup>54</sup>the seven years of famine set in, just as Joseph had said. Although there was famine in all the other countries, food was available throughout the land of Egypt.<sup>i</sup> <sup>55</sup>When all the land of Egypt became hungry and the people cried to Pharaoh for food, Pharaoh said to all the Egyptians: “Go to Joseph and do whatever he tells you.” <sup>56</sup>When the famine had spread throughout the land, Joseph opened all the cities that had grain and rationed it to the Egyptians, since the famine had gripped the land of Egypt. <sup>57</sup>Indeed, the whole world came to Egypt to Joseph to buy grain, for famine had gripped the whole world.

The Brothers' First Journey to Egypt.* <sup>1</sup>When Jacob learned that grain rations were for sale in Egypt, he said to his sons: “Why do you keep looking at one another?” <sup>2</sup>He went on, “I hear that grain is for sale in Egypt. Go down there and buy some for us, that we may stay alive and not die.”<sup>j</sup> <sup>3</sup>So ten of Joseph’s brothers went down to buy grain from Egypt. <sup>4</sup>But Jacob did not send Joseph’s brother Benjamin with his brothers, for he thought some disaster might befall him. <sup>5</sup>And so the sons of Israel were among those who came to buy grain, since there was famine in the land of Canaan.<sup>k</sup> confined in this prison, while the rest of you go and take home grain for your starving families. <sup>20</sup>But you must bring me your youngest brother. Your words will thus be verified, and you will not die.” To this they agreed.<sup>o</sup> <sup>21</sup>To one another, however, they said: “Truly we are being punished because of our brother. We saw the anguish of his heart when he pleaded with us, yet we would not listen. That is why this anguish has now come upon us.”<sup>p</sup> <sup>22</sup>Then Reuben responded, “Did I not tell you, ‘Do no wrong to the boy’? But you would not listen! Now comes the reckoning for his blood.”<sup>q</sup> <sup>23</sup>They did not know, of course, that Joseph understood what they said, since he spoke with them through an interpreter. <sup>24</sup>But turning away from them, he wept. When he was able to speak to them again, he took Simeon from among them and bound him before their eyes. <sup>25</sup>Then Joseph gave orders to have their containers filled with grain, their money replaced in each one’s sack, and provisions given them for their journey. After this had been done for them, <sup>26</sup>they loaded their donkeys with the grain and departed.

<sup>8</sup>When Joseph recognized his brothers, although they did not recognize him, <sup>9</sup>he was reminded of the dreams he had about them. He said to them: “You are spies.<sup>m</sup> You have come to see the weak points* of the land.” <sup>10</sup>“No, my lord,” they replied. “On the contrary, your servants have come to buy food. <sup>11</sup>All of us are sons of the same man. We are honest men; your servants have never been spies.” <sup>12</sup>But he answered them: “Not so! It is the weak points of the land that you have come to see.” <sup>13</sup>“We your servants,” they said, “are twelve brothers, sons of a certain man in Canaan; but the youngest one is at present with our father, and the other one is no more.”<sup>n</sup> <sup>14</sup>“It is just as I said,” Joseph persisted; “you are spies. <sup>15</sup>This is how you shall be tested: I swear by the life of Pharaoh that you shall not leave here unless your youngest brother comes here. <sup>16</sup>So send one of your number to get your brother, while the rest of you stay here under arrest. Thus will your words be tested for their truth; if they are untrue, as Pharaoh lives, you are spies!” <sup>17</sup>With that, he locked them up in the guardhouse for three days.

<sup>29</sup>When they got back to their father Jacob in the land of Canaan, they told him all that had happened to them. <sup>30</sup>“The man who is lord of the land,” they said, “spoke to us harshly and put us in custody on the grounds that we were spying on the land. <sup>31</sup>But we said to him: ‘We are honest men; we have never been spies. <sup>32</sup>We are twelve brothers, sons of the same father; but one is no more, and the youngest one is now with our father in the land of Canaan.’ <sup>33</sup>Then the man who is lord of the land said to us: ‘This is how I will know if you are honest men: leave one of your brothers with me, then take grain for your starving families and go. <sup>34</sup>When you bring me your youngest brother, and I know that you are not spies but honest men, I will restore your brother to you, and you may move about freely in the land.’ ”

<sup>35</sup>When they were emptying their sacks, there in each one’s sack was his moneybag! At the sight of their moneybags, they and their father were afraid. <sup>36</sup>Their father Jacob said to them: “Must you make me childless? Joseph is no more, Simeon is no more, and now you would take Benjamin away! All these things have happened to me!” <sup>37</sup>Then Reuben told his father: “You may kill my own two sons if I do not return him to you! Put him in my care, and I will bring him back to you.” <sup>38</sup>But Jacob replied: “My son shall not go down with you. Now that his brother is dead, he is the only one left. If some disaster should befall him on the journey you must make, you would send my white head down to Sheol in grief.”<sup>r</sup>

CHAPTER 43

The Second Journey to Egypt.* <sup>1</sup>Now the famine in the land grew severe. <sup>2</sup>So when they had used up all the grain they had brought from Egypt, their father said to them, “Go back and buy us a little more food.” <sup>3</sup>But Judah replied: “The man strictly warned us, ‘You shall not see me unless your brother is with you.’”<sup>s</sup> <sup>4</sup>If you are willing to let our brother go with us, we will go down to buy food for you. <sup>5</sup>But if you are not willing, we will not go down, because the man told us, ‘You shall not see me unless your brother is with you.’”<sup>t</sup> <sup>6</sup>Israel demanded, “Why did you bring this trouble on me by telling the man that you had another brother?” <sup>7</sup>They answered: “The man kept asking about us and our family: ‘Is your father still living? Do you have another brother?’ We answered him accordingly. How could we know that he would say, ‘Bring your brother down here’?”

<sup>8</sup>Then Judah urged his father Israel: “Let the boy go with me, that we may be off and on our way if you and we and our children are to keep from starving to death.”<sup>u</sup> <sup>9</sup>I myself will serve as a guarantee for him. You can hold me responsible for him. If I fail to bring him back and set him before you, I will bear the blame before you forever.”<sup>v</sup> <sup>10</sup>Had we not delayed, we could have been there and back twice by now!”

<sup>15</sup>So the men took those gifts and double the money and Benjamin. They made their way down to Egypt and presented themselves before Joseph. <sup>16</sup>When Joseph saw them and Benjamin, he told his steward, “Take the men into the house, and have an animal slaughtered and prepared, for they are to dine with me at noon.” <sup>17</sup>Doing as Joseph had ordered, the steward conducted the men to Joseph's house. <sup>18</sup>But they became apprehensive when they were led to his house. "It must be," they thought, "on account of the money put back in our bags the first time, that we are taken inside—in order to attack us and take our donkeys and seize us as slaves." <sup>19</sup>So they went up to Joseph's steward and talked to him at the entrance of the house. <sup>20</sup>"If you please, sir," they said, "we came down here once before to buy food.<sup>x</sup> <sup>21</sup> But when we arrived at a night's encampment and opened our bags, there was each man's money in the mouth of his bag—our money in the full amount! We have now brought it back.<sup>y</sup> <sup>22</sup>We have brought other money to buy food. We do not know who put our money in our bags." <sup>23</sup>He replied, "Calm down! Do not fear! Your God and the God of your father must have put treasure in your bags for you. As for your money, I received it." With that, he led Simeon out to them.

<sup>24</sup>The steward then brought the men inside Joseph's house. He gave them water to wash their feet, and gave fodder to their donkeys. <sup>25</sup>Then they set out their gifts to await Joseph's arrival at noon, for they had heard that they were to dine there. <sup>26</sup>When Joseph came home, they presented him with the gifts they had brought inside, while they bowed down before him to the ground. <sup>27</sup>After inquiring how they were, he asked them, "And how is your aged father, of whom you spoke? Is he still alive?"<sup>z</sup> <sup>28</sup>"Your servant our father is still alive and doing well," they said, as they knelt and bowed down. <sup>29</sup>Then Joseph looked up and saw Benjamin, his brother, the son of his mother. He asked, "Is this your youngest brother, of whom you told me?" Then he said to him, "May God be gracious to you, my son!"<sup>a</sup> <sup>30</sup>With that, Joseph hurried out, for he was so overcome with affection for his brother that he was on the verge of tears. So he went into a private room and wept there.

<sup>31</sup>After washing his face, he reappeared and, now having collected himself, gave the order, "Serve the meal." <sup>32</sup>It was served separately to him,* to the brothers, and to the Egyptians who partook of his board. Egyptians may not eat with Hebrews; that is abhorrent to them. <sup>33</sup>When they were seated before him according to their age, from the oldest to the youngest, they looked at one another in amazement; <sup>34</sup>and as portions were brought to them from Joseph's table, Benjamin's portion was five times as large as* anyone else's. So they drank freely and made merry with him.

Final Test.* <sup>1</sup>Then Joseph commanded his steward: “Fill the men’s bags with as much food as they can carry, and put each man’s money in the mouth of his bag. <sup>2</sup>In the mouth of the youngest one’s bag put also my silver goblet, together with the money for his grain.” The steward did as Joseph said. <sup>3</sup>At daybreak the men and their donkeys were sent off. <sup>4</sup>They had not gone far out of the city when Joseph said to his steward: “Go at once after the men! When you overtake them, say to them, ‘Why did you repay good with evil? Why did you steal my silver goblet? <sup>5</sup>Is it not the very one from which my master drinks and which he uses for divination?’* What you have done is wrong.’ ”

<sup>6</sup>When the steward overtook them and repeated these words to them, <sup>7</sup>they said to him: “Why does my lord say such things? Far be it from your servants to do such a thing! <sup>8</sup>We even brought back to you from the land of Canaan the money that we found in the mouths of our bags. How could we steal silver or gold from your master’s house? <sup>9</sup>If any of your servants is found to have the goblet, he shall die, and as for the rest of us, we shall become my lord’s slaves.” <sup>10</sup>But he replied, “Now what you propose is fair enough, but only the one who is found to have it shall become my slave, and the rest of you can go free.” <sup>11</sup>Then each of them quickly lowered his bag to the ground and opened it; <sup>12</sup>and when a search was made, starting with the oldest and ending with the youngest, the goblet turned up in Benjamin’s bag. <sup>13</sup>At this, they tore their garments. Then, when each man had loaded his donkey again, they returned to the city.

the one in whose possession the goblet was found shall become my slave; the rest of you may go back unharmed to your father.”

<sup>18</sup>Judah then stepped up to him and said: “I beg you, my lord, let your servant appeal to my lord, and do not become angry with your servant, for you are the equal of Pharaoh. <sup>19</sup>My lord asked his servants, * ‘Have you a father, or another brother?’ <sup>20</sup>So we said to my lord, ‘We have an aged father, and a younger brother, the child of his old age. This one’s full brother is dead, and since he is the only one by his mother who is left, his father is devoted to him.’ <sup>b</sup> <sup>21</sup>Then you told your servants, ‘Bring him down to me that I might see him.’ <sup>22</sup>We replied to my lord, ‘The boy cannot leave his father; his father would die if he left him.’ <sup>23</sup>But you told your servants, ‘Unless your youngest brother comes down with you, you shall not see me again.’ <sup>c</sup> <sup>24</sup>When we returned to your servant my father, we reported to him the words of my lord.

<sup>25</sup>“Later, our father said, ‘Go back and buy some food for us.’ <sup>26</sup>So we reminded him, ‘We cannot go down there; only if our youngest brother is with us can we go, for we may not see the man if our youngest brother is not with us.’ <sup>27</sup>Then your servant my father said to us, ‘As you know, my wife bore me two sons. <sup>28</sup>One of them, however, has gone away from me, and I said, “He must have been torn to pieces by wild beasts!” I have not seen him since.’ <sup>d</sup> <sup>29</sup>If you take this one away from me too, and a disaster befalls him, you will send my white head down to Sheol in grief.’

<sup>30</sup>“So now, if the boy is not with us when I go back to your servant my father, whose very life is bound up with his, he will die as soon as he sees that the boy is missing; <sup>31</sup>and your servants will thus send the white head of your servant our father down to Sheol in grief. <sup>32</sup>Besides, I, your servant, have guaranteed the boy’s safety for my father by saying, ‘If I fail to bring him back to you, father, I will bear the blame before you forever.’ <sup>e</sup> <sup>33</sup>So now let me, your servant, remain in place of the boy as the slave of my lord, and let the boy go back with his brothers. How could I go back to my father if the boy were not with me? I could not bear to see the anguish that would overcome my father.”

The Truth Revealed.* <sup>1</sup>Joseph could no longer restrain himself in the presence of all his attendants, so he cried out, “Have everyone withdraw from me!” So no one attended him when he made himself known to his brothers. <sup>2</sup>But his sobs were so loud that the Egyptians heard him, and so the news reached Pharaoh’s house. <sup>3f</sup> “I am Joseph,” he said to his brothers. “Is my father still alive?” But his brothers could give him no answer, so dumbfounded were they at him.

<sup>4</sup>“Come closer to me,” Joseph told his brothers. When they had done so, he said: “I am your brother Joseph, whom you sold into Egypt. <sup>5</sup>But now do not be distressed, and do not be angry with yourselves for having sold me here. It was really for the sake of saving lives that God sent me here ahead of you.<sup>g</sup> <sup>6</sup>The famine has been in the land for two years now, and for five more years cultivation will yield no harvest. <sup>7</sup>God, therefore, sent me on ahead of you to ensure for you a remnant on earth and to save your lives in an extraordinary deliverance. <sup>8</sup>So it was not really you but God who had me come here; and he has made me a father to Pharaoh,* lord of all his household, and ruler over the whole land of Egypt.

<sup>9*</sup> “Hurry back, then, to my father and tell him: ‘Thus says your son Joseph: God has made me lord of all Egypt; come down to me without delay.<sup>h</sup> <sup>10</sup>You can settle in the region of Goshen,* where you will be near me—you and your children and children’s children, your flocks and herds, and everything that you own. <sup>11</sup>I will provide for you there in the five years of famine that lie ahead, so that you and your household and all that are yours will not suffer want.’<sup>12</sup>Surely, you can see for yourselves, and Benjamin can see for himself, that it is I who am speaking to you. <sup>13</sup>Tell my father all about my high position in Egypt and all that you have seen. But hurry and bring my father down here.” <sup>14</sup>Then he threw his arms around his brother Benjamin and wept on his shoulder. <sup>15</sup>Joseph then kissed all his brothers and wept over them; and only then were his brothers able to talk with him.

your brothers: ‘This is what you shall do: Load up your animals and go without delay to the land of Canaan. <sup>18</sup>There get your father and your households, and then come to me; I will assign you the best land in Egypt, where you will live off the fat of the land.’<sup>i</sup> <sup>19</sup>Instruct them further: ‘Do this. Take wagons from the land of Egypt for your children and your wives and bring your father back here. <sup>20</sup>Do not be concerned about your belongings, for the best in the whole land of Egypt shall be yours.’ ”

<sup>21</sup>The sons of Israel acted accordingly. Joseph gave them the wagons, as Pharaoh had ordered, and he supplied them with provisions for the journey. <sup>22</sup>He also gave to each of them a set of clothes, but to Benjamin he gave three hundred shekels of silver and five sets of clothes. <sup>23</sup>Moreover, what he sent to his father was ten donkeys loaded with the finest products of Egypt and another ten loaded with grain and bread and provisions for his father’s journey. <sup>24</sup>As he sent his brothers on their way, he told them, “Do not quarrel on the way.”

<sup>25</sup>So they went up from Egypt and came to the land of Canaan, to their father Jacob. <sup>26</sup>When they told him, “Joseph is still alive—in fact, it is he who is governing all the land of Egypt,” he was unmoved, for he did not believe them. <sup>27</sup>But when they recounted to him all that Joseph had told them, and when he saw the wagons that Joseph had sent to transport him, the spirit of their father Jacob came to life. <sup>28</sup>“Enough,” said Israel. “My son Joseph is still alive! I must go and see him before I die.”

CHAPTER 46

Migration to Egypt.<sup>1*</sup> Israel set out with all that was his. When he arrived at Beer-sheba, he offered sacrifices to the God of his father Isaac.<sup>2</sup> There God, speaking to Israel in a vision by night, called: Jacob! Jacob! He answered, “Here I am.”<sup>3</sup> Then he said: I am God,* the God of your father. Do not be afraid to go down to Egypt, for there I will make you a great nation.<sup>4</sup> I will go down to Egypt with you and I will also bring you back here, after Joseph has closed your eyes.

<sup>5</sup> So Jacob departed from Beer-sheba, and the sons of Israel put their father and their wives and children on the wagons that Pharaoh had sent to transport him.<sup>6</sup> They took with them their livestock and the possessions they had acquired in the land of Canaan. So Jacob and all his descendants came to Egypt.<sup>j</sup> <sup>7</sup> His sons and his grandsons, his daughters and his granddaughters—all his descendants—he took with him to Egypt.

<sup>28</sup>Israel had sent Judah ahead to Joseph, so that he might meet him in Goshen. On his arrival in the region of Goshen, <sup>29</sup>Joseph prepared his chariot and went up to meet his father Israel in Goshen. As soon as Israel made his appearance, Joseph threw his arms around him and wept a long time on his shoulder. <sup>30</sup>And Israel said to Joseph, "At last I can die, now that I have seen for myself that you are still alive."

<sup>31</sup>Joseph then said to his brothers and his father's household: "I will go up and inform Pharaoh, telling him: 'My brothers and my father's household, whose home is in the land of Canaan, have come to me. <sup>32</sup>The men are shepherds, having been owners of livestock;* and they have brought with them their flocks and herds, as well as everything else they own.' <sup>33</sup>So when Pharaoh summons you and asks what your occupation is, <sup>34</sup>you must answer, 'We your servants, like our ancestors, have been owners of livestock from our youth until now,' in order that you may stay in the region of Goshen, since all shepherds are abhorrent to the Egyptians."

CHAPTER 47

Settlement in Goshen. <sup>1</sup>Joseph went and told Pharaoh, “My father and my brothers have come from the land of Canaan, with their flocks and herds and everything else they own; and they are now in the region of Goshen.” <sup>2</sup>He then presented to Pharaoh five of his brothers whom he had selected from their full number. <sup>3</sup>When Pharaoh asked them, “What is your occupation?” they answered, “We, your servants, like our ancestors, are shepherds. <sup>4</sup>We have come,” they continued, “in order to sojourn in this land, for there is no pasture for your servants’ flocks, because the famine has been severe in the land of Canaan. So now please let your servants settle in the region of Goshen.”<sup>z</sup> <sup>5</sup>Pharaoh said to Joseph, “Now that your father and your brothers have come to you, <sup>6</sup>the land of Egypt is at your disposal; settle your father and brothers in the pick of the land. Let them settle in the region of Goshen. And if you know of capable men among them, put them in charge of my livestock.” <sup>7</sup>Then Joseph brought his father Jacob and presented him to Pharaoh. And Jacob blessed Pharaoh. <sup>8</sup>Then Pharaoh asked Jacob, “How many years have you lived?” <sup>9</sup>Jacob replied: “The years I have lived as a wayfarer amount to a hundred and thirty. Few and hard have been these years of my life, and they do not compare with the years that my ancestors lived as wayfarers.”* <sup>10</sup>Then Jacob blessed Pharaoh and withdrew from his presence.

<sup>11</sup>Joseph settled his father and brothers and gave them a holding in Egypt on the pick of the land, in the region of Rameses,* as Pharaoh had ordered. <sup>12</sup>And Joseph provided food for his father and brothers and his father’s whole household, down to the youngest.

Joseph’s Land Policy. <sup>13</sup>Since there was no food in all the land because of the extreme severity of the famine, and the lands of Egypt and Canaan were languishing from hunger, <sup>14</sup>Joseph gathered in, as payment for the grain that they were buying, all the money that was to be found in Egypt and Canaan, and he put it in Pharaoh’s house. <sup>15</sup>When all the money in Egypt and Canaan was spent, all the Egyptians came to Joseph, pleading, “Give us food! Why should we perish in front of you? For our money is gone.” <sup>16</sup>“Give me your livestock if your money is gone,” replied Joseph. “I will give you food in return for your livestock.” <sup>17</sup>So they brought their livestock to Joseph, and he gave them food in exchange for their horses, their flocks of sheep and herds of cattle, and their donkeys. Thus he supplied them with food in exchange for all their livestock in that year. <sup>18</sup>That year ended, and they came to him in the next one and said: “We cannot hide from my lord that, with our money spent and our livestock made over to my lord, there is nothing left to put at my lord’s disposal except our bodies and our land. <sup>19</sup>Why should we and our land perish before your very eyes? Take us and our land in exchange for food, and we will become Pharaoh’s slaves and our land his property; only give us seed, that we may survive and not perish, and that our land may not turn into a waste.”

<sup>23</sup>Joseph told the people: “Now that I have acquired you and your land for Pharaoh, here is your seed for sowing the land. <sup>24</sup>But when the harvest is in, you must give a fifth of it to Pharaoh, while you keep four-fifths as seed for your fields and as food for yourselves and your households and as food for your children.” <sup>25</sup>“You have saved our lives!” they answered. “We have found favor with my lord; now we will be Pharaoh’s slaves.” <sup>26</sup>Thus Joseph made it a statute for the land of Egypt, which is still in force, that a fifth of its produce should go to Pharaoh. Only the land of the priests did not pass over to Pharaoh.

Israel Blesses Ephraim and Manasseh. <sup>27</sup>Thus Israel settled in the land of Egypt, in the region of Goshen. There they acquired holdings, were fertile, and multiplied greatly. <sup>a</sup> <sup>28*</sup> Jacob lived in the land of Egypt for seventeen years; the span of his life came to a hundred and forty-seven years. <sup>29</sup>When the time approached for Israel to die, he called his son Joseph and said to him: “If it pleases you, put your hand under my thigh as a sign of your enduring fidelity to me; do not bury me in Egypt. <sup>30</sup>When I lie down with my ancestors, take me out of Egypt and bury me in their burial place.”<sup>b</sup> “I will do as you say,” he replied. <sup>31</sup>But his father demanded, “Swear it to me!” So Joseph swore to him. Then Israel bowed at the head of the bed.*

CHAPTER 48

<sup>1*</sup> Some time afterward, Joseph was informed, “Your father is failing.” So he took along with him his two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim. <sup>2</sup>When Jacob was told, “Your son Joseph has come to you,” Israel rallied his strength and sat up in bed.

<sup>3c</sup> Jacob then said to Joseph: “God Almighty appeared to me at Luz* in the land of Canaan, and blessing me, <sup>4</sup>he said, ‘I will make you fertile and multiply you and make you into an assembly of peoples, and I will give this land to your descendants after you as a permanent possession.’ <sup>5</sup>So now your two sons who were born to you in the land of Egypt before I joined you here, shall be mine; Ephraim and Manasseh shall be mine as much as Reuben and Simeon are mine. <sup>6</sup>Progeny born to you after them shall remain yours; but their heritage shall be recorded in the names of their brothers. <sup>7d</sup> I do this because, when I was returning from Paddan, your mother Rachel died, to my sorrow, during the journey in Canaan, while we were still a short distance from Ephrath; and I buried her there on the way to Ephrath [now Bethlehem].”*

<sup>8</sup>When Israel saw Joseph’s sons, he asked, “Who are these?” <sup>9</sup>“They are my sons,” Joseph answered his father, “whom God has given me here.” “Bring them to me,” said his father, “that I may bless them.” <sup>10</sup>Now Israel’s eyes were dim from age; he could not see well. When Joseph brought his sons close to him, he kissed and embraced them. <sup>11</sup>Then Israel said to Joseph, “I never expected to see your face again, and now God has allowed me to see your descendants as well!”

“May the God in whose presence my fathers Abraham and Isaac walked,

The God who has been my shepherd from my birth to this day,<sup>e</sup> <sup>16</sup>The angel who has delivered me from all harm, bless these boys
That in them my name be recalled, and the names of my fathers, Abraham and Isaac,
And they may become teeming multitudes
upon the earth!"

<sup>21</sup>Then Israel said to Joseph: "I am about to die. But God will be with you and will restore you to the land of your ancestors. <sup>22g</sup> As for me, I give to you, as to the one above his brothers, Shechem, which I captured from the Amorites with my sword and bow."*

Jacob's Testament. * <sup>1</sup>Jacob called his sons and said: “Gather around, that I may tell you what is to happen to you in days to come.

listen to Israel, your father.

<sup>3</sup>“You, Reuben, my firstborn, my strength and the first fruit of my vigor, excelling in rank and excelling in power!

<sup>4</sup>Turbulent as water, you shall no longer excel, for you climbed into your father's bed and defiled my couch to my sorrow.<sup>h</sup>

weapons of violence are their knives.*

<sup>6</sup>Let not my person enter their council, or my honor be joined with their company;
For in their fury they killed men, at their whim they maimed oxen.<sup>i</sup>

<sup>7</sup>Cursed be their fury so fierce, and their rage so cruel!
I will scatter them in Jacob, disperse them throughout Israel.

<sup>8</sup>“You, Judah, shall your brothers praise —your hand on the neck of your enemies;
the sons of your father shall bow down to you.

<sup>9</sup>Judah is a lion's cub,
you have grown up on prey, my son.
He crouches, lies down like a lion, like a lioness—who would dare rouse him?<sup>j</sup>

or the mace from between his feet,
Until tribute comes to him,* and he receives the people's obedience.

<sup>11</sup>He tethers his donkey to the vine, his donkey's foal to the choicest stem.
In wine he washes his garments, his robe in the blood of grapes.*

<sup>12</sup>His eyes are darker than wine, and his teeth are whiter than milk.

<sup>13</sup>"Zebulun shall dwell by the seashore;
he will be a haven for ships, and his flank shall rest on Sidon.

<sup>14</sup>"Issachar is a rawboned donkey, crouching between the saddlebags.

<sup>15</sup>When he saw how good a settled life was,
and how pleasant the land,
He bent his shoulder to the burden and became a toiling serf.

<sup>16</sup>"Dan shall achieve justice* for his people as one of the tribes of Israel.

<sup>17</sup>Let Dan be a serpent by the roadside,
a horned viper by the path,
That bites the horse's heel, so that the rider tumbles backward.

<sup>18</sup>"I long for your deliverance, O LORD!*

but he shall raid at their heels.*

and he shall furnish delicacies for kings.

which brings forth lovely fawns.

<sup>22</sup>"Joseph is a wild colt,
a wild colt by a spring,
wild colts on a hillside.

<sup>23</sup>Harrying him and shooting, the archers opposed him;

<sup>24</sup>But his bow remained taut, and his arms were nimble,

By the power of the Mighty One of Jacob, because of the Shepherd, the Rock of Israel,
<sup>25</sup>The God of your father, who helps you,*
God Almighty, who blesses you,
With the blessings of the heavens above, the blessings of the abyss that crouches below,
The blessings of breasts and womb, <sup>26</sup>the blessings of fresh grain and blossoms, the blessings of the everlasting mountains,
the delights of the eternal hills.
May they rest on the head of Joseph, on the brow of the prince among his brothers.
<sup>27</sup>“Benjamin is a ravenous wolf;
mornings he devours the prey, and evenings he distributes the spoils.”

Farewell and Death. <sup>28</sup>All these are the twelve tribes of Israel, and this is what their father said about them, as he blessed them. To each he gave a suitable blessing. <sup>29</sup>Then he gave them this charge: “Since I am about to be gathered to my people, bury me with my ancestors in the cave that lies in the field of Ephron the Hittite, <sup>30</sup>the cave in the field of Machpelah, facing on Mamre, in the land of Canaan, the field that Abraham bought from Ephron the Hittite for a burial ground.<sup>k</sup> <sup>31</sup>There Abraham and his wife Sarah are buried, and so are Isaac and his wife Rebekah, and there, too, I buried Leah— <sup>32</sup>the field and the cave in it that had been purchased from the Hittites.”

CHAPTER 50

Jacob's Funeral. <sup>1</sup>Joseph flung himself upon his father and wept over him as he kissed him. <sup>2</sup>Then Joseph ordered the physicians in his service to embalm his father. When the physicians embalmed Israel, <sup>3</sup>they spent forty days at it, for that is the full period of embalming; and the Egyptians mourned him for seventy days. <sup>4</sup>When the period of mourning was over, Joseph spoke to Pharaoh's household. "If you please, appeal to Pharaoh, saying: <sup>5</sup>My father made me swear: 'I am dying. Bury me in my grave that I have prepared for myself in the land of Canaan.' So now let me go up to bury my father. Then I will come back."<sup>l</sup> <sup>6</sup>Pharaoh replied, "Go and bury your father, as he made you promise on oath."

<sup>7</sup>So Joseph went up to bury his father; and with him went all of Pharaoh's officials who were senior members of his household and all the other elders of the land of Egypt, <sup>8</sup>as well as Joseph's whole household, his brothers, and his father's household; only their children and their flocks and herds were left in the region of Goshen. <sup>9</sup>Chariots, too, and horsemen went up with him; it was a very imposing retinue.

<sup>10</sup>When they arrived at Goren-ha-atad, * which is beyond the Jordan, they held there a very great and solemn memorial service; and Joseph observed seven days of mourning for his father. <sup>11</sup>When the Canaanites who inhabited the land saw the mourning at Goren-ha-atad, they said, "This is a solemn funeral on the part of the Egyptians!" That is why the place was named Abel-mizraim. It is beyond the Jordan.

<sup>12</sup>Thus Jacob's sons did for him as he had instructed them. <sup>13</sup>They carried him to the land of Canaan and buried him in the cave in the field of Machpelah, facing on Mamre, the field that Abraham had bought for a burial ground from Ephron the Hittite.<sup>m</sup>

After Joseph had buried his father he returned to Egypt, together with his brothers and all who had gone up with him for the burial of his father.

Plea for Forgiveness.<sup>15*</sup> Now that their father was dead, Joseph's brothers became fearful and thought, "Suppose Joseph has been nursing a grudge against us and now most certainly will pay us back in full for all the wrong we did him!" <sup>16</sup>So they sent to Joseph and said: "Before your father died, he gave us these instructions: <sup>17</sup>‘Thus you shall say to Joseph: Please forgive the criminal wrongdoing of your brothers, who treated you harmfully.’ So now please forgive the crime that we, the servants of the God of your father, committed.” When they said this to him, Joseph broke into tears. <sup>18</sup>Then his brothers also proceeded to fling themselves down before him and said, “We are your slaves!” <sup>19</sup>But Joseph replied to them: “Do not fear. Can I take the place of God? <sup>20</sup>Even though you meant harm to me, God meant it for good, to achieve this present end, the survival of many people.” <sup>n</sup> <sup>21</sup>So now, do not fear. I will provide for you and for your children.” By thus speaking kindly to them, he reassured them.<sup>o</sup>

Death of Joseph. <sup>24</sup>Joseph said to his brothers: “I am about to die. God will surely take care of you and lead you up from this land to the land that he promised on oath to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.”<sup>q</sup> <sup>25</sup>Then, putting the sons of Israel under oath, he continued, “When God thus takes care of you, you must bring my bones up from this place.”<sup>r</sup> <sup>26</sup>Joseph died at the age of a hundred and ten. He was embalmed and laid to rest in a coffin in Egypt.<sup>s</sup>

1:1–2:3 This section, from the Priestly source, functions as an introduction, as ancient stories of the origin of the world (cosmogonies) often did. It introduces the primordial story (2:4–11:26), the stories of the ancestors (11:27–50:26), and indeed the whole Pentateuch. The chapter highlights the goodness of creation and the divine desire that human beings share in that goodness. God brings an orderly universe out of primordial chaos merely by uttering a word. In the literary structure of six days, the creation events in the first three days are related to those in the second three.

- |                                 |   |                              |

| b) vegetation                   | = | b) human beings: male/female |

The seventh day, on which God rests, the climax of the account, falls outside the six-day structure.

Until modern times the first line was always translated, “In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth.” Several comparable ancient cosmogonies, discovered in recent times, have a “when ... then” construction, confirming the translation “when ... then” here as well. “When” introduces the pre-creation state and “then” introduces the creative act affecting that state. The traditional translation, “In the beginning,” does not reflect the Hebrew syntax of the clause.

1:2 This verse is parenthetical, describing in three phases the pre-creation state symbolized by the chaos out of which God brings order: “earth,” hidden beneath the encompassing cosmic waters, could not be seen, and thus had no “form”; there was only darkness; turbulent wind swept over the waters. Commencing with the last-named elements (darkness and water), vv. 3–10 describe the rearrangement of this chaos: light is made (first day) and the water is divided into water above and water below the earth so that the earth appears and is no longer “without outline.” The abyss: the primordial ocean according to the ancient Semitic cosmogony. After God’s creative activity, part of this vast body forms the salt-water seas (vv. 9–10); part of it is the fresh water under the earth (Ps 33:7; Ez 31:4), which wells forth on the earth as springs and fountains (Gn 7:11; 8:2; Prv 3:20). Part of it, “the upper water” (Ps 148:4; Dn 3:60), is held up by the dome of the sky (vv. 6–7), from which rain descends on the earth (Gn 7:11; 2 Kgs 7:2, 19; Ps 104:13). A mighty wind: literally, “spirit or breath [ruah] of God”; cf. Gn 8:1.

1:5 In ancient Israel a day was considered to begin at sunset.

1:7 The dome: the Hebrew word suggests a gigantic metal dome. It was inserted into the middle of the single body of water to form dry space within which the earth could emerge. The Latin Vulgate translation firmamentum, “means of support (for the upper waters); firmament,” provided the traditional English rendering.

1:26 Let us make: in the ancient Near East, and sometimes in the Bible, God was imagined as presiding over an assembly of heavenly beings who deliberated and decided about matters on earth (1 Kgs 22:19–22; Is 6:8; Ps 29:1–2; 82; 89:6–7; Jb 1:6; 2:1; 38:7). This scene accounts for the plural form here and in Gn 11:7 (“Let us go down ...”). Israel’s God was always considered “Most High” over the heavenly beings. Human beings: Hebrew ’ādām is here the generic term for humankind; in the first five chapters of Genesis it is the proper name Adam only at 4:25 and 5:1–5. In our image, after our likeness: “image” and “likeness” (virtually synonyms) express the worth of human beings who have value in themselves (human blood may not be shed in 9:6 because of this image of God) and in their task, dominion (1:28), which promotes the rule of God over the universe.

1:27 Male and female: as God provided the plants with seeds (vv. 11, 12) and commanded the animals to be fertile and multiply (v. 22), so God gives sexuality to human beings as their means to continue in existence.

1:28 Fill the earth and subdue it: the object of the verb “subdue” may be not the earth as such but earth as the territory each nation must take for itself (chaps. 10–11), just as Israel will later do (see Nm 32:22, 29; Jos 18:1). The two divine ; commands define the basic tasks of the human race—to continue in existence through generation and to take possession of one’s God-given territory. The dual command would have had special meaning when Israel was in exile and deeply anxious about whether they would continue as a nation and return to their ancient territory. Have dominion: the whole human race is made in the “image” and “likeness” of God and has “dominion.” Comparable literature of the time used these words of kings rather than of human beings in general; human beings were invariably thought of as slaves of the gods created to provide menial service for the divine world. The royal language here does not, however, give human beings unlimited power, for kings in the Bible had limited dominion and were subject to prophetic critique.

1:29 According to the Priestly tradition, the human race was originally intended to live on plants and fruits as were the animals (see v. 30), an arrangement that God will later change (9:3) in view of the human inclination to violence.

2:2 The mention of the seventh day, repeated in v. 3, is outside the series of six days and is thus the climax of the account. The focus of the account is God. The text does not actually institute the practice of keeping the Sabbath, for it would have been anachronistic to establish at this point a custom that was distinctively Israelite (Ex 31:13, 16, 17), but it lays the foundation for the later practice. Similarly, ancient creation accounts often ended with the construction of a temple where the newly created human race provided service to the gods who created them, but no temple is mentioned in this account. As was the case with the Sabbath, it would have been anachronistic to institute the temple at this point, for Israel did not yet exist. In Ex 25–31 and 35–40, Israel builds the tabernacle, which is the precursor of the Temple of Solomon.

2:4 This is the story: the distinctive Priestly formula introduces older traditions, belonging to the tradition called Yahwist, and gives them a new setting. In the first part of Genesis, the formula “this is the story” (or a similar phrase) occurs five times (2:4; 5:1; 6:9; 10:1; 11:10), which corresponds to the five occurrences of the formula in the second part of the book (11:27; 25:12, 19; 36:1[9]; 37:2). Some interpret the formula here as retrospective (“Such is the story”), referring back to chap. 1, but all its other occurrences introduce rather than summarize. It is introductory here; the Priestly source would hardly use the formula to introduce its own material in chap. 1.

The cosmogony that begins in v. 4 is concerned with the nature of human beings, narrating the story of the essential institutions and limits of the human race through their first ancestors. This cosmogony, like 1:1–3 (see note there), uses the “when ... then” construction common in ancient cosmogonies. The account is generally attributed to the Yahwist, who prefers the divine name “Yhwh” (here rendered Lord) for God. God in this story is called “the Lord God” (except in 3:1–5); “LORD” is to be expected in a Yahwist account but the additional word “God” is puzzling.

2:5 Man: the Hebrew word ’adam is a generic term meaning “human being.” In chaps. 2–3, however, the archetypal human being is understood to be male (Adam), so the word ’adam is translated “man” here.

2:6 Stream: the water wells up from the vast flood below the earth. The account seems to presuppose that only the garden of God was irrigated at this point. From this one source of all the fertilizing water on the earth, water will be channeled through the garden of God over the entire earth. It is the source of the four rivers mentioned in vv. 10–14. Later, with rain and cultivation, the fertility of the garden of God will appear in all parts of the world.

2:7 God is portrayed as a potter molding the human body out of earth. There is a play on words in Hebrew between ’adam (“human being,” “man”) and ’adama (“ground”). It is not enough to make the body from earth; God must also breathe into the man’s nostrils. A similar picture of divine breath imparted to human beings in order for them to live is found in Ez 37:5, 9–10; Jn 20:22. The Israelites did not think in the (Greek) categories of body and soul.

2:8 Eden, in the east: the place names in vv. 8–14 are mostly derived from Mesopotamian geography (see note on vv. 10–14). Eden may be the name of a region in southern Mesopotamia (modern Iraq), the term derived from the Sumerian word eden, “fertile plain.” A similar-sounding Hebrew word means “delight,” which may lie behind the Greek translation, “The Lord God planted a paradise [= pleasure park] in Eden.” It should be noted, however, that the garden was not intended as a paradise for the human race, but as a pleasure park for God; the man tended it for God. The story is not about “paradise lost.”

The garden in the precincts of Solomon’s Temple in Jerusalem seems to symbolize the garden of God (like gardens in other temples); it is apparently alluded to in Ps 1:3; 80:10; 92:14; Ez 47:7–12; Rev 22:1–2.

2:9 The second tree, the tree of life, is mentioned here and at the end of the story (3:22, 24). It is identified with Wisdom in Prv 3:18; 11:30; 13:12; 15:4, where the pursuit of wisdom gives back to human beings the life that is made inaccessible to them in Gn 3:24. In the new creation described in the Book of Revelation, the tree of life is once again made available to human beings (Rev 2:7; 22:2, 14, 19). Knowledge of good and evil: the meaning is disputed. According to some, it signifies moral autonomy, control over morality (symbolized by “good and evil”), which would be inappropriate for mere human beings; the phrase would thus mean refusal to accept the human condition and finite freedom that God gives them. According to others, it is more broadly the knowledge of what is helpful and harmful to humankind, suggesting that the attainment of adult experience and responsibility inevitably means the loss of a life of simple subordination to God.

2:10–14 A river rises in Eden: the stream of water mentioned in v. 6, the source of all water upon earth, comes to the surface in the garden of God and from there flows out over the entire earth. In comparable religious literature, the dwelling of god is the source of fertilizing waters. The four rivers represent universality, as in the phrase “the four quarters of the earth.” In Ez 47:1–12; Zec 14:8; Rev 22:1–2, the waters that irrigate the earth arise in the temple or city of God. The place names in vv. 11–14 are mainly from southern Mesopotamia (modern Iraq), where Mesopotamian literature placed the original garden of God. The Tigris and the Euphrates, the two great rivers in that part of the world, both emptied into the Persian Gulf. Gihon is the modest stream issuing from Jerusalem (2 Sm 5:8; 1 Kgs 1:9–10; 2 Chr 32:4), but is here regarded as one of the four great world rivers and linked to Mesopotamia, for Cush here seems to be the territory of the Kassites (a people of Mesopotamia) as in Gn 10:8. The word Pishon is otherwise unknown but is probably formed in imitation of Gihon. Havilah seems, according to Gn 10:7 and 1 Chr 1:9, to be in Cush in southern Mesopotamia though other locations have been suggested.

2:17 You shall die: since they do not die as soon as they eat from the forbidden tree, the meaning seems to be that human beings have become mortal, destined to die by virtue of being human.

2:18 Helper suited to him: lit., “a helper in accord with him.” “Helper” need not imply subordination, for God is called a helper (Dt 33:7; Ps 46:2). The language suggests a profound affinity between the man and the woman and a relationship that is supportive and nurturing.

2:23 The man recognizes an affinity with the woman God has brought him. Unlike the animals who were made from the ground, she is made from his very self. There is a play on the similar-sounding Hebrew words ’ishsha (“woman,” “wife”) and ’ish (“man,” “husband”).

2:24 One body: lit., “one flesh.” The covenant of marriage establishes kinship bonds of the first rank between the partners.

2:25 They felt no shame: marks a new stage in the drama, for the reader knows that only young children know no shame. This draws the reader into the next episode, where the couple’s disobedience results in their loss of innocence.

3:1 Cunning: there is a play on the words for “naked” (2:25) and “cunning/wise” (Heb. ’arum). The couple seek to be “wise” but end up knowing that they are “naked.”

3:5 Like gods, who know: or “like God who knows.”

3:8 The breezy time of the day: lit., “the wind of the day.” Probably shortly before sunset.

3:14 Each of the three punishments (the snake, the woman, the man) has a double aspect, one affecting the individual and the other affecting a basic relationship. The snake previously stood upright, enjoyed a reputation for being shrewder than other creatures, and could converse with human beings as in vv. 1–5. It must now move on its belly, is more cursed than any creature, and inspires revulsion in human beings (v. 15).

3:15 They will strike ... at their heel: the antecedent for “they” and “their” is the collective noun “offspring,” i.e., all the descendants of the woman. Christian tradition has seen in this passage, however, more than unending hostility between snakes and human beings. The snake was identified with the devil (Wis 2:24; Jn 8:44; Rev 12:9; 20:2), whose eventual defeat seemed implied in the verse. Because “the Son of God was revealed to destroy the works of the devil” (1 Jn 3:8), the passage was understood as the first promise of a redeemer for fallen humankind, the protoevangelium. Irenaeus of Lyons (ca. A.D. 130–200), in his Against Heresies 5.21.1, followed by several other Fathers of the Church, interpreted the verse as referring to Christ, and cited Gal 3:19 and 4:4 to support the reference. Another interpretive translation is ipsa, “she,” and is reflected in Jerome’s Vulgate. “She” was thought to refer to Mary, the mother of the messiah. In Christian art Mary is sometimes depicted with her foot on the head of the serpent.

3:16 Toil ... pain: the punishment affects the woman directly by increasing the toil and pain of having children. He shall rule over you: the punishment also affects the woman's relationship with her husband. A tension is set up in which her urge (either sexual urge or, more generally, dependence for sustenance) is for her husband but he rules over her. But see Sg 7:11.

3:17–19 Cursed is the ground: the punishment affects the man's relationship to the ground ('adam and 'adamah). You are dust: the punishment also affects the man directly insofar as he is now mortal.

3:20 The man gives his wife a more specific name than "woman" (2:23). The Hebrew name hawwa ("Eve") is related to the Hebrew word hay ("living"); "mother of all the living" points forward to the next episode involving her sons Cain and Abel.

4:1 The Hebrew name qayin ("Cain") and the term qaniti ("I have produced") present a wordplay that refers to metal-working; such wordplays are frequent in Genesis.

4:2 Some suggest the story reflects traditional strife between the farmer (Cain) and the nomad (Abel), with preference for the latter reflecting the alleged nomadic ideal of the Bible. But there is no disparagement of farming here, for Adam was created to till the soil. The story is about two brothers (the word "brother" occurs seven times) and God's unexplained preference for one, which provokes the first murder. The motif of the preferred younger brother will occur time and again in the Bible, e.g., Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, and David (1 Sm 16:1–13).

4:4 Fatty portion: it was standard practice to offer the fat portions of animals. Others render, less satisfactorily, "the choicest of the firstlings." The point is not that Abel gave a more valuable gift than Cain, but that God, for reasons not given in the text, accepts the offering of Abel and rejects that of Cain.

4:7 You will be accepted: the text is extraordinarily condensed and unclear. "You will be accepted" is a paraphrase of one Hebrew word, "lifting." God gives a friendly warning to Cain that his right conduct will bring "lifting," which could refer to acceptance (lifting) of his future offerings or of himself (as in the Hebrew idiom "lifting of the face") or lifting up of his head in honor (cf. note on 40:13), whereas wicked conduct will make him vulnerable to sin, which is personified as a force ready to attack. In any case, Cain has the ability to do the right thing. Lies in wait: sin is personified as a power that "lies in wait" (Heb. robes) at a place. In Mesopotamian religion, a related word (rabisu) refers to a malevolent god who attacks human beings in particular places like roofs or canals.

4:8 Let us go out in the field: to avoid detection. The verse presumes a sizeable population which Genesis does not otherwise explain.

4:11 Banned from the ground: lit., "cursed." The verse refers back to 3:17 where the ground was cursed so that it yields its produce only with great effort. Cain has polluted the soil with his brother's blood and it will no longer yield any of its produce to him.

4:15 A mark: probably a tattoo to mark Cain as protected by God. The use of tattooing for tribal marks has always been common among the Bedouin of the Near Eastern deserts.

4:16 The land of Nod: a symbolic name (derived from the verb nûd, to wander) rather than a definite geographic region.

4:17–24 Cain is the first in a seven-member linear genealogy ending in three individuals who initiate action (Jabal, Jubal, and Tubalcain). Other Genesis genealogies also end in three individuals initiating action (5:32 and 11:26). The purpose of this genealogy is to explain the origin of culture and crafts among human beings. The names in this genealogy are the same (some with different spellings) as those in the ten-member genealogy (ending with Noah), which has a slightly different function. See note on 5:1–32.

4:23–24 Lamech's boast shows that the violence of Cain continues with his son and has actually increased. The question is posed to the reader: how will God's creation be renewed?

4:25–26 The third and climactic birth story in the chapter, showing that this birth, unlike the other two, will have good results. The name Seth (from the Hebrew verb shat, “to place, replace”) shows that God has replaced Abel with a worthy successor. From this favored line Enosh (“human being/humankind”), a synonym of Adam, authentic religion began with the worship of Yhwh; this divine name is rendered as “the Lord” in this translation. The Yahwist source employs the name Yhwh long before the time of Moses. Another ancient source, the Elohist (from its use of the term Elohim, “God,” instead of Yhwh, “Lord,” for the pre-Mosaic period), makes Moses the first to use Yhwh as the proper name of Israel’s God, previously known by other names as well; cf. Ex 3:13–15.

5:1–32 The second of the five Priestly formulas in Part I (“This is the record of the descendants ...”; see 2:4a; 6:9; 10:1; 11:10) introduces the second of the three linear genealogies in Gn 1–11 (4:17–24 and 11:10–26). In each, a list of individuals (six in 4:17–24, ten in 5:1–32, or nine in 11:10–26) ends in three people who initiate action. Linear genealogies (father to son) in ancient societies had a communicative function, grounding the authority or claim of the lastnamed individual in the first-named. Here, the genealogy has a literary function as well, advancing the story by showing the expansion of the human race after Adam, as well as the transmission to his descendant Noah of the divine image given to Adam. Correcting the impression one might get from the genealogy in 4:17–24, this genealogy traces the line through Seth rather than through Cain. Most of the names in the series are the same as the names in Cain’s line in 4:17–19 (Enosh, Enoch, Lamech) or spelled with variant spellings (Mahalalel, Jared, Methuselah). The genealogy itself and its placement before the flood shows the influence of ancient Mesopotamian literature, which contains lists of cities and kings before and after the flood. Before the flood, the ages of the kings ranged from 18,600 to 36,000 years, but after it were reduced to between 140 and 1,200 years. The biblical numbers are much smaller. There are some differences in the numbers in the Hebrew and Greek manuscripts.

5:24 Enoch is in the important seventh position in the ten-member genealogy. In place of the usual formula “then he died,” the change to “Enoch walked with God” implies that he did not die, but like Elijah (2 Kgs 2:11–12) was taken alive to God’s abode. This mysterious narrative spurred much speculation and writing (beginning as early as the third century B.C.) about Enoch the sage who knew the secrets of heaven and who could communicate them to human beings (see Sir 44:16; 49:14; Heb 11:5; Jude 14–15 and the apocryphal work 1 Enoch).

5:29 The sound of the Hebrew word noah, “Noah,” is echoed in the word yenahamenu, “he will bring us relief”; the latter refers both to the curse put on the soil because of human disobedience (3:17–19) and to Noah’s success in agriculture, especially in raising grapes for wine (9:20–21).

5:32 Shem, Ham, and Japheth: like the genealogies in 4:17–24 and 11:10–26, the genealogy ends in three individuals who engage in important activity. Their descendants will be detailed in chap. 10, where it will be seen that the lineage is political-geographical as well as “ethnic.”

6:1–4 These enigmatic verses are a transition between the expansion of the human race illustrated in the genealogy of chap. 5 and the flood depicted in chaps. 6–9. The text, apparently alluding to an old legend, shares a common ancient view that the heavenly world was populated by a multitude of beings, some of whom were wicked and rebellious. It is incorporated here, not only in order to account for the prehistoric giants, whom the Israelites called the Nephilim, but also to introduce the story of the flood with a moral orientation—the constantly increasing wickedness of humanity. This increasing wickedness leads God to reduce the human life span imposed on the first couple. As the ages in the preceding genealogy show, life spans had been exceptionally long in the early period, but God further reduces them to something near the ordinary life span.

6:2 The sons of God: other heavenly beings. See note on 1:26.

6:4 As well as later: the belief was common that human beings of gigantic stature once lived on earth. In some cultures, such heroes could make positive contributions, but the Bible generally regards them in a negative light (cf. Nm 13:33; Ez 32:27). The point here is that even these heroes, filled with vitality from their semi-divine origin, come under God’s decree in v. 3.

6:5–8:22 The story of the great flood is commonly regarded as a composite narrative based on separate sources woven together. To the Yahwist source, with some later editorial additions, are usually assigned 6:5–8; 7:1–5, 7–10, 12, 16b, 17b, 22–23; 8:2b–3a, 6–12, 13b, 20–22. The other sections are usually attributed to the Priestly writer. There are differences between the two sources: the Priestly source has two pairs of every animal, whereas the Yahwist source has seven pairs of clean animals and two pairs of unclean; the floodwater in the Priestly source is the waters under and over the earth that burst forth, whereas in the Yahwist source the floodwater is the rain lasting forty days and nights. In spite of many obvious discrepancies in these two sources, one should read the story as a coherent narrative. The biblical story ultimately draws upon an ancient Mesopotamian tradition of a great flood, preserved in the Sumerian flood story, the eleventh tablet of the Gilgamesh Epic, and (embedded in a longer creation story) the Atrahasis Epic.

6:6 His heart was grieved: the expression can be misleading in English, for “heart” in Hebrew is the seat of memory and judgment rather than emotion. The phrase is actually parallel to the first half of the sentence (“the LORD regretted ...”).

6:7 Human beings are an essential part of their environment, which includes all living things. In the new beginning after the flood, God makes a covenant with human beings and every living creature (9:9–10). The same close link between human beings and nature is found elsewhere in the Bible; e.g., in Is 35, God’s healing transforms human beings along with their physical environment, and in Rom 8:19–23, all creation, not merely human beings, groans in labor pains awaiting the salvation of God.

6:11 Corrupt: God does not punish arbitrarily but simply brings to its completion the corruption initiated by human beings.

6:14 Gopherwood: an unidentified wood mentioned only in connection with the ark. It may be the wood of the cypress, which in Hebrew sounds like “gopher” and was widely used in antiquity for shipbuilding.

6:15 Hebrew “cubit,” lit., “forearm,” is the distance from the elbow to the tip of the middle finger, about eighteen inches (a foot and a half). The dimensions of Noah’s ark were approximately 440 × 73 × 44 feet. The ark of the Babylonian flood story was an exact cube, 120 cubits (180 feet) in length, width, and height.

6:16 Opening for daylight: a conjectural rendering of the Hebrew word sohar, occurring only here. The reference is probably to an open space on all sides near the top of the ark to admit light and air. The ark also had a window or hatch, which could be opened and closed (8:6).

6:19–21 You shall bring two of every kind ..., one male and one female: For the Priestly source (P), there is no distinction between clean and unclean animals until Sinai (Lv 11), no altars or sacrifice until Sinai, and all diet is vegetarian (Gn 1:29–30); even after the flood P has no distinction between clean and unclean, since “any living creature that moves about” may be eaten (9:3). Thus P has Noah take the minimum to preserve all species, one pair of each, without distinction between clean and unclean, but he must also take on provisions for food (6:21). The Yahwist source (J), which assumes the clean-unclean distinction always existed but knows no other restriction on eating meat (Abel was a shepherd and offered meat as a sacrifice), requires additional clean animals (“seven pairs”) for food and sacrifice (7:2–3; 8:20).

6:22 Just as God had commanded him: as in the creation of the world in chap. 1 and in the building of the tabernacle in Ex 25–31, 35–40 (all from the Priestly source), everything takes place by the command of God. In this passage and in Exodus, the commands of God are carried out to the letter by human agents, Noah and Moses. Divine speech is important. God speaks to Noah seven times in the flood story.

7:11 Abyss: the subterranean ocean; see note on 1:2.

8:4 The mountains of Ararat: the mountain country of ancient Arartu in northwest Iraq, which was the highest part of the world to the biblical writer. There is no Mount Ararat in the Bible.

8:7–12 In the eleventh tablet of the Gilgamesh Epic, Utnapishtim (the equivalent of Noah) released in succession a dove, a swallow, and a raven. When the raven did not return, Utnapishtim knew it was safe to leave the ark. The first century A.D. Roman author Pliny tells of Indian sailors who release birds in order to follow them toward land.

8:13–14 On the first day of the first month, the world was in the state it had been on the day of creation in chap. 1. Noah had to wait another month until the earth was properly dry as in 1:9.

9:1 God reaffirms without change the original blessing and mandate of 1:28. In the Mesopotamian epic Atrahasis, on which the Genesis story is partly modeled, the gods changed their original plan by restricting human population through such means as childhood diseases, birth demons, and mandating celibacy among certain groups of women.

9:2–3 Pre-flood creatures, including human beings, are depicted as vegetarians (1:29–30). In view of the human propensity to violence, God changes the original prohibition against eating meat.

9:4 Because a living being dies when it loses most of its blood, the ancients regarded blood as the seat of life, and therefore as sacred. Jewish tradition considered the prohibition against eating meat with blood to be binding on all, because it was given by God to Noah, the new ancestor of all humankind; therefore the early Christian Church retained it for a time (Acts 15:20, 29).

9:6 The image of God, given to the first man and woman and transmitted to every human being, is the reason that no violent attacks can be made upon human beings. That image is the basis of the dignity of every individual who, in some sense, “represents” God in the world.

9:8–17 God makes a covenant with Noah and his descendants and, remarkably, with all the animals who come out of the ark: never again shall the world be destroyed by flood. The sign of this solemn promise is the appearance of a rainbow.

9:18–27 The character of the three sons is sketched here. The fault is not Noah’s (for he could not be expected to know about the intoxicating effect of wine) but Ham’s, who shames his father by looking on his nakedness, and then tells the other sons. Ham’s conduct is meant to prefigure the later shameful sexual practices of the Canaanites, which are alleged in numerous biblical passages. The point of the story is revealed in Noah’s curse of Ham’s son Canaan and his blessing of Shem and Japheth.

9:27 In the Hebrew text there is a play on the words yapt (“expand”) and yepet (“Japheth”).

10:1–32 Verse 1 is the fourth of the Priestly formulas (2:4; 5:1; 6:9; 11:10) that structure Part I of Genesis; it introduces 10:2–11:9, the populating of the world and the building of the city. In a sense, chaps. 4–9 are concerned with the first of the two great commands given to the human race in 1:28, “Be fertile and multiply,” whereas chaps. 10–11 are concerned with the second command, “Fill the earth and subdue it.” (“Subdue it” refers to each nation’s taking the land assigned to it by God.) Gn 9:19 already noted that all nations are descended from the three sons of Noah; the same sentiment is repeated in 10:5, 18, 25, 32; 11:8. The presupposition of the chapter is that every nation has a land assigned to it by God (cf. Dt 32:8–9). The number of the nations is seventy (if one does not count Noah and his sons, and counts Sidon [vv. 15, 19] only once), which is a traditional biblical number (Jgs 8:30; Lk 10:1, 17). According to Gn 46:27 and Ex 1:5, Israel also numbered seventy persons, which shows that it in some sense represents the nations of the earth.

This chapter classifies the various peoples known to the ancient Israelites; it is theologically important as stressing the basic family unity of all peoples on earth. It is sometimes called the Table of the Nations. The relationship between the various peoples is based on linguistic, geographic, or political grounds (v. 31). In general, the descendants of Japheth (vv. 2–5) are the peoples of the Indo-European languages to the north and west of Mesopotamia and Syria; the descendants of Ham (vv. 6–20) are the Hamitic-speaking peoples of northern Africa; and the descendants of Shem (vv. 21–31) are the Semitic-speaking peoples of Mesopotamia, Syria and Arabia. But there are many exceptions to this rule; the Semitic-speaking peoples of Canaan are considered descendants of Ham, because at one time they were subject to Hamitic Egypt (vv. 6, 15–19). This chapter is generally considered to be a composite from the Yahwist source (vv. 8–19, 21, 24–30) and the Priestly source (vv. 1–7, 20, 22–23, 31–32). Presumably that is why certain tribes of Arabia are listed under both Ham (v. 7) and Shem (vv. 26–28).

10:2 Gomer: the Cimmerians; Madai: the Medes; Javan: the Greeks.

10:3 Ashkenaz: an Indo-European people, which later became the medieval rabbinic name for Germany. It now designates one of the great divisions of Judaism, Eastern European Yiddish-speaking Jews.

10:4 Elishah: Cyprus; the Kittim: certain inhabitants of Cyprus; the Rodanim: the inhabitants of Rhodes.

10:6 Cush: biblical Ethiopia, modern Nubia. Mizraim: Lower (i.e., northern) Egypt; Put: either Punt in East Africa or Libya.

10:8 Cush: here seems to be Cossea, the country of the Kassites; see note on 2:10–14. Nimrod: possibly Tukulti-Ninurta I (thirteenth century B.C.), the first Assyrian conqueror of Babylonia and a famous city-builder at home.

10:10 Shinar: the land of ancient Babylonia, embracing Sumer and Akkad, present-day southern Iraq, mentioned also in 11:2; 14:1.

10:11 Rehoboth-Ir: lit., “wide-streets city,” was probably not the name of another city, but an epithet of Nineveh; cf. Jon 3:3.

10:12 Calah: Assyrian Kalhu, the capital of Assyria in the ninth century B.C.

10:14 The Pathrusim: the people of Upper (southern) Egypt; cf. Is 11:11; Jer 44:1; Ez 29:14; 30:13. Caphtorim: Crete; for Caphtor as the place of origin of the Philistines, cf. Dt 2:23; Am 9:7; Jer 47:4.

10:15 Heth: the biblical Hittites; see note on 23:3.

10:21 Eber: the eponymous ancestor of the Hebrews, that is, the one to whom they traced their name.

10:25 In the Hebrew text there is a play on the name Peleg and the word niplega, “was divided.”

11:1–9 This story illustrates increasing human wickedness, shown here in the sinful pride that human beings take in their own achievements apart from God. Secondly, the story explains the diversity of languages among the peoples of the earth.

11:2 Shinar: see note on 10:10.

11:4 Tower with its top in the sky: possibly a reference to the chief ziggurat of Babylon, E-sag-ila, lit., “the house that raises high its head.”

11:9 Babel: the Hebrew form of the name “Babylon”; the Babylonians interpreted their name for the city, Bab-ili, as “gate of god.” The Hebrew word balal, “he confused,” has a similar sound.

11:10–26 The second Priestly genealogy goes from Shem to Terah and his three sons Abram, Nahor, and Haran, just as the genealogy in 5:3–32 went from Adam to Noah and his three sons Shem, Ham, and Japheth. This genealogy marks the important transition in Genesis between the story of the nations in 1:1–11:26 and the story of Israel in the person of its ancestors (11:27–50:26). As chaps. 1–11 showed the increase and spread of the nations, so chaps. 12–50 will show the increase and spread of Israel. The contrast between Israel and the nations is a persistent biblical theme. The ages given here are from the Hebrew text; the Samaritan and Greek texts have divergent sets of numbers in most cases. In comparable accounts of the pre-flood period, enormous life spans are attributed to human beings. It may be an attempt to show that the pre-flood generations were extraordinary and more vital than post-flood human beings.

11:12 The Greek text adds Kenan (cf. 5:9–10) between Arpachshad and Shelah. The Greek listing is followed in Lk 3:36.

11:16 Eber: the eponymous ancestor of the Hebrews, “descendants of Eber” (10:21, 24–30); see note on 14:13.

11:26 Abram is a dialectal variant of Abraham. God will change his name in view of his new task in 17:4.

11:27 Descendants of Terah: elsewhere in Genesis the story of the son is introduced by the name of the father (25:12, 19; 36:1; 37:2). The Abraham-Sarah stories begin (11:27–32) and end with genealogical notices (25:1–18), which concern, respectively, the families of Terah and of Abraham. Most of the traditions in the cycle are from the Yahwist source. The so-called Elohistic source (E) is somewhat shadowy, denied by some scholars but recognized by others in passages that duplicate other narratives (20:1–18 and 21:22–34). The Priestly source consists mostly of brief editorial notices, except for chaps. 17 and 23.

11:28 Ur of the Chaldeans: Ur was an extremely ancient city of the Sumerians (later, of the Babylonians) in southern Mesopotamia. The Greek text has “the land of the Chaldeans.” After a millennium of relative unimportance, Ur underwent a revival during the Neo-Babylonian/Chaldean empire (625–539 B.C.). The sixth-century author here identified the place by its contemporary name. As chap. 24 shows, Haran in northern Mesopotamia is in fact the native place of Abraham. In the Genesis perspective, the human race originated in the East (3:24; 4:16) and migrated from there to their homelands (11:2). Terah’s family moved from the East (Ur) and Abraham will complete the journey to the family’s true homeland in the following chapters.

11:29 Sarai: like Abram, a dialectal variant of the more usual form of the name Sarah. In 17:15, God will change it to Sarah in view of her new task.

11:32 Since Terah was seventy years old when his son Abraham was born (v. 26), and Abraham was seventy-five when he left Haran (12:4), Terah lived in Haran for sixty years after Abraham’s departure. According to the tradition in the Samaritan text, Terah died when he was one hundred and forty-five years old, therefore, in the same year in which Abraham left Haran. This is the tradition followed in Stephen’s speech: Abraham left Haran “after his father died” (Acts 7:4).

12:2 The call of Abraham begins a new history of blessing (18:18; 22:15–18), which is passed on in each instance to the chosen successor (26:2–4; 28:14). This call evokes the last story in the primeval history (11:1–9) by reversing its themes: Abraham goes forth rather than settle down; it is God rather than Abraham who will make a name for him; the families of the earth will find blessing in him.

12:3 Will find blessing in you: the Hebrew conjugation of the verb here and in 18:18 and 28:14 can be either reflexive (“shall bless themselves by you” = people will invoke Abraham as an example of someone blessed by God) or passive (“by you all the families of earth will be blessed” = the religious privileges of Abraham and his descendants ultimately will be extended to the nations). In 22:18 and 26:4, another conjugation of the same verb is used in a similar context that is undoubtedly reflexive (“bless themselves”). Many scholars suggest that the two passages in which the sense is clear should determine the interpretation of the three ambiguous passages: the privileged blessing enjoyed by Abraham and his descendants will awaken in all peoples the desire to enjoy those same blessings. Since the term is understood in a passive sense in the New Testament (Acts 3:25; Gal 3:8), it is rendered here by a neutral expression that admits of both meanings.

12:5 The ancestors appear in Genesis as pastoral nomads living at the edge of settled society, and having occasional dealings with the inhabitants, sometimes even moving into towns for brief periods. Unlike modern nomads such as the Bedouin, however, ancient pastoralists fluctuated between following the herds and sedentary life, depending on circumstances. Pastoralists could settle down and farm and later resume a pastoral way of life. Indeed, there was a symbiotic relationship between pastoralists and villagers, each providing goods to the other. Persons: servants and others who formed the larger household under the leadership of Abraham; cf. 14:14.

12:6 Abraham's journey to the center of the land, Shechem, then to Bethel, and then to the Negeb, is duplicated in Jacob's journeys (33:18; 35:1, 6, 27; 46:1) and in the general route of the conquest under Joshua (Jos 7:2; 8:9, 30). Abraham's journey is a symbolic "conquest" of the land he has been promised. In building altars here (vv. 7, 8) and elsewhere, Abraham acknowledges his God as Lord of the land.

12:9 The Negeb: the semidesert land south of Judah.

12:10–13:1 Abraham and Sarah's sojourn in Egypt and encounter with Pharaoh foreshadow their descendants' experience, suggesting a divine design in which they must learn to trust. The story of Sarah, the ancestor in danger, is told again in chap. 20, and also in 26:1–11 with Rebekah instead of Sarah. Repetition of similar events is not unusual in literature that has been orally shaped.

12:13 You are my sister: the text does not try to excuse Abraham's deception, though in 20:12 a similar deception is somewhat excused.

12:16 Camels: domesticated camels did not come into common use in the ancient Near East until the end of the second millennium B.C. Thus the mention of camels here (24:11–64; 30:43; 31:17, 34; 32:8, 16; 37:25) is seemingly an anachronism.

13:2–18 In this story of Abraham and Lot going their separate ways, Abraham resolves a family dispute by an act that shows both trust in God and generosity toward his nephew. The story suggests Lot rather than Abraham is the natural choice to be the ancestor of a great family; he is young and he takes the most fertile land (outside the land of Canaan). In contrast to Lot, who lifts his eyes to choose for himself (vv. 10–11), Abraham waits for God to tell him to lift his eyes and see the land he will receive (v. 14). Chaps. 18–19 continue the story of Abraham and Lot. Abraham's visionary possession of the land foreshadows that of Moses (Dt 3:27; 34:4).

14:1 Abraham plays a role with other world leaders. He defeats a coalition of five kings from the east (where, later, Israel's enemies lived) and is recognized by a Canaanite king as blessed by God Most High. The historicity of the events is controverted; apart from Shinar (Babylon), Tidal (Hittite Tudhaliya), and Elam, the names and places cannot be identified with certainty. The five cities were apparently at the southern end of the Dead Sea, and all but Bela (i.e., Zoar) were destined for destruction (19:20–24; Hos 11:8). The passage belongs to none of the traditional Genesis sources; it has some resemblance to reports of military campaigns in Babylonian and Assyrian royal annals.

14:3 The Salt Sea: the Dead Sea.

14:13 Abram the Hebrew: "Hebrew" was used by biblical writers for the pre-Israelite ancestors. Linguistically, it is an ethnic term; it may be built on the root Eber, who is the eponymous ancestor of the Israelites, that is, the one to whom they traced their name (10:21, 24–25; 11:14–17), or it may reflect the tradition that the ancestors came from beyond (eber) the Euphrates. It is used only by non-Israelites, or by Israelites speaking to foreigners.

14:14 Retainers: the Hebrew word hanik is used only here in the Old Testament. Cognate words appear in Egyptian and Akkadian texts, signifying armed soldiers belonging to the household of a local leader.

14:18 Melchizedek, king of Salem (Jerusalem, cf. Ps 76:3), appears with majestic suddenness to recognize Abraham's great victory, which the five local kings were unable to achieve. He prepares a feast in his honor and declares him blessed or made powerful by God Most High, evidently the highest God in the Canaanite pantheon. Abraham acknowledges the blessing by giving a tenth of the recaptured spoils as a tithe to Melchizedek. The episode is one of several allusions to David, king at Jerusalem, who also exercised priestly functions (2 Sm 6:17). Heb 7 interprets Melchizedek as a prefiguration of Christ. God Most High: in Heb. El Elyon, one of several "El names" for God in Genesis, others being El Olam (21:33), El the God of Israel (33:20), El Roi (16:13), El Bethel (35:7), and El Shaddai (the usual P designation for God in Genesis). All the sources except the Yahwist use El as the proper name for God used by the ancestors. The god El was well-known across the ancient Near East and in comparable religious literature. The ancestors recognized this God as their own when they encountered him in their journeys and in the shrines they found in Canaan.

14:22 In vv. 22–24, Abraham refuses to let anyone but God enrich him. Portrayed with the traits of a later Israelite judge or tribal hero, Abraham acknowledges that his victory is from God alone.

15:1–21 In the first section (vv. 1–6), Abraham is promised a son and heir, and in the second (vv. 7–21), he is promised a land. The structure is similar in both: each of the two promises is not immediately accepted; the first is met with a complaint (vv. 2–3) and the second with a request for a sign (v. 8). God’s answer differs in each section—a sign in v. 5 and an oath in vv. 9–21. Some scholars believe that the Genesis promises of progeny and land were originally separate and only later combined, but progeny and land are persistent concerns especially of ancient peoples and it is hard to imagine one without the other.

15:6 Abraham’s act of faith in God’s promises was regarded as an act of righteousness, i.e., as fully expressive of his relationship with God. St. Paul (Rom 4:1–25; Gal 3:6–9) makes Abraham’s faith a model for Christians.

15:9–17 Cutting up animals was a well-attested way of making a treaty in antiquity. Jer 34:17–20 shows the rite is a form of self-imprecation in which violators invoke the fate of the animals upon themselves. The eighth-century B.C. Sefire treaty from Syria reads, “As this calf is cut up, thus Matti’el shall be cut up.” The smoking fire pot and the flaming torch (v. 17), which represent God, pass between the pieces, making God a signatory to the covenant.

15:13–16 The verses clarify the promise of the land by providing a timetable of its possession: after four hundred years of servitude, your descendants will actually possess the land in the fourth generation (a patriarchal generation seems to be one hundred years). The iniquity of the current inhabitants (called here the Amorites) has not yet reached the point where God must intervene in punishment. Another table is given in Ex 12:40, which is not compatible with this one.

15:16 Generation: the Hebrew term dor is commonly rendered as “generation,” but it may signify a period of varying length. A “generation” is the period between the birth of children and the birth of their parents, normally about twenty to twenty-five years. The actual length of a generation can vary, however; in Jb 42:16 it is thirty-five and in Nm 32:13 it is forty. The meaning may be life spans, which in Gn 6:3 is one hundred twenty years and in Is 65:20 is one hundred years.

15:18–21 The Wadi, i.e., a gully or ravine, of Egypt is the Wadi-el-’Arish, which is the boundary between the settled land and the Sinai desert. Some scholars suggest that the boundaries are those of a Davidic empire at its greatest extent; others that they are idealized boundaries. Most lists of the ancient inhabitants of the promised land give three, six, or seven peoples, but vv. 19–21 give a grand total of ten.

16:1–16 In the previous chapter Abraham was given a timetable of possession of the land, but nothing was said about when the child was to be born. In this chapter, Sarah takes matters into her own hands, for she has been childless ten years since the promise (cf. 12:4 with 16:16). The story is about the two women, Sarah the infertile mistress and Hagar the fertile slave; Abraham has only a single sentence. In the course of the story, God intervenes directly on the side of Hagar, for she is otherwise without resources.

16:2 The custom of an infertile wife providing her husband with a concubine to produce children is widely attested in ancient Near Eastern law; e.g., an Old Assyrian marriage contract states that the wife must provide her husband with a concubine if she does not bear children within two years.

16:4 Because barrenness was at that time normally blamed on the woman and regarded as a disgrace, it is not surprising that Hagar looks down on Sarah. Ancient Near Eastern legal practice addresses such cases of insolent slaves and allows disciplining of them. Prv 30:23 uses as an example of intolerable behavior “a maidservant when she ousts her mistress.”

16:7 The Lord’s angel: a manifestation of God in human form; in v. 13 the messenger is identified with God. See note on Ex 3:2.

16:11 Ishmael: in Hebrew the name means “God has heard.” It is the same Hebrew verb that is translated “heeded” in the next clause. In other ancient Near Eastern texts, the name commemorated the divine answer to the parents’ prayer to have a child, but here it is broadened to mean that God has “heard” Hagar’s plight. In vv. 13–14, the verb “to see” is similarly broadened to describe God’s special care for those in need.

16:12 Alongside: lit., “against the face of”; the same phrase is used of the lands of Ishmael’s descendants in 25:18. It can be translated “in opposition to” (Dt 21:16; Jb 1:11; 6:28; 21:31), but here more likely means that Ishmael’s settlement was near but not in the promised land.

16:13 God who sees me: Hebrew el-ro’i is multivalent, meaning either “God of seeing,” i.e., extends his protection to me, or “God sees,” which can imply seeing human suffering (29:32; Ex 2:25; Is 57:18; 58:3). It is probable that Hagar means to express both of these aspects. Remained alive: for the ancient notion that a person died on seeing God, see Gn 32:31; Ex 20:19; Dt 4:33; Jgs 13:22.

16:14 Beer-lahai-roi: possible translations of the name of the well include: “spring of the living one who sees me”; “the well of the living sight”; or “the one who sees me lives.” See note on v. 13.

17:1–27 The Priestly source gathers the major motifs of the story so far and sets them firmly within a covenant context; the word “covenant” occurs thirteen times. There are links to the covenant with Noah (v. 1 = 6:9; v. 7 = 9:9; v. 11 = 9:12–17). In this chapter, vv. 1–8 promise progeny and land; vv. 9–14 are instructions about circumcision; vv. 15–21 repeat the promise of a son to Sarah and distinguish this promise from that to Hagar; vv. 22–27 describe Abraham’s carrying out the commands. The Almighty: traditional rendering of Hebrew El Shaddai, which is P’s favorite designation of God in the period of the ancestors. Its etymology is uncertain, but its root meaning is probably “God, the One of the Mountains.”

17:5 Abram and Abraham are merely two forms of the same name, both meaning, “the father is exalted”; another variant form is Abiram (Nm 16:1; 1 Kgs 16:34). The additional -ha- in the form Abraham is explained by popular etymology as coming from ab-hamon goyim, “father of a multitude of nations.”

17:10 Circumcised: circumcision was widely practiced in the ancient world, usually as an initiation rite for males at puberty. By shifting the time of circumcision to the eighth day after birth, biblical religion made it no longer a “rite of passage” but the sign of the eternal covenant between God and the community descending from Abraham.

17:15 Sarai and Sarah are variant forms of the same name, both meaning “princess.”

17:17 Laughed: yishaq, which is also the Hebrew form of the name “Isaac”; similar explanations of the name are given in Gn 18:12 and 21:6.

18:1 Chapters 18 and 19 combined form a continuous narrative, concluding the story of Abraham and his nephew Lot that began in 13:2–18. The mysterious men visit Abraham in Mamre to promise him and Sarah a child the following year (18:1–15) and then visit Lot in Sodom to investigate and then to punish the corrupt city (19:1–29). Between the two visits, Abraham questions God about the justice of punishing Sodom (18:16–33). At the end of the destruction of Sodom, there is a short narrative about Lot as the ancestor of Moab and the Ammonites (19:30–38).

18:3 Abraham addresses the leader of the group, whom he does not yet recognize as the Lord; in the next two verses he speaks to all three men. The other two are later (Gn 19:1) identified as angels. The shifting numbers and identification of the visitors are a narrative way of expressing the mysterious presence of God.

18:6 Three measures: Hebrew seah; three seahs equal one ephah, about half a bushel.

18:8 Curds: a type of soft cheese or yogurt.

18:10 One of them: i.e., the Lord.

18:12 Sarah laughed: a play on the verb “laugh,” which prefigures the name of Isaac; see note on 17:17.

18:20 The immorality of the cities was already hinted at in 13:13, when Lot made his choice to live there. The “outcry” comes from the victims of the injustice and violence rampant in the city, which will shortly be illustrated in the treatment of the visitors. The outcry of the Hebrews under the harsh treatment of Pharaoh (Ex 3:7) came up to God who reacts in anger at mistreatment of the poor (cf. Ex 22:21–23; Is 5:7). Sodom and Gomorrah became types of sinful cities in biblical literature. Is 1:9–10; 3:9 sees their sin as lack of social justice, Ez 16:46–51, as disregard for the poor, and Jer 23:14, as general immorality. In the Genesis story, the sin is violation of the sacred duty of hospitality by the threatened rape of Lot’s guests.

19:1–29 The story takes place in one day (counting a day from the previous evening): evening (v. 1), dawn (v. 15), and sunrise (v. 23). The passage resembles Jgs 19:15–25, which suggests dependence of one story on the other.

19:2 My lords: Lot does not yet know that the men are God’s messengers; cf. 18:3.

19:8 Let me bring them out to you: the authority of a patriarch within his house was virtually absolute. Lot’s extreme response of offering his daughters to a violent mob seems to be motivated by the obligation of hospitality.

19:11 Blinding light: an extraordinary flash that temporarily dazed the wicked men and revealed to Lot the true nature of his guests.

19:14 It is uncertain whether Lot’s sons-in-law were fully married to his daughters or only “engaged” to them (Israelite “engagement” was the first part of the marriage ceremony), or even whether the daughters involved were the same as, or different from, the two daughters who were still in their father’s house.

19:20 A small place: the Hebrew word misar, lit., “a little thing,” has the same root consonants as the name of the town Zoar in v. 22.

19:25 Overthrew: this term, lit., “turned upside down,” is used consistently to describe the destruction of the cities of the Plain. The imagery of earthquake and subsequent fire fits the geology of this region.

19:28–29 In a deft narrative detail, Abraham looks down from the height east of Hebron, from which he could easily see the region at the southern end of the Dead Sea, where the cities of the Plain were probably located.

19:30–38 This Israelite tale about the origin of Israel’s neighbors east of the Jordan and the Dead Sea was told partly to ridicule these ethnically related but rival nations and partly to give popular etymologies for their names. The stylized nature of the story is seen in the names of the daughters (“the firstborn” and “the younger”), the ease with which they fool their father, and the identical descriptions of the encounters.

19:37 From my father: in Hebrew, me’abi, similar in sound to the name “Moab.”

19:38 The son of my kin: in Hebrew, ben-ammi, similar in sound to the name “Ammonites.”

20:1–18 Abraham again passes off his wife Sarah as his sister to escape trouble in a foreign land (cf. 12:10–13:1, the J source). The story appears to be from a different source (according to some, E) and deals with the ethical questions of the incident. Gn 26:6–11 is yet another retelling of the story, but with Isaac and Rebekah as characters instead of Abraham and Sarah.

20:1 Kadesh and Shur: Kadesh-barnea was a major oasis on the southernmost border of Canaan, and Shur was probably the “way to Shur,” the road to Egypt. Gerar was a royal city in the area, but has not been identified with certainty.

20:6 Abimelech is exonerated of blame, but by that fact not cleared of the consequences of his act. He is still under the sentence of death for abducting another man’s wife; the consequences result from the deed not the intention.

20:7 Prophet: only here is Abraham explicitly called “prophet,” Hebrew nabi (cf. Ps 105:15).

20:11 Fear of God is the traditional though unsatisfactory rendering of Hebrew yir' at YHWH, literally, “revering Yahweh.” The phrase refers neither to the emotion of fear nor to religious reverence of a general kind. Rather it refers to adherence to a single deity (in a polytheistic culture), honoring that deity with prayers, rituals, and obedience. The phrase occurs again in 26:24; 43:23; and 50:19. It is very common in the wisdom literature of the Bible.

20:12 My sister: marrying one’s half sister was prohibited later in Israel’s history.

21:1–21 The long-awaited birth of Isaac parallels the birth of Ishmael in chap. 16, precipitating a rivalry and expulsion as in that chapter. Though this chapter is unified, the focus of vv. 1–7 is exclusively on Sarah and Isaac, and the focus of vv. 8–21 is exclusively on Hagar and Ishmael. The promise of a son to the barren Sarah and elderly Abraham has been central to the previous chapters and now that promise comes true with the birth of Isaac. The other great promise, that of land, will be resolved, at least in an anticipatory way, in Abraham’s purchase of the cave at Machpelah in chap. 23. The parallel births of the two boys has influenced the Lucan birth narratives of John the Baptist and Jesus (Lk 1–2).

21:6 Laugh: for the third time (cf. 17:17 and 18:12) there is laughter, playing on the similarity in Hebrew between the pronunciation of the name Isaac and words associated with laughter.

21:11 A son of his: Abraham is the father of both boys, but Sarah is the mother only of Isaac. Abraham is very concerned that Ishmael have a sufficient inheritance.

21:13 I will make a nation of him also: Ishmael’s descendants are named in 25:12–18.

21:14 Placing the child on her back: a reading based on an emendation of the traditional Hebrew text. In the traditional Hebrew text, Abraham put the bread and the waterskin on Hagar’s back, while her son apparently walked beside her. In this way the traditional Hebrew text harmonizes the data of the Priestly source, in which Ishmael would have been at least fourteen years old when Isaac was born; compare 16:16 with 21:5; cf. 17:25. But in the present Elohist (?) story, Ishmael is obviously a little boy, not much older than Isaac; cf. vv. 15, 18.

21:22 Of the two related promises of progeny and land, that of progeny has been fulfilled in the previous chapter. Now the claim on the land begins to be solidified by Abimelech’s recognition of Abraham’s claim on the well at Beersheba; it will be furthered by Abraham’s purchase of the cave at Machpelah in chap. 23. Two levels of editing are visible in the story: (1) vv. 22–24, 27, 32, the general covenant with Abimelech; (2) vv. 25–26, 28–30, 31, Abraham’s claim on the well. Both versions play on the root of the Hebrew word sheba‘, which means “seven” and “swear,” and the place name Beer-sheba.

21:23 This place: Beer-sheba (v. 31). Abimelech had come from Gerar (Gn 20:2), about thirty miles west of Beer-sheba.

21:32 Philistines: one of the Sea Peoples, who migrated from Mycenaean Greece around 1200 b.c. and settled on the coastland of Canaan, becoming a principal rival of Israel. Non-biblical texts do not use the term “Philistine” before ca. 1200 b.c.; it is probable that this usage and those in chap. 26 are anachronistic, perhaps applying a later ethnic term for an earlier, less-known one.

21:33 God the Eternal: in Hebrew, ’el ’olam, perhaps the name of the deity of the pre-Israelite sanctuary at Beer-sheba, but used by Abraham as a title of God; cf. Is 40:28.

22:1–19 The divine demand that Abraham sacrifice to God the son of promise is the greatest of his trials; after the successful completion of the test, he has only to buy a burial site for Sarah and find a wife for Isaac. The story is widely recognized as a literary masterpiece, depicting in a few lines God as the absolute Lord, inscrutable yet ultimately gracious, and Abraham, acting in moral grandeur as the great ancestor of Israel. Abraham speaks simply, with none of the wordy evasions of chaps. 13 and 21. The style is laconic; motivations and thoughts are not explained, and the reader cannot but wonder at the scene. In vv. 15–18, the angel repeats the seventh and climactic promise. Moriah: the mountain is not given a precise geographical location here, though 2 Chr 3:1 identifies Moriah as the mountain of Jerusalem where Solomon built the Temple; Abraham is thus the first to worship there.

The word “Moriah” is a play on the verb “to see” (Heb. ra’ah); the wordplay is continued in v. 8, “God will provide (lit., “see”)” and in v. 14, Yahweh-yireh, meaning “the Lord will see/provide.”

22:9 Bound: the Hebrew verb is ‘aqad, from which is derived the noun Akedah, “the binding (of Isaac),” the traditional Jewish name for this incident.

22:13 While the Bible recognizes that firstborn males belong to God (Ex 13:11–16; 34:19–20), and provides an alternate sacrifice to redeem firstborn sons, the focus here is on Abraham’s being tested by God (v. 1). But the widely attested practice of child sacrifice underscores, for all its horror today, the realism of the test.

22:14 Yahweh-yireh: a Hebrew expression meaning “the Lord will see/provide.” See note on vv. 1–19.

22:15–19 The seventh and climactic statement of the blessings to Abraham. Unlike the other statements, which were purely promissory, this one is presented as a reward for Abraham’s extraordinary trust.

22:20–24 The descendants to the second generation of Nahor, Abraham’s brother, who married Milcah. Of Terah’s three sons (11:27), the oldest, Abraham, fathered Isaac (21:1–7), and the youngest, Haran (who died in Ur), fathered Lot. Abraham is now told that Nahor had eight children by Milcah and four by his concubine Reumah. Apart from the notice about the children born to Abraham by his second wife, Keturah (25:1–6), all the information about Terah’s family to the second generation is now complete. It is noteworthy that Jacob will, like Nahor, have eight children by his wives and four by his concubines.

23:1–20 The occasion for purchasing the land is the need for a burial site for Sarah, for it would be unthinkable to bury Sarah outside of the promised land. One of the two great promises to Abraham, that of progeny, has been fulfilled (21:1–7). And now the promise of land is to be fulfilled, through a kind of down payment on the full possession that will take place only with the conquest under Joshua and during the reign of David. This purchase has been prepared for by Abimelech’s recognition of Abraham’s claim to the well at Beer-sheba (21:22–34). Among the ancestral stories this narrative is one of two that are entirely from the P source (chap. 17 being the other). The Priestly writers may have intended to encourage the generation of the exile to a renewed hope of repossessing their land.

23:3 The Hittites: in the Bible the term is applied to several different groups—inhabitants of the second-millennium Hittite empire in Asia Minor and northern Syria, residents of the Neo-Hittite kingdoms in northern Syria in the first part of the first millennium, and (following Assyrian terminology) the inhabitants of Syria and Palestine. The third group is meant here.

23:4 A resident alien: such a one would normally not have the right to own property. The importance of Abraham’s purchase of the field in Machpelah, which is worded in technical legal terms, lies in the fact that it gave his descendants their first, though small, land rights in the country that God had promised the patriarch they would one day inherit as their own. Abraham therefore insists on purchasing the field and not receiving it as a gift.

23:15 Four hundred shekels: probably an exorbitant sum; Jeremiah (Jer 32:9) paid only seventeen shekels for his field in Anathoth, though the Babylonian invasion no doubt helped to reduce the price.

23:16 The current market value: the standard weight called a shekel varied according to time and place.

24:1–67 The story of Abraham and Sarah is drawing to a close. The promises of progeny (21:1–7) and land (chap. 23) have been fulfilled and Sarah has died (23:1–2). Abraham’s last duty is to ensure that his son Isaac shares in the promises. Isaac must take a wife from his own people (vv. 3–7), so the promises may be fulfilled. The extraordinary length of this story and its development of a single theme contrast strikingly with the spare style of the preceding Abraham and Sarah stories. It points ahead to the Jacob and Joseph stories.

The length of the story is partly caused by its meticulous attention to the sign (vv. 12–14), its fulfillment (vv. 15–20), and the servant’s retelling of sign and fulfillment to Rebekah’s family to win their consent (vv. 34–49).

24:2 Put your hand under my thigh: the symbolism of this act was apparently connected with the Hebrew concept of children issuing from their father’s “thigh” (the literal meaning of “direct descendants” in 46:26; Ex 1:5). Perhaps the man who took such an oath was thought to bring the curse of sterility on himself if he did not fulfill his sworn promise. Jacob made Joseph swear in the same way (Gn 47:29). In both these instances, the oath was taken to carry out the last request of a man upon his death.

24:10 Nahor: it is uncertain whether this is the place where Abraham’s brother Nahor (11:27) had lived or whether it is the city Nahur, named in the Mari documents (nineteenth and eighteenth centuries B.C.), near the confluence of the Balikh and Middle Euphrates rivers. Aram Naharaim: lit., “Aram between the two rivers,” is the Yahwist designation for Terah’s homeland. The two rivers are the Habur and the Euphrates. The Priestly designation for the area is Paddan-aram, which is from the Assyrian padana, “road or garden,” and Aram, which refers to the people or land of the Arameans.

24:12 Let it turn out favorably for me: let me have a favorable sign; cf. end of v. 14.

24:30 Laban becomes hospitable only when he sees the servant’s rich gifts, which is in humorous contrast to his sister’s spontaneous generosity toward the servant. Laban’s opportunism points forward to his behavior in the Jacob stories (31:14–16).

24:41 Curse: this would be the consequence of failing to carry out the oath referred to in v. 3.

24:58 Marriages arranged by the woman’s father did not require the woman’s consent, but marriages arranged by the woman’s brother did. Laban is the brother and Rebekah is therefore free to give her consent or not.

25:1–11 As with the story of Terah in 11:27–32, this section lists all the descendants of Abraham as a means of concluding the story. The Jacob story ends similarly with the listing of the twelve sons (35:22–26), the death of Isaac (35:27–29), and the descendants of Esau (chap. 36). Abraham took another wife: though mentioned here, Abraham’s marriage to a “concubine,” or wife of secondary rank, is not to be understood as happening chronologically after the events narrated in the preceding chapter.

25:2 Three of the six names can be identified: the Midianites are a trading people, mentioned in the Bible as dwelling east of the Gulf of Aqaba in northwest Arabia; Ishbak is a north Syrian tribe; Shuah is a city on the right bank of the Middle Euphrates. The other names are probably towns or peoples on the international trade routes.

25:5 Amid so many descendants, Abraham takes steps that Isaac will be his favored heir.

25:6 The land of Kedem: or “the country of the East,” the region inhabited by the Kedemites or Easterners (29:1; Jgs 6:3, 33; Jb 1:3; Is 11:14). The names mentioned in vv. 2–4, as far as they can be identified, are those of tribes in the Arabian desert.

25:12 Like the conclusion of the Jacob story (chap. 36), where the numerous descendants of the rejected Esau are listed, the descendants of the rejected Ishmael conclude the story.

25:18 Pitched camp: lit., “fell”; the same Hebrew verb is used in Jgs 7:12 in regard to the hostile encampment of desert tribes. The present passage shows the fulfillment of the prediction contained in Gn 16:12.

25:19–36:43 The Jacob cycle is introduced as the family history of Isaac (Jacob’s father), just as the Abraham stories were introduced as the record of the descendants of Terah (Abraham’s father, 11:27). The cycle, made up of varied stories, is given unity by several recurring themes: birth, blessing and inheritance, which are developed through the basic contrasts of barrenness/fertility, non-blessing/blessing, and inheritance/exile/homeland. The large story has an envelope structure in which Jacob’s youth is spent in Canaan striving with his older brother Esau (25:19–28:22), his early adulthood in Paddan-aram building a family and striving with his brother-in-law Laban (chaps. 29–31), and his later years back in Canaan (chaps. 32–36).

25:20 Paddan-aram: the name used by the Priestly tradition for the northwest region of Mesopotamia, between the Habur and the Euphrates rivers. In Assyrian, padana is a road or a garden, and Aram refers to the people or the land of the Arameans. The equivalent geographical term in the Yahwist source is Aram Naharaim, “Aram between two rivers.”

25:22 If it is like this: in Hebrew, the phrase lamah zeh is capable of several meanings; it occurs again in v. 32 (“What good ...?”), 32:30 (“Why do you want ...?”), and 33:15 (“For what reason?”). It is one of several words and motifs that run through the story, suggesting that a divine pattern (unknown to the actors) is at work.

25:23 The older will serve the younger: Rebekah now knows something that no one else knows, that God favors Jacob over Esau. The text does not say if she shared this knowledge with anyone or kept it to herself, but, from their actions, it seems unlikely that either Isaac or Esau knew. That fact must be borne in mind in assessing Rebekah’s role in chap. 27, the theft of Esau’s blessing.

25:25 Reddish: in Hebrew, ’admoni, a reference to Edom, another name for Esau (v. 30; 36:1). Edom was also the name of the country south of Moab (southeast of the Dead Sea) where the descendants of Esau lived. It was called the “red” country because of its reddish sandstone. Moreover, “red” points ahead to the red stew in the next scene. Hairy: in Hebrew, se’ar, a reference to Seir, another name for Edom (36:8).

25:26 Heel: in Hebrew ’aqeb, a wordplay on the name Jacob; cf. 27:36. The first of three scenes of striving with Esau. The second is vv. 27–34, and the third, chap. 27. In all the scenes, Jacob values the blessing more than his ardent but unreflective brother Esau does.

25:27 Simple: the Hebrew word denotes soundness, integrity, health, none of which fit here. Whatever its precise meaning, it must be opposite to the qualities of Esau.

25:30 Red stuff: in Hebrew, ’adom; another play on the word Edom, the “red” land.

25:31 Right as firstborn: the privilege that entitled the firstborn son to a position of honor in the family and to a double share in the possessions inherited from the father. There is a persistent wordplay between bekorah, “right of the firstborn,” and berakah, “the blessing.” Contrary to custom, the preference here is for the younger son, as it was in the choice of Isaac over Ishmael.

26:1 The promise of land and numerous descendants given to Abraham (12:1–3; 15; 17; 22:17–18) is renewed for his son Isaac. The divine blessing to Isaac is mentioned also in vv. 12, 24, and 29.

26:6–11 This scene is the third version of the wife-in-danger story (cf. chaps. 12 and 20). The mention of the famine in 26:1 recalls the famine in 12:10; the name Abimelech, king of the Philistines in Gerar, recalls 20:2. The deception, according to all the stories, is the claim that the wife is a sister. This story (from the Yahwist source) departs from the two previous accounts in that the wife is not taken into the harem of the foreign king.

26:12–33 The dispute is over water rights. In a sparsely watered land, wells were precious and claims on water could function as a kind of claim on the land. Scholars generally judge the account of the dispute over water rights and its settlement by a legal agreement between Isaac and Abimelech to be a Yahwist version of the similar story about Abraham in 21:22–34. Here, Abimelech realizes that Isaac has brought blessing to his people and thus desires a covenant with him. The feast in v. 30 is part of the covenant ceremony.

26:21 Sitnah: “opposition.”

26:22 Rehoboth: “wide spaces,” i.e., ample room to live; site is probably SW of modern day Beer-sheba.

26:33 Shibah: the place name Shibah is a play on two Hebrew words, shebu’ah, “oath,” and shwebaa’, “seven.” In v. 31, they exchanged oaths.

26:34–35 These verses from the Priestly source introduce the next section on Esau's loss of his right as firstborn by suggesting a motivation for this in Isaac's and Rebekah's dislike for Esau's Canaanite wives.

27:1–45 The chapter, a literary masterpiece, is the third and climactic wresting away of the blessing of Esau. Rebekah manages the entire affair, using perhaps her privileged information about Jacob's status (25:23); Jacob's only qualm is that if his father discovers the ruse, he will receive a curse instead of a blessing (vv. 11–12). Isaac is passive as he was in chaps. 22 and 24. The deception is effected through clothing (Jacob wears Esau's clothing), which points ahead to a similar deception of a patriarch by means of clothing in the Joseph story (37:21–33). Such recurrent acts and scenes let the reader know a divine purpose is moving the story forward even though the human characters are unaware of it.

27:41 may bless you: Isaac's blessing confers fertility (vv. 27–28) and dominion (v. 29). The "dew of heaven" is rain that produces grain and wine, two of the principal foodstuffs of the ancient Near East. The "fertility of the earth" may allude to oil, the third basic foodstuff. The full agricultural year may be implied here: the fall rains are followed by the grain harvests of the spring and the grape harvest of late summer, and then the olive harvest of the fall (cf. Dt 11:14; Ps 104:13–15).

27:36 He has supplanted me: in Hebrew, wayyaqebeni, a wordplay on the name Jacob, ya'aqob; see Jer 9:3 and Gn 25:26. There is also a play between the Hebrew words bekorah ("right of the firstborn") and berakah ("blessing").

28:1–9 A glimpse of Rebekah's shrewdness is provided by 27:42–28:2. She is aware of Esau's murderous plot against Jacob (27:42–45) but realizes the episode of the stolen blessing is still painful to Isaac; she therefore uses another motive to persuade Isaac to send Jacob away—he must marry within the family (endogamy), unlike Esau. Esau, unreflective as usual, realizes too late he also should marry within the family but, significantly, marries from Abraham's rejected line. At this point in the story, Jacob (and his mother) have taken the blessing for themselves. Their actions have put Jacob in a precarious position: he must flee the land because of his brother's murderous intent and find a wife in a far country. One might ask how God's blessing can be given to such an unworthy schemer. There is a biblical pattern of preferring the younger brother or sister over the older—Isaac over Ishmael, Jacob over Esau, Rachel over Leah, Joseph over his older brothers, Ephraim over Manasseh (Gn 48:14), David over his older brothers.

28:10–22 As Jacob is leaving the land on his way to an uncertain future in Paddan-aram, God appears to him at a sacred place that Jacob had visited only to take a night's rest. Jacob's unawareness of the holiness of the place underscores the graciousness of the gift. On his return to Canaan, he will again encounter a divine visitor in the form of the mysterious attacker (32:23–33) and, after his return and reconciliation with Esau, he will again go to Bethel (35:1–15).

28:11 Place: the Hebrew word is often used specifically of a sacred site. The ambiguous word "place" is used here, for the text emphasizes that Jacob has no idea the place he has come upon is sacred; only when he wakes up does he realize it is sacred. The place was Bethel (v. 19), a sacred site as early as the time of Abraham (12:8).

28:12 Stairway: in Hebrew, sullam, traditionally but inaccurately translated as "ladder." The corresponding verb, salal, means "to heap up" something, such as dirt for a highway or a ramp. The imagery in Jacob's dream may be derived from the Babylonian ziggurat or temple tower, "with its top in the sky" (11:4), and with brick steps leading up to a small temple at the top.

28:18 Sacred pillar: in Hebrew, masseba, a stone which might vary in shape and size, set upright and usually intended for some religious purpose. The custom of erecting such sacred pillars in Palestine went back to its pre-Israelite period; but since their polytheistic associations were often retained, later Israelite religion forbade their erection (Lv 26:1; Dt 16:22) and ordered the destruction of those that were associated with other religions (Ex 34:13; Dt 12:3).

28:19 Bethel: i.e., "house of God"; the reference is to the house of God in v. 17.

28:20 This vow: knowing well that Esau's murderous wrath stands between him and the possession of the land promised him, Jacob makes his vow very precise. He vows to make the God who appeared to him his own if the God guides him safely to Paddan-aram and back to this land.

29:1–14 Jacob's arrival in Haran. The sight of Rachel inspires Jacob to the superhuman feat of rolling back the enormous stone by himself. The scene evokes the meeting of Abraham's steward and Jacob's mother Rebekah at a well (24:11–27).

The verse begins the story of Jacob's time in Mesopotamia (29:1–31:54), which is framed on either side by Jacob's time in Canaan, 25:19–28:22 and 32:1–36:43. In these chapters, Jacob suffers Laban's duplicity as Esau had to suffer his, though eventually Jacob outwits Laban and leaves Mesopotamia a wealthy man. An elaborate chiasmic (or envelope) structure shapes the diverse material: (A) Jacob's arrival in Haran in 29:1–4; (B) contract with Laban in 29:15–20; (C) Laban's deception of Jacob in 29:21–30; (D) the center, the birth of Jacob's children in 29:31–30:24; (C') Jacob's deception of Laban in 30:25–43; (B') dispute with Laban in 31:17–42; (A') departure from Laban in 31:43–54. As the chiasm reverses, so do the fortunes of Laban and Jacob. Kedemites: see note on 25:6.

29:14 Bone and ... flesh: the Hebrew idiom for English "flesh and blood" (cf. 2:23; Jgs 9:2; 2 Sm 5:1 = 1 Chr 11:1).

29:15–30 Laban's deception and Jacob's marriages. There are many ironies in the passage. Jacob's protest to Laban, "How could you do this to me?" echoes the question put to Abraham (20:9) and Isaac (26:10) when their deceptions about their wives were discovered. The major irony is that Jacob, the deceiver of his father and brother about the blessing (chap. 27), is deceived by his uncle (standing in for the father) about his wife.

29:17 Dull eyes: in the language of beauty used here, "dull" probably means lacking in the luster that was the sign of beautiful eyes, as in 1 Sm 16:12 and Sg 4:1.

29:18 Jacob offers to render service (Jos 15:16–17; 1 Sm 17:25; 18:17) to pay off the customary bridal price (Ex 22:15–16; Dt 22:29).

29:27 The bridal week: an ancient wedding lasted for seven days; cf. Jgs 14:12, 17.

29:31–30:24 The note of strife, first sounded between Jacob and Esau in chaps. 25–27, continues between the two wives, since Jacob loved Rachel more than Leah (29:30). Jacob's neglect of Leah moves God to make her fruitful (29:31). Leah's fertility provokes Rachel. Leah bears Jacob four sons (Reuben, Levi, Simeon, and Judah) and her maidservant Zilpah, two (Gad and Asher). Rachel's maidservant Bilhah bears two (Dan and Naphtali). After the mandrakes (30:14–17), Leah bears Issachar and Zebulun and a daughter Dinah. Rachel then bears Joseph and, later in the land of Canaan, Benjamin (35:18).

29:32 Reuben: the literal meaning of the Hebrew name is disputed. One interpretation is re'u ben, "look, a son!", but here in Genesis (as also with the names of all the other sons of Jacob), it is given a symbolic rather than an etymological interpretation. Name and person were regarded as closely interrelated. The symbolic interpretation of Reuben's name, according to the Yahwist source, is based on the similar-sounding ra'a be'onyi, "he saw my misery." In the Elohist source, the name is explained by the similar-sounding ye'ehabani, "he will love me."

29:33 Simeon: in popular etymology, related to shama', "he heard."

29:34 Levi: related to yillaweh, "he will become attached."

29:35 Judah: related to 'odeh, "I will give thanks, praise."

30:3 On my knees: in the ancient Near East, a father would take a newborn child in his lap to signify that he acknowledged it as his own; Rachel uses the ceremony in order to adopt the child and establish her legal rights to it.

30:4 As wife: in 35:22 Bilhah is called a "concubine" (Heb. pilegesh). In v. 9, Zilpah is called "wife," and in 37:2 both women are called wives. The basic difference between a wife and a concubine was that no bride price was paid for the latter. The interchange of terminology shows that there was some blurring in social status between the wife and the concubine.

30:6 Dan: explained by the term dannanni, “he has vindicated me.”

30:8 Naphtali: explained by the Hebrew term naftulim, lit., “contest” or “struggle.”

30:11 Gad: explained by the Hebrew term begad, lit., “in luck,” i.e., “what good luck!”

30:13 Asher: explained by the term be’oshri, lit., “in my good fortune,” i.e., “what good fortune,” and by the term ye’ashsheruni, “they call me fortunate.”

30:14 Mandrakes: an herb whose root was thought to promote conception. The Hebrew word for mandrakes, duda’im, has erotic connotations, since it sounds like the words daddayim (“breasts”) and dodim (“sexual pleasure”).

30:18 Issachar: explained by the terms, sekari, “my reward,” and in v. 16, sakor sekartika, “I have hired you.”

30:20 Zebulun: explained by the terms, zebadani ... zebed tob, “he has brought me a precious gift,” and yizbeleni, “he will honor me.”

30:24 Joseph: explained by the words yosep, “may he add,” and in v. 23, ’asap, “he has removed.”

30:25–43 Jacob’s deception of Laban. Jacob has been living in Laban’s household as an indentured worker paying off the bride price. Having paid off all his obligations, he wants to settle his accounts with Laban. His many children attest to the fulfillment of the Lord’s promise of numerous progeny; the birth of Joseph to his beloved Rachel signals the fulfillment in a special way. To enter into the Lord’s second promise, the land, he must now return to Canaan.

30:32 Dark ... lambs ... spotted or speckled ... goats: in the Near East the normal color of sheep is light gray, whereas that of goats is dark brown or black. A minority of sheep in that part of the world have dark patches, and a minority of goats, white markings. Laban is quick to agree to the offer, for Jacob would have received only a few animals. But Jacob gets the better of him, using two different means: (1) he separates out the weaker animals and then provides visual impressions to the stronger animals at mating time (a folkloric belief); (2) in 31:8–12, he transmits the preferred characteristics through controlled propagation. It should be noted that Jacob has been told what to do in a dream (31:10) and that God is behind the increase in his flocks.

30:35 By giving the abnormally colored animals to his sons, Laban not only deprived Jacob of his first small wages, but he also schemed to prevent the future breeding of such animals in the flock entrusted to Jacob.

30:37 Plane: also called the Oriental Plane, a deciduous tree found in riverine forests and marshes.

31:1–54 Jacob flees with his family from Laban. The strife that has always accompanied Jacob continues as Laban’s sons complain, “he has taken everything that belonged to our father”; the brothers’ complaint echoes Esau’s in 27:36. Rachel and Leah overcome their mutual hostility and are able to leave together, a harbinger of the reconciliation with Esau in chap. 33.

31:15 Outsiders: lit., “foreign women”; they lacked the favored legal status of native women. Used up: lit., “eaten, consumed”; the bridal price that a man received for giving his daughter in marriage was legally reserved as her inalienable dowry. Perhaps this is the reason that Rachel took the household images belonging to Laban.

31:19 Household images: in Hebrew, teraphim, figurines used in divination (Ez 21:26; Zec 10:2). Laban calls them his “gods” (v. 30). The traditional translation “idols” is avoided because it suggests false gods, whereas Genesis seems to accept the fact that the ancestors did not always live according to later biblical religious standards and laws.

31:20 Hoodwinked: lit., “stolen the heart of,” i.e., lulled the mind of. Aramean: the earliest extra-biblical references to the Arameans date later than the time of Jacob, if Jacob is dated to the mid-second millennium; to call Laban an Aramean and to have him speak Aramaic (Jegar-sahadutha, v. 47) is an apparent anachronism. The word may have been chosen to underscore the growing estrangement between the two men and the fact that their descendants will be two different peoples.

31:23 For seven days: lit., “a way of seven days,” a general term to designate a long distance; it would actually have taken a camel caravan many more days to travel from Haran to Gilead, the region east of the northern half of the Jordan. The mention of camels in this passage is apparently anachronistic since camels were not domesticated until the late second millennium.

31:26 Prisoners of war: lit., “women captured by the sword”; the women of a conquered people were treated as part of the victor’s spoil; cf. 1 Sm 30:2; 2 Kgs 5:2.

31:34 As in chap. 27, a younger child (Rachel) deceives her father to gain what belongs to him.

31:39 Jacob’s actions are more generous than the customs suggested in the Code of Hammurabi: “If in a sheepfold an act of god has occurred, or a lion has made a kill, the shepherd shall clear himself before the deity, and the owner of the fold must accept the loss” (par. 266); cf. Ex 22:12.

31:43–54 In this account of the non-aggression treaty between Laban and Jacob, the different objects that serve as witness (sacred pillar in v. 45, cairn of stones in v. 46), their different names (Jegar-sahadutha in v. 47, Mizpah in v. 49), and the two references to the covenant meal (vv. 46, 54) suggest that two versions have been fused. One version is the Yahwist source, and another source has been used to supplement it.

31:44–54 The treaty is a typical covenant between two parties: Jacob was bound to treat his wives (Laban’s daughters) well, and Laban was bound not to cross Jacob’s boundaries with hostile intent.

31:47–48 Jegar-sahadutha: an Aramaic term meaning “mound of witness.” Galeed: in Hebrew, “the mound of witness.”

31:49 Mizpah: a town in Gilead; cf. Jgs 10:17; 11:11, 34; Hos 5:1. The Hebrew name mispa (“lookout”) is allied to yisep yhwh (“may the Lord keep watch”), and also echoes the word masseba (“sacred pillar”).

31:53 Fear of ... Isaac: an archaic title for Jacob’s God of the Father.

32:1–22 Jacob’s negotiations with Esau. Laban kisses his daughters and grandchildren good-bye but not Jacob. On leaving Mesopotamia, Jacob has an encounter with angels of God (vv. 2–3), which provokes him to exclaim, “This is God’s encampment,” just as he exclaimed upon leaving Canaan, “This is the house of God, the gateway to heaven” (28:11–17).

32:3 Mahanaim: a town in Gilead (Jos 13:26, 30; 21:38; 2 Sm 2:8; etc.). The Hebrew name means “two camps.” There are other allusions to the name in vv. 8, 11.

32:23–33 As Jacob crosses over to the land promised him, worried about the impending meeting with Esau, he encounters a mysterious adversary in the night with whom he wrestles until morning. The cunning Jacob manages to wrest a blessing from the night stranger before he departs. There are folkloric elements in the tale—e.g., the trial of the hero before he can return home, the nocturnal demon’s loss of strength at sunrise, the demon protecting its river, the power gained by knowledge of an opponent’s name—but these have been worked into a coherent though elliptical narrative. The point of the tale seems to be that the ever-striving, ever-grasping Jacob must eventually strive with God to attain full possession of the blessing.

32:25 A man: as with Abraham’s three visitors in chap. 18, who appear sometimes as three, two, and one (the latter being God), this figure is fluid; he loses the match but changes Jacob’s name (v. 29), an act elsewhere done only by God (17:5, 15). A few deft narrative touches manage to express intimate contact with Jacob while preserving the transcendence proper to divinity.

32:29 Israel: the first part of the Hebrew name Yisrael is given a popular explanation in the word saritha, “you contended”; the second part is the first syllable of ’elohim, “divine beings.” The present incident, with a similar allusion to the name Israel, is referred to in Hos 12:5, where the mysterious wrestler is explicitly called an angel.

32:31 Peniel: a variant of the word Penuel (v. 32), the name of a town on the north bank of the Jabbok in Gilead (Jgs 8:8–9, 17; 1 Kgs 12:25). The name is explained as meaning “the face of God,” peni-’el. Yet my life has been spared: see note on 16:13.

33:1–20 The truly frightening confrontation seems to have already occurred in Jacob’s meeting the divine stranger in the previous chapter. In contrast, this meeting brings reconciliation. Esau, impulsive but largehearted, kisses the cunning Jacob and calls him brother (v. 9). Jacob in return asks Esau to accept his blessing (berakah, translated “gift,” v. 11), giving back at least symbolically what he had taken many years before and responding to Esau’s erstwhile complaint (“he has taken away my blessing,” 27:36). Verses 12–17 show that the reconciliation is not total and, further, that Jacob does not intend to share the ancestral land with his brother.

33:17 Succoth: an important town near the confluence of the Jabbok and the Jordan (Jos 13:27; Jgs 8:5–16; 1 Kgs 7:46). Booths: in Hebrew, sukkot, of the same sound as the name of the town.

33:19 Pieces of money: in Hebrew, qesita, a monetary unit of which the value is unknown. Descendants of Hamor: Hamorites, “the people of Hamor”; cf. Jgs 9:28. Hamor was regarded as the eponymous ancestor of the pre-Israelite inhabitants of Shechem.

34:1–31 The story of the rape of Dinah and the revenge of Jacob’s sons on the men of the city of Shechem may reflect the relations of the tribes of Simeon and Levi to their Canaanite neighbors around Shechem; the tribes are represented by their eponymous ancestors. Jacob’s farewell testament (49:5–7) cites this incident as the reason for the decline of the tribes of Simeon and Levi. Ominously, vv. 30–31 leave the situation unresolved, with Jacob concerned about the welfare of the whole family, and Simeon and Levi concerned only about the honor of their full sister. The danger to the family from narrow self-interest will continue in the Joseph story.

34:2 Hivite: the Greek text has “Horite”; the terms were apparently used indiscriminately to designate the Hurrian or other non-Semitic elements in Palestine.

34:10 Hamor seems to be making concessions to Jacob’s family in the hope of avoiding warfare between the two families.

34:24 All those who went out of the gate of the city: apparently meaning all the residents. By temporarily crippling the men through circumcision, Jacob’s sons deprived the city of its defenders.

35:1–7 Jacob returns to Bethel and founds the sanctuary, an event that forms a “bookend” to the first visit to Bethel in 28:10–22. To enter the Lord’s sanctuary, one must purify oneself and get rid of all signs of allegiance to other gods (Jos 24:23; Jgs 10:16). Jacob also seems to initiate the custom of making a pilgrimage to Bethel (see Ps 122:1 and Is 2:3, 5).

35:2 Foreign gods: divine images, including those of household deities (see note on Gn 31:19), that Jacob’s people brought with them from Paddan-aram.

35:4 Rings ... their ears: the earrings may have belonged to the gods because earrings were often placed on statues.

35:7 El-Bethel: probably to be translated “the god of Bethel.” This is one of several titles of God in Genesis that begin with El (= God), e.g., El Olam (21:33), El Elyon (14:18), El the God of Israel (33:20), El Rot (16:13), and El Shaddai. Most of these (except El Shaddai) are tied to specific Israelite shrines.

35:8 Allon-bacuth: the Hebrew name means “oak of weeping.”

35:18 Ben-oni: means either “son of my vigor” or, more likely in the context, “son of affliction.” Benjamin: “son of the right hand,” meaning a son who is his father’s help and support.

35:19 Bethlehem: the gloss comes from a later tradition that identified the site with Bethlehem, also called Ephrath or Ephratha (Jos 15:59; Ru 4:11; Mi 5:1). But Rachel’s grave was actually near Ramah (Jer 31:15), a few miles north of Jerusalem, in the territory of Benjamin (1 Sm 10:2).

35:22 The genealogy in vv. 23–29 is prefaced by a notice about Reuben’s sleeping with Bilhah, his father’s concubine. Such an act is a serious challenge to the authority of the father (cf. 2 Sm 3:7 and 16:21). In his final testament in chap. 49, Jacob cites this act of Reuben as the reason for Reuben's loss of the authority he had as firstborn son (49:4). Reuben's act is one more instance of strife in the family and of discord between father and son.

35:24–26 Benjamin is here said to have been born in Paddan-aram, apparently because all twelve sons of Jacob are considered as a unit.

36:1–43 The line of Esau. In the preceding chapter (35:22–26), the list of Jacob's children completes the narrative of Jacob; in this chapter, the narrative of Esau is complete when his descendants are listed. The notice of Abraham's death and burial in 25:7–10 was followed by a list of the line of his elder son Ishmael (25:12–18) and here Isaac's death and burial are followed by the line of Esau. The lines of both Ishmael and Esau are introduced by the same double formula, "These are the descendants of ..." (25:12; 36:9) and "These are the names of the sons of ..." (25:13; 36:10). The chapter consists of diverse material: vv. 1–3, Esau's wives; vv. 9–14, Esau's descendants; vv. 15–19, the clans of Esau; vv. 20–30, the Horites of Seir; vv. 31–39, the Edomite kings; vv. 40–43, the Edomites.

36:2–14 The names of Esau's wives and of their fathers given here differ considerably from their names cited from other old sources in 26:34 and 28:9. Zibeon the Hivite: in v.20 he is called a "Horite"; see note on 34:2.

36:9 These are the descendants of Esau: the original heading of the genealogy is preserved in v. 10 ("These are the names of the sons of Esau"). This use of the Priestly formula is secondary and should not be counted in the list of ten such formulas in Genesis.

36:20 Seir the Horite: according to Dt 2:12, the highlands of Seir were inhabited by Horites before they were occupied by the Edomites.

36:31 Before any king reigned over the Israelites: obviously this statement was written after the time of Saul, Israel's first king. According to 1 Sm 14:47, Saul waged war against the Edomites; according to 2 Sm 8:2, 13–14 and 1 Kgs 11:14–17, David made Edom a vassal state and nearly wiped out the royal line. These events reflect the words of the Lord to Rebekah at the birth of the boys, "the older shall serve the younger" (25:23).

37:1 The statement points ahead to 47:27, "Thus Israel settled in the land of Egypt, in the region of Goshen." These two statements frame the Joseph narrative; the later material (47:28–49:33) is about Jacob; chap. 50 brings to a conclusion themes remaining from the earlier story. One aim of the Joseph story is to explain how Israel came to Egypt after so-journing so long in Canaan.

37:2 The Joseph story is great literature not only in its themes but in its art. The stories show an interest in the psychology of the characters; everyone acts "in character" yet there is never a doubt that a divine purpose is bringing events to their conclusion. According to a literary analysis, vv. 1–4 set the scene; vv. 5–36 introduce the dramatic tension in the form of a conflict within the family; chaps. 38–41 describe the journeys away from their family of the eponymous ancestors of the two great tribes of later times, Judah (chap. 38) and Joseph (chaps. 39–41) and their preliminary conclusions; chaps. 42–44 detail the famine and journeys for food (chaps. 42, 43) that bring the brothers and (indirectly) the father into fresh contact with a mature Joseph who now has the power of life and death over them; 45:1–47:27 is the resolution (reconciliation of Joseph to his brothers) and the salvation of the family.

37:3 Jacob's favoring Joseph over his other sons is a cause of the brothers' attempt on his life. Throughout the story, Jacob is unaware of the impact of his favoritism on his other sons (cf. vv. 33–35; 42:36). Long ornamented tunic: the meaning of the Hebrew phrase is unclear. In 2 Sm 13:18–19, it is the distinctive dress of unmarried royal daughters. The "coat of many colors" in the Septuagint became the traditional translation. Ancient depictions of Semites in formal dress show them with long, ornamented robes and that is the most likely meaning here. Possibly, the young Joseph is given a coat that symbolizes honor beyond his years. Later, Pharaoh will clothe Joseph in a robe that symbolizes honor (41:42).

37:5–10 Joseph's dreams of ruling his brothers appear at first glance to be merely adolescent grandiosity, and they bring him only trouble. His later successes make it clear, however, that they were from God. Another confirmation of their divine source is the doubling of dreams (cf. 41:32).

37:21–36 The chapter thus far is from the Yahwist source, as are also vv. 25–28a. But vv. 21–24 and 28b–36 are from another source (sometimes designated the Elohist source). In the latter, Reuben tries to rescue Joseph, who is taken in Reuben's absence by certain Midianites; in the Yahwist source, it is Judah who saves Joseph's life by having him sold to certain Ishmaelites. Although the two variant forms in which the story was handed down in early oral tradition differ in these minor points, they agree on the essential fact that Joseph was brought as a slave into Egypt because of the jealousy of his brothers.

37:28 They sold Joseph ... silver: editors tried to solve the confusion, created by different sources, by supposing that it was the Midianite traders who pulled Joseph out of the pit and sold him to Ishmaelites. In all probability, one source had the brothers selling Joseph to Ishmaelites, whereas the other had them cast him into the pit whence he was taken by Midianite traders.

37:29 Tore his garments: the traditional sign of mourning in the ancient Near East.

37:35 Sheol: see note on Ps 6:6.

38:1–30 This chapter has subtle connections to the main Joseph story. It tells of the eponymous founder of the other great tribe of later times, Judah. Having already been introduced as one of the two good brothers in 37:26–27, he appears here as the father-in-law of the twice-widowed Tamar; he has reneged on his promise to provide his son Shelah to her in a levirate marriage. Unjustly treated, Tamar takes matters into her own hands and tricks Judah into becoming the father of her children, Perez and Zerah. Judah ultimately acknowledges that his daughter-in-law was right ("She is in the right rather than I," v. 26). In contrast to Judah's expectations, the family line does not continue through his son Shelah, but through the children of Tamar. Similarities relate this little story to the main narrative: the deception involving an article of clothing (the widow's garments of Tamar, Judah's seal, cord, and staff) point back to the bloody tunic that deceives Jacob in 37:31–33; a woman attempts the seduction of a man separated from his family, for righteous purposes in chap. 38, for unrighteous purposes in chap. 39.

38:5 Chezib: a variant form of Achzib (Jos 15:44; Mi 1:14), a town in the Judean Shephelah.

38:8 Preserve your brother's line: lit., "raise up seed for your brother": an allusion to the law of levirate, or "brother-in-law," marriage; see notes on Dt 25:5; Ru 2:20. Onan's violation of this law brought on him God's punishment (vv. 9–10).

38:18 Seal and cord: the cylinder seal, through which a hole was bored lengthwise so that it could be worn from the neck by a cord, was a distinctive means of identification. Apparently one's staff could also be marked with some sign of identification (cf. Nm 17:17–18).

38:21 Prostitute: the Hebrew term qedesha, lit., "consecrated woman," designates a woman associated with a sanctuary whose activities could include prostitution; cf. Dt 23:18; Hos 4:14, where the same Hebrew word is used. In 38:15 and 24 the common word for prostitute, zona, is used.

38:29 He was called Perez: the Hebrew word means "breach."

38:30 He was called Zerah: a name connected here by popular etymology with a Hebrew word for the red light of dawn, alluding apparently to the crimson thread.

40:1 Joseph interprets the dreams of the Pharaoh's two officials. His ability to interpret the dreams shows that God is still with him and points forward to his role of dream interpreter for Pharaoh in chap. 41.

40:13 Single you out: lit., "lift up your head" (see also vv. 19, 20).

41:1–57 Joseph correctly interprets Pharaoh's dream and becomes second in command over all Egypt.

41:8 Magicians: one of the tasks of the "magicians" was interpreting dreams. The interpretation of dreams was a longstanding practice in Egypt. A manual of dream interpretation has been found, written in the early second millennium and re-published later in which typical dreams are given (“If a man sees himself in a dream ...”) followed by a judgment of “good” or “bad.” Interpreters were still needed for dreams, however, and Pharaoh complains that none of his dream interpreters can interpret his unprecedented dream. The same term will be used of Pharaoh’s magicians in Exodus.

41:42 Signet ring: a finger ring in which was set a stamp seal, different from the cylinder seal such as Judah wore; see note on 38:18. By receiving Pharaoh’s signet ring, Joseph was made vizier of Egypt (v. 43); the vizier was known as “seal-bearer of the king of Lower Egypt.” The gold chain was a symbol of high office in ancient Egypt.

41:43 Abrek: apparently a cry of homage, though the word’s derivation and actual meaning are uncertain.

41:45 Zaphenath-paneah: a Hebrew transcription of an Egyptian name meaning “the god speaks and he (the newborn child) lives.” Asenath: means “belonging to (the Egyptian goddess) Neith.” Potiphera: means “he whom Ra (the Egyptian god) gave”; a shorter form of the same name was borne by Joseph’s master (37:36). Heliopolis: in Hebrew, On, a city seven miles northeast of modern Cairo, site of the chief temple of the sun god; it is mentioned also in v. 50; 46:20; Ez 30:17.

41:51 Manasseh: an allusion to this name is in the Hebrew expression, nishshani, “he made me forget.”

41:52 Ephraim: related to the Hebrew expression hiphrani, “(God) has made me fruitful.” The name originally meant something like “fertile land.”

42:1–38 The first journey of the brothers to Egypt. Its cause is famine, which was also the reason Abraham and Sarah undertook their dangerous journey to Egypt. The brothers bow to Joseph in v. 6, which fulfills Joseph’s dream in 37:5–11. Endowed with wisdom, Joseph begins a process of instruction or “discipline” for his brothers that eventually forces them to recognize the enormity of their sin against him and the family. He controls their experience of the first journey with the result that the second journey in chaps. 43–44 leads to full acknowledgment and reconciliation.

42:9, 12 Weak points: lit., “the nakedness of the land”; the military weakness of the land, like human nakedness, should not be seen by strangers.

43:1–34 The second journey to Egypt. Joseph the sage has carefully prepared the brothers for a possible reconciliation. In this chapter and the following one Judah steps forward as the hero, in contrast to chaps. 37 and 42 where Reuben was the hero. Here Judah serves as guarantee for Benjamin.

43:32 Separately to him: that Joseph did not eat with the other Egyptians was apparently a matter of rank.

43:34 Five times as large as: probably an idiomatic expression for “much larger than.” Cf. 45:22.

44:1–34 Joseph’s pressure on his brothers and Judah’s great speech. Judah has the longest speech in the Book of Genesis; it summarizes the recent past (vv. 18–29), shows the pain Joseph’s actions have imposed on their aged father (vv. 30–32), and ends with the offer to take the place of Benjamin as servant of Joseph (vv. 33–34). The role of Judah in the entire story is exceedingly important and is easily underrated: he tries to rescue Joseph (37:26–27), his “going down away from the brothers” is parallel to Joseph’s (chap. 38) and prepares him (as it prepares Joseph) for the reconciliation, his speech in chap. 44 persuades Joseph to reveal himself and be reconciled to his brothers. Here, Judah effectively replaces Reuben as a spokesman for the brothers. Jacob in his testament (chap. 49) devotes the most attention to Judah and Joseph. In one sense, the story can be called the story of Joseph and Judah.

44:5 Divination: seeking omens through liquids poured into a cup or bowl was a common practice in the ancient Near East; cf. v. 15. Even though divination was frowned on in later Israel (Lv 19:31), it is in this place an authentic touch which is ascribed to Joseph, the wisest man in Egypt.

44:16 Guilt: in trying to do away with Joseph when he was young.

44:19 My lord asked his servants: such frequently repeated expressions in Judah's speech show the formal court style used by a subject in speaking to a high official.

45:1–28 Joseph reveals his identity and the family is reconciled.

45:8 Father to Pharaoh: a term applied to a vizier in ancient Egypt.

45:9–15 In these verses, as in 46:31–47:5a, all from the Yahwist source, Joseph in his own name invites his father and brothers to come to Egypt. Only after their arrival is Pharaoh informed of the fact. On the other hand, in 45:16–20, which scholars have traditionally attributed to the Elohist source, it is Pharaoh himself who invites Joseph's family to migrate to his domain.

45:10 The region of Goshen: the meaning of the term is unknown. It is found in no Egyptian source. It is generally thought to be in the modern Wadi Tumilat in the eastern part of the Nile Delta.

46:1–47:26 Jacob and his family settle in Egypt. Joseph's economic policies.

46:3 I am God: more precisely according to the Hebrew text, "I am El." "El" is here a divine name, not the common noun "god."

46:9–27 This genealogical list is based on the clan lists (Nm 26:5–50) from the Mosaic period.

46:27 Seventy persons: it is difficult to get this exact number by adding up the persons mentioned in the preceding genealogies. One might assume it refers to Jacob and sixty-nine descendants, excluding Er and Onan but including Dinah. Ex 1:5 repeats the number but excludes Jacob. Dt 10:22 refers to seventy persons descending to Egypt. The best solution is to take the number as expressing totality. Since there are seventy nations in chap. 10, it is likely that the text is drawing a parallel between the two entities and suggesting that Israel "represents" the nations before God.

46:32 Owners of livestock: the phrase occurs only here and in v. 34. The difference between this term and "shepherds" is not clear, for the brothers do not mention it to Pharaoh in 47:3.

47:9 Wayfarer ... wayfarers: human beings are merely sojourners on earth; cf. Ps 39:13.

47:11 The region of Rameses: same as the region of Goshen; see note on 45:10.

47:28–50:26 Supplements to the Joseph story. Most of the material in this section centers on Jacob—his blessing of Joseph's sons, his farewell testament, and his death and burial in Canaan. Only the last verses (50:15–26) redirect attention to Jacob's sons, the twelve brothers; they are assured that the reconciliation will not collapse after the death of the patriarch.

47:31 Israel bowed at the head of the bed: meaning perhaps that he gave a nod of assent and appreciation as he lay on his bed. The oath and gesture are the same as Abraham's in 24:2. Israel's bowing here suggests the fulfillment of Joseph's dreams in 37:9–10, when parents and brothers bowed down to Joseph (cf. 42:6; 43:26). By using different vowels for the Hebrew word for "bed," the Greek version translated it as "staff," and understood the phrase to mean that he bowed in worship, leaning on the top of his staff; it is thus quoted in Heb 11:21.

48:1–22 Jacob continues his preparations for death. In a scene that evokes the nearly blind Isaac blessing Jacob and Esau (chap. 27), Jacob blesses Joseph's two sons. He adopts them, elevating them to a status equal to that of Jacob's first sons Reuben and Simeon (cf. 1 Chr 5:1). The adoption is one more instance of Jacob's favoring Rachel and those born of her. The mention of Jacob's failing eyesight and his selection of the younger son over the older evokes the great deathbed scene in chap. 27. He reaffirms to Joseph the ancient divine promise of progeny and land.

48:3 Luz: an older name of Bethel (28:19).

48:7 Since her early death prevented Rachel from bearing more than two sons, Jacob feels justified in treating her two grandsons as if they were her own offspring.

48:22 Both the meaning of the Hebrew and the historical reference in this verse are obscure. By taking the Hebrew word for Shechem as a common noun meaning shoulder or mountain slope, some translators render the verse, "I give you one portion more than your brothers, which I captured ..."

The reference may be to the capture of Shechem by the sons of Jacob (34:24–29). Shechem lay near the border separating the tribal territory of Manasseh from that of Ephraim (Jos 16:4–9; 17:1–2, 7).

49:1–27 The testament, or farewell discourse, of Jacob, which has its closest parallel in Moses' farewell in Dt 33:6–25. From his privileged position as a patriarch, he sees the future of his children (the eponymous ancestors of the tribes) and is able to describe how they will fare and so gives his blessing. The dense and archaic poetry is obscure in several places. The sayings often involve wordplays (explained in the notes). The poem begins with the six sons of Leah (vv. 2–15), then deals with the sons of the two secondary wives, and ends with Rachel's two sons, Joseph and Benjamin. Reuben, the oldest son, loses his position of leadership as a result of his intercourse with Bilhah (35:22), and the words about Simeon and Levi allude to their taking revenge for the rape of Dinah (chap. 34). The preeminence of Judah reflects his rise in the course of the narrative (mirroring the rise of Joseph). See note on 44:1–34.

49:5–7 This passage probably refers to their attack on the city of Shechem (Gn 34). Because there is no indication that the warlike tribe of Levi will be commissioned as a priestly tribe (Ex 32:26–29; Dt 33:11), this passage reflects an early, independent tradition.

49:5 Knives: if this is the meaning of the obscure Hebrew word here, the reference may be to the knives used in circumcising the men of Shechem (34:24; cf. Jos 5:2).

49:10 Until tribute comes to him: this translation is based on a slight change in the Hebrew text, which, as it stands, would seem to mean, “until he comes to Shiloh.” A somewhat different reading of the Hebrew text would be, “until he comes to whom it belongs.” This last has been traditionally understood in a messianic sense. In any case, the passage aims at the supremacy of the tribe of Judah and of the Davidic dynasty.

49:11 In wine ... the blood of grapes: Judah's clothes are poetically pictured as soaked with grape juice from trampling in the wine press, the rich vintage of his land; cf. Is 63:2.

49:16 In Hebrew the verb for “achieve justice” is from the same root as the name Dan.

49:18 This short plea for divine mercy has been inserted into the middle of Jacob's testament.

49:19 In Hebrew there is assonance between the name Gad and the words for “raided,” “raiders,” and “raid.”

49:25–26 A very similar description of the agricultural riches of the tribal land of Joseph is given in Dt 33:13–16.

50:10–11 Goren-ha-atad: “Threshing Floor of the Brambles.” Abel-mizraim: although the name really means “watercourse of the Egyptians,” it is understood here, by a play on the first part of the term, to mean “mourning of the Egyptians.” The site has not been identified through either reading of the name. But it is difficult to see why the mourning rites should have been held in the land beyond the Jordan when the burial was at Hebron. Perhaps an earlier form of the story placed the mourning rites beyond the Wadi of Egypt, the traditional boundary between Canaan and Egypt (Nm 34:5; Jos 15:4, 47).

50:15–26 The final reconciliation of the brothers. Fearful of what may happen after the death of their father, the brothers engage in a final deception, inventing the dying wish of Jacob. Again, Joseph weeps, and, again, his brothers fall down before him, offering to be his slaves (44:16, 33). Joseph's assurance is also a summation of the story: “Even though you meant harm to me, God meant it for good, to achieve this present end, the survival of many people” (v. 20). Joseph's adoption of the children of Manasseh's son Machir recalls Jacob's adoption of his grandchildren (48:5, 13–20); the adoptions reflect tribal history (cf. Jgs 5:14).

The second book of the Pentateuch is called Exodus, from the Greek word for “departure,” because its central event was understood by the Septuagint’s translators to be the departure of the Israelites from Egypt. Its Hebrew title, Shemoth (“Names”), is from the book’s opening phrase, “These are the names....” Continuing the history of Israel from the point where the Book of Genesis leaves off, Exodus recounts the Egyptian oppression of Jacob’s ever-increasing descendants and their miraculous deliverance by God through Moses, who led them across the Red Sea to Mount Sinai where they entered into a covenant with the Lord. Covenantal laws and detailed prescriptions for the tabernacle (a portable sanctuary foreshadowing the Jerusalem Temple) and its service are followed by a dramatic episode of rebellion, repentance, and divine mercy. After the broken covenant is renewed, the tabernacle is constructed, and the cloud signifying God’s glorious presence descends to cover it.

These events made Israel a nation and confirmed their unique relationship with God. The “law” (Hebrew torah) given by God through Moses to the Israelites at Mount Sinai constitutes the moral, civil, and ritual legislation by which they were to become a holy people. Many elements of it were fundamental to the teaching of Jesus (Mt 5:21–30; 15:4) as well as to New Testament and Christian moral teaching (Rom 13:8–10; 1 Cor 10:1–5; 1 Pt 2:9).

The principal divisions of Exodus are:

I. Introduction: The Oppression of the Israelites in Egypt (1:1–22:22)

- II. The Call and Commission of Moses (2:23–7:7)
- III. The Contest with Pharaoh (7:8–13:16)
- IV. The Deliverance of the Israelites from Pharaoh and Victory at the Sea (13:17–15:21)
- V. The Journey in the Wilderness to Sinai (15:22–18:27)
- VI. Covenant and Legislation at Mount Sinai (19:1–31:18)
- VII. Israel's Apostasy and God's Renewal of the Covenant (32:1–34:35)
- VIII. The Building of the Tabernacle and the Descent of God's Glory upon It (35:1–40:38)

I. Introduction: The Oppression of the Israelites in Egypt

CHAPTER 1

<sup>6</sup> Now Joseph and all his brothers and that whole generation died.<sup>b</sup> <sup>7</sup> But the Israelites were fruitful and prolific. They multiplied and became so very numerous that the land was filled with them.*

The Oppression.<sup>8c</sup> Then a new king, who knew nothing of Joseph,* rose to power in Egypt. <sup>9</sup> He said to his people, "See! The Israelite people have multiplied and become more numerous than we are! <sup>10</sup> Come, let us deal shrewdly with them to stop their increase;* otherwise, in time of war they too may join our enemies to fight against us, and so leave the land."

<sup>11</sup> Accordingly, they set supervisors over the Israelites to oppress them with forced labor.<sup>d</sup> Thus they had to build for Pharaoh* the garrison cities of Pithom and Raamses. <sup>12</sup> Yet the more they were oppressed, the more they multiplied and spread, so that the Egyptians began to loathe the Israelites. <sup>13</sup> So the Egyptians reduced the Israelites to cruel slavery, <sup>14</sup> making life bitter for them with hard labor, at mortar* and brick and all kinds of field work—cruelly oppressed in all their labor.

Command to the Midwives. <sup>15</sup> The king of Egypt told the Hebrew midwives, one of whom was called Shiphrah and the other Puah, <sup>16</sup> "When you act as midwives for the Hebrew women, look on the birthstool:* if it is a boy, kill him; but if it is a girl, she may live." <sup>17</sup> The midwives, however, feared God; they did not do as the king of Egypt had ordered them, but let the boys live. <sup>18</sup> So the king of Egypt summoned the midwives and asked them, "Why have you done this, allowing the boys to live?" <sup>19</sup> The midwives answered Pharaoh, "The Hebrew women are not like the Egyptian women. They are robust and give birth before the midwife arrives." <sup>20</sup> Therefore God dealt well with the midwives; and the people multiplied and grew very numerous. <sup>21</sup> And because the midwives feared God, God built up families for them. <sup>22</sup>Pharaoh then commanded all his people, “Throw into the Nile every boy that is born,<sup>e</sup> but you may let all the girls live.”

Birth and Adoption of Moses. <sup>1</sup>Now a man* of the house of Levi married a Levite woman,<sup>f</sup> <sup>2</sup>and the woman conceived and bore a son. Seeing what a fine child he was, she hid him for three months.<sup>g</sup> <sup>3</sup>But when she could no longer hide him, she took a papyrus basket,* daubed it with bitumen and pitch, and putting the child in it, placed it among the reeds on the bank of the Nile. <sup>4</sup>His sister stationed herself at a distance to find out what would happen to him.

<sup>5</sup>Then Pharaoh's daughter came down to bathe at the Nile, while her attendants walked along the bank of the Nile. Noticing the basket among the reeds, she sent her handmaid to fetch it. <sup>6</sup>On opening it, she looked, and there was a baby boy crying! She was moved with pity for him and said, "It is one of the Hebrews' children." <sup>7</sup>Then his sister asked Pharaoh's daughter, "Shall I go and summon a Hebrew woman to nurse the child for you?" <sup>8</sup>Pharaoh's daughter answered her, "Go." So the young woman went and called the child's own mother. <sup>9</sup>Pharaoh's daughter said to her, "Take this child and nurse him for me, and I will pay your wages."* So the woman took the child and nursed him. <sup>10</sup>When the child grew,* she brought him to Pharaoh's daughter, and he became her son.<sup>h</sup> She named him Moses; for she said, "I drew him out of the water."

Moses' Flight to Midian. <sup>11i</sup> On one occasion, after Moses had grown up,* when he had gone out to his kinsmen and witnessed their forced labor, he saw an Egyptian striking a Hebrew, one of his own kinsmen. <sup>12</sup>Looking about and seeing no one, he struck down the Egyptian and hid him in the sand. <sup>13</sup>The next day he went out again, and now two Hebrews were fighting! So he asked the culprit, "Why are you striking your companion?" <sup>14</sup>But he replied, "Who has appointed you ruler and judge over us? Are you thinking of killing me as you killed the Egyptian?" Then Moses became afraid and thought, "The affair must certainly be known." <sup>15</sup>When Pharaoh heard of the affair, he sought to kill Moses. But Moses fled from Pharaoh and went to the land of Midian.<sup>* j</sup> There he sat down by a well.

<sup>16</sup>Now the priest of Midian had seven daughters, and they came to draw water and fill the troughs to water their father's flock. <sup>17</sup>But shepherds came and drove them away. So Moses rose up in their defense and watered their flock. <sup>18</sup>When they returned to their father Reuel,* he said to them, “How is it you have returned so soon today?” <sup>19</sup>They answered, “An Egyptian* delivered us from the shepherds. He even drew water for us and watered the flock!” <sup>20</sup>“Where is he?” he asked his daughters. “Why did you leave the man there? Invite him to have something to eat.” <sup>21</sup>Moses agreed to stay with him, and the man gave Moses his daughter Zipporah in marriage. <sup>22</sup>She conceived and bore a son, whom he named Gershom;* for he said, “I am a stranger residing in a foreign land.”<sup>k</sup>

II. The Call and Commission of Moses

The Burning Bush. <sup>23</sup>A long time passed, during which the king of Egypt died. The Israelites groaned under their bondage and cried out, and from their bondage their cry for help went up to God.<sup>l</sup> <sup>24</sup>God heard their moaning and God was mindful of his covenant<sup>m</sup> with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. <sup>25</sup>God saw the Israelites, and God knew ...*

The Call and Commission of Moses. <sup>7</sup>But the LORD said: I have witnessed the affliction of my people in Egypt and have heard their cry against their taskmasters, so I know well what they are suffering. <sup>8</sup>Therefore I have come down * to rescue them from the power of the Egyptians and lead them up from that land into a good and spacious land, a land flowing with milk and honey, the country of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, the Perizzites, the Girgashites, the Hivites and the Jebusites. <sup>q</sup> <sup>9</sup>Now indeed the outcry of the Israelites has reached me, and I have seen how the Egyptians are oppressing them. <sup>10</sup>Now, go! I am sending you to Pharaoh to bring my people, the Israelites, out of Egypt.

<sup>11</sup>But Moses said to God, “Who am I * that I should go to Pharaoh and bring the Israelites out of Egypt?” <sup>12</sup>God answered: I will be with you; and this will be your sign * that I have sent you. When you have brought the people out of Egypt, you will serve God at this mountain. <sup>13</sup>“But,” said Moses to God, “if I go to the Israelites and say to them, ‘The God of your ancestors has sent me to you,’ and they ask me, ‘What is his name?’ what do I tell them?” <sup>14</sup>God replied to Moses: I am who I am. * Then he added: This is what you will tell the Israelites: I AM has sent me to you.

<sup>15</sup>God spoke further to Moses: This is what you will say to the Israelites: The LORD, the God of your ancestors, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, has sent me to you.

This is my name forever;<sup>r</sup> this is my title for all generations.

<sup>16</sup>Go and gather the elders of the Israelites, and tell them, The LORD, the God of your ancestors, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, has appeared to me and said: I have observed you and what is being done to you in Egypt; <sup>17</sup>so I have decided to lead you up out of your affliction in Egypt into the land of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, the Perizzites, the Girgashites, the Hivites and the Jebusites, a land flowing with milk and honey. <sup>18</sup>They will listen to you. Then you and the elders of Israel will go to the king of Egypt and say to him:<sup>s</sup> The LORD, the God of the Hebrews, has come to meet us. So now, let us go a three days' journey in the wilderness to offer sacrifice to the LORD, our God. <sup>19</sup>Yet I know that the king of Egypt will not allow you to go unless his hand is forced. <sup>20</sup>So I will stretch out my hand and strike Egypt with all the wondrous deeds I will do in its midst. After that he will let you go. <sup>21t</sup> I will even make the Egyptians so well-disposed toward this people that, when you go, you will not go empty-handed. <sup>22</sup>Every woman will ask her neighbor and the resident alien in her house for silver and gold articles* and for clothing, and you will put them on your sons and daughters. So you will plunder the Egyptians.

CHAPTER 4

<sup>1</sup>“But,” objected Moses, “suppose they do not believe me or listen to me? For they may say, ‘The LORD did not appear to you.’ ” <sup>2</sup>The LORD said to him: What is in your hand? “A staff,” he answered. <sup>3</sup>God said: Throw it on the ground. So he threw it on the ground and it became a snake,<sup>u</sup> and Moses backed away from it. <sup>4</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: Now stretch out your hand and take hold of its tail. So he stretched out his hand and took hold of it, and it became a staff in his hand. <sup>5</sup>That is so they will believe that the LORD, the God of their ancestors, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, did appear to you.

<sup>6</sup>Again the LORD said to him: Put your hand into the fold of your garment. So he put his hand into the fold of his garment, and when he drew it out, there was his hand covered with scales, like snowflakes. <sup>7</sup>Then God said: Put your hand back into the fold of your garment. So he put his hand back into the fold of his garment, and when he drew it out, there it was again like his own flesh. <sup>8</sup>If they do not believe you or pay attention to the message of the first sign, they should believe the message of the second sign. <sup>9</sup>And if they do not believe even these two signs and do not listen to you, take some water from the Nile and pour it on the dry land. The water you take from the Nile will become blood on the dry land.<sup>v</sup>

Aaron’s Office as Assistant. <sup>10</sup>Moses, however, said to the LORD, “If you please, my Lord, I have never been eloquent, neither in the past nor now that you have spoken to your servant; but I am slow of speech and tongue.”<sup>w</sup> <sup>11</sup>The LORD said to him: Who gives one person speech? Who makes another mute or deaf, seeing or blind? Is it not I, the LORD? <sup>12</sup>Now go, I will assist you in speaking* and teach you what you are to say. <sup>13</sup>But he said, “If you please, my Lord, send someone else!”* <sup>14</sup>Then the LORD became angry with Moses and said: I know there is your brother, Aaron the Levite, who is a good speaker; even now he is on his way to meet you. When he sees you, he will truly be glad. <sup>15</sup>You will speak to him and put the words in his mouth. I will assist both you and him in speaking and teach you both what you are to do. <sup>16</sup>He will speak to the people for you: he will be your spokesman,* and you will be as God to him.<sup>x 17</sup>Take this staff* in your hand; with it you are to perform the signs.

Moses' Return to Egypt.<sup>18</sup>After this Moses returned to Jethro* his father-in-law and said to him, "Let me return to my kindred in Egypt, to see whether they are still living." Jethro replied to Moses, "Go in peace."<sup>19</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses in Midian: Return to Egypt, for all those who sought your life are dead.<sup>20</sup>So Moses took his wife and his sons, mounted them on the donkey, and started back to the land of Egypt. Moses took the staff of God with him.<sup>21</sup>The LORD said to Moses: On your return to Egypt, see that you perform before Pharaoh all the wonders I have put in your power. But I will harden his heart* and he will not let the people go.<sup>22y</sup> So you will say to Pharaoh, Thus says the LORD: Israel is my son, my firstborn.<sup>23</sup>I said to you: Let my son go, that he may serve me. Since you refused to let him go, I will kill your son, your firstborn.<sup>z</sup>

<sup>24*</sup> On the journey, at a place where they spent the night, the LORD came upon Moses and sought to put him to death.<sup>25a</sup> But Zipporah took a piece of flint and cut off her son's foreskin and, touching his feet,* she said, "Surely you are a spouse of blood to me."<sup>26</sup>So God let Moses alone. At that time she said, "A spouse of blood," in regard to the circumcision.

<sup>27</sup>The LORD said to Aaron: Go into the wilderness to meet Moses. So he went; when meeting him at the mountain of God, he kissed him.<sup>28</sup>Moses told Aaron everything the LORD had sent him to say, and all the signs he had commanded him to do.<sup>29</sup>Then Moses and Aaron went and gathered all the elders of the Israelites.<sup>30</sup>Aaron told them everything the LORD had said to Moses, and he performed the signs before the people.<sup>31</sup>The people believed, and when they heard that the LORD had observed the Israelites and had seen their affliction,* they knelt and bowed down.

CHAPTER 5

Pharaoh's Hardness of Heart. <sup>1</sup>Afterwards, Moses and Aaron went to Pharaoh and said, "Thus says the LORD, the God of Israel: Let my people go, that they may hold a feast* for me in the wilderness." <sup>2</sup>Pharaoh answered, "Who is the LORD, that I should obey him and let Israel go? I do not know the LORD,* and I will not let Israel go." <sup>3</sup>They replied, "The God of the Hebrews has come to meet us. Let us go a three days' journey in the wilderness, that we may offer sacrifice to the LORD, our God,<sup>b</sup> so that he does not strike us with the plague or the sword." <sup>4</sup>The king of Egypt answered them, "Why, Moses and Aaron, do you make the people neglect their work? Off to your labors!" <sup>5</sup>Pharaoh continued, "Look how they are already more numerous* than the people of the land, and yet you would give them rest from their labors!"

Complaint of the Foremen. <sup>15</sup>Then the Israelite foremen came and cried out to Pharaoh:* "Why do you treat your servants in this manner? <sup>16</sup>No straw is supplied to your servants, and still we are told, 'Make bricks!' Look how your servants are beaten! It is you who are at fault." <sup>17</sup>He answered, "Lazy!

You are lazy! That is why you keep saying, ‘Let us go and offer sacrifice to the LORD.’ <sup>18</sup>Now off to work! No straw will be supplied to you, but you must supply your quota of bricks.”

<sup>19</sup>The Israelite foremen realized they were in trouble, having been told, “Do not reduce your daily amount of bricks!” <sup>20</sup>So when they left Pharaoh they assailed Moses and Aaron, who were waiting to meet them, <sup>21</sup>and said to them, “The LORD look upon you and judge! You have made us offensive to Pharaoh and his servants, putting a sword into their hands to kill us.”

Renewal of God’s Promise. <sup>22</sup>Then Moses again had recourse to the LORD and said, “LORD, why have you treated this people badly? And why did you send me? <sup>23</sup>From the time I went to Pharaoh to speak in your name, he has treated this people badly, and you have done nothing to rescue your people.”

CHAPTER 6

<sup>1</sup>The LORD answered Moses: Now you will see what I will do to Pharaoh. For by a strong hand, he will let them go; by a strong hand,* he will drive them from his land.

Confirmation of the Promise to the Ancestors.<sup>2*</sup> Then God spoke to Moses, and said to him: I am the LORD. <sup>3</sup>As God the Almighty* I appeared<sup>c</sup> to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but by my name, LORD, I did not make myself known to them. <sup>4</sup>I also established my covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan, the land in which they were residing as aliens.<sup>d</sup> <sup>5</sup>Now that I have heard the groaning of the Israelites, whom the Egyptians have reduced to slavery, I am mindful of my covenant.<sup>e</sup> <sup>6</sup>Therefore, say to the Israelites: I am the LORD. I will free you from the burdens of the Egyptians and will deliver you from their slavery. I will redeem you by my outstretched arm and with mighty acts of judgment. <sup>7</sup>I will take you as my own people, and I will be your God;<sup>f</sup> and you will know that I, the LORD, am your God who has freed you from the burdens of the Egyptians <sup>8</sup>and I will bring you into the land which I swore to give to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. I will give it to you as your own possession—I, the LORD! <sup>9</sup>But when Moses told this to the Israelites, they would not listen to him because of their dejection and hard slavery.

CHAPTER 7

See RG 136–38

<sup>1</sup>The LORD answered Moses: See! I have made you a god to Pharaoh,<sup>p</sup> and Aaron your brother will be your prophet.* <sup>2</sup>You will speak all that I command you. In turn, your brother Aaron will tell Pharaoh to let the Israelites go out of his land. <sup>3</sup>Yet I will make Pharaoh so headstrong that, despite the many signs and wonders that I work in the land of Egypt, <sup>4</sup>Pharaoh will not listen to you. Therefore I will lay my hand on Egypt and with mighty acts of judgment I will bring my armies, my people the Israelites, out of the land of Egypt. <sup>5</sup>All Egyptians will know that I am the LORD, when I stretch out my hand against Egypt and bring the Israelites out of their midst.

<sup>6</sup>This, then, is what Moses and Aaron did. They did exactly as the LORD had commanded them. <sup>7</sup>Moses was eighty years old, and Aaron eighty-three, when they spoke to Pharaoh.

III. The Contest with Pharaoh

The Staff Turned into a Serpent. <sup>8</sup>The LORD spoke to Moses and Aaron: <sup>9</sup>When Pharaoh demands of you, “Produce a sign or wonder,” you will say to Aaron: “Take your staff and throw it down before Pharaoh, and it will turn into a serpent.”<sup>q</sup> <sup>10</sup>Then Moses and Aaron went to Pharaoh and did just as the LORD had commanded. Aaron threw his staff down before Pharaoh and his servants, and it turned into a serpent. <sup>11</sup>Pharaoh, in turn, summoned the wise men and the sorcerers, and they also, the magicians<sup>r</sup> of Egypt, did the same thing by their magic arts. <sup>12</sup>Each one threw down his staff, and they turned into serpents. But Aaron’s staff swallowed their staffs. <sup>13</sup>Pharaoh, however, hardened his heart and would not listen to them, just as the LORD had foretold.

First Plague: Water Turned into Blood.* <sup>14</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: Pharaoh is obstinate* in refusing to let the people go. <sup>15</sup>In the morning, just when he sets out for the water, go to Pharaoh and present yourself by the bank of the Nile, holding in your hand the staff that turned into a snake.*

<sup>16</sup>Say to him: The LORD, the God of the Hebrews, sent me to you with the message: Let my people go to serve me in the wilderness. But as yet you have not listened. <sup>17</sup>Thus says the LORD: This is how you will know that I am the LORD. With the staff here in my hand, I will strike the water in the Nile and it will be changed into blood.<sup>s</sup> <sup>18</sup>The fish in the Nile will die, and the Nile itself will stink so that the Egyptians will be unable to drink water from the Nile.

<sup>19</sup>The LORD then spoke to Moses: Speak to Aaron: Take your staff and stretch out your hand over the waters of Egypt—its streams, its canals, its ponds, and all its supplies of water—that they may become blood. There will be blood throughout the land of Egypt, even in the wooden pails and stone jars.

<sup>20</sup>This, then, is what Moses and Aaron did, exactly as the LORD had commanded. Aaron raised his staff and struck the waters in the Nile in full view of Pharaoh and his servants, and all the water in the Nile was changed into blood. <sup>21</sup>The fish in the Nile died, and the Nile itself stank so that the Egyptians could not drink water from it. There was blood throughout the land of Egypt. <sup>22</sup>But the Egyptian magicians did the same* by their magic arts. So Pharaoh hardened his heart and would not listen to them, just as the LORD had said. <sup>23</sup>Pharaoh turned away and went into his house, with no concern even for this. <sup>24</sup>All the Egyptians had to dig round about the Nile for drinking water, since they could not drink any water from the Nile.

Second Plague: The Frogs. <sup>25</sup>Seven days passed after the LORD had struck the Nile. <sup>26</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: Go to Pharaoh and tell him:<sup>t</sup> Thus says the LORD: Let my people go to serve me. <sup>27</sup>If you refuse to let them go, then I will send a plague of frogs over all your territory. <sup>28</sup>The Nile will teem with frogs. They will come up and enter into your palace and into your bedroom and onto your bed, into the houses of your servants, too, and among your people, even into your ovens and your kneading bowls. <sup>29</sup>The frogs will come up over you and your people and all your servants.

CHAPTER 8

<sup>1</sup>The LORD then spoke to Moses: Speak to Aaron: Stretch out your hand with your staff over the streams, the canals, and the ponds, and make frogs overrun the land of Egypt. <sup>2</sup>So Aaron stretched out his hand over the waters of Egypt, and the frogs came up and covered the land of Egypt. <sup>3</sup>But the magicians did the same by their magic arts and made frogs overrun the land of Egypt.

<sup>4</sup>Then Pharaoh summoned Moses and Aaron and said, “Pray to the LORD to remove the frogs from me and my people, and I will let the people go to sacrifice to the LORD.” <sup>5</sup>Moses answered Pharaoh, “Please designate for me the time when I am to pray for you and your servants and your people, to get rid of the frogs from you and your houses. They will be left only in the Nile.” <sup>6</sup>“Tomorrow,” he said. Then Moses replied, “It will be as you have said, so that you may know that there is none like the LORD, our God. <sup>7</sup>The frogs will leave you and your houses, your servants and your people; they will be left only in the Nile.”

<sup>8</sup>After Moses and Aaron left Pharaoh’s presence, Moses cried out to the LORD on account of the frogs that he had inflicted on Pharaoh; <sup>9</sup>and the LORD did as Moses had asked. The frogs died off in the houses, the courtyards, and the fields. <sup>10</sup>Heaps of them were piled up, and the land stank. <sup>11</sup>But when Pharaoh saw there was a respite, he became obstinate and would not listen to them, just as the LORD had said.

Third Plague: The Gnats. <sup>12</sup>Thereupon the LORD spoke to Moses: Speak to Aaron: Stretch out your staff and strike the dust of the earth, and it will turn into gnats* <sup>u</sup> throughout the land of Egypt. <sup>13</sup>They did so. Aaron stretched out his hand with his staff and struck the dust of the earth, and gnats came upon human being and beast alike. All the dust of the earth turned into gnats throughout the land of Egypt. <sup>14</sup>Though the magicians did the same thing to produce gnats by their magic arts, they could not do so.<sup>v</sup> The gnats were on human being and beast alike, <sup>15</sup>and the magicians said to Pharaoh, “This is the finger of God.”* Yet Pharaoh hardened his heart and would not listen to them, just as the LORD had said.

Fourth Plague: The Flies. <sup>16</sup>Then the LORD spoke to Moses: Early tomorrow morning present yourself to Pharaoh when he sets out toward the water, and say to him: Thus says the LORD: Let my people go to serve me. <sup>17</sup>For if you do not let my people go, I will send swarms of flies upon you and your servants and your people and your houses. The houses of the Egyptians and the very ground on which they stand will be filled with swarms of flies. <sup>18</sup>But on that day I will make an exception of the land of Goshen, where my people are, and no swarms of flies will be there, so that you may know that I the LORD am in the midst of the land. <sup>19</sup>I will make a distinction* between my people and your people. This sign will take place tomorrow. <sup>20</sup>This the LORD did. Thick swarms of flies entered the house of Pharaoh and the houses of his servants; throughout Egypt the land was devastated on account of the swarms of flies.<sup>w</sup>

<sup>21</sup>Then Pharaoh summoned Moses and Aaron and said, “Go sacrifice to your God within the land.” <sup>22</sup>But Moses replied, “It is not right to do so, for what we sacrifice to the LORD, our God, is abhorrent to the Egyptians.* If we sacrifice what is abhorrent to the Egyptians before their very eyes, will they not stone us? <sup>23</sup>We must go a three days’ journey in the wilderness and sacrifice to the LORD, our God, as he commands us.” <sup>24</sup>Pharaoh said, “I will let you go to sacrifice to the LORD, your God, in the wilderness, provided that you do not go too far away. Pray for me.” <sup>25</sup>Moses answered, “As soon as I leave you I will pray to the LORD that the swarms of flies may depart tomorrow from Pharaoh, his servants, and his people. Pharaoh, however, must not act deceitfully again and refuse to let the people go to sacrifice to the LORD.” <sup>26</sup>When Moses left Pharaoh, he prayed to the LORD; <sup>27</sup>and the LORD did as Moses had asked, removing the swarms of flies from Pharaoh, his servants, and his people. Not one remained. <sup>28</sup>But once more Pharaoh became obstinate and would not let the people go.

CHAPTER 9

Fifth Plague: The Pestilence. <sup>1</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: Go to Pharaoh and tell him: Thus says the LORD, the God of the Hebrews: Let my people go to serve me. <sup>2</sup>For if you refuse to let them go and persist in holding them, <sup>3</sup>the hand of the LORD will strike your livestock in the field—your horses, donkeys, camels, herds and flocks—with a very severe pestilence. <sup>4</sup>But the LORD will distinguish between the livestock of Israel and that of Egypt, so that nothing belonging to the Israelites will die. <sup>5</sup>And the LORD set a definite time, saying: Tomorrow the LORD will do this in the land. <sup>6</sup>And on the next day the LORD did it. All the livestock of the Egyptians died,<sup>x</sup> but not one animal belonging to the Israelites died. <sup>7</sup>But although Pharaoh found upon inquiry that not even so much as one of the livestock of the Israelites had died, he remained obstinate and would not let the people go.

Sixth Plague: The Boils. <sup>8</sup>So the LORD said to Moses and Aaron: Each of you take handfuls of soot from a kiln, and in the presence of Pharaoh let Moses scatter it toward the sky. <sup>9</sup>It will turn into fine dust over the whole land of Egypt and cause festering boils* on human being and beast alike throughout the land of Egypt.

<sup>10</sup>So they took the soot from a kiln and appeared before Pharaoh. When Moses scattered it toward the sky, it caused festering boils on human being and beast alike. <sup>11</sup>Because of the boils the magicians could not stand in Moses' presence, for there were boils on the magicians as well as on the rest of the Egyptians. <sup>12</sup>But the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, and he would not listen to them, just as the LORD had said to Moses.

Seventh Plague: The Hail. <sup>13</sup>Then the LORD spoke to Moses: Early tomorrow morning present yourself to Pharaoh and say to him: Thus says the LORD, the God of the Hebrews: Let my people go to serve me, <sup>14</sup>for this time I will unleash all my blows upon you and your servants and your people, so that you may know that there is none like me anywhere on earth. <sup>15</sup>For by now I should have stretched out my hand and struck you and your people with such pestilence that you would have vanished from the earth. <sup>16</sup>But this is why I have let you survive: to show you* my power and to make my name resound throughout the earth! <sup>y</sup> <sup>17</sup>Will you continue to exalt yourself over my people and not let them go? <sup>18</sup>At this time tomorrow, therefore, I am going to rain down such fierce hail as there has never been in Egypt from the day it was founded up to the present. <sup>19</sup>Therefore, order your livestock and whatever else you have in the open fields to be brought to a place of safety. Whatever human being or animal is found in the fields and is not brought to shelter will die when the hail comes down upon them. <sup>20</sup>Those of Pharaoh's servants who feared the word of the LORD hurried their servants and their livestock off to shelter. <sup>21</sup>But those who did not pay attention to the word of the LORD left their servants and their livestock in the fields.

<sup>22</sup>The LORD then said to Moses: Stretch out your hand toward the sky, that hail may fall upon the entire land of Egypt, on human being and beast alike and all the vegetation of the fields in the land of Egypt. <sup>23</sup>So Moses stretched out his staff toward the sky, and the LORD sent forth peals of thunder and hail.<sup>2</sup> Lightning flashed toward the earth, and the LORD rained down hail upon the land of Egypt. <sup>24</sup>There was hail and lightning flashing here and there through the hail, and the hail was so fierce that nothing like it had been seen in Egypt since it became a nation. <sup>25</sup>Throughout the land of Egypt the hail struck down everything in the fields, human being and beast alike; it struck down all the vegetation of the fields and splintered every tree in the fields. <sup>26</sup>Only in the land of Goshen, where the Israelites were, was there no hail.

<sup>27</sup>Then Pharaoh sent for Moses and Aaron and said to them, "I have sinned this time! The LORD is the just one, and I and my people are the ones at fault. <sup>28</sup>Pray to the LORD! Enough of the thunder* and hail! I will let you go; you need stay no longer." <sup>29</sup>Moses replied to him, "As soon as I leave the city I will extend my hands to the LORD; the thunder will cease, and there will be no more hail so that you may know that the earth belongs to the LORD. <sup>30</sup>But as for you and your servants, I know that you do not yet fear the LORD God."

<sup>31</sup>Now the flax and the barley were ruined, because the barley was in ear and the flax in bud. <sup>32</sup>But the wheat and the spelt were not ruined, for they grow later.

<sup>33</sup>When Moses had left Pharaoh and gone out of the city, he extended his hands to the LORD. The thunder and the hail ceased, and the rain no longer poured down upon the earth. <sup>34</sup>But Pharaoh, seeing that the rain and the hail and the thunder had ceased, sinned again and became obstinate, both he and his servants. <sup>35</sup>In the hardness of his heart, Pharaoh would not let the Israelites go, just as the LORD had said through Moses.

CHAPTER 10

See RG 136–38

Eighth Plague: The Locusts. <sup>1</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: Go to Pharaoh, for I have made him and his servants obstinate in order that I may perform these signs of mine among them <sup>2</sup>and that you may recount to your son and grandson how I made a fool of the Egyptians and what signs I did among them, so that you may know that I am the LORD.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>3</sup>So Moses and Aaron went to Pharaoh and told him, “Thus says the LORD, the God of the Hebrews: How long will you refuse to submit to me? Let my people go to serve me. <sup>4</sup>For if you refuse to let my people go, tomorrow I will bring locusts into your territory. <sup>5</sup>They will cover the surface of the earth, so that the earth itself will not be visible. They will eat up the remnant you saved undamaged from the hail, as well as all the trees that are growing in your fields. <sup>6</sup>They will fill your houses and the houses of your servants and of all the Egyptians—something your parents and your grandparents have not seen from the day they appeared on this soil until today.” With that he turned and left Pharaoh.

<sup>7</sup>But Pharaoh’s servants said to him, “How long will he be a snare for us? Let the people go to serve the LORD, their God. Do you not yet realize that Egypt is being destroyed?” <sup>8</sup>So Moses and Aaron were brought back to Pharaoh, who said to them, “Go, serve the LORD, your God. But who exactly will go?” <sup>9</sup>Moses answered, “With our young and old we must go; with our sons and daughters, with our flocks and herds we must go. It is a pilgrimage feast of the LORD for us.” <sup>10</sup>“The LORD help you,”* Pharaoh replied, “if I let your little ones go with you! Clearly, you have some evil in mind. <sup>11</sup>By no means! Just you men go and serve the LORD.* After all, that is what you have been asking for.” With that they were driven from Pharaoh’s presence.

<sup>12b</sup> The LORD then said to Moses: Stretch out your hand over the land of Egypt for the locusts, that they may come upon it and eat up all the land’s vegetation, whatever the hail has left. <sup>13</sup>So Moses stretched out his staff over the land of Egypt, and the LORD drove an east wind* over the land all that day and all night. When it was morning, the east wind brought the locusts. <sup>14</sup>The locusts came up over the whole land of Egypt and settled down over all its territory. Never before had there been such a fierce swarm of locusts, nor will there ever be again. <sup>15</sup>They covered the surface of the whole land, so that it became black. They ate up all the vegetation in the land and all the fruit of the trees the hail had spared. Nothing green was left on any tree or plant in the fields throughout the land of Egypt.

<sup>16</sup>Pharaoh hurriedly summoned Moses and Aaron and said, “I have sinned against the LORD, your God, and against you. <sup>17</sup>But now, do forgive me my sin only this once, and pray to the LORD, your God, only to take this death from me.” <sup>18</sup>When Moses left Pharaoh, he prayed to the LORD, <sup>19</sup>and the LORD caused the wind to shift to a very strong west wind, which took up the locusts and hurled them into the Red Sea.* Not a single locust remained within the whole territory of Egypt. <sup>20</sup>Yet the LORD hardened Pharaoh’s heart, and he would not let the Israelites go.

Ninth Plague: The Darkness.<sup>21c</sup> Then the LORD said to Moses: Stretch out your hand toward the sky, that over the land of Egypt there may be such darkness* that one can feel it. <sup>22</sup>So Moses stretched out his hand toward the sky, and there was dense darkness throughout the land of Egypt for three days. <sup>23</sup>People could not see one another, nor could they get up from where they were, for three days. But all the Israelites had light where they lived.

<sup>24</sup>Pharaoh then summoned Moses and Aaron and said, “Go, serve the LORD. Only your flocks and herds will be detained. Even your little ones may go with you.” <sup>25</sup>But Moses replied, “You also must give us sacrifices and burnt offerings to make to the LORD, our God. <sup>26</sup>Our livestock also must go with us. Not an animal must be left behind, for some of them we will select for service* to the LORD, our God; but we will not know with which ones we are to serve the LORD until we arrive there.” <sup>27</sup>But the LORD hardened Pharaoh’s heart, and he was unwilling to let them go. <sup>28</sup>Pharaoh said to Moses, “Leave me, and see to it that you do not see my face again! For the day you do see my face you will die!” <sup>29</sup>Moses replied, “You are right! I will never see your face again.”

Tenth Plague: The Death of the Firstborn. <sup>1</sup>Then the LORD spoke to Moses: One more plague I will bring upon Pharaoh and upon Egypt. After that he will let you depart. In fact, when he finally lets you go, he will drive you away. <sup>2d</sup> Instruct the people that every man is to ask his neighbor, and every woman her neighbor, for silver and gold articles and for clothing. <sup>3</sup>The LORD indeed made the Egyptians well-disposed toward the people; Moses himself was very highly regarded by Pharaoh's servants and the people in the land of Egypt.

<sup>9</sup>The LORD said to Moses: Pharaoh will not listen to you so that my wonders may be multiplied in the land of Egypt. <sup>10</sup>Thus, although Moses and Aaron performed all these wonders in Pharaoh's presence, the LORD hardened Pharaoh's heart, and he would not let the Israelites go from his land.

CHAPTER 12

The Passover Ritual Prescribed.*<sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt: <sup>2</sup>* This month will stand at the head of your calendar; you will reckon it the first month of the year.<sup>h</sup> Tell the whole community of Israel: On the tenth of this month every family must procure for itself a lamb, one apiece for each household. <sup>4</sup>If a household is too small for a lamb, it along with its nearest neighbor will procure one, and apportion the lamb's cost* in proportion to the number of persons, according to what each household consumes. <sup>5</sup>Your lamb must be a year-old male and without blemish. You may take it from either the sheep or the goats. <sup>6</sup>You will keep it until the fourteenth day of this month, and then, with the whole community of Israel assembled, it will be slaughtered during the evening twilight. <sup>7</sup>They will take some of its blood and apply it to the two doorposts and the lintel of the houses in which they eat it. <sup>8</sup>They will consume its meat that same night, eating it roasted with unleavened bread and bitter herbs. <sup>9</sup>Do not eat any of it raw or even boiled in water, but roasted, with its head and shanks and inner organs. <sup>10</sup>You must not keep any of it beyond the morning; whatever is left over in the morning must be burned up.

<sup>11</sup>This is how you are to eat it: with your loins girt, sandals on your feet and your staff in hand, you will eat it in a hurry. It is the LORD's Passover. <sup>12</sup>For on this same night I will go through Egypt, striking down every firstborn in the land, human being and beast alike, and executing judgment on all the gods of Egypt—I, the LORD!<sup>i</sup> <sup>13</sup>But for you the blood will mark the houses where you are. Seeing the blood, I will pass over you; thereby, when I strike the land of Egypt, no destructive blow will come upon you.<sup>j</sup>

<sup>14</sup>This day will be a day of remembrance for you, which your future generations will celebrate with pilgrimage to the LORD; you will celebrate it as a statute forever. <sup>15</sup>For seven days you must eat unleavened bread. From the very first day you will have your houses clear of all leaven. For whoever eats leavened bread from the first day to the seventh will be cut off* from Israel. <sup>16</sup>On the first day you will hold a sacred assembly, and likewise on the seventh. On these days no sort of work shall be done, except to prepare the food that everyone needs. <sup>17</sup>Keep, then, the custom of the unleavened bread,<sup>k</sup>

since it was on this very day that I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt. You must observe this day throughout your generations as a statute forever. <sup>18</sup>From the evening of the fourteenth day of the first month until the evening of the twenty-first day of this month you will eat unleavened bread. <sup>19</sup>For seven days no leaven may be found in your houses; for anyone, a resident alien or a native, who eats leavened food will be cut off from the community of Israel. <sup>20</sup>You shall eat nothing leavened; wherever you dwell you may eat only unleavened bread.

Promulgation of the Passover. <sup>21</sup>Moses summoned all the elders of Israel and said to them, “Go and procure lambs for your families, and slaughter the Passover victims. <sup>22l</sup> Then take a bunch of hyssop, * and dipping it in the blood that is in the basin, apply some of this blood to the lintel and the two doorposts. And none of you shall go outdoors until morning. <sup>23</sup>For when the LORD goes by to strike down the Egyptians, seeing the blood on the lintel and the two doorposts, the LORD will pass over that door and not let the destroyer come into your houses to strike you down.

<sup>24</sup>“You will keep this practice forever as a statute for yourselves and your descendants. <sup>25</sup>Thus, when you have entered the land which the LORD will give you as he promised, you must observe this rite. <sup>26m</sup> When your children ask you, ‘What does this rite of yours mean?’ <sup>27</sup>you will reply, ‘It is the Passover sacrifice for the LORD, who passed over the houses of the Israelites in Egypt; when he struck down the Egyptians, he delivered our houses.’ ”

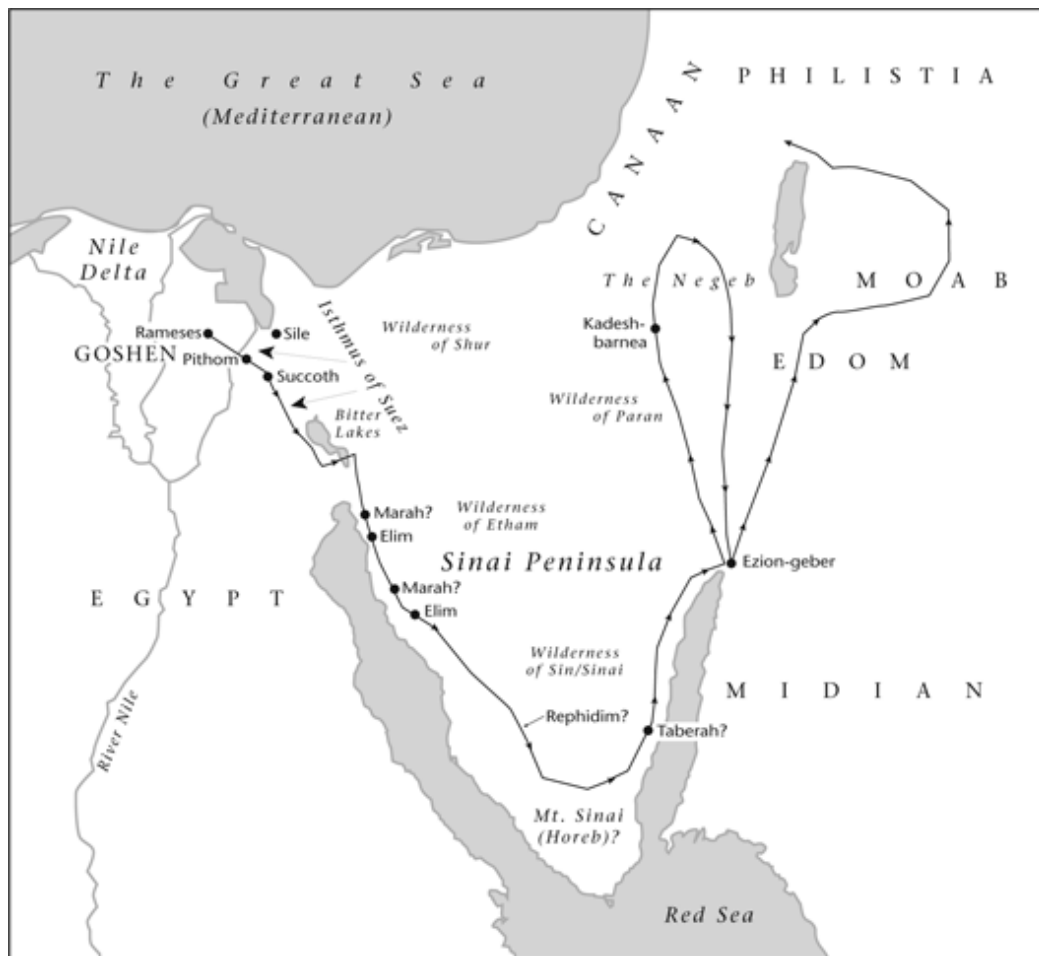

Then the people knelt and bowed down, <sup>28</sup>and the Israelites went and did exactly as the LORD had commanded Moses and Aaron.

Death of the Firstborn. <sup>29n</sup> And so at midnight the LORD struck down every firstborn in the land of Egypt, from the firstborn of Pharaoh sitting on his throne to the firstborn of the prisoner in the dungeon, as well as all the firstborn of the animals. <sup>30</sup>Pharaoh arose in the night, he and all his servants and all the Egyptians; and there was loud wailing throughout Egypt, for there was not a house without its dead.

Permission to Depart. <sup>31</sup>During the night Pharaoh summoned Moses and Aaron and said, “Leave my people at once, you and the Israelites! Go and serve the LORD as you said. <sup>32</sup>Take your flocks, too, and your herds, as you said, and go; and bless me, too!”*

The Egyptians, in a hurry to send them away from the land, urged the people on, for they said, “All of us will die!” <sup>34</sup>The people, therefore, took their dough before it was leavened, in their kneading bowls wrapped in their cloaks on their shoulders. <sup>35o</sup> And the Israelites did as Moses had commanded: they asked the Egyptians for articles of silver and gold and for clothing. <sup>36</sup>Indeed the LORD had made the Egyptians so well-disposed toward the people that they let them have whatever they asked for. And so they despoiled the Egyptians.

Probable Exodus Route according to the Bible

Law of the Passover. <sup>43</sup>The LORD said to Moses and Aaron: This is the Passover statute. No foreigner may eat of it. <sup>44</sup>However, every slave bought for money you will circumcise; then he may eat of it. <sup>45</sup>But no tenant or hired worker may eat of it. <sup>46</sup>It must be eaten in one house; you may not take any of its meat outside the house.<sup>r</sup> You shall not break any of its bones.* <sup>47</sup>The whole community of Israel must celebrate this feast. <sup>48</sup>If any alien<sup>s</sup> residing among you would celebrate the Passover for the LORD, all his males must be circumcised, and then he may join in its celebration just like the natives. But no one who is uncircumcised may eat of it. <sup>49</sup>There will be one law* for the native and for the alien residing among you.

<sup>50</sup>All the Israelites did exactly as the LORD had commanded Moses and Aaron. <sup>51</sup>On that same day the LORD brought the Israelites out of the land of Egypt company by company.

CHAPTER 13

See RG 138–41

Consecration of Firstborn. <sup>1</sup>The LORD spoke to Moses and said: <sup>2</sup>Consecrate to me every firstborn; whatever opens the womb among the Israelites, <sup>t</sup> whether of human being or beast, belongs to me.

<sup>3u</sup> Moses said to the people, “Remember this day on which you came out of Egypt, out of a house of slavery. For it was with a strong hand that the LORD brought you out from there. Nothing made with leaven may be eaten. <sup>4</sup>This day on which you are going out is in the month of Abib.* <sup>5</sup>Therefore, when the LORD, your God, has brought you into the land of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, the Perrizites, the Girgashites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which he swore to your ancestors to give you, a land flowing with milk and honey, you will perform the following service* in this month. <sup>6</sup>For seven days you will eat unleavened bread, and the seventh day will also be a festival to the LORD. <sup>7</sup>Unleavened bread may be eaten during the seven days, but nothing leavened and no leaven may be found in your possession in all your territory. <sup>8</sup>And on that day you will explain to your son, ‘This is because of what the LORD did for me when I came out of Egypt.’ <sup>9</sup>It will be like a sign* on your hand and a reminder on your forehead,<sup>v</sup> so that the teaching of the LORD will be on your lips: with a strong hand the LORD brought you out of Egypt. <sup>10</sup>You will keep this statute at its appointed time from year to year.

<sup>11</sup>“When the LORD, your God, has brought you into the land of the Canaanites, just as he swore to you and your ancestors, and gives it to you, <sup>12w</sup> you will dedicate to the LORD every newborn that opens the womb; and every firstborn male of your animals will belong to the LORD. <sup>13</sup>Every firstborn of a donkey you will ransom with a sheep. If you do not ransom it, you will break its neck. Every human firstborn of your sons you must ransom. <sup>14</sup>And when your son asks you later on, ‘What does this mean?’ you will tell him, ‘With a strong hand the LORD brought us out of Egypt, out of a house of slavery. <sup>15</sup>When Pharaoh stubbornly refused to let us go, the LORD killed every firstborn in the land of Egypt, the firstborn of human being and beast alike. That is why I sacrifice to the LORD every male that opens the womb, and why I ransom every firstborn of my sons.’ <sup>16</sup>It will be like a sign on your hand and a band on your forehead that with a strong hand the LORD brought us out of Egypt.”<sup>x</sup>

Toward the Red Sea. <sup>17</sup>Now, when Pharaoh let the people go, God did not lead them by way of the Philistines' land,* though this was the nearest; for God said: If the people see that they have to fight, they might change their minds and return to Egypt. <sup>18</sup>Instead, God rerouted them toward the Red Sea by way of the wilderness road, and the Israelites went up out of the land of Egypt arrayed for battle. <sup>19</sup>Moses also took Joseph's bones<sup>y</sup> with him, for Joseph had made the Israelites take a solemn oath, saying, "God will surely take care of you, and you must bring my bones up with you from here."

CHAPTER 14

This the Israelites did.<sup>5c</sup> When it was reported to the king of Egypt that the people had fled, Pharaoh and his servants had a change of heart about the people. “What in the world have we done!” they said. “We have released Israel from our service!” <sup>6</sup>So Pharaoh harnessed his chariots and took his army with him. <sup>7</sup>He took six hundred select chariots and all the chariots of Egypt, with officers* on all of them. <sup>8</sup>The LORD hardened the heart of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, so that he pursued the Israelites while they were going out in triumph. <sup>9</sup>The Egyptians pursued them—all Pharaoh’s horses, his chariots, his horsemen,* and his army—and caught up with them as they lay encamped by the sea, at Pi-hahiroth, in front of Baal-zephon.

Crossing the Red Sea. <sup>10</sup>Now Pharaoh was near when the Israelites looked up and saw that the Egyptians had set out after them. Greatly frightened, the Israelites cried out to the LORD. <sup>11</sup>To Moses they said, “Were there no burial places in Egypt that you brought us to die in the wilderness? What have you done to us, bringing us out of Egypt? <sup>12</sup>Did we not tell you this in Egypt, when we said, ‘Leave us alone that we may serve the Egyptians’? Far better for us to serve the Egyptians than to die in the wilderness.” <sup>13</sup>But Moses answered the people, “Do not fear! Stand your ground and see the victory the LORD will win for you today. For these Egyptians whom you see today you will never see again. <sup>14</sup>The LORD will fight for you; you have only to keep still.”

<sup>15</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: Why are you crying out to me? Tell the Israelites to set out. <sup>16</sup>And you, lift up your staff and stretch out your hand over the sea, and split it in two, that the Israelites may pass through the sea on dry land. <sup>17</sup>But I will harden the hearts of the Egyptians so that they will go in after them, and I will receive glory through Pharaoh and all his army, his chariots and his horsemen. <sup>18</sup>The Egyptians will know that I am the LORD, when I receive glory through Pharaoh, his chariots, and his horsemen.

<sup>19</sup>The angel of God, * who had been leading Israel's army, now moved and went around behind them. And the column of cloud, moving from in front of them, took up its place behind them, <sup>20</sup>so that it came between the Egyptian army and that of Israel. And when it became dark, the cloud illumined the night; and so the rival camps did not come any closer together all night long. * <sup>21d</sup> Then Moses stretched out his hand over the sea; and the LORD drove back the sea with a strong east wind all night long and turned the sea into dry ground. The waters were split, <sup>22</sup>so that the Israelites entered into the midst of the sea on dry land, with the water as a wall to their right and to their left.

Rout of the Egyptians. <sup>23</sup>The Egyptians followed in pursuit after them—all Pharaoh's horses and chariots and horsemen—into the midst of the sea. <sup>24</sup>But during the watch just before dawn, the LORD looked down from a column of fiery cloud upon the Egyptian army and threw it into a panic; <sup>25</sup>and he so clogged their chariot wheels that they could drive only with difficulty. With that the Egyptians said, "Let us flee from Israel, because the LORD is fighting for them against Egypt."

<sup>26</sup>Then the LORD spoke to Moses: Stretch out your hand over the sea, that the water may flow back upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots and their horsemen. <sup>27</sup>So Moses stretched out his hand over the sea, and at daybreak the sea returned to its normal flow. The Egyptians were fleeing head on toward it when the LORD cast the Egyptians into the midst of the sea. <sup>28e</sup> As the water flowed back, it covered the chariots and the horsemen. Of all Pharaoh's army which had followed the Israelites into the sea, not even one escaped. <sup>29</sup>But the Israelites had walked on dry land through the midst of the sea, with the water as a wall to their right and to their left. <sup>30</sup>Thus the LORD saved Israel on that day from the power of Egypt. When Israel saw the Egyptians lying dead on the seashore <sup>31</sup>and saw the great power that the LORD had shown against Egypt, the people feared the LORD. They believed in the LORD <sup>f</sup> and in Moses his servant.

CHAPTER 15

I will sing to the LORD, for he is gloriously triumphant;
horse and chariot he has cast into the sea.

<sup>2</sup>My strength and my refuge is the LORD, and he has become my savior.<sup>h</sup>
This is my God, I praise him;
the God of my father, I extol him.

LORD is his name!

<sup>4</sup>Pharaoh's chariots and army he hurled into the sea;
the elite of his officers were drowned in the Red Sea.*

<sup>5</sup>The flood waters covered them, they sank into the depths like a stone.<sup>i</sup>

power,
your right hand, O LORD, shattered the enemy.

<sup>7</sup>In your great majesty you overthrew your adversaries;
you loosed your wrath to consume them like stubble.

<sup>8</sup>At the blast of your nostrils the waters piled up,
the flowing waters stood like a mound, the flood waters foamed in the midst of the sea.

<sup>9</sup>The enemy boasted, "I will pursue and overtake them;
I will divide the spoils and have my fill of them;
I will draw my sword; my hand will despoil them!"

10 When you blew with your breath, the sea covered them;
like lead they sank in the mighty waters.

11 Who is like you among the gods,
O LORD?
Who is like you, magnificent among the holy ones?
Awe-inspiring in deeds of renown,
worker of wonders,

12 when you stretched out your right hand, the earth swallowed them!

13 In your love * you led the people you redeemed;
in your strength you guided them to your holy dwelling.

14 The peoples heard and quaked; anguish gripped the dwellers in Philistia.

15 Then were the chieftains of Edom dismayed, the nobles of Moab seized by trembling;
All the inhabitants of Canaan melted away;

16<sup>j</sup> terror and dread fell upon them.
By the might of your arm they became silent like stone, while your people, LORD, passed over, while the people whom you created passed over. *

17 You brought them in, you planted them on the mountain that is your own—
The place you made the base of your throne, LORD, the sanctuary, LORD, your hands established.

18 May the LORD reign forever and ever!

19 When Pharaoh's horses and chariots and horsemen entered the sea, the LORD made the waters of the sea flow back upon them, though the Israelites walked on dry land through the midst of the sea.<sup>k</sup> 20 Then the prophet Miriam,

Aaron's sister, took a tambourine in her hand, while all the women went out after her with tambourines, dancing; <sup>21</sup>and she responded* to them:

Sing to the LORD, for he is gloriously triumphant;
horse and chariot he has cast into the

V. The Journey in the Wilderness to Sinai

At Marah and Elim.<sup>22m</sup> Then Moses led Israel forward from the Red Sea,* and they marched out to the wilderness of Shur. After traveling for three days through the wilderness without finding water, <sup>23</sup>they arrived at Marah, where they could not drink its water, because it was too bitter. Hence this place was called Marah. <sup>24</sup>As the people grumbled against Moses, saying, "What are we to drink?" <sup>25</sup>he cried out to the LORD, who pointed out to him a piece of wood. When he threw it into the water, the water became fresh.<sup>n</sup>

It was here that God, in making statutes and ordinances for them, put them to the test. <sup>26</sup>He said: If you listen closely to the voice of the LORD, your God, and do what is right in his eyes: if you heed his commandments and keep all his statutes, I will not afflict you with any of the diseases with which I afflicted the Egyptians;<sup>o</sup> for I, the LORD, am your healer.

<sup>27</sup>Then they came to Elim, where there were twelve springs of water and seventy palm trees, and they camped there near the water.<sup>p</sup>

CHAPTER 16

See RG 138–41

The Wilderness of Sin.<sup>1</sup>Having set out from Elim, the whole Israelite community came into the wilderness of Sin, which is between Elim and Sinai, on the fifteenth day of the second month* after their departure from the land of Egypt. <sup>2</sup>Here in the wilderness the whole Israelite community grumbled against Moses and Aaron. <sup>3</sup>The Israelites said to them, “If only we had died at the LORD’S hand in the land of Egypt, as we sat by our kettles of meat and ate our fill of bread! But you have led us into this wilderness to make this whole assembly die of famine!”

The Quail and the Manna. <sup>4</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses:<sup>q</sup> I am going to rain down bread from heaven* for you. Each day the people are to go out and gather their daily portion; thus will I test them, to see whether they follow my instructions or not. <sup>5</sup>On the sixth day, however, when they prepare what they bring in, let it be twice as much as they gather on the other days. <sup>6</sup>So Moses and Aaron told all the Israelites,<sup>r</sup> “At evening you will know that it was the LORD who brought you out of the land of Egypt; <sup>7</sup>and in the morning you will see the glory of the LORD, when he hears your grumbling against him. But who are we that you should grumble against us?” <sup>8</sup>And Moses said, “When the LORD gives you meat to eat in the evening and in the morning your fill of bread, and hears the grumbling you utter against him, who then are we? Your grumbling is not against us, but against the LORD.”

<sup>9</sup>Then Moses said to Aaron, “Tell the whole Israelite community: Approach the LORD, for he has heard your grumbling.” <sup>10</sup>But while Aaron was speaking to the whole Israelite community, they turned in the direction of the wilderness, and there the glory of the LORD appeared in the cloud! <sup>11</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>12</sup>I have heard the grumbling of the Israelites. Tell them: In the evening twilight you will eat meat, and in the morning you will have your fill of bread, and then you will know that I, the LORD, am your God.

<sup>13</sup>In the evening, quail<sup>s</sup> came up and covered the camp. In the morning there was a layer of dew all about the camp, <sup>14</sup>and when the layer of dew evaporated, fine flakes were on the surface of the wilderness, fine flakes like hoarfrost on the ground. <sup>15</sup>On seeing it, the Israelites asked one another,

“What is this?”* for they did not know what it was. But Moses told them, “It is the bread which the LORD has given you to eat.”<sup>t</sup>

Regulations Regarding the Manna.<sup>16</sup>“Now, this is what the LORD has commanded. Gather as much of it as each needs to eat, an omer* for each person for as many of you as there are, each of you providing for those in your own tent.”<sup>17</sup>The Israelites did so. Some gathered a large and some a small amount.<sup>18*</sup> But when they measured it out by the omer, the one who had gathered a large amount did not have too much, and the one who had gathered a small amount did not have too little. They gathered as much as each needed to eat.<sup>19</sup>Moses said to them, “Let no one leave any of it over until morning.”<sup>20</sup>But they did not listen to Moses, and some kept a part of it over until morning, and it became wormy and stank. Therefore Moses was angry with them.

<sup>21</sup>Morning after morning they gathered it, as much as each needed to eat; but when the sun grew hot, it melted away.<sup>22</sup>On the sixth day they gathered twice as much food, two omers for each person. When all the leaders of the community came and reported this to Moses,<sup>23</sup>he told them, “That is what the LORD has prescribed. Tomorrow is a day of rest, a holy sabbath of the LORD. Whatever you want to bake, bake; whatever you want to boil, boil; but whatever is left put away and keep until the morning.”<sup>24</sup>When they put it away until the morning, as Moses commanded, it did not stink nor were there worms in it.<sup>25</sup>Moses then said, “Eat it today, for today is the sabbath of the LORD. Today you will not find any in the field.”<sup>26</sup>Six days you will gather it, but on the seventh day, the sabbath, it will not be there.”<sup>27</sup>Still, on the seventh day some of the people went out to gather it, but they did not find any.<sup>28</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: How long will you refuse to keep my commandments and my instructions?<sup>29</sup>Take note! The LORD has given you the sabbath. That is why on the sixth day he gives you food for two days. Each of you stay where you are and let no one go out on the seventh day.<sup>30</sup>After that the people rested on the seventh day.

<sup>32</sup>Moses said, “This is what the LORD has commanded. Keep a full omer of it for your future generations, so that they may see the food I gave you to eat in the wilderness when I brought you out of the land of Egypt.”<sup>33</sup>Moses then told Aaron, “Take a jar* and put a full omer of manna in it. Then place it before the LORD to keep it for your future generations.” <sup>34</sup>As the LORD had commanded Moses, Aaron placed it in front of the covenant* to keep it.

CHAPTER 17

Water from the Rock. <sup>1</sup>From the wilderness of Sin the whole Israelite community journeyed by stages, as the LORD directed, and encamped at Rephidim.<sup>w</sup>

But there was no water for the people to drink, <sup>2x</sup> and so they quarreled with Moses and said, “Give us water to drink.” Moses replied to them, “Why do you quarrel with me? Why do you put the LORD to a test?” <sup>3</sup>Here, then, in their thirst for water, the people grumbled against Moses, saying, “Why then did you bring us up out of Egypt? To have us die of thirst with our children and our livestock?” <sup>4</sup>So Moses cried out to the LORD, “What shall I do with this people? A little more and they will stone me!” <sup>5</sup>The LORD answered Moses: Go on ahead of the people, and take along with you some of the elders of Israel, holding in your hand, as you go, the staff with which you struck the Nile. <sup>6</sup>I will be standing there in front of you on the rock in Horeb. Strike the rock, and the water will flow from it for the people to drink.<sup>y</sup> Moses did this, in the sight of the elders of Israel. <sup>7</sup>The place was named Massah and Meribah,* because the Israelites quarreled there and tested the LORD, saying, “Is the LORD in our midst or not?”<sup>z</sup>

Battle with Amalek. <sup>8</sup>Then Amalek* came and waged war against Israel in Rephidim.<sup>a</sup> <sup>9</sup>So Moses said to Joshua, “Choose some men for us, and tomorrow go out and engage Amalek in battle. I will be standing on top of the hill with the staff of God in my hand.” <sup>10</sup>Joshua did as Moses told him: he engaged Amalek in battle while Moses, Aaron, and Hur climbed to the top of the hill. <sup>11</sup>As long as Moses kept his hands raised up, Israel had the better of the fight, but when he let his hands rest, Amalek had the better of the fight. <sup>12</sup>Moses’ hands, however, grew tired; so they took a rock and put it under him and he sat on it. Meanwhile Aaron and Hur supported his hands, one on one side and one on the other, so that his hands remained steady until sunset. <sup>13</sup>And Joshua defeated Amalek and his people with the sword.

<sup>14</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: Write this down in a book as something to be remembered, and recite it to Joshua:<sup>b</sup> I will completely blot out the memory of Amalek from under the heavens. <sup>15</sup>Moses built an altar there, which he named Yahweh-nissi;* <sup>16</sup>for he said, “Take up the banner of the LORD!* The LORD has a war against Amalek through the ages.”

CHAPTER 18

See RG 138–41

Meeting with Jethro. <sup>1</sup>Now Moses' father-in-law Jethro, the priest of Midian, heard of all that God had done for Moses and for his people Israel: how the LORD had brought Israel out of Egypt. <sup>2</sup>So his father-in-law Jethro took along Zipporah, Moses' wife—now this was after Moses had sent her back—* <sup>3</sup>and her two sons. One of these was named Gershom;<sup>c</sup> for he said, "I am a resident alien in a foreign land." <sup>4</sup>The other was named Eliezer; for he said, "The God of my father is my help; he has rescued me from Pharaoh's sword." <sup>5</sup>Together with Moses' wife and sons, then, his father-in-law Jethro came to him in the wilderness where he was encamped at the mountain of God,* <sup>6</sup> and he sent word to Moses, "I, your father-in-law Jethro, am coming to you, along with your wife and her two sons."

<sup>7</sup>Moses went out to meet his father-in-law, bowed down, and then kissed him. Having greeted each other, they went into the tent. <sup>8</sup>Moses then told his father-in-law of all that the LORD had done to Pharaoh and the Egyptians for the sake of Israel, and of all the hardships that had beset them on their journey, and how the LORD had rescued them. <sup>9</sup>Jethro rejoiced over all the goodness that the LORD had shown Israel in rescuing them from the power of the Egyptians. <sup>10</sup>"Blessed be the LORD," he said, "who has rescued you from the power of the Egyptians and of Pharaoh. <sup>11</sup>Now I know that the LORD is greater than all the gods; for he rescued the people from the power of the Egyptians when they treated them arrogantly." <sup>12</sup>Then Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, brought a burnt offering* and sacrifices for God, and Aaron came with all the elders of Israel to share with Moses' father-in-law in the meal before God.

Appointment of Minor Judges. <sup>13</sup>The next day Moses sat in judgment for the people, while they stood around him from morning until evening. <sup>14</sup>When Moses' father-in-law saw all that he was doing for the people, he asked, "What is this business that you are conducting for the people? Why do you sit alone while all the people have to stand about you from morning till evening?" <sup>15</sup>Moses answered his father-in-law, "The people come to me to consult God. <sup>16</sup>When-ever they have a disagreement, they come to me to have me settle the matter between them and make known to them God's statutes and instructions."

<sup>17</sup>“What you are doing is not wise,” Moses’ father-in-law replied. <sup>18</sup>“You will surely wear yourself out, both you and these people with you. The task is too heavy for you;<sup>d</sup> you cannot do it alone. <sup>19*</sup> Now, listen to me, and I will give you some advice, and may God be with you. Act as the people’s representative before God, and bring their disputes to God. <sup>20</sup>Enlighten them in regard to the statutes and instructions, showing them how they are to conduct themselves and what they are to do. <sup>21</sup>But you should also look among all the people for able and God-fearing men, trustworthy men who hate dishonest gain, and set them over the people as commanders of thousands, of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens.<sup>e</sup> <sup>22</sup>Let these render decisions for the people in all routine cases. Every important case they should refer to you, but every lesser case they can settle themselves. Lighten your burden by letting them bear it with you! <sup>23</sup>If you do this, and God so commands you,* you will be able to stand the strain, and all these people, too, will go home content.”

<sup>24</sup>Moses listened to his father-in-law and did all that he had said. <sup>25</sup>He picked out able men from all Israel and put them in charge of the people as commanders of thousands, of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens. <sup>26</sup>They rendered decisions for the people in all routine cases. The more difficult cases they referred to Moses, but all the lesser cases they settled themselves. <sup>27</sup>Then Moses said farewell to his father-in-law, who went off to his own country.

CHAPTER 19

Arrival at Sinai.<sup>1f</sup> In the third month after the Israelites' departure from the land of Egypt, on the first day, they came to the wilderness of Sinai. <sup>2</sup>After they made the journey from Rephidim and entered the wilderness of Sinai, they then pitched camp in the wilderness.*

While Israel was encamped there in front of the mountain, <sup>3</sup>Moses went up to the mountain of God. Then the LORD called to him from the mountain, saying: This is what you will say to the house of Jacob; tell the Israelites: <sup>4</sup>You have seen how I treated the Egyptians and how I bore you up on eagles' wings and brought you to myself.<sup>g</sup> <sup>5</sup>Now, if you obey me completely and keep my covenant,* you will be my treasured possession among all peoples,<sup>h</sup> though all the earth is mine. <sup>6</sup>You will be to me a kingdom of priests,* a holy nation.<sup>i</sup> That is what you must tell the Israelites. <sup>7</sup>So Moses went and summoned the elders of the people. When he set before them all that the LORD had ordered him to tell them, <sup>8</sup>all the people answered together, "Everything the LORD has said, we will do." Then Moses brought back to the LORD the response of the people.

<sup>9</sup>The LORD said to Moses: I am coming to you now in a dense cloud,<sup>j</sup> so that when the people hear me speaking with you, they will also remain faithful to you.

When Moses, then, had reported the response of the people to the LORD, <sup>10</sup>the LORD said to Moses: Go to the people and have them sanctify themselves today and tomorrow. Have them wash their garments <sup>11</sup>and be ready for the third day; for on the third day the LORD will come down on Mount Sinai in the sight of all the people. <sup>12</sup>Set limits for the people all around,<sup>k</sup> saying: Take care not to go up the mountain, or even to touch its edge. All who touch the mountain must be put to death. <sup>13</sup>No hand shall touch them, but they must be stoned to death or killed with arrows. Whether human being or beast, they must not be allowed to live. Only when the ram's horn sounds may they go up on the mountain.* <sup>14</sup> Then Moses came down from the mountain to the people and had them sanctify themselves, and they washed their garments. <sup>15</sup>He said to the people, "Be ready for the third day. Do not approach a woman."

The Great Theophany.<sup>16</sup> On the morning of the third day there were peals of thunder and lightning, and a heavy cloud over the mountain, and a very loud blast of the shofar,* so that all the people in the camp trembled.<sup>17</sup> But Moses led the people out of the camp to meet God, and they stationed themselves at the foot of the mountain.<sup>18</sup> Now Mount Sinai was completely enveloped in smoke, because the LORD had come down upon it in fire. The smoke rose from it as though from a kiln, and the whole mountain trembled violently.<sup>19</sup> The blast of the shofar grew louder and louder, while Moses was speaking and God was answering him with thunder.

<sup>20*</sup> When the LORD came down upon Mount Sinai, to the top of the mountain, the LORD summoned Moses to the top of the mountain, and Moses went up.<sup>21</sup> Then the LORD told Moses: Go down and warn the people not to break through to the LORD in order to see him; otherwise many of them will be struck down.<sup>22</sup> For their part, the priests, who approach the LORD must sanctify themselves; else the LORD will break out in anger against them.<sup>23</sup> But Moses said to the LORD, "The people cannot go up to Mount Sinai, for you yourself warned us, saying: Set limits around the mountain to make it sacred."<sup>24</sup> So the LORD said to him: Go down and come up along with Aaron. But do not let the priests and the people break through to come up to the LORD; else he will break out against them."<sup>25</sup> So Moses went down to the people and spoke to them.

CHAPTER 20

The Ten Commandments. * <sup>1</sup>Then God spoke all these words:

<sup>7</sup>You shall not invoke the name of the LORD, your God, in vain. * <sup>q</sup> For the LORD will not leave unpunished anyone who invokes his name in vain.

<sup>8</sup>Remember the sabbath day—keep it holy. * <sup>9</sup>Six days you may labor and do all your work, <sup>10</sup>but the seventh day is a sabbath of the LORD your God.<sup>r</sup> You shall not do any work, either you, your son or your daughter, your male or female slave, your work animal, or the resident alien within your gates. <sup>11</sup>For in six days the LORD made the heavens and the earth, the sea and all that is in them; but on the seventh day he rested.<sup>s</sup> That is why the LORD has blessed the sabbath day and made it holy. *

<sup>12*t</sup> Honor your father and your mother, that you may have a long life in the land the LORD your God is giving you.<sup>u</sup>

<sup>17</sup>You shall not covet your neighbor's house. You shall not covet your neighbor's wife, his male or female slave, his ox or donkey, or anything that belongs to your neighbor.<sup>z</sup>

Moses Accepted as Mediator. <sup>18</sup>Now as all the people witnessed the thunder and lightning, the blast of the shofar and the mountain smoking, they became afraid and trembled.<sup>a</sup> So they took up a position farther away <sup>19</sup>and said to Moses, “You speak to us, and we will listen; but do not let God speak to us, or we shall die.” <sup>20</sup>Moses answered the people, “Do not be afraid, for God has come only to test you and put the fear of him upon you so you do not sin.” <sup>21</sup>So the people remained at a distance, while Moses approached the dark cloud where God was.

The Covenant Code.<sup>22*</sup> The LORD said to Moses: This is what you will say to the Israelites: You have seen for yourselves that I have spoken to you from heaven. <sup>23</sup>You shall not make alongside of me gods of silver, nor shall you make for yourselves gods of gold.<sup>b</sup> <sup>24</sup>An altar of earth make for me, and sacrifice upon it your burnt offerings and communion sacrifices, your sheep and your oxen.<sup>c</sup> In every place where I cause my name to be invoked* I will come to you and bless you. <sup>25</sup>But if you make an altar of stone for me,<sup>d</sup> do not build it of cut stone, for by putting a chisel to it you profane it. <sup>26</sup>You shall not ascend to my altar by steps, lest your nakedness be exposed.

CHAPTER 21

Laws Regarding Slaves. <sup>1</sup>These are the ordinances* you shall lay before them. <sup>2e</sup> When you purchase a Hebrew slave,* he is to serve you for six years, but in the seventh year he shall leave as a free person without any payment. <sup>3</sup>If he comes into service alone, he shall leave alone; if he comes with a wife, his wife shall leave with him. <sup>4</sup>But if his master gives him a wife and she bears him sons or daughters, the woman and her children belong to her master and the man shall leave alone. <sup>5</sup>If, however, the slave declares, ‘I love my master and my wife and children; I will not leave as a free person,’ <sup>6</sup>his master shall bring him to God* and there, at the door or doorpost, he shall pierce his ear with an awl, thus keeping him as his slave forever.

<sup>7</sup>When a man sells his daughter as a slave, she shall not go free as male slaves do. <sup>8</sup>But if she displeases her master, who had designated her* for himself, he shall let her be redeemed. He has no right to sell her to a foreign people, since he has broken faith with her. <sup>9</sup>If he designates her for his son, he shall treat her according to the ordinance for daughters. <sup>10</sup>If he takes another wife, he shall not withhold her food, her clothing, or her conjugal rights. <sup>11</sup>If he does not do these three things for her, she may leave without cost, without any payment.

Personal Injury. <sup>12*</sup> Whoever strikes someone a mortal blow must be put to death.<sup>f</sup> <sup>13</sup>However, regarding the one who did not hunt another down, but God caused death to happen by his hand, I will set apart for you a place to which that one may flee. <sup>14</sup>But when someone kills a neighbor after maliciously scheming to do so, you must take him even from my altar and put him to death. <sup>15</sup>Whoever strikes father or mother shall be put to death.*

<sup>18</sup>When men quarrel and one strikes the other with a stone or with his fist, not mortally, but enough to put him in bed, <sup>19</sup>the one who struck the blow shall be acquitted, provided the other can get up and walk around with the help of his staff. Still, he must compensate him for his recovery time and make provision for his complete healing.

<sup>20</sup>When someone strikes his male or female slave with a rod so that the slave dies under his hand, the act shall certainly be avenged. <sup>21</sup>If, however, the slave survives for a day or two, he is not to be punished, since the slave is his own property.

<sup>22*</sup> When men have a fight and hurt a pregnant woman, so that she suffers a miscarriage, but no further injury, the guilty one shall be fined as much as the woman's husband demands of him, and he shall pay in the presence of the judges. <sup>23i</sup> But if injury ensues, you shall give life for life, <sup>24</sup>eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, <sup>25</sup>burn for burn, wound for wound, stripe for stripe.

<sup>26</sup>When someone strikes his male or female slave in the eye and destroys the use of the eye, he shall let the slave go free in compensation for the eye. <sup>27</sup>If he knocks out a tooth of his male or female slave, he shall let the slave go free in compensation for the tooth.

<sup>28</sup>When an ox gores a man or a woman to death, the ox must be stoned; its meat may not be eaten. The owner of the ox, however, shall be free of blame. <sup>29</sup>But if an ox was previously in the habit of goring people and its owner, though warned, would not watch it; should it then kill a man or a woman, not only must the ox be stoned, but its owner also must be put to death. <sup>30</sup>If, however, a fine is imposed on him, he must pay in ransom* for his life whatever amount is imposed on him. <sup>31</sup>This ordinance applies if it is a boy or a girl that the ox gores. <sup>32</sup>But if it is a male or a female slave that it gores, he must pay the owner of the slave thirty shekels of silver, and the ox must be stoned.

Property Damage. <sup>33</sup>When someone uncovers or digs a cistern and does not cover it over again, should an ox or a donkey fall into it, <sup>34</sup>the owner of the cistern must make good by restoring the value of the animal to its owner, but the dead animal he may keep.

<sup>35</sup>When one man's ox hurts another's ox and it dies, they shall sell the live ox and divide this money as well as the dead animal equally between them. <sup>36</sup>But if it was known that the ox was previously in the habit of goring and its owner would not watch it, he must make full restitution, an ox for an ox; but the dead animal he may keep.

<sup>37</sup>When someone steals an ox or a sheep and slaughters or sells it, he shall restore five oxen for the one ox, and four sheep for the one sheep.<sup>j</sup>

CHAPTER 22

<sup>4</sup>When someone causes a field or a vineyard to be grazed over, by sending his cattle to graze in another's field, he must make restitution with the best produce of his own field or vineyard. <sup>5</sup>If a fire breaks out, catches on to thorn bushes, and consumes shocked grain, standing grain, or the field itself, the one who started the fire must make full restitution.

Trusts and Loans. <sup>6</sup>When someone gives money or articles to another for safekeeping and they are stolen from the latter's house, the thief, if caught, must make twofold restitution. <sup>7</sup>If the thief is not caught, the owner of the house shall be brought to God,* to swear that he himself did not lay hands on his neighbor's property. <sup>8</sup>In every case of dishonest appropriation, whether it be about an ox, or a donkey, or a sheep, or a garment, or anything else that has disappeared, where another claims that the thing is his, the claim of both parties shall be brought before God; the one whom God convicts must make twofold restitution to the other.

<sup>9</sup>When someone gives an ass, or an ox, or a sheep, or any other animal to another for safekeeping, if it dies, or is maimed or snatched away, without anyone witnessing the fact, <sup>10</sup>there shall be an oath before the LORD between the two of them that the guardian did not lay hands on his neighbor's property; the owner must accept the oath, and no restitution is to be made. <sup>11</sup>But if the guardian has actually stolen from it, then he must make restitution to the owner. <sup>12</sup>If it has been killed by a wild beast, let him bring it as evidence; he need not make restitution for the mangled animal.<sup>k</sup>

<sup>13</sup>When someone borrows an animal from a neighbor, if it is maimed or dies while the owner is not present, that one must make restitution. <sup>14</sup>But if the owner is present, that one need not make restitution. If it was hired, this was covered by the price of its hire.

<sup>28</sup>You shall not delay the offering of your harvest and your press. You shall give me the firstborn of your sons. <sup>29</sup>You must do the same with your oxen and your sheep; for seven days the firstling may stay with its mother, but on the eighth day you must give it to me.<sup>t</sup>

<sup>30</sup>You shall be a people sacred to me. Flesh torn to pieces in the field you shall not eat; you must throw it to the dogs.<sup>u</sup>

CHAPTER 23

<sup>4</sup>When you come upon your enemy's ox or donkey going astray, you must see to it that it is returned.<sup>x</sup> <sup>5</sup>When you notice the donkey of one who hates you lying down under its burden, you should not desert him; you must help him with it.

<sup>6</sup>You shall not pervert justice for the needy among you in a lawsuit. <sup>7</sup>You shall keep away from anything dishonest. The innocent and the just you shall not put to death, for I will not acquit the guilty. <sup>8</sup>Never take a bribe, for a bribe blinds the clearsighted and distorts the words of the just.<sup>y</sup> <sup>9</sup>You shall not oppress a resident alien; you well know how it feels to be an alien, since you were once aliens yourselves in the land of Egypt.<sup>z</sup>

Religious Laws.<sup>10a</sup> For six years you may sow your land and gather in its produce. <sup>11</sup>But the seventh year you shall let the land lie untilled and fallow, that the poor of your people may eat of it and their leftovers the wild animals may eat. So also shall you do in regard to your vineyard and your olive grove.

<sup>12</sup>For six days you may do your work, but on the seventh day you must rest,<sup>b</sup> that your ox and your donkey may have rest, and that the son of your maidservant and the resident alien may be refreshed. <sup>13</sup>Give heed to all that I have told you.

You shall not mention the name of any other god; it shall not be heard from your lips.

<sup>14c</sup> Three times a year you shall celebrate a pilgrim feast to me.<sup>*15</sup> You shall keep the feast of Unleavened Bread. As I have commanded you, you must eat unleavened bread for seven days at the appointed time in the month of Abib, for it was then that you came out of Egypt. No one shall appear before me* empty-handed. <sup>16</sup>You shall also keep the feast of the grain harvest with the first fruits of the crop that you sow in the field; and finally, the feast of Ingathering at the end of the year, when you collect your produce from the fields. <sup>17</sup>Three times a year shall all your men appear before the LORD God.

<sup>18</sup>You shall not offer the blood of my sacrifice with anything leavened;<sup>d</sup> nor shall the fat of my feast be kept overnight till the next day. <sup>19</sup>The choicest first fruits of your soil you shall bring to the house of the LORD, your God.

You shall not boil a young goat in its mother's milk.*

Reward of Fidelity. <sup>20</sup>See, I am sending an angel<sup>e</sup> before you, to guard you on the way and bring you to the place I have prepared. <sup>21</sup>Be attentive to him and obey him. Do not rebel against him, for he will not forgive your sin. My authority is within him.* <sup>22</sup>If you obey him and carry out all I tell you, I will be an enemy to your enemies and a foe to your foes.

<sup>23</sup>My angel will go before you and bring you to the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Canaanites, Hivites and Jebusites; and I will wipe them out. <sup>24</sup>Therefore, you shall not bow down to their gods and serve them, nor shall you act as they do; rather, you must demolish them and smash their sacred stones.* <sup>f</sup> <sup>25</sup>You shall serve the LORD, your God; then he will bless your food and drink, and I will remove sickness from your midst; <sup>26</sup>no woman in your land will be barren or miscarry; and I will give you a full span of life.

<sup>27</sup>I will have the terror of me precede you, so that I will throw into panic every nation you reach.<sup>g</sup> I will make all your enemies turn from you in flight, <sup>28</sup>and ahead of you I will send hornets* to drive the Hivites, Canaanites and Hittites out of your way. <sup>29</sup>But I will not drive them all out before you in one year, lest the land become desolate and the wild animals multiply against you. <sup>30</sup>Little by little I will drive them out before you, until you have grown numerous enough to take possession of the land. <sup>31h</sup> I will set your boundaries from the Red Sea to the sea of the Philistines,* and from the wilderness to the Euphrates; all who dwell in this land I will hand over to you and you shall drive them out before you. <sup>32</sup>You shall not make a covenant with them or their gods. <sup>33</sup>They must not live in your land. For if you serve their gods, this will become a snare to you.<sup>i</sup>

CHAPTER 24

Ratification of the Covenant.<sup>1</sup>Moses himself was told: Come up to the LORD, you and Aaron, with Nadab, Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel. You shall bow down at a distance. <sup>2</sup>Moses alone is to come close to the LORD; the others shall not come close, and the people shall not come up with them.

<sup>3</sup>When Moses came to the people and related all the words and ordinances of the LORD, they all answered with one voice, “We will do everything that the LORD has told us.”<sup>j</sup> <sup>4</sup>Moses then wrote down all the words of the LORD and, rising early in the morning, he built at the foot of the mountain an altar and twelve sacred stones* for the twelve tribes of Israel. <sup>5k</sup> Then, having sent young men of the Israelites to offer burnt offerings and sacrifice young bulls as communion offerings to the LORD, <sup>6</sup>Moses took half of the blood and put it in large bowls; the other half he splashed on the altar. <sup>7</sup>Taking the book of the covenant, he read it aloud to the people, who answered, “All that the LORD has said, we will hear and do.” <sup>8</sup>Then he took the blood and splashed it on the people, saying, “This is the blood of the covenant which the LORD has made with you according to all these words.”

Calendar

THE YEAR WAS COMPOSED of twelve lunar months (beginning on the day of the new moon), with an intercalary month added periodically (see perhaps 1 Kgs 12:33). In some traditions, and perhaps originally, the year began in the fall, at the autumnal equinox (see Ex 23:16; 34:22). In others, following Babylonian practice, the new year was celebrated in the spring. The fall new year became standard in postbiblical Judaism.

Months in the Bible are usually identified by ordinal numbers, beginning with the spring new year. Some months (in boldface in the following list) are also designated with names derived either from a Canaanite calendar or, in postexilic texts, from a Babylonian one; the names of months not found in the Bible are known from other ancient sources.

	Canaanite Name	Babylonian/Aramaic Name	Modern Equivalent
First	Abib	Nisan	March–April
Second	Ziv	Iyar	April–May
Third		Sivan	May–June
Fourth		Tammuz	June–July
Fifth		Av	July–August
Sixth		Elul	August–September
Seventh	Ethanim	Tishri	September–October
Eighth	Bul	Marheshvan	October–November
Ninth		Chislev	November–December
Tenth		Tebeth	December–January
Eleventh		Shebat	January–February
Twelfth		Adar	February–March

The Jewish calendar is based on the lunar month, which is a bit longer than 29½ days, so Jewish lunar months are 29 or 30 days long. Twelve lunar months usually amount to 354 days, 11 days short of a solar year. In order for the festivals to stay in the correct season in relation to the solar year, an extra month is added every few years. Following ancient Babylonian models, the calendar runs on a 19-year cycle: years 3, 6, 8, 11, 14, 17, and 19 of the cycle are intercalated or “leap” years, containing an extra month of Adar, sometimes called Adar Sheni (second Adar). Adar was chosen for intercalation because it is the last month of the Babylonian year and of the biblical year beginning in Nisan (an alternate calendar, the one now in use, begins the year in Tishri with Rosh Ha-Shanah). The next 19-year intercalation cycle began in 5768 (2007–2008 A.D.).

Observances fall within the calendar as follows:

Rosh Ha-Shanah (the New Year)	1–2 Tishri
Yom Kippur (the Day of Atonement)	10 Tishri
Succoth (Booths) begins	15 Tishri
Hanukkah begins	25 Chislev
Purim	14 Adar (15 Adar in Jerusalem and other ancient walled cites)
Passover begins	15 Nisan
Shavuot (Weeks) begins	6 Sivan
Tish‘ah be’av	9 Ab

<sup>9</sup>Moses then went up with Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and seventy elders of Israel, <sup>10</sup>and they beheld the God of Israel. Under his feet there appeared to be sapphire tilework, as clear as the sky itself. <sup>11</sup>Yet he did not lay a hand on these chosen Israelites. They saw God, * and they ate and drank.

Moses on the Mountain.<sup>12</sup>The LORD said to Moses: Come up to me on the mountain and, while you are there, I will give you the stone tablets<sup>l</sup> on which I have written the commandments intended for their instruction. <sup>13</sup>So Moses set out with Joshua, his assistant, and went up to the mountain of God. <sup>14</sup>He told the elders, “Wait here for us until we return to you. Aaron and Hur are with you. Anyone with a complaint should approach them.” <sup>15</sup>Moses went up the mountain. Then the cloud covered the mountain. <sup>16</sup>The glory of the LORD settled upon Mount Sinai. The cloud covered it for six days, and on the seventh day he called to Moses from the midst of the cloud.<sup>m</sup> <sup>17</sup>To the Israelites the glory of the LORD was seen as a consuming fire on the top of the mountain.<sup>n</sup> <sup>18</sup>But Moses entered into the midst of the cloud and went up on the mountain. He was on the mountain for forty days and forty nights.<sup>o</sup>

Collection of Materials. <sup>1</sup>The LORD spoke to Moses:<sup>p</sup> <sup>2</sup>Speak to the Israelites: Let them receive contributions for me. From each you shall receive the contribution that their hearts prompt them to give me. <sup>3</sup>These are the contributions you shall accept from them: gold, silver, and bronze;<sup>q</sup> <sup>4</sup>violet, purple, and scarlet yarn; fine linen and goat hair; <sup>5</sup>rams' skins dyed red, and tahash* skins; acacia wood; <sup>6</sup>oil for the light; spices for the anointing oil and for the fragrant incense; <sup>7</sup>onyx stones and other gems for mounting on the ephod and the breastpiece. <sup>8</sup>They are to make a sanctuary for me, that I may dwell in their midst.<sup>r</sup> <sup>9</sup>According to all that I show you regarding the pattern of the tabernacle and the pattern of its furnishings, so you are to make it.<sup>s</sup>

molding of gold around it. <sup>25</sup>Make a frame* for it, a handbreadth high, and make a molding of gold around the frame. <sup>26</sup>You shall also make four rings of gold for it and fasten them at the four corners, one at each leg. <sup>27</sup>The rings shall be alongside the frame as holders for the poles to carry the table. <sup>28</sup>These poles for carrying the table you shall make of acacia wood and plate with gold. <sup>29</sup>You shall make its plates* and cups, as well as its pitchers and bowls for pouring libations; make them of pure gold. <sup>30</sup>On the table you shall always keep showbread set before me.<sup>v</sup>

The Menorah.<sup>31</sup>You shall make a menorah* of pure beaten gold<sup>w</sup>—its shaft and branches—with its cups and knobs and petals springing directly from it. <sup>32</sup>Six branches are to extend from its sides, three branches on one side, and three on the other. <sup>33*</sup> On one branch there are to be three cups, shaped like almond blossoms, each with its knob and petals; on the opposite branch there are to be three cups, shaped like almond blossoms, each with its knob and petals; and so for the six branches that extend from the menorah. <sup>34</sup>On the menorah there are to be four cups,* shaped like almond blossoms, with their knobs and petals. <sup>35</sup>The six branches that go out from the menorah are to have a knob under each pair. <sup>36</sup>Their knobs and branches shall so spring from it that the whole will form a single piece of pure beaten gold. <sup>37*</sup> You shall then make seven lamps<sup>x</sup> for it and so set up the lamps that they give their light on the space in front of the menorah. <sup>38</sup>These, as well as the trimming shears and trays,* must be of pure gold. <sup>39</sup>Use a talent* of pure gold for the menorah and all these utensils. <sup>40</sup>See that you make them according to the pattern shown you on the mountain.<sup>y</sup>

CHAPTER 26

The Tent Cloth.<sup>1</sup>The tabernacle itself you shall make out of ten sheets* woven of fine linen twined and of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn, with cherubim embroidered on them.<sup>2</sup> The length of each shall be twenty-eight cubits, and the width four cubits; all the sheets shall be of the same size.<sup>3</sup> Five of the sheets are to be joined one to another; and the same for the other five.<sup>4</sup> Make loops of violet yarn along the edge of the end sheet in one set, and the same along the edge of the end sheet in the other set.<sup>5</sup> Make fifty loops along the edge of the end sheet in the first set, and fifty loops along the edge of the corresponding sheet in the second set, and so placed that the loops are directly opposite each other.<sup>6</sup> Then make fifty clasps of gold and join the two sets of sheets, so that the tabernacle forms one whole.

Structure of the Tabernacle

sheet double at the front of the tent.* <sup>10</sup>Make fifty loops along the edge of the end sheet in one set, and fifty loops along the edge of the end sheet in the second set. <sup>11</sup>Also make fifty bronze clasps and put them into the loops, to join the tent into one whole. <sup>12</sup>There will be an extra half sheet of tent covering, which shall be allowed to hang down over the rear of the tabernacle. <sup>13</sup>Likewise, the sheets of the tent will have an extra cubit's length to be left hanging down on either side of the tabernacle to cover it. <sup>14</sup>Over the tent itself make a covering of rams' skins dyed red, and above that, a covering of tahash skins.

The Framework. <sup>15a</sup> You shall make frames for the tabernacle, acacia-wood uprights. <sup>16</sup>The length of each frame is to be ten cubits, and its width one and a half cubits. <sup>17</sup>Each frame shall have two arms* joined one to another; so you are to make all the frames of the tabernacle. <sup>18</sup>Make the frames of the tabernacle as follows: twenty frames on the south side, <sup>19</sup>with forty silver pedestals under the twenty frames, two pedestals under each frame for its two arms; <sup>20</sup>twenty frames on the other side of the tabernacle, the north side, <sup>21</sup>with their forty silver pedestals, two pedestals under each frame. <sup>22</sup>At the rear of the tabernacle, to the west, six frames, <sup>23</sup>and two frames for the corners of the tabernacle, at its rear. <sup>24</sup>These two shall be double at the bottom, and likewise double at the top, to the first ring. That is how both corner frames are to be made. <sup>25</sup>Thus, there shall be eight frames, with their sixteen silver pedestals, two pedestals under each frame. <sup>26</sup>Also make bars of acacia wood: five for the frames on one side of the tabernacle, <sup>27</sup>five for those on the other side, and five for those at the rear, to the west. <sup>28</sup>The center bar, at the middle of the frames, shall reach across from end to end. <sup>29</sup>Plate the frames with gold, and make gold rings on them as holders for the bars, which are also to be plated with gold. <sup>30</sup>You shall set up the tabernacle according to its plan, which you were shown on the mountain.

The Veils. <sup>31</sup>You shall make a veil woven of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn,<sup>b</sup> and of fine linen twined, with cherubim embroidered on it.<sup>c</sup> <sup>32</sup>It is to be hung on four gold-plated columns of acacia wood, which shall have gold hooks* and shall rest on four silver pedestals. <sup>33</sup>Hang the veil from clasps. The ark of the covenant you shall bring inside, behind this veil which divides the holy place from the holy of holies. <sup>34</sup>Set the cover on the ark of the covenant in the holy of holies.

<sup>35</sup>Outside the veil you shall place the table and the menorah, the latter on the south side of the tabernacle, opposite the table, which is to be put on the north side. <sup>36</sup>For the entrance of the tent make a variegated* curtain of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn and of fine linen twined. <sup>37</sup>Make five columns of acacia wood for this curtain; plate them with gold, with their hooks of gold; and cast five bronze pedestals for them.

CHAPTER 27

The Altar for Burnt Offerings. <sup>1</sup>You shall make an altar<sup>d</sup> of acacia wood, on a square, five cubits long and five cubits wide; it shall be three cubits high. <sup>2</sup>At the four corners make horns* that are of one piece with the altar. You shall then plate it with bronze. <sup>3</sup>Make pots for removing the ashes, as well as shovels, basins, forks, and fire pans; all these utensils you shall make of bronze. <sup>4</sup>Make for it a grating,* a bronze network; make four bronze rings for it, one at each of its four corners. <sup>5</sup>Put it down around the altar, on the ground. This network is to be half as high as the altar. <sup>6</sup>You shall also make poles of acacia wood for the altar, and plate them with bronze. <sup>7</sup>These poles are to be put through the rings, so that they are on either side of the altar when it is carried. <sup>8</sup>Make the altar itself in the form of a hollow* box. Just as it was shown you on the mountain, so it is to be made.

Court of the Tabernacle.<sup>9e</sup> You shall also make a court for the tabernacle. On the south side the court shall have hangings, of fine linen twined, a hundred cubits long, <sup>10</sup>with twenty columns and twenty pedestals of bronze; the hooks and bands on the columns shall be of silver. <sup>11</sup>On the north side there shall be similar hangings, a hundred cubits long, with twenty columns and twenty pedestals of bronze; the hooks and bands on the columns shall be of silver. <sup>12</sup>On the west side, across the width of the court, there shall be hangings, fifty cubits long, with ten columns and ten pedestals. <sup>13</sup>The width of the court on the east side shall be fifty cubits. <sup>14</sup>On one side there shall be hangings to the extent of fifteen cubits, with three columns and three pedestals; <sup>15</sup>on the other side there shall be hangings to the extent of fifteen cubits, with three columns and three pedestals.

<sup>16</sup>At the gate of the court there shall be a variegated curtain, twenty cubits long, woven of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn and of fine linen twined. It shall have four columns and four pedestals.

<sup>17</sup>All the columns around the court shall have bands and hooks of silver, and pedestals of bronze. <sup>18</sup>The court is to be one hundred cubits long, fifty cubits wide, and five cubits high. Fine linen twined must be used, and the pedestals must be of bronze. <sup>19</sup>All the fittings of the tabernacle, whatever be their use, as well as all its tent pegs and all the tent pegs of the court, must be of bronze.

Oil for the Lamps. <sup>20</sup>You shall command the Israelites to bring you clear oil of crushed olives, to be used for the light, so that you may keep lamps burning always.<sup>f</sup> <sup>21</sup>From evening to morning Aaron and his sons shall maintain them before the LORD in the tent of meeting, outside the veil which hangs in front of the covenant. This shall be a perpetual statute for the Israelites throughout their generations.

CHAPTER 28

The Priestly Vestments.<sup>1g</sup> Have your brother Aaron, and with him his sons, brought to you, from among the Israelites, that they may be my priests: Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, Aaron's sons. <sup>2</sup>For the glorious adornment of your brother Aaron you shall have sacred vestments made. <sup>3</sup>Therefore, tell the various artisans whom I have endowed with skill* to make vestments for Aaron to consecrate him as my priest. <sup>4</sup>These are the vestments they shall make: a breastpiece, an ephod, a robe, a brocade tunic, a turban, and a sash. In making these sacred vestments which your brother Aaron and his sons are to wear in serving as my priests, <sup>5</sup>they shall use gold, violet, purple, and scarlet yarn and fine linen.

The Ephod and Breastpiece. <sup>6</sup>The ephod* they shall make of gold thread and of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn, embroidered on cloth of fine linen twined.<sup>h</sup> <sup>7</sup>It shall have a pair of shoulder straps joined to its two upper ends. <sup>8</sup>The embroidered belt of the ephod shall extend out from it and, like it, be made of gold thread, of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn, and of fine linen twined.

<sup>9</sup>Get two onyx stones and engrave on them the names of the sons of Israel: <sup>10</sup>six of their names on one stone, and the names of the remaining six on the other stone, in the order of their birth. <sup>11</sup>As a gem-cutter engraves a seal, so shall you have the two stones engraved with the names of the sons of Israel and then mounted in gold filigree work. <sup>12</sup>Set these two stones on the shoulder straps of the ephod as memorial stones of the sons of Israel. Thus Aaron shall bear their names on his shoulders as a reminder before the LORD. <sup>13</sup>Make filigree rosettes of gold,<sup>i</sup> <sup>14</sup>as well as two chains of pure gold, twisted like cords, and fasten the cordlike chains to the filigree rosettes.

stones are to be mounted in gold filigree work, <sup>21</sup>twelve of them to match the names of the sons of Israel, each stone engraved like a seal with the name of one of the twelve tribes.

Other Vestments.<sup>31</sup>The robe of the ephod<sup>l</sup> you shall make entirely of violet material. <sup>32</sup>It shall have an opening for the head in the center, and around this opening there shall be a selvage, woven as at the opening of a shirt, to keep it from being torn. <sup>33</sup>At the hem at the bottom you shall make pomegranates, woven of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn and fine linen twined, with gold bells between them; <sup>34</sup>a gold bell, a pomegranate, a gold bell, a pomegranate, all around the hem of the robe. <sup>35</sup>Aaron shall wear it when ministering, that its sound may be heard as he enters and leaves the LORD's presence in the sanctuary; else he will die.

CHAPTER 29

Consecration of the Priests. <sup>1</sup>This is the rite you shall perform in consecrating them as my priests.<sup>p</sup> Procure a young bull and two unblemished rams. <sup>2</sup>With bran flour make unleavened cakes mixed with oil, and unleavened wafers spread with oil, <sup>3</sup>and put them in a basket. Take the basket of them along with the bull and the two rams. <sup>4</sup>Aaron and his sons you shall also bring to the entrance of the tent of meeting, and there wash them with water. <sup>5</sup>Take the vestments and clothe Aaron with the tunic, the robe of the ephod, the ephod itself, and the breastpiece, fastening the embroidered belt of the ephod around him. <sup>6</sup>Put the turban on his head, the sacred diadem on the turban. <sup>7</sup>Then take the anointing oil and pour it on his head, and anoint him. <sup>8</sup>Bring forward his sons also and clothe them with the tunics, <sup>9</sup>gird them with the sashes, and tie the skullcaps on them.<sup>q</sup> Thus shall the priesthood be theirs by a perpetual statute, and thus shall you install Aaron and his sons.

Installation Sacrifices.<sup>10r</sup> Now bring forward the bull in front of the tent of meeting. There Aaron and his sons shall lay their hands on its head. <sup>11</sup>Then slaughter the bull before the LORD, at the entrance of the tent of meeting. <sup>12</sup>Take some of its blood and with your finger put it on the horns of the altar. All the rest of the blood you shall pour out at the base of the altar. <sup>13</sup>All the fat that covers its inner organs, as well as the lobe of its liver and its two kidneys, together with the fat that is on them, you shall take and burn on the altar. <sup>14</sup>But the meat and hide and dung of the bull you must burn up outside the camp, since this is a purification offering.<sup>s</sup>

Splash the rest of the blood on all the sides of the altar. <sup>21</sup>Then take some of the blood that is on the altar, together with some of the anointing oil, and sprinkle this on Aaron and his vestments, as well as on his sons and their vestments, that he and his sons and their vestments may be sacred.

<sup>29</sup>The sacred vestments<sup>u</sup> of Aaron shall be passed down to his sons after him, that in them they may be anointed and installed. <sup>30</sup>The son who succeeds him as priest and who is to enter the tent of meeting to minister in the sanctuary shall be clothed with them for seven days.

<sup>35</sup>Carry out all these commands in regard to Aaron and his sons just as I have given them to you.<sup>w</sup> Seven days you shall spend installing them, <sup>36x</sup> sacrificing a bull each day as a purification offering, to make atonement.

Thus you shall purify the altar* by purging it, and you shall anoint it in order to consecrate it. <sup>37</sup>Seven days you shall spend in purging the altar and in consecrating it. Then the altar will be most sacred, and whatever touches it will become sacred.

<sup>38*</sup> Now, this is what you shall regularly offer on the altar: two yearling lambs<sup>y</sup> as the sacrifice established for each day; <sup>39</sup>one lamb in the morning and the other lamb at the evening twilight. <sup>40</sup>With the first lamb there shall be a tenth of an ephah of bran flour mixed with a fourth of a hin* of oil of crushed olives and, as its libation, a fourth of a hin of wine. <sup>41</sup>The other lamb you shall offer at the evening twilight, with the same grain offering and libation as in the morning. You shall offer this as a sweet-smelling oblation to the LORD. <sup>42</sup>Throughout your generations this regular burnt offering shall be made before the LORD at the entrance of the tent of meeting, where I will meet you and speak to you.

<sup>43</sup>There, at the altar, I will meet the Israelites; hence, it will be made sacred by my glory.<sup>z</sup> <sup>44</sup>Thus I will consecrate the tent of meeting and the altar, just as I also consecrate Aaron and his sons to be my priests. <sup>45</sup>I will dwell in the midst of the Israelites and will be their God. <sup>46</sup>They shall know that I, the LORD, am their God who brought them out of the land of Egypt, so that I, the LORD, their God, might dwell among them.

CHAPTER 30

Altar of Incense. <sup>1</sup>For burning incense you shall make an altar of acacia wood,<sup>a</sup> <sup>2</sup>with a square surface, a cubit long, a cubit wide, and two cubits high, with horns that are of one piece with it. <sup>3</sup>Its grate on top, its walls on all four sides, and its horns you shall plate with pure gold. Put a gold molding around it. <sup>4</sup>Underneath the molding you shall put gold rings, two on one side and two on the opposite side, as holders for the poles used in carrying it. <sup>5</sup>Make the poles, too, of acacia wood and plate them with gold. <sup>6</sup>This altar you are to place in front of the veil that hangs before the ark of the covenant where I will meet you.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>7</sup>On it Aaron shall burn fragrant incense. Morning after morning, when he prepares the lamps, <sup>8</sup>and again in the evening twilight, when he lights the lamps, he shall burn incense. Throughout your generations this shall be the regular incense offering before the LORD. <sup>9</sup>On this altar you shall not offer up any profane incense, or any burnt offering or grain offering; nor shall you pour out a libation upon it. <sup>10</sup>Once a year Aaron shall purge its horns.<sup>c</sup> Throughout your generations he is to purge it once a year with the blood of the atoning purification offering. This altar is most sacred to the LORD.

Census Tax. <sup>11</sup>The LORD also told Moses: <sup>12</sup>When you take a census<sup>d</sup> of the Israelites who are to be enrolled, each one, as he is enrolled, shall give the LORD a ransom for his life, so that no plague may come upon them for being enrolled. <sup>13</sup>This is what everyone who is enrolled must pay: a half-shekel, according to the standard of the sanctuary shekel—twenty gerahs to the shekel—a half-shekel contribution to the LORD.<sup>e</sup> <sup>14</sup>Everyone who is enrolled, of twenty years or more, must give the contribution to the LORD. <sup>15</sup>The rich need not give more, nor shall the poor give less, than a half-shekel in this contribution to the LORD to pay the ransom for their lives. <sup>16f</sup> When you receive this ransom money from the Israelites, you shall donate it to the service of the tent of meeting, that there it may be a reminder of the Israelites before the LORD of the ransom paid for their lives.

The Basin. <sup>17</sup>The LORD told Moses: <sup>18</sup>For ablutions you shall make a bronze basin with a bronze stand. Place it between the tent of meeting and the altar, and put water in it.<sup>g</sup> <sup>19</sup>Aaron and his sons shall use it in washing their hands and feet.<sup>h</sup> <sup>20</sup>When they are about to enter the tent of meeting, they must wash with water, lest they die. Likewise when they approach the altar to minister, to offer an oblation to the LORD, <sup>21</sup>they must wash their hands and feet, lest they die. This shall be a perpetual statute for him and his descendants throughout their generations.

The Anointing Oil. <sup>22</sup>The LORD told Moses: <sup>23</sup>Take the finest spices: five hundred shekels of free-flowing myrrh; half that amount, that is, two hundred and fifty shekels, of fragrant cinnamon; two hundred and fifty shekels of fragrant cane; <sup>24</sup>five hundred shekels of cassia—all according to the standard of the sanctuary shekel; together with a hin of olive oil; <sup>25</sup>and blend them into sacred anointing oil,<sup>i</sup> perfumed ointment expertly prepared.<sup>j</sup> With this sacred anointing oil <sup>26</sup>you shall anoint the tent of meeting and the ark of the covenant, <sup>27</sup>the table and all its utensils, the menorah and its utensils, the altar of incense <sup>28</sup>and the altar for burnt offerings with all its utensils, and the basin with its stand. <sup>29</sup>When you have consecrated them, they shall be most sacred; whatever touches them shall be sacred. <sup>30</sup>Aaron and his sons you shall also anoint and consecrate as my priests.<sup>k</sup> <sup>31</sup>Tell the Israelites: As sacred anointing oil this shall belong to me throughout your generations. <sup>32</sup>It may not be used in any ordinary anointing of the body, nor may you make any other oil of a like mixture. It is sacred, and shall be treated as sacred by you. <sup>33</sup>Whoever prepares a perfume like this, or whoever puts any of this on an unauthorized person, shall be cut off from his people.

The Incense.<sup>34l</sup> The LORD told Moses: Take these aromatic substances: storax and onycha and galbanum, these and pure frankincense in equal parts; <sup>35</sup>and blend them into incense. This fragrant powder, expertly prepared, is to be salted and so kept pure and sacred. <sup>36</sup>Grind some of it into fine dust and put this before the covenant in the tent of meeting where I will meet you. This incense shall be treated as most sacred by you. <sup>37</sup>You may not make incense of a like mixture for yourselves; you must treat it as sacred to the LORD. <sup>38</sup>Whoever makes an incense like this for his own enjoyment of its fragrance, shall be cut off from his people.

Choice of Artisans.<sup>1m</sup> The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>See, I have singled out* Bezalel, son of Uri, son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, <sup>3</sup>and I have filled him with a divine spirit of skill and understanding and knowledge in every craft: <sup>4</sup>in the production of embroidery, in making things of gold, silver, or bronze, <sup>5</sup>in cutting and mounting precious stones, in carving wood, and in every other craft. <sup>6</sup>As his assistant I myself have appointed Oholiab, son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan. I have also endowed all the experts with the necessary skill to make all the things I have commanded you: <sup>7n</sup> the tent of meeting, the ark of the covenant with its cover, all the furnishings of the tent, <sup>8</sup>the table with its utensils, the pure gold menorah with all its utensils, the altar of incense, <sup>9</sup>the altar for burnt offerings with all its utensils, the basin with its stand, <sup>10</sup>the service cloths, * the sacred vestments for Aaron the priest, the vestments for his sons in their ministry, <sup>11</sup>the anointing oil, and the fragrant incense for the sanctuary. According to all I have commanded you, so shall they do.

Sabbath Laws.<sup>12o</sup> The LORD said to Moses: <sup>13</sup>You must also tell the Israelites: Keep my sabbaths, for that is to be the sign between you and me throughout the generations, to show that it is I, the LORD, who make you holy. <sup>14*</sup> Therefore, you must keep the sabbath for it is holiness for you. Whoever desecrates it shall be put to death. If anyone does work on that day, that person must be cut off from the people. <sup>15</sup>Six days there are for doing work, but the seventh day is the sabbath of complete rest, holy to the LORD. Anyone who does work on the sabbath day shall be put to death. <sup>16</sup>So shall the Israelites observe the sabbath, keeping it throughout their generations as an everlasting covenant. <sup>17</sup>Between me and the Israelites it is to be an everlasting sign; for in six days the LORD made the heavens and the earth, but on the seventh day he rested at his ease.

<sup>18</sup>When the LORD had finished speaking to Moses on Mount Sinai, he gave him the two tablets of the covenant, the stone tablets inscribed by God's own finger.<sup>p</sup>

CHAPTER 32

See RG 141–46

The Golden Calf. <sup>1</sup>When the people saw that Moses was delayed in coming down from the mountain, they gathered around Aaron and said to him, “Come, make us a god who will go before us; as for that man Moses who brought us out of the land of Egypt, we do not know what has happened to him.”<sup>q</sup> <sup>2</sup>Aaron replied, “Take off the golden earrings that your wives, your sons, and your daughters are wearing, and bring them to me.” <sup>3</sup>So all the people took off their earrings and brought them to Aaron. <sup>4</sup>He received their offering, and fashioning it with a tool, made a molten calf. Then they cried out, “These are your gods, Israel, who brought you* up from the land of Egypt.”<sup>r</sup> <sup>5</sup>On seeing this, Aaron built an altar in front of the calf and proclaimed, “Tomorrow is a feast of the LORD.” <sup>6</sup>Early the next day the people sacrificed burnt offerings and brought communion sacrifices. Then they sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to revel.<sup>s</sup>

<sup>7t</sup> Then the LORD said to Moses: Go down at once because your people, whom you brought out of the land of Egypt, have acted corruptly. <sup>8</sup>They have quickly turned aside from the way I commanded them, making for themselves a molten calf and bowing down to it, sacrificing to it and crying out, “These are your gods, Israel, who brought you up from the land of Egypt!” <sup>9u</sup> I have seen this people, how stiff-necked they are, continued the LORD to Moses. <sup>10</sup>Let me alone, then, that my anger may burn against them to consume them. Then I will make of you a great nation.

<sup>15</sup>Moses then turned and came down the mountain with the two tablets of the covenant in his hands,<sup>x</sup> tablets that were written on both sides, front and back. <sup>16</sup>The tablets were made by God; the writing was the writing of God, engraved on the tablets.<sup>y</sup> <sup>17</sup>Now, when Joshua heard the noise of the people shouting, he said to Moses, “That sounds like a battle in the camp.” <sup>18</sup>But Moses answered,

“It is not the noise of victory, it is not the noise of defeat;
the sound I hear is singing.”

<sup>19</sup>As he drew near the camp, he saw the calf and the dancing. Then Moses’ anger burned, and he threw the tablets down and broke them on the base of the mountain.<sup>z</sup> <sup>20</sup>Taking the calf they had made, he burned it in the fire and then ground it down to powder, which he scattered on the water* and made the Israelites drink.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>21</sup>* Moses asked Aaron, “What did this people do to you that you should lead them into a grave sin?” <sup>22</sup>Aaron replied, “Do not let my lord be angry. You know how the people are prone to evil. <sup>23</sup>They said to me, ‘Make us a god to go before us; as for this man Moses who brought us out of the land of Egypt, we do not know what has happened to him.’ <sup>24</sup>So I told them, ‘Whoever is wearing gold, take it off.’ They gave it to me, and I threw it into the fire, and this calf came out.”

The Atonement. <sup>30</sup>On the next day Moses said to the people,<sup>c</sup> “You have committed a grave sin. Now I will go up to the LORD; perhaps I may be able to make atonement for your sin.” <sup>31</sup>So Moses returned to the LORD and said, “Ah, this people has committed a grave sin in making a god of gold for themselves! <sup>32</sup>Now if you would only forgive their sin! But if you will not, then blot me out of the book that you have written.”* <sup>33</sup>The LORD answered Moses: Only the one who has sinned against me will I blot out of my book. <sup>34</sup>Now, go and lead the people where I have told you. See, my angel will go before you. When it is time for me to punish, I will punish them for their sin.

<sup>35</sup>Thus the LORD struck the people for making the calf, the one that Aaron made.

CHAPTER 33

<sup>1</sup>The LORD spoke to Moses: Go! You and the people whom you have brought up from the land of Egypt are to go up from here to the land about which I swore to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: I will give it to your descendants.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>5</sup>The LORD spoke to Moses: Speak to the Israelites: You are a stiff-necked people. Were I to go up in your company even for a moment, I would destroy you. Now off with your ornaments! Let me think what to do with you. <sup>6</sup>So, from Mount Horeb onward, the Israelites stripped off their ornaments.

Moses' Intimacy with God. <sup>7</sup>Moses used to pitch a tent<sup>f</sup> outside the camp at some distance. It was called the tent of meeting. Anyone who wished to consult the LORD would go to the tent of meeting outside the camp. <sup>8</sup>Whenever Moses went out to the tent, the people would all rise and stand at the entrance of their own tents, watching Moses until he entered the tent. <sup>9</sup>As Moses entered the tent, the column of cloud would come down and stand at its entrance while the LORD spoke with Moses. <sup>10</sup>On seeing the column of cloud stand at the entrance of the tent, all the people would rise and bow down at the entrance of their own tents. <sup>11</sup>The LORD used to speak to Moses face to face,<sup>g</sup> as a person speaks to a friend. Moses would then return to the camp, but his young assistant, Joshua, son of Nun, never left the tent. <sup>12</sup>Moses said to the LORD, "See, you are telling me: Lead this people.<sup>h</sup> But you have not let me know whom you will send with me. Yet you have said: You are my intimate friend;* You have found favor with me. <sup>13</sup>Now, if I have found favor with you, please let me know your ways so that, in knowing you, I may continue to find favor with you. See, this nation is indeed your own people. <sup>14</sup>The LORD answered: I myself* will go along, to give you rest. <sup>15</sup>Moses replied, "If you are not going yourself, do not make us go up from here. <sup>16</sup>For how can it be known that I and your people have found favor with you, except by your going with us? Then we, your people and I, will be singled out from every other people on the surface of the earth.” <sup>17</sup>The Lord said to Moses: This request, too, which you have made, I will carry out, because you have found favor with me and you are my intimate friend.

<sup>18</sup>Then Moses said, “Please let me see your glory!” <sup>19</sup>The LORD answered: I will make all my goodness pass before you, and I will proclaim my name, “LORD,” before you; I who show favor to whom I will, I who grant mercy to whom I will. <sup>i</sup> <sup>20</sup>But you cannot see my face, <sup>j</sup> for no one can see me and live. *

<sup>21</sup>Here, continued the LORD, is a place near me where you shall station yourself on the rock. <sup>22</sup>When my glory passes I will set you in the cleft of the rock and will cover you with my hand until I have passed by. <sup>23</sup>Then I will remove my hand, so that you may see my back; but my face may not be seen.

CHAPTER 34

Renewal of the Tablets. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: “Cut two stone tablets like the former,<sup>k</sup> that I may write on them the words* which were on the former tablets that you broke. <sup>2</sup>Get ready for tomorrow morning, when you are to go up Mount Sinai and there present yourself to me on the top of the mountain. <sup>3</sup>No one shall come up with you, and let no one even be seen on any part of the mountain;<sup>l</sup> even the sheep and the cattle are not to graze in front of this mountain.” <sup>4</sup>Moses then cut two stone tablets like the former, and early the next morning he went up Mount Sinai as the LORD had commanded him, taking in his hand the two stone tablets.

<sup>5</sup>The LORD came down in a cloud and stood with him there and proclaimed the name, “LORD.” <sup>6</sup>So the LORD passed before him and proclaimed: The LORD, the LORD, a God gracious and merciful, slow to anger and abounding in love and fidelity,* <sup>7</sup>continuing his love for a thousand generations, and forgiving wickedness, rebellion, and sin; yet not declaring the guilty guiltless, but bringing punishment for their parents’ wickedness on children and children’s children to the third and fourth generation!<sup>m</sup> <sup>8</sup>Moses at once knelt and bowed down to the ground. <sup>9</sup>Then he said, “If I find favor with you, Lord, please, Lord, come along in our company. This is indeed a stiff-necked people; yet pardon our wickedness and sins, and claim us as your own.”

Religious Laws. <sup>10</sup>The LORD said: Here is the covenant I will make. Before all your people I will perform marvels never before done* in any nation anywhere on earth, so that all the people among whom you live may see the work of the LORD. Awe-inspiring are the deeds I will perform with you! <sup>11</sup>As for you, observe what I am commanding you today.<sup>n</sup>

See, I am about to drive out before you the Amorites, Canaanites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites and Jebusites. <sup>12o</sup> Take care not to make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land that you are to enter; lest they become a snare among you. <sup>13</sup>Tear down their altars; smash their sacred stones, and cut down their asherahs.* <sup>14</sup>You shall not bow down to any other god, for the LORD —“Jealous”* his name—is a jealous God. <sup>15</sup>Do not make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land; else, when they prostitute themselves with their gods and sacrifice to them, one of them may invite you and you may partake of the sacrifice. <sup>16</sup>And when you take their daughters as wives for your sons, and their daughters prostitute themselves with their gods, they will make your sons do the same.

<sup>18</sup>You shall keep the festival of Unleavened Bread.<sup>q</sup> For seven days at the appointed time in the month of Abib you are to eat unleavened bread, as I commanded you; for in the month of Abib you came out of Egypt.

<sup>19</sup>To me belongs every male that opens the womb among all your livestock, whether in the herd or in the flock.<sup>r</sup> <sup>20</sup>The firstling of a donkey you shall redeem with a lamb; if you do not redeem it, you must break its neck. The firstborn among your sons you shall redeem.

No one shall appear before me empty-handed.

<sup>21</sup>Six days you may labor,<sup>s</sup> but on the seventh day you shall rest; even during the seasons of plowing and harvesting you must rest.

<sup>23</sup>Three times a year all your men shall appear before the Lord, the LORD God of Israel. <sup>24</sup>Since I will drive out the nations before you and enlarge your territory, no one will covet your land when you go up three times a year to appear before the LORD, your God.

<sup>25</sup>You shall not offer me the blood of sacrifice with anything leavened, nor shall the sacrifice of the Passover feast be kept overnight for the next day.

<sup>26</sup>The choicest first fruits of your soil you shall bring to the house of the LORD, your God.

You shall not boil a young goat in its mother's milk.<sup>u</sup>

Radiance of Moses' Face. <sup>27</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: Write down these words, for in accordance with these words I have made a covenant with you and with Israel. <sup>28</sup>So Moses was there with the LORD for forty days and forty nights,<sup>v</sup> without eating any food or drinking any water, and he wrote on the tablets the words of the covenant, the ten words.

<sup>29</sup>As Moses came down from Mount Sinai with the two tablets of the covenant in his hands, he did not know that the skin of his face had become radiant* while he spoke with the LORD. <sup>30</sup>When Aaron, then, and the other Israelites saw Moses and noticed how radiant the skin of his face had become, they were afraid to come near him. <sup>31</sup>Only after Moses called to them did Aaron and all the leaders of the community come back to him. Moses then spoke to them. <sup>32</sup>Later, all the Israelites came up to him, and he enjoined on them all that the LORD had told him on Mount Sinai. <sup>33</sup>When Moses finished speaking with them, he put a veil over his face. <sup>34</sup>Whenever Moses entered the presence of the LORD to speak with him, he removed the veil until he came out again.<sup>w</sup> On coming out, he would tell the Israelites all that he had been commanded. <sup>35</sup>Then the Israelites would see that the skin of Moses' face was radiant; so he would again put the veil over his face until he went in to speak with the LORD.

VIII. The Building of the Tabernacle and the Descent of God's Glory upon It

CHAPTER 35

Sabbath Regulations. <sup>1</sup>Moses assembled the whole Israelite community and said to them,<sup>x</sup> “These are the words the LORD has commanded to be observed. <sup>2</sup>On six days work may be done, but the seventh day shall be holy to you as the sabbath of complete rest to the LORD. Anyone who does work on that day shall be put to death. <sup>3</sup>You shall not even light a fire in any of your dwellings on the sabbath day.”

Collection of Materials. <sup>4</sup>Moses said to the whole Israelite community, “This is what the LORD has commanded: <sup>5y</sup> Receive from among you contributions for the LORD. Everyone, as his heart prompts him, shall bring, as a contribution to the LORD, gold, silver, and bronze; <sup>6</sup>violet, purple, and scarlet yarn; fine linen and goat hair; <sup>7</sup>rams’ skins dyed red, and tahash skins; acacia wood; <sup>8</sup>oil for the light; spices for the anointing oil and for the fragrant incense; <sup>9</sup>onyx stones and other gems for mounting on the ephod and on the breastpiece.

Call for Artisans.<sup>10z</sup> “Let every artisan among you come and make all that the LORD has commanded: <sup>11</sup>the tabernacle, with its tent, its covering, its clasps, its frames, its bars, its columns, and its pedestals; <sup>12</sup>the ark, with its poles, the cover, and the curtain veil; <sup>13</sup>the table, with its poles and all its utensils, and the showbread; <sup>14</sup>the menorah, with its utensils, the lamps, and the oil for the light; <sup>15</sup>the altar of incense, with its poles; the anointing oil, and the fragrant incense; the entrance curtain for the entrance of the tabernacle; <sup>16</sup>the altar for burnt offerings, with its bronze grating, its poles, and all its utensils; the basin, with its stand; <sup>17</sup>the hangings of the court, with their columns and pedestals; the curtain for the gate of the court; <sup>18</sup>the tent pegs for the tabernacle and for the court, with their ropes; <sup>19</sup>the service cloths for use in the sanctuary; the sacred vestments for Aaron, the priest, and the vestments for his sons in their ministry.”

The Contribution. <sup>20</sup>When the whole Israelite community left Moses’ presence, <sup>21</sup>all, as their hearts moved them and their spirit prompted, brought a contribution to the LORD for the work of the tent of meeting, for all its services, and for the sacred vestments. <sup>22</sup>Both the men and the women, all as their heart prompted them, brought brooches, earrings, rings, necklaces, and various other gold articles.<sup>a</sup> Everyone who could presented an offering of gold to the LORD. <sup>23</sup>Everyone who happened to have violet, purple, or scarlet yarn, fine linen or goat hair, rams' skins dyed red or tahash skins, brought them. <sup>24</sup>Whoever could make a contribution of silver or bronze offered it to the LORD; and everyone who happened to have acacia wood for any part of the work, brought it. <sup>25</sup>All the women who were expert spinners brought hand-spun violet, purple, and scarlet yarn and fine linen thread. <sup>26</sup>All the women, as their hearts and skills moved them, spun goat hair. <sup>27</sup>The tribal leaders brought onyx stones and other gems for mounting on the ephod and on the breastpiece; <sup>28</sup>as well as spices, and oil for the light, anointing oil, and fragrant incense. <sup>29</sup>Every Israelite man and woman brought to the LORD such voluntary offerings as they thought best, for the various kinds of work which the LORD, through Moses, had commanded to be done.

The Artisans. <sup>30</sup>Moses said to the Israelites:<sup>b</sup> "See, the LORD has singled out Bezalel, son of Uri, son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, <sup>31</sup>and has filled him with a divine spirit of skill and understanding and knowledge in every craft: <sup>32</sup>in the production of embroidery, in making things of gold, silver, or bronze, <sup>33</sup>in cutting and mounting precious stones, in carving wood, and in every other craft. <sup>34</sup>He has also given both him and Oholiab, son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan, the ability to teach others. <sup>35</sup>He has endowed them with skill to execute all types of work: engraving, embroidering, the making of variegated cloth of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn and fine linen thread, weaving, and all other arts and crafts.

CHAPTER 36

<sup>1</sup>“Bezalel, therefore, will set to work with Oholiab and with all the artisans whom the LORD has endowed with skill and understanding in knowing how to do all the work for the service of the sanctuary, just as the LORD has commanded.”<sup>c</sup>

<sup>2</sup>Moses then called Bezalel and Oholiab and all the other artisans whom the LORD had endowed with skill, men whose hearts moved them to come and do the work. <sup>3</sup>They received from Moses all the contributions which the Israelites had brought for the work to be done for the sanctuary service. Still, morning after morning the people continued to bring their voluntary offerings to Moses. <sup>4</sup>Thereupon all the artisans who were doing the work for the sanctuary came from the work each was doing, <sup>5</sup>and told Moses, “The people are bringing much more than is needed to carry out the work which the LORD has commanded us to do.” <sup>6</sup>Moses, therefore, ordered a proclamation to be made throughout the camp: “Let neither man nor woman make any more contributions for the sanctuary.” So the people stopped bringing their offerings; <sup>7</sup>there was already enough at hand, and more than enough, to complete the work to be done.

The Tent Cloth and Coverings.<sup>8d</sup> The various artisans who were doing the work made the tabernacle with its ten sheets woven of fine linen twined, having cherubim embroidered on them with violet, purple, and scarlet yarn. <sup>9</sup>The length of each sheet was twenty-eight cubits, and the width four cubits; all the sheets were the same size. <sup>10</sup>Five of the sheets were joined together, edge to edge; and the other five sheets likewise, edge to edge. <sup>11</sup>Loops of violet yarn were made along the edge of the end sheet in the first set, and the same along the edge of the end sheet in the second set. <sup>12</sup>Fifty loops were thus put on one inner sheet, and fifty loops on the inner sheet in the other set, with the loops directly opposite each other. <sup>13</sup>Then fifty clasps of gold were made, with which the sheets were joined so that the tabernacle formed one whole.

<sup>14</sup>Sheets of goat hair were also woven as a tent over the tabernacle. Eleven such sheets were made. <sup>15</sup>The length of each sheet was thirty cubits and the width four cubits; all eleven sheets were the same size. <sup>16</sup>Five of these sheets were joined into one set, and the other six sheets into another set. <sup>17</sup>Fifty loops were made along the edge of the end sheet in one set, and fifty loops along the edge of the corresponding sheet in the other set. <sup>18</sup>Fifty bronze clasps were made with which the tent was joined so that it formed one whole. <sup>19</sup>A covering for the tent was made of rams' skins dyed red and, above that, a covering of tahash skins.

The Framework. <sup>20e</sup> Frames were made for the tabernacle, acacia-wood uprights. <sup>21</sup>The length of each frame was ten cubits, and the width one and a half cubits. <sup>22</sup>Each frame had two arms, fastening them one to another. In this way all the frames of the tabernacle were made. <sup>23</sup>The frames for the tabernacle were made as follows: twenty frames on the south side, <sup>24</sup>with forty silver pedestals under the twenty frames, two pedestals under each frame for its two arms; <sup>25</sup>twenty frames on the other side of the tabernacle, the north side, <sup>26</sup>with their forty silver pedestals, two pedestals under each frame. <sup>27</sup>At the rear of the tabernacle, to the west, six frames were made, <sup>28</sup>and two frames were made for the corners of the tabernacle, at its rear. <sup>29</sup>These were double at the bottom, and likewise double at the top, to the first ring. That is how both corner frames were made. <sup>30</sup>Thus, there were eight frames, with their sixteen silver pedestals, two pedestals under each frame. <sup>31</sup>Bars of acacia wood were also made, five for the frames on one side of the tabernacle, <sup>32</sup>five for those on the other side, and five for those at the rear, to the west. <sup>33</sup>The center bar, at the middle of the frames, was made to reach across from end to end. <sup>34</sup>The frames were plated with gold, and gold rings were made on them as holders for the bars, which were also plated with gold.

The Veil. <sup>35f</sup> The veil was made of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn, and of fine linen twined, with cherubim embroidered on it. <sup>36</sup>Four gold-plated columns of acacia wood, with gold hooks, were made for it, and four silver pedestals were cast for them.

<sup>37</sup>The curtain for the entrance of the tent was made of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn, and of fine linen twined, woven in a variegated manner. <sup>38</sup>Its five columns, with their hooks as well as their capitals and bands, were plated with gold; their five pedestals were of bronze.

CHAPTER 37

The Ark. <sup>1</sup>Bezalel made the ark of acacia wood, two and a half cubits long, one and a half cubits wide, and one and a half cubits high. <sup>2</sup>The inside and outside were plated with gold, and a molding of gold was put around it. <sup>3</sup>Four gold rings were cast for its four supports, two rings on one side and two on the opposite side. <sup>4</sup>Poles of acacia wood were made and plated with gold; <sup>5</sup>these poles were put through the rings on the sides of the ark, for carrying it.

<sup>6</sup>The cover was made of pure gold, two and a half cubits long and one and a half cubits wide. <sup>7</sup>Two cherubim of beaten gold were made for the two ends of the cover; <sup>8</sup>one cherub was at one end, the other at the other end, made of one piece with the cover, at each end. <sup>9</sup>The cherubim had their wings spread out above, sheltering the cover. They faced each other, with their faces looking toward the cover.<sup>9</sup>

The Table. <sup>10h</sup> The table was made of acacia wood, two cubits long, a cubit wide, and a cubit and a half high. <sup>11</sup>It was plated with pure gold, and a molding of gold was put around it. <sup>12</sup>A frame a handbreadth high was also put around it, with a molding of gold around the frame. <sup>13</sup>Four rings of gold were cast for it and fastened at the four corners, one at each leg. <sup>14</sup>The rings were alongside the frame as holders for the poles to carry the table. <sup>15</sup>These poles for carrying the table were made of acacia wood and plated with gold. <sup>16</sup>The vessels that were set on the table, its plates and cups, as well as its pitchers and bowls for pouring libations, were made of pure gold.

The Menorah. <sup>17i</sup> The menorah was made of pure beaten gold—its shaft and branches—with its cups and knobs and petals springing directly from it. <sup>18</sup>Six branches extended from its sides, three branches on one side and three on the other. <sup>19</sup>On one branch there were three cups, shaped like almond blossoms, each with its knob and petals; on the opposite branch there were three cups, shaped like almond blossoms, each with its knob and petals; and so for the six branches that extended from the menorah. <sup>20</sup>On the menorah there were four cups, shaped like almond blossoms, with their knobs and petals. <sup>21</sup>The six branches that went out from the menorah had a knob under each pair. <sup>22</sup>The knobs and branches so sprang from it that the whole formed but a single piece of pure beaten gold. <sup>23</sup>Its seven lamps, as well as its trimming shears and trays, were made of pure gold. <sup>24</sup>A talent of pure gold was used for the menorah and its various utensils.

The Altar of Incense. <sup>25j</sup> The altar of incense was made of acacia wood, on a square, a cubit long, a cubit wide, and two cubits high, having horns that sprang directly from it. <sup>26</sup>Its grate on top, its walls on all four sides, and its horns were plated with pure gold; and a gold molding was put around it. <sup>27</sup>Underneath the molding gold rings were placed, two on one side and two on the opposite side, as holders for the poles used in carrying it. <sup>28</sup>The poles, too, were made of acacia wood and plated with gold.

The Altar for Burnt Offerings. <sup>1</sup>The altar for burnt offerings<sup>l</sup> was made of acacia wood, on a square, five cubits long and five cubits wide; its height was three cubits. <sup>2</sup>At the four corners horns were made that sprang directly from the altar. It was then plated with bronze. <sup>3</sup>All the utensils of the altar, the pots, shovels, basins, forks and fire pans, were likewise made of bronze. <sup>4</sup>A grating, a bronze network, was made for the altar and placed around it, on the ground, half as high as the altar itself. <sup>5</sup>Four rings were cast for the four corners of the bronze grating, as holders for the poles, <sup>6</sup>which were made of acacia wood and plated with bronze. <sup>7</sup>The poles were put through the rings on the sides of the altar for carrying it. The altar was made in the form of a hollow box.

The Court of the Tabernacle.<sup>9n</sup> The court was made as follows. On the south side the hangings of the court were of fine linen twined, a hundred cubits long, <sup>10</sup>with twenty columns and twenty pedestals of bronze, the hooks and bands of the columns being of silver. <sup>11</sup>On the north side there were similar hangings, a hundred cubits long, with twenty columns and twenty pedestals of bronze; the hooks and bands of the columns were of silver. <sup>12</sup>On the west side there were hangings, fifty cubits long, with ten columns and ten pedestals; the hooks and bands of the columns were of silver. <sup>13</sup>On the east side the court was fifty cubits. <sup>14</sup>On one side there were hangings to the extent of fifteen cubits, with three columns and three pedestals; <sup>15</sup>on the other side, beyond the gate of the court, there were likewise hangings to the extent of fifteen cubits, with three columns and three pedestals. <sup>16</sup>The hangings on all sides of the court were woven of fine linen twined. <sup>17</sup>The pedestals of the columns were of bronze, while the hooks and bands of the columns were of silver; the capitals were silver-plated, and all the columns of the court were banded with silver.

<sup>18</sup>At the gate of the court there was a variegated curtain, woven of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn and of fine linen twined, twenty cubits long and five cubits wide, in keeping with the hangings of the court. <sup>19</sup>There were four columns and four pedestals of bronze for it, while their hooks were of silver, and their capitals and their bands silver-plated. <sup>20</sup>All the tent pegs for the tabernacle and for the court around it were of bronze.

Amount of Metal Used.<sup>21</sup>The following is an account of the various amounts used on the tabernacle, the tabernacle of the covenant, drawn up at the command of Moses by the Levites under the direction of Ithamar, son of Aaron the priest. <sup>22</sup>However, it was Bezalel, son of Uri,<sup>o</sup> son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, who made all that the LORD commanded Moses, <sup>23</sup>and he was assisted by Oholiab, son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan, who was an engraver, an embroiderer, and a weaver of variegated cloth of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn and of fine linen.

<sup>24</sup>All the gold used in the entire construction of the sanctuary, having previously been given as an offering, amounted to twenty-nine talents and seven hundred and thirty shekels, according to the standard of the sanctuary shekel. <sup>25</sup>The silver of those of the community who were enrolled was one hundred talents and one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels, according to the standard of the sanctuary shekel; <sup>26</sup>one bekah apiece, that is, a half-shekel, according to the standard of the sanctuary shekel, was received from everyone who was enrolled, of twenty years or more, namely, six hundred and three thousand five hundred and fifty men.<sup>p</sup> <sup>27</sup>One hundred talents of silver were used for casting the pedestals of the sanctuary and the pedestals of the veil, one talent for each pedestal, or one hundred talents for the one hundred pedestals. <sup>28</sup>The remaining one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels were used for making the hooks on the columns, for plating the capitals, and for banding them with silver. <sup>29</sup>The bronze, given as an offering, amounted to seventy talents and two thousand four hundred shekels. <sup>30</sup>With this were made the pedestals at the entrance of the tent of meeting, the bronze altar with its bronze gratings, and all the utensils of the altar, <sup>31</sup>the pedestals around the court, the pedestals at the gate of the court, and all the tent pegs for the tabernacle and for the court around it.

The Priestly Vestments. <sup>1</sup>With violet, purple, and scarlet yarn were woven the service cloths for use in the sanctuary, as well as the sacred vestments<sup>q</sup> for Aaron, as the LORD had commanded Moses.

<sup>2r</sup> The ephod was woven of gold thread and of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn and of fine linen twined. <sup>3</sup>Gold was first hammered into gold leaf and then cut up into threads, which were woven with the violet, purple, and scarlet yarn into an embroidered pattern on the fine linen. <sup>4</sup>Shoulder straps were made for it and joined to its two upper ends. <sup>5</sup>The embroidered belt on the ephod extended out from it, and like it, was made of gold thread, of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn, and of fine linen twined, as the LORD had commanded Moses. <sup>6</sup>The onyx stones were prepared and mounted in gold filigree work; they were engraved like seal engravings with the names of the sons of Israel. <sup>7</sup>These stones were set on the shoulder straps of the ephod as memorial stones of the sons of Israel, just as the LORD had commanded Moses.

<sup>8s</sup> The breastpiece was embroidered like the ephod, with gold thread and violet, purple, and scarlet yarn on cloth of fine linen twined. <sup>9</sup>It was square and folded double, a span high and a span wide in its folded form. <sup>10</sup>Four rows of precious stones were mounted on it: in the first row a carnelian, a topaz, and an emerald; <sup>11</sup>in the second row, a garnet, a sapphire, and a beryl; <sup>12</sup>in the third row a jacinth, an agate, and an amethyst; <sup>13</sup>in the fourth row a chrysolite, an onyx, and a jasper. They were mounted in gold filigree work. <sup>14</sup>These stones were twelve, to match the names of the sons of Israel, and each stone was engraved like a seal with the name of one of the twelve tribes.

<sup>15t</sup> Chains of pure gold, twisted like cords, were made for the breastpiece, <sup>16</sup>together with two gold filigree rosettes and two gold rings. The two rings were fastened to the two upper ends of the breastpiece. <sup>17</sup>The two gold chains were then fastened to the two rings at the ends of the breastpiece. <sup>18</sup>The other two ends of the two chains were fastened in front to the two filigree rosettes, which were attached to the shoulder straps of the ephod. <sup>19</sup>Two other gold rings were made and put on the two lower ends of the breastpiece, on the edge facing the ephod. <sup>20</sup>Two more gold rings were made and fastened to the bottom of the two shoulder straps next to where they joined the ephod in front, just above its embroidered belt. <sup>21</sup>Violet ribbons bound the rings of the breastpiece to the rings of the ephod, so that the breastpiece stayed right above the embroidered belt of the ephod and did not swing loose from it. All this was just as the LORD had commanded Moses.

Other Vestments. <sup>22</sup>The robe of the ephod was woven entirely of violet yarn, <sup>23</sup>with an opening in its center like the opening of a shirt, with selvage around the opening to keep it from being torn. <sup>24</sup>At the hem of the robe pomegranates were made of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn and of fine linen twined; <sup>25</sup>bells of pure gold were also made and put between the pomegranates all around the hem of the robe: <sup>26</sup>a bell, a pomegranate, a bell, a pomegranate, all around the hem of the robe which was to be worn in performing the ministry—all this, just as the LORD had commanded Moses.

<sup>27</sup>For Aaron and his sons there were also woven tunics of fine linen; <sup>28</sup>the turban of fine linen; the ornate skullcaps of fine linen; linen pants of fine linen twined; <sup>29</sup>and sashes of variegated work made of fine linen twined and of violet, purple, and scarlet yarn, as the LORD had commanded Moses. <sup>30v</sup> The plate of the sacred diadem was made of pure gold and inscribed, as on a seal engraving: “Sacred to the LORD.” <sup>31</sup>It was tied over the turban with a violet ribbon, as the LORD had commanded Moses.

Presentation of the Work to Moses. <sup>32</sup>Thus the entire work of the tabernacle of the tent of meeting was completed. The Israelites did the work just as the LORD had commanded Moses; so it was done. <sup>33</sup>They then brought to Moses the tabernacle, the tent with all its furnishings, the clasps, the frames, the bars, the columns, the pedestals, <sup>34</sup>the covering of rams’ skins dyed red, the covering of tahash skins, the curtain veil; <sup>35</sup>the ark of the covenant with its poles, the cover, <sup>36</sup>the table with all its utensils and the showbread, <sup>37</sup>the pure gold menorah with its lamps set up on it and with all its utensils, the oil for the light, <sup>38</sup>the golden altar, the anointing oil, the fragrant incense; the curtain for the entrance of the tent, <sup>39</sup>the altar of bronze with its bronze grating, its poles and all its utensils, the basin with its stand, <sup>40</sup>the hangings of the court with their columns and pedestals, the curtain for the gate of the court with its ropes and tent pegs, all the equipment for the service of the tabernacle of the tent of meeting; <sup>41</sup>the service cloths for use in the sanctuary, the sacred vestments for Aaron the priest, and the vestments to be worn by his sons in their ministry. <sup>42</sup>Just as the LORD had commanded Moses, so the Israelites had carried out all the work. <sup>43</sup>So when Moses saw that all the work was done just as the LORD had commanded, he blessed them.

CHAPTER 40

Setting Up the Tabernacle.<sup>1</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: <sup>2w</sup>On the first day of the first month* you shall set up the tabernacle of the tent of meeting.<sup>x</sup> <sup>3</sup>Put the ark of the covenant in it, and screen off the ark with the veil.<sup>y</sup> <sup>4</sup>Bring in the table and set it. Then bring in the menorah and set up the lamps on it. <sup>5</sup>Put the golden altar of incense in front of the ark of the covenant, and hang the curtain at the entrance of the tabernacle. <sup>6</sup>Put the altar for burnt offerings in front of the entrance of the tabernacle of the tent of meeting. <sup>7</sup>Place the basin between the tent of meeting and the altar, and put water in it. <sup>8</sup>Set up the court round about, and put the curtain at the gate of the court.

<sup>9z</sup>Take the anointing oil and anoint the tabernacle and everything in it, consecrating it and all its furnishings, so that it will be sacred. <sup>10</sup>Anoint the altar for burnt offerings and all its utensils, consecrating it, so that it will be most sacred. <sup>11</sup>Likewise, anoint the basin with its stand, and thus consecrate it.

<sup>12a</sup>Then bring Aaron and his sons to the entrance of the tent of meeting, and there wash them with water. <sup>13</sup>Clothe Aaron with the sacred vestments and anoint him, thus consecrating him as my priest. <sup>14</sup>Bring forward his sons also, and clothe them with the tunics. <sup>15</sup>As you have anointed their father, anoint them also as my priests. Thus, by being anointed, shall they receive a perpetual priesthood throughout all future generations.

<sup>16</sup>Moses did just as the LORD had commanded him. <sup>17</sup>On the first day of the first month of the second year the tabernacle was set up. <sup>18</sup>It was Moses who set up the tabernacle. He placed its pedestals, set up its frames, put in its bars, and set up its columns. <sup>19</sup>He spread the tent over the tabernacle and put the covering on top of the tent, as the LORD had commanded him. <sup>20b</sup>He took the covenant and put it in the ark; he placed poles alongside the ark and set the cover upon it. <sup>21</sup>He brought the ark into the tabernacle and hung the curtain veil, thus screening off the ark of the covenant, as the LORD had commanded him. <sup>22</sup>He put the table in the tent of meeting, on the north side of the tabernacle, outside the veil, <sup>23</sup>and arranged the bread on it before the LORD, as the LORD had commanded him.<sup>c</sup> <sup>24</sup>He placed the menorah in the tent of meeting, opposite the table, on the south side of the tabernacle, <sup>25</sup>and he set up the lamps before the LORD, as the LORD had commanded him. <sup>26</sup>He placed the golden altar in the tent of meeting, in front of the veil, <sup>27</sup>and on it he burned fragrant incense, as the LORD had commanded him. <sup>28</sup>He hung the curtain at the entrance of the tabernacle. <sup>29</sup>He put the altar for burnt offerings in front of the entrance of the tabernacle of the tent of meeting, and sacrificed burnt offerings and grain offerings on it, as the LORD had commanded him. <sup>30d</sup> He placed the basin between the tent of meeting and the altar, and put water in it for washing. <sup>31</sup>Moses and Aaron and his sons used to wash their hands and feet there, <sup>32</sup>for they washed themselves whenever they went into the tent of meeting or approached the altar, as the LORD had commanded Moses. <sup>33</sup>Finally, he set up the court around the tabernacle and the altar and hung the curtain at the gate of the court.

Thus Moses finished all the work.

God's Presence in the Tabernacle. <sup>34e</sup> Then the cloud covered the tent of meeting, and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle. <sup>35</sup>Moses could not enter the tent of meeting, because the cloud settled down upon it and the glory of the LORD filled the tabernacle. <sup>36</sup>Whenever the cloud rose from the tabernacle, the Israelites would set out on their journey. <sup>37</sup>But if the cloud did not lift, they would not go forward; only when it lifted did they go forward. <sup>38</sup>The cloud of the LORD was over the tabernacle by day, and fire in the cloud at night, in the sight of the whole house of Israel in all the stages of their journey.

1:1 Sons of Israel: here literally the first-generation sons of Jacob/Israel. Cf. v. 5. However, beginning with v. 7 the same Hebrew phrase refers to Jacob's more remote descendants; hence, from there on, it is ordinarily rendered "the Israelites." Households: the family in its fullest sense, including wives, children and servants.

1:2 Jacob's sons are listed here according to their respective mothers. Cf. Gn 29:31; 30:20; 35:16–26.

1:5 Direct descendants: lit., "persons coming from Jacob's loins"; hence, wives of Jacob's sons and servants are not included. Cf. Gn 46:26. Seventy: Gn 46:26, along with the Septuagint for the verse, agrees on a total of sixty-six coming down to Egypt with Jacob, but in v. 27 the Hebrew text adds the two sons born to Joseph in Egypt and presupposes Jacob himself and Joseph for a total of seventy; the Septuagint adds "nine sons" born to Joseph to get a total of seventy-five. This is the figure the Septuagint and 4Q Exa have here in Ex 1:5.

1:7 Fruitful ... multiplied ... the land was filled with them: the language used here to indicate the fecundity of the Israelite population echoes the divine blessing bestowed upon humanity at creation (Gn 1:28) and after the flood (Gn 9:1) as well as suggesting fulfillment of the promises to the ancestors Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Gn 12:2; 13:16; 15:5; 28:14; passim).

1:8 Who knew nothing of Joseph: the nuance intended by the Hebrew verb “know” here goes beyond precise determination. The idea may be not simply that a new king came to power who had not heard of Joseph but that this king ignored the services that Joseph had rendered to Egypt, repudiating the special relationship that existed between Joseph and his predecessor on the throne.

1:10 Increase: Pharaoh’s actions thereby immediately pit him against God’s will for the Israelites to multiply; see note on v. 7 above.

1:11 Pharaoh: not a personal name, but a title common to all the kings of Egypt.

1:14 Mortar: either the wet clay with which the bricks were made, as in Na 3:14, or the cement used between the bricks in building, as in Gn 11:3.

1:16 Birthstool: apparently a pair of stones on which the mother is seated for childbirth opposite the midwife. The Hebrew word elsewhere is used to refer to the stones of a potter’s wheel.

2:1 Now a man: the chapter begins abruptly, without names for the man or woman (in contrast to the midwives of 1:15), who in 6:20 are identified as Amram and Jochebed.

2:3 Basket: the same Hebrew word is used in Gn 6:14 and throughout the flood narrative for Noah’s ark, but nowhere else in the Bible. Here, however, the “ark” or “chest” was made of papyrus stalks. Presumably the allusion to Genesis is intentional. Just as Noah and his family were preserved safe from the threatening waters of the flood in the ark he built, so now Moses is preserved from the threatening waters of the Nile in the ark prepared by his mother. Among the reeds: the Hebrew noun for “reed” is overwhelmingly used in the phrase “Reed Sea,” traditionally translated “Red Sea.”

2:9 And I will pay your wages: the idea that the child’s mother will be paid for nursing her child—and by Pharaoh’s own daughter—heightens the narrative’s irony.

2:10 When the child grew: while v. 9 implies that the boy’s mother cared for him as long as he needed to be nursed (presumably, between two and four years), the same verb appears in v. 11 to describe the attainment of adulthood. And he became her son: Pharaoh’s daughter adopts Moses, thus adding to the irony of the account. The king of Egypt had ordered the killing of all the sons of the Hebrews, and one now becomes the son of his own daughter! Moses: in Hebrew, mosheh. There is a play on words here: Hebrew mosheh echoes meshithihu (“I drew him out”). However, the name Moses actually has nothing to do with that Hebrew verb, but is probably derived from Egyptian “beloved” or “has been born,” preserved in such Pharaonic names as Thutmose (meaning approximately “Beloved of the god Thoth” or “The god Thoth is born, has given birth to [the child]”). The original meaning of Moses’ name was no longer remembered (if it was Egyptian, it may have contained an Egyptian divine element as well, perhaps the name of the Nile god Hapi), and a secondary explanation was derived from this story (or gave rise to it, if the drawing from the water of the Nile was intended to foreshadow the Israelites’ escape from Egypt through the Red Sea).

2:11 After Moses had grown up: cf. 7:7, where Moses is said to be eighty years old at the time of his mission to Pharaoh. Striking: probably in the sense of “flogging”; in v. 12, however, the same verb is used in the sense of “killing.”

2:15 Land of Midian: the territory under the control of a confederation made up, according to Nm 31:8, of five Midianite tribes. According to Gn 25:1–2, Midian was a son of Abraham by Keturah. In view of the extreme hostility in later periods between Israel and Midian (cf. Nm 31; Jgs 6–8), the relationship is striking, as is the account here in Exodus of good relations between Moses and no less than a Midianite priest.

2:18 Reuel: also called Jethro. Cf. 3:1; 4:18; 18:1.

2:19 An Egyptian: Moses was probably wearing Egyptian dress, or spoke Egyptian to Reuel’s daughters.

2:22 Gershom: the name is explained unscientifically as if it came from the Hebrew word ger, “sojourner, resident alien,” and the Hebrew word sham, “there.” Stranger residing: Hebrew ger, one who seeks and finds shelter and a home away from his or her own people or land.

2:25 God knew: in response to the people's cry, God, mindful of the covenant, looks on their plight and acknowledges firsthand the depth of their suffering (see 3:7). In vv. 23–25, traditionally attributed to the Priestly writer, God is mentioned five times, in contrast to the rest of chaps. 1–2, where God is rarely mentioned. These verses serve as a fitting transition to Moses' call in chap. 3.

3:1–4:17 After the introduction to the narrative in 2:23–25, the commissioning itself falls into three sections: God's appearance under the aspect of a burning bush (3:1–6); the explicit commission (3:7–10); and an extended dialogue between Moses and God, in the course of which Moses receives the revelation of God's personal name. Although in the J source of the Pentateuch people have known and invoked God's personal name in worship since the time of Seth (Gn 4:26), for the E and P sources (see 6:2–4) God first makes this name publicly available here through Moses.

3:1 The mountain of God, Horeb: traditionally, "Horeb" is taken to be an alternate name in E source material and Deuteronomy (e.g., Dt 1:2) for what in J and P is known as Mount Sinai, the goal of the Israelites' journey after leaving Egypt and the site of the covenant God makes with Israel. However, it is not clear that originally the two names reflect the same mountain, nor even that "Horeb" refers originally to a mountain and not simply the dry, ruined region (from Hebrew horeb, "dryness, devastation") around the mountain. Additionally, the position of "Horeb" at the end of the verse may indicate that the identification of the "mountain of God" with Horeb (= Sinai?) represents a later stage in the evolution of the tradition about God's meeting with Moses. The phrase "mountain of God" simply anticipates the divine apparitions which would take place there, both on this occasion and after the Israelites' departure from Egypt; alternatively, it means that the place was already sacred or a place of pilgrimage in pre-Israelite times. In any case, the narrative offers no indications of its exact location.

3:2 The angel of the LORD: Hebrew mal'ak or "messenger" is regularly translated angelos by the Septuagint, from which the English word "angel" is derived, but the Hebrew term lacks connotations now popularly associated with "angel" (such as wings). Although angels frequently assume human form (cf. Gn 18–19), the term is also used to indicate the visual form under which God occasionally appeared and spoke to people, referred to indifferently in some Old Testament texts either as God's "angel," mal'ak, or as God. Cf. Gn 16:7, 13; Ex 14:19, 24–25; Nm 22:22–35; Jgs 6:11–18. The bush: Hebrew seneh, perhaps "thorny bush," occurring only here in vv. 2–4 and in Dt 33:16. Its use here is most likely a wordplay on Sinai (Hebrew sinay), implying a popular etymology for the name of the sacred mountain.

3:6 God of your father: a frequently used epithet in Genesis (along with the variants "my father" and "your father") for God as worshiped by the ancestors. As is known from its usage outside of the Bible in the ancient Near East, it suggests a close, personal relationship between the individual and the particular god in question, who is both a patron and a protector, a god traditionally revered by the individual's family and whose worship is passed down from father to son. The God of Abraham ... Jacob: this precise phrase (only here and in v. 15; 4:5) stresses the continuity between the new revelation to Moses and the earlier religious experience of Israel's ancestors, identifying the God who is now addressing Moses with the God who promised land and numerous posterity to the ancestors. Cf. Mt 22:32; Mk 12:26; Lk 20:37. Afraid to look at God: the traditions about Moses are not uniform in regard to his beholding or not being able to look at God (cf. 24:11; 33:11, 18–23; 34:29–35). Here Moses' reaction is the natural and spontaneous gesture of a person suddenly confronted with a direct experience of God. Aware of his human frailty and the gulf that separates him from the God who is holy, he hides his face. To encounter the divine was to come before an awesome and mysterious power unlike any other a human being might experience and, as such, potentially threatening to one's very identity or existence (see Gn 32:30).

3:8 I have come down: cf. Gn 11:5, 7; 18:21. Flowing with milk and honey: an expression denoting agricultural prosperity, which seems to have been proverbial in its application to the land of Canaan. Cf. Ex 13:5; Nm 13:27; Jos 5:6; Jer 11:5; 32:22; Ez 20:6, 15.

3:11 Who am I: this question is always addressed by an inferior to a superior (to the ruler in 1 Sm 18:18; to God in 2 Sm 7:18 and its parallel, 1 Chr 17:16; 29:14; 2 Chr 2:5). In response to some special opportunity or invitation, the question expresses in a style typical of the ancient Near East the speaker's humility or gratitude or need of further assistance, but never unwillingness or an outright refusal to respond. Instead the question sets the stage for further support from the superior should that be needed (as here).

3:12 Sign: a visible display of the power of God. The ancient notion of a sign from God does not coincide with the modern understanding of "miracle," which suggests some disruption in the laws governing nature. While most any phenomenon can become a vehicle for displaying the purposes and providence of God, here the sign intended to confirm Moses' commission by God seems to be the burning bush itself. Since normally the giving of such a sign would follow the commission rather than precede it (see Jgs 6:11–24), some see Israel's service of God at Sinai after the exodus from Egypt as the confirmatory sign, albeit retroactively. It is more likely, however, that its mention here is intended to establish the present episode with Moses alone as a prefigurement of God's fiery theophany to all Israel on Mount Sinai. Serve God: Hebrew '-b-d, "serve," includes among its meanings both the notion of "serving or working for another" and the notion of "worship." The implication here is that the Israelites' service/worship of God is incompatible with their service to Pharaoh.

3:14 I am who I am: Moses asks in v. 13 for the name of the One speaking to him, but God responds with a wordplay which preserves the utterly mysterious character of the divine being even as it appears to suggest something of the inner meaning of God's name: 'ehyeh "I am" or "I will be(come)" for "Yhwh," the personal name of the God of Israel. While the phrase "I am who I am" resists unraveling, it nevertheless suggests an etymological linking between the name "Yhwh" and an earlier form of the Hebrew verbal root h-y-h "to be." On that basis many have interpreted the name "Yhwh" as a third-person form of the verb meaning "He causes to be, creates," itself perhaps a shortened form of a longer liturgical name such as "(God who) creates (the heavenly armies)." Note in this connection the invocation of Israel's God as "Lord (Yhwh) of Hosts" (e.g., 1 Sm 17:45). In any case, out of reverence for God's proper name, the term Adonai, "my Lord," was later used as a substitute. The word LORD (in small capital letters) indicates that the Hebrew text has the sacred name (Yhwh), the tetragrammaton. The word "Jehovah" arose from a false reading of this name as it is written in the current Hebrew text. The Septuagint has egō eimi ho ōn, "I am the One who is" (ōn being the participle of the verb "to be"). This can be taken as an assertion of God's aseity or self-existence, and has been understood as such by the Church, since the time of the Fathers, as a true expression of God's being, even though it is not precisely the meaning of the Hebrew.

3:22 Articles: probably jewelry.

4:12 Assist you in speaking: lit., "be with your mouth"; cf. v. 15, lit., "be with your mouth and with his mouth."

4:13 Send someone else: lit., "send by means of him whom you will send," that is, "send whom you will."

4:16 Spokesman: lit., "mouth"; Aaron was to serve as a mouthpiece for Moses, as a prophet does for God; hence the relation between Moses and Aaron is compared to that between God and his prophet: Moses "will be as God to," i.e., lit., "will become God for him." Cf. 7:1.

4:17 This staff: probably the same as that of vv. 2–4; but some understand that a new staff is now given by God to Moses.

4:18 Jethro: the Hebrew text has "Jether," apparently a variant form of "Jethro" found in the same verse. To see whether they are still living: Moses did not tell his father-in-law his main reason for returning to Egypt.

4:21 Harden his heart: in the biblical view, the heart, whose actual function in the circulation of blood was unknown, typically performs functions associated today more with the brain than with the emotions. Therefore, while it may be used in connection with various emotional states ranging from joy to sadness, it very commonly designates the seat of intellectual and volitional activities. For God to harden Pharaoh's heart is to harden his resolve against the Israelites' desire to leave. In the ancient world, actions which are out of character are routinely attributed not to the person but to some “outside” superhuman power acting upon the person (Jgs 14:16; 1 Sm 16:10). Uncharacteristically negative actions or states are explained in the same way (1 Sm 16:14). In this instance, the opposition of Pharaoh, in the face of God’s displays of power, would be unintelligible to the ancient Israelites unless he is seen as under some divine constraint. But this does not diminish Pharaoh’s own responsibility. In the anthropology of the ancient Israelites there is no opposition between individual responsibility and God’s sovereignty over all of creation. Cf. Rom 9:17–18.

4:24–26 This story continues to perplex commentators and may have circulated in various forms before finding its place here in Exodus. Particularly troublesome is the unique phrase “spouse of blood.” Nevertheless, v. 26, which apparently comes from the hand of a later commentator on the original story, is intended to offer some clarification. It asserts that when Zipporah used the problematic expression (addressing it either to Moses or her son), she did so with reference to the circumcision performed on her son—the only place in the Bible where this rite is performed by a woman. Whatever the precise meaning of the phrase “spouse of blood,” circumcision is the key to understanding it as well as the entire incident. One may conclude, therefore, that God was angry with Moses for having failed to keep the divine command given to Abraham in Gn 17:10–12 and circumcise his son. Moses’ life is spared when his wife circumcises their son.

4:25 Touching his feet: a euphemism most probably for the male sexual organ (see 2 Kgs 18:27; Is 7:20); whether the genitals of the child (after Zipporah circumcised him) or of Moses (after the circumcision of his son) is not clear.

4:31 Observed ... their affliction: the same phrases used in God’s dialogue with Moses in 3:16–17.

5:1 Hold a feast: the Hebrew verb used here, hagag (“to celebrate a feast or a festival”; see 12:14; 23:14), refers to a community celebration marked above all by a procession to the sanctuary. It is used especially of three major feasts: Unleavened Bread, Pentecost (in 23:16, “the Feast of Harvest,” but customarily “the Feast of Weeks” [Shavuot]), and Succoth/Sukkoth (in 34:16, “the Feast of Ingathering,” but more frequently “of Booths, or Tabernacles,” as in Dt 16:13, 16; 31:10; Lv 23:34; Zec 14:16; passim) and—along with the related noun hag—the Passover in Hag 12:14. See 23:14–18; 34:18–25.

5:2 I do not know the LORD: whether or not he had heard of the Lord, the God of Israel, Pharaoh here refuses to acknowledge the Lord’s authority. See note on 1:8.

5:5 They are already more numerous: a recollection of Pharaoh’s earlier words to his subjects in Exod 1:9.

5:6 The taskmasters of the people and their foremen: the former were higher officials and probably Egyptians; the latter were lower officials (perhaps recordkeepers or clerks), chosen from the Israelites themselves. Cf. v. 14.

5:7 Straw was mixed with clay to give sun-dried bricks greater cohesion and durability.

5:10 Thus says Pharaoh: the standard formula for prophetic oracles, but with Pharaoh rather than the Lord as the subject. This heightens the sense of personal conflict between Pharaoh, who acts as if he were God, and the Lord, whose claims are spurned by Pharaoh.

5:15 Cried out to Pharaoh: the Hebrew verb translated “cry out” and its related noun are normally used of appeals to God by Moses (8:8; 14:15; 15:25; 17:4), the people (3:7, 9; 14:10), or an oppressed individual (22:22, 26). Here, by implication, these minor Israelite officials appeal to Pharaoh as if he were their God. See v. 10.

6:1 By a strong hand: by God’s hand or Pharaoh’s hand? The Hebrew is ambiguous; although it may be an allusion to God’s hand of 3:19–20, both interpretations are possible.

6:2–7:7 According to the standard source criticism of the Pentateuch, 6:2–7:7 represents a Priestly version of the JE call narrative in 3:1–4:17. But in context the present account does more than simply repeat the earlier passage. See note below.

6:3 God the Almighty: in Hebrew, El Shaddai. This traditional translation does not have a firm philological basis. But by my name ... I did not make myself known to them: although the text implies that the name LORD was unknown previously, in context the emphasis in the passage falls on the understanding of God that comes with knowledge of the name. In this way God responds to the worsening plight of the Israelites and Moses' complaint in 5:23 that God has done nothing at all to rescue them.

6:12 Poor speaker: lit., “uncircumcised of lips”: a metaphor expressing the hindrance of good communication expressed as “slow of speech and tongue” (4:10). Also used as a metaphor for impeded “heart” (Lv 26:41; Dt 10:16).

6:14 The purpose of the genealogy here is to give the line from which Moses and Aaron sprang, with special emphasis placed on the line of Aaron. Reuben and Simeon are mentioned first because, as older brothers of Levi, their names occur before his in the genealogy.

6:20 His aunt: more exactly, “his father’s sister.” Later on such a marriage was forbidden. Cf. Lv 18:12. Hence, the Greek and Latin versions render here, “his cousin.”

6:25 Phinehas: according to Nm 25:13, Phinehas was given by God “the covenant of an everlasting priesthood” because of his zeal for God when the Israelites committed apostasy by worshiping the Baal of Peor in the plains of Moab (see Nm 25:1–18).

7:1 Prophet: Hebrew nabi, one who can legitimately speak for God and in God’s name to another or others. Just as God spoke to Moses, so Moses will speak to Aaron, who will be a “prophet” to Pharaoh. Cf. 4:16.

7:14–12:30 After a brief preface (vv. 8–13) drawn from the Priestly source, a narrative depicting the series of ten disasters that God brings upon Pharaoh because of his stubbornness ensues. Although most of these disasters, known traditionally as the “ten plagues of Egypt,” could be interpreted as naturally occurring phenomena, they are clearly represented by the biblical authors as extraordinary events indicative of God’s intervention on behalf of Israel and as occurring exactly according to Moses’ commands. See Ps 78:43–51 and 105:27–36 for poetic versions of these plagues, which also differ significantly from the account here.

7:14 Pharaoh is obstinate: lit., “Pharaoh’s heart is heavy” (kabed); thus not precisely the same Hebrew idiom as found in vv. 13 and 22, “stubborn,” lit., “Pharaoh’s heart was hard(ened)” (hazaq) (cf. the related idiom with Pharaoh as the object, e.g., 4:21).

7:15 The staff that turned into a snake: the allusion is to 4:2–4 rather than 7:9–12. The latter comes from the hand of the Priestly writer and features Aaron—with his staff—as the principal actor.

7:22 The Egyptian magicians did the same: this is an exaggeration, presumably influenced by the similar statement in v. 11; whereas the magicians could turn their staffs into snakes after Aaron had done so, after Aaron’s sign there should not have been any water in Egypt still unchanged to blood for the magicians “to do the same” with it (cf. v. 24).

8:12, 17 Gnats, flies: it is uncertain what species of troublesome insects are meant here in vv. 12–14 and then in vv. 17–27, the identification as “gnat” (vv. 12–14) and as “fly” (vv. 17–27) being based on the rendering of the Septuagint. Others suggest “lice” in vv. 12–14, while rabbinic literature renders Hebrew ‘arob in vv. 17–27 as a “mixture of wild animals.” In the Hebrew of the Old Testament, the word occurs only in the context of the plagues (see also Ps 78:45 and 105:31).

8:15 The finger of God: previously the magicians had, for the most part, been able to replicate the signs and wonders Moses performed to manifest God’s power—turning their staffs into snakes (7:11–12), turning water into blood (7:22), and producing frogs to overrun the land of Egypt (8:3). But now for the first time they are unable to compete, and confess a power greater than their own is at work. Cf. Lk 11:20.

8:19 A distinction: while some uncertainty surrounds the Hebrew here rendered as “distinction,” it is clear that now the Israelites begin to be set apart from the Egyptians, a separation that reaches a climax in the death of the Egyptian firstborn (11:7).

8:22 Perhaps Moses is deceiving the Pharaoh much like the “God-fearing” midwives (1:16–20), although ancient historians writing about Egypt some time after the period in which the exodus is set do note Egyptian prohibitions on sacrificing cattle or slaughtering sacred animals. As such, the Egyptians might well have fiercely resented certain sacrificial in Egypt, as the representations of various deities.

9:9 Boils: the exact nature of the disease is not clear. Semitic cognates, for example, suggest the Hebrew root means “to be hot” and thus point to some sort of inflammation. The fact that soot taken from the kiln is the agent of the disease would point in the same direction. See further Lv 13:18–23; Dt 28:35; 2 Kgs 20:7.

9:16 To show you: some ancient versions such as the Septuagint read, “to show through you.” Cf. Rom 9:17.

9:28 Thunder: lit., “divine voices,” “voices of God,” or the like.

10:10 The Lord help you ...: lit., “May the Lord be with you in the same way as I let you ...”; a sarcastic blessing intended as a curse.

10:11 Pharaoh realized that if the men alone went they would have to return to their families. He suspected that the Hebrews had no intention of returning.

10:13 East wind: coming across the desert from Arabia, the strong east wind brings Egypt the burning sirocco and, at times, locusts. Cf. 14:21.

10:19 The Red Sea: the traditional translation, cf. Septuagint and other Versions; but the Hebrew literally means “sea of reeds” or “reedy sea,” which could probably be applied to a number of bodies of shallow water, most likely somewhat to the north of the present deep Red Sea.

10:21 Darkness: commentators note that at times a storm from the south, called the khamsin, blackens the sky of Egypt with sand from the Sahara; the dust in the air is then so thick that the darkness can, in a sense, “be felt.” But such observations should not obscure the fact that for the biblical author what transpires in each of the plagues is clearly something extraordinary, an event which witnesses to the unrivaled power of Israel’s God.

10:26 Service: as is obvious from v. 25, the service in question here is the offering of sacrifice. The continued use of the verb ‘bd “to serve” and related nouns for both the people’s bondage in Egypt and their subsequent service to the Lord dramatizes the point of the conflict between Pharaoh and the God of Israel, who demands from the Israelites an attachment which is exclusive. See Lv 25:55.

11:5 Handmill: two pieces of stone were used to grind grain. A smaller upper stone was moved back and forth over a larger stationary stone. This menial work was done by slaves and captives.

12:1–20 This section, which interrupts the narrative of the exodus, contains later legislation concerning the celebration of Passover.

12:2 As if to affirm victory over Pharaoh and sovereignty over the Israelites, the Lord proclaims a new calendar for Israel. This month: Abib, the month of “ripe grain.” Cf. 13:4; 23:15; 34:18; Dt 16:1. It occurred near the vernal equinox, March–April. Later it was known by the Babylonian name of Nisan. Cf. Neh 2:1; Est 3:7.

12:4 The lamb’s cost: some render the Hebrew, “reckon for the lamb the number of persons required to eat it.” Cf. v. 10.

12:15 Cut off: a common Priestly term, not easily reduced to a simple English equivalent, since its usage appears to involve a number of associated punishments, some or all of which may come into play in any instance of the term’s use. These included the excommunication of the offender from the Israelite community, the premature death of the offender, the eventual eradication of the offender’s posterity, and finally the loss by the offender of all ancestral holdings.

12:22 Hyssop: a plant with many small woody branches that was convenient for a sprinkling rite.

12:32 Bless me, too: in a final and humiliating admission of defeat, once again Pharaoh asks Moses to intercede for him (cf. 8:24). However, Pharaoh may be speaking sarcastically.

12:38 Mixed ancestry: not simply descendants of Jacob; cf. Nm 11:4; Lv 24:10–11.

12:40 In Egypt: according to the Septuagint and the Samaritan Pentateuch “in Canaan and Egypt,” thus reckoning from the time of Abraham. Cf. Gal 3:17.

12:46 You shall not break any of its bones: the application of these words to Jesus on the cross (Jn 19:36) sees the Paschal lamb as a prophetic type of Christ, sacrificed to free men and women from the bondage of sin. Cf. also 1 Cor 5:7; 1 Pt 1:19.

12:49 One law: the first appearance of the word torah, traditionally translated as “law,” though it can have the broader meaning of “teaching” or “instruction.” Elsewhere, too, it is said that the “alien” is to be accorded the same treatment as the Israelite (e.g., Lv 19:34).

13:4 Abib: lit., “ear (of grain),” the old Canaanite name for this month; Israel later called it “Nisan.” It was the first month in their liturgical calendar (cf. Ex 12:2).

13:5 The following service: the celebration of the feast of Unleavened Bread now constitutes the Israelites’ service, in contrast to the “service” they performed for Pharaoh as his slaves.

13:9 Sign: while here observance of the feast of Unleavened Bread is likened only metaphorically to a physical sign of one’s piety that can be worn as a kind of badge in commemoration of the exodus, from ancient times Jews have seen in this verse also the basis for the wearing of phylacteries. These are small receptacles for copies of biblical verses which Jewish men bind to the arms and forehead as a kind of mnemonic device for the observance of the Law.

13:17 By way of the Philistines’ land: the most direct route from Egypt to Palestine, along the shore of the Mediterranean.

13:21 A column of cloud ... a column of fire: probably one and the same extraordinary phenomenon, a central nucleus of fire surrounded by smoke; only at night was its luminous nature visible; cf. 40:38.

14:2 Pi-hahiroth ... Migdol ... Baal-zephon: these places have not been definitively identified. Even the relative position of Pi-hahiroth and Baal-zephon is not clear; perhaps the former was on the west shore of the sea, where the Israelites were, and the latter on the opposite shore.

14:7 Officers: cf. 1 Kgs 9:22; Ez 23:15. The Hebrew word shalish, rendered in 1 Kgs 9:22 as “adjutant,” has yet to have its meaning convincingly established. Given the very possible etymological connection with the number “three,” others suggest the translation “three-man crew” or, less likely, the “third man in the chariot” although Egyptian chariots carried two-man crews. The author of the text may have been describing the chariots of his experience without direct historical knowledge of Egyptian ways.

14:9 Horsemen: the usage here may be anachronistic, since horsemen, or cavalry, play a part in warfare only at the end of the second millennium B.C.

14:19 Angel of God: Hebrew mal’ak ha’elohim (Septuagint ho angelos tou theou) here refers not to an independent spiritual being but to God’s power at work in the world; corresponding to the column of cloud/fire, the expression more clearly preserves a sense of distance between God and God’s creatures. The two halves of the verse are parallel and may come from different narrative sources.

14:20 The reading of the Hebrew text here is uncertain. The image is of a darkly glowing storm cloud, ominously bright, keeping the two camps apart.

15:1–21 This poem, regarded by many scholars as one of the oldest compositions in the Bible, was once an independent work. It has been inserted at this important juncture in the large narrative of Exodus to celebrate God’s saving power, having miraculously delivered the people from their enemies, and ultimately leading them to the promised land.

Although the victory it describes over the Egyptians at the sea bears a superficial resemblance in v. 8 to the preceding depiction of the water standing like a wall (14:22), the poem (as opposed to the following prose verse, v. 19) suggests a different version of the victory at sea than that found in chap. 14. There is no splitting of the sea in an act reminiscent of the Lord’s combat at creation with the sea monsters Rahab and Leviathan (Jb 9:13;

26:12; Ps 74:13–14; 89:11; Is 51:9–10); nor is there mention of an east wind driving the waters back so that the Israelites can cross. In this version it is by means of a storm at sea, caused by a ferocious blast from his nostrils, that the Lord achieves a decisive victory against Pharaoh and his army (vv. 1–12). The second half of the poem (vv. 13–18) describes God’s guidance into the promised land.

15:4 Red Sea: the traditional translation of the Hebrew yam suph, which actually means “Sea of Reeds” or “reedy sea.” The location is uncertain, though in view of the route taken by the Israelites from Egypt to Sinai, it could not have been the Red Sea, which is too far south. It was probably a smaller body of water south of the Gulf of Suez. The term occurs also in Exodus at 10:19; 13:18; and 23:31.

15:13 Love: the very important Hebrew term hesed carries a variety of nuances depending on context: love, kindness, faithfulness. It is often rendered “steadfast love.” It implies a relationship that generates an obligation and therefore is at home in a covenant context. Cf. 20:6.

15:16 Passed over: an allusion to the crossing of the Jordan River (cf. Jos 3–5), written as if the entry into the promised land had already occurred. This verse suggests that at one time there was a ritual enactment of the conquest at a shrine near the Jordan River which included also a celebration of the victory at the sea.

15:21 She responded: Miriam’s refrain echoes the first verse of this song and was probably sung as an antiphon after each verse.

15:22 Red Sea: see note on Ex 15:4.

16:1 On the fifteenth day of the second month: just one full month after their departure from Egypt. Cf. 12:2, 51; Nm 33:3–4. The Septuagint takes the date to be the beginning of the Israelites’ grumbling.

16:4 Bread from heaven: as a gift from God, the manna is said to come down from the sky. Cf. Ps 78:24–25; Wis 16:20. Perhaps it was similar to a natural substance that is still found in small quantities on the Sinai peninsula—probably the honey-like resin from the tamarisk tree—but here it is, at least in part, clearly an extraordinary sign of God’s providence. With reference to Jn 6:32, 49–52, the Christian tradition has regarded the manna as a type of the Eucharist. Test: as the text stands, it seems to leave open the question whether the test concerns trusting in God to provide them with the daily gift of food or observing the sabbath instructions.

16:15 What is this: the Hebrew man hu is thus rendered by the ancient versions, which understood the phrase as a popular etymology of the Hebrew word man, “manna”; but some render man hu, “This is manna.”

16:16 Omer: a dry measure of approximately two quarts.

16:18 Paul cites this passage as an example of equitable sharing (2 Cor 8:15).

16:31 Coriander seed: small, round, aromatic seeds of bright brown color; the comparison, therefore, refers merely to the size and shape, not to the taste or color of the manna.

16:33 Jar: according to the Greek translation, which is followed in Heb 9:4, this was a golden vessel.

16:34 The covenant: i.e., the ark of the covenant, in which were placed the two tablets of the Ten Commandments. Cf. 25:16, 21–22.

16:36 Omer ... ephah: see note on Is 5:10.

17:7 Massah ... Meribah: Hebrew words meaning, respectively, “the place of the test” and “the place of strife, of quarreling.”

17:8 Amalek: the Amalekites appear in the Bible as early inhabitants of southern Palestine and the Sinai peninsula prior to the appearance of the Israelites in the region. Cf. Nm 24:20.

17:15 Yahweh-nissi: meaning, “the Lord is my banner.”

17:16 Take up the banner of the LORD: lit., “a hand on the LORD’s banner,” apparently a war cry for the Israelite troops in the conduct of Holy War; however, the Hebrew text is difficult to interpret.

18:2 Moses had sent her back: a later gloss which attempts to harmonize Zipporah’s presence with Jethro here in this story and the account of Moses’ return to Egypt with Zipporah in 4:20.

18:5 The allusion to meeting Moses encamped at the mountain of God, prior to the arrival of the Israelites at Sinai in chap. 19, might well suggest a different narrative context for this story from an earlier stage of the biblical tradition’s development. It is noteworthy that immediately after the Sinai pericope (Ex 19:1–Nm 10:28), recounting the theophany at Sinai and the giving of the law, the narrative of Israel’s march through the wilderness resumes with an apparent doublet of the visit by Moses’ father-in-law (Nm 10:29–32).

18:12 That a non-Israelite, such as Jethro, should bless Israel’s God by way of acknowledging what God had done for Israel (v. 10) is not entirely surprising; but the Midianite priest’s sacrifice to the God of Israel, including his presiding over a sacrificial meal with Aaron and the elders of Israel, is unusual, suggesting that he was himself already a worshiper of Yhwh, Israel’s God. Note further in this connection the role Jethro takes in the following narrative (vv. 13–27) in instituting a permanent judiciary for the Israelites. Burnt offering: a sacrifice wholly burnt up as an offering to God.

18:19–20 By emphasizing Moses’ mediatorial role for the people before God in regard to God’s statutes and instructions, this story about the institution of Israel’s judiciary prepares for Moses’ role in the upcoming revelation of the law at Sinai.

18:23 And God so commands you: i.e., and God approves.

19:2 Apparently from a different source (P) than v. 1, which notes the date, v. 2 from the J source includes a second notice of the arrival in the wilderness of Sinai. The Israelites now will be camped at Sinai from this point on all the way to Nm 10:10. This is a striking indication of the centrality and importance of the Sinai narrative in the overall composition of the Pentateuch.

19:5 Covenant: while covenants between individuals and between nations are ubiquitous in the ancient Near East, the adaptation of this concept to express the relationship that will henceforth characterize God’s relationship to Israel represents an important innovation of biblical faith. Other gods might “choose” nations to fulfill a special destiny or role in the world; but only Israel’s God is bound to a people by covenant. Thereby Israel’s identity as a people is put upon a foundation that does not depend upon the vicissitudes of Israelite statehood or the normal trappings of national existence. Israel will be a covenant people.

19:6 Kingdom of priests: inasmuch as this phrase is parallel to “holy nation,” it most likely means that the whole Israelite nation is set apart from other nations and so consecrated to God, or holy, in the way priests are among the people (cf. Is 61:6; 1 Pt 2:5, 9).

19:13 May they go up on the mountain: in vv. 12–13a, a later Priestly reshaping of an earlier version of the instructions governing how the people are to prepare for the encounter with God (vv. 10–11, 13b), the people are to be restrained from ascending the mountain, which is suffused with the holiness of God and too dangerous for their approach. In the earlier version, as v. 13b suggests, the sanctified people must come near, in order to hear God speaking with Moses (v. 9) and in this way receive confirmation of his special relationship with God.

19:16 Shofar: a ram’s horn used like a trumpet for signaling both for liturgical and military purposes.

19:20–25 At this point the Priestly additions of vv. 12–13a are elaborated with further Priestly instructions, which include the priests’ sanctifying themselves apart from the people (v. 22) and Aaron accompanying Moses to the top of the mountain (v. 24).

20:1–17 The precise numbering and division of these precepts into “ten commandments” is somewhat uncertain. Traditionally among Catholics and Lutherans vv. 1–6 are considered as only one commandment, and v. 17 as two. The Anglican, Greek Orthodox, and Reformed churches count vv. 1–6 as two, and v. 17 as one. Cf. Dt 5:6–21. The traditional designation as “ten” is not found here but in 34:28 (and also Dt 4:13 and 10:4), where these precepts are alluded to literally as “the ten words.” That they were originally written on two tablets appears in Ex 32:15–16; 34:28–29; Dt 4:13; 10:2–4.

The present form of the commands is a product of a long development, as is clear from the fact that the individual precepts vary considerably in length and from the slightly different formulation of Dt 5:6–21 (see especially vv. 12–15 and 21). Indeed they represent a mature formulation of a traditional morality. Why this specific selection of commands should be set apart is not entirely clear. None of them is unique in the Old Testament and all of the laws which follow are also from God and equally binding on the Israelites. Even so, this collection represents a privileged expression of God’s moral demands on Israel and is here set apart from the others as a direct, unmediated communication of God to the Israelites and the basis of the covenant being concluded on Sinai.

20:3 Beside me: this commandment is traditionally understood as an outright denial of the existence of other gods except the God of Israel; however, in the context of the more general prohibitions in vv. 4–5, v. 3 is, more precisely, God’s demand for Israel’s exclusive worship and allegiance.

The Hebrew phrase underlying the translation “beside me” is, nonetheless, problematic and has been variously translated, e.g., “except me,” “in addition to me,” “in preference to me,” “in defiance of me,” and “in front of me” or “before my face.” The latter translation, with its concrete, spatial nuances, has suggested to some that the prohibition once sought to exclude from the Lord’s sanctuary the cult images or idols of other gods, such as the asherah, or stylized sacred tree of life, associated with the Canaanite goddess Asherah (34:13). Over the course of time, as vv. 4–5 suggest, the original scope of v. 3 was expanded.

20:4 Or a likeness of anything: compare this formulation to that found in Dt 5:8, which understands this phrase and the following phrases as specifications of the prohibited idol (Hebrew pesel), which usually refers to an image that is carved or hewn rather than cast.

20:5 Jealous: demanding exclusive allegiance. Inflicting punishment ... the third and fourth generation: the intended emphasis is on God’s mercy by the contrast between punishment and mercy (“to the thousandth generation”—v. 6). Other Old Testament texts repudiate the idea of punishment devolving on later generations (cf. Dt 24:16; Jer 31:29–30; Ez 18:2–4). Yet it is known that later generations may suffer the punishing effects of sins of earlier generations, but not the guilt.

20:7 In vain: i.e., to no good purpose, a general framing of the prohibition which includes swearing falsely, especially in the context of a legal proceeding, but also goes beyond it (cf. Lv 24:16; Prv 30:8–9).

20:8 Keep it holy: i.e., to set it apart from the other days of the week, in part, as the following verse explains, by not doing work that is ordinarily done in the course of a week. The special importance of this command can be seen in the fact that, together with vv. 9–11, it represents the longest of the Decalogue’s precepts.

20:11 Here, in a formulation which reflects Priestly theology, the veneration of the sabbath is grounded in God’s own hallowing of the sabbath in creation. Compare 31:13; Dt 5:15.

20:12–17 The Decalogue falls into two parts: the preceding precepts refer to God, the following refer primarily to one's fellow Israelites.

20:13 Kill: as frequent instances of killing in the context of war or certain crimes (see vv. 12–18) demonstrate in the Old Testament, not all killing comes within the scope of the commandment. For this reason, the Hebrew verb translated here as “kill” is often understood as “murder,” although it is in fact used in the Old Testament at times for unintentional acts of killing (e.g., Dt 4:41; Jos 20:3) and for legally sanctioned killing (Nm 35:30). The term may originally have designated any killing of another Israelite, including acts of manslaughter, for which the victim's kin could exact vengeance. In the present context, it denotes the killing of one Israelite by another, motivated by hatred or the like (Nm 35:20; cf. Hos 6:9).

20:22–23:33 This collection consists of the civil and religious laws, both apodictic (absolute) and casuistic (conditional), which were given to the people through the mediation of Moses. They will be written down by Moses in 24:4.

20:24 Where I cause my name to be invoked: i.e., at the sacred site where God wishes to be worshiped. Dt 12 will demand the centralization of all sacrificial worship in one place chosen by God.

21:1 Ordinances: judicial precedents to be used in settling questions of law and custom. More than half of the civil and religious laws in this collection (20:22–23:33), designated in 24:7 as “the book of the covenant,” have parallels in the cuneiform laws of the ancient Near East. It is clear that Israel participated in a common legal culture with its neighbors.

21:2 Slave: an Israelite could become a slave of another Israelite as a means of paying a debt, or an Israelite could be born into slavery due to a parent's status as a slave. Here a time limit is prescribed for such slavery; other stipulations (vv. 20–21, 26–27) tried to reduce the evils of slavery, but slavery itself is not condemned in the Old Testament.

21:6 To God: the ritual of the piercing of the slave's ear, which signified a lifetime commitment to the master, probably took place at the door of the household, where God as protector of the household was called upon as a witness. Another possible location for the ritual would have been the door of the sanctuary, where God or judges would have witnessed the slave's promise of lifetime obedience to his master.

21:8 Designated her: intended her as a wife of second rank.

21:12–14 Unintentional homicide is to be punished differently from premeditated, deliberate murder. One who kills unintentionally can seek asylum by grasping the horns of the altar at the local sanctuary. In later Israelite history, when worship was centralized in Jerusalem, cities throughout the realm were designated as places of refuge. Apparently the leaders of the local community were to determine whether or not the homicide was intentional.

21:15 The verb used most often signifies a violent, sometimes deadly, attack. The severe penalty assigned is intended to safeguard the integrity of the family.

21:17 Curses: not merely an angrily uttered expletive at one's parents, but a solemn juridical formula of justifiable retribution which was considered to be legally binding and guaranteed by God.

21:22–25 This law of talion is applied here in the specific case of a pregnant woman who, as an innocent bystander, is injured by two fighting men. The law of talion is not held up as a general principle to be applied throughout the book of the covenant. (But see note on Lv 24:19–20.) Here this principle of rigorous accountability aimed to prevent injury to a woman about to give birth by apparently requiring the assailant to have his own wife injured as she was about to bring new life into his family. However, it is debatable whether talion was ever understood or applied literally in Israel. In his Sermon on the Mount, Jesus challenges his audience to find a deeper form of justice than the supposed equilibrium offered by talion (Mt 5:38–40).

21:30 Ransom: the amount of money or material goods required to restore the relationship between the relatives of the victim and the negligent owner of the goring ox.

22:1–2 If a thief is caught: this seems to be a fragment of what was once a longer law on housebreaking, which has been inserted here into the middle of a law on stealing animals. At night the householder would be justified in killing a burglar outright, but not so in the daytime, when the burglar could more easily be caught alive. He must make full restitution: this stood originally immediately after 21:37.

22:7 Brought to God: either within the household or at the sanctuary, the owner of the house is required to take an oath before God.

22:16 The bride price for virgins: fifty shekels according to Dt 22:29.

22:27 Despise God: a turning away from God's authority and so failing to honor God (cf. 1 Sm 2:30).

23:14 These three feasts—Passover/Unleavened Bread, Weeks (Pentecost), and Booths (Tabernacles or Succoth/Sukkoth)—are also listed in 34:18–26; Lv 23; Dt 16.

23:15 Appear before me: the original expression was “see my face”; so also in several other places, as 23:17; 34:23–24; Dt 16:16; 31:11.

23:19 Boil a young goat in its mother's milk: this command, repeated in 34:26 and Dt 14:21, is difficult to understand. It may originate from a taboo that forbade killing the young that were still nursing from the mother, or that forbade the mixing of life and death: the slaughtered young goat with the milk that previously had nourished its life. The Jewish dietary custom of keeping meat and dairy products separate is based on this command.

23:21 My authority is within him: lit., “My name is within him.”

23:24 Sacred stones: objects that symbolized the presence of Canaanite deities. In general, standing stones served as memorials for deities, persons, or significant events such as military victories or covenant-making. See 24:4.

23:28 Hornets: the Hebrew sir'ah is a disputed term, but according to ancient interpreters it refers to hornets that were unleashed against the enemy to sting them and cause panic (cf. Dt 7:20; Jos 24:12; Wis 12:8). Others associate the word with plagues or troublesome afflictions.

23:31 The sea of the Philistines: the Mediterranean. Only in the time of David and Solomon did the territory of Israel come near to reaching such distant borders.

24:4 Sacred stones: stone shafts or slabs, erected as symbols of the fact that each of the twelve tribes had entered into this covenant with God; see 23:24; Gn 28:18.

24:11 They saw God: the ancients thought that the sight of God would bring instantaneous death. Cf. 33:20; Gn 16:13; 32:31; Jgs 6:22–23; 13:22. Ate and drank: partook of the sacrificial meal.

25:5 Tahash: perhaps a kind of specially finished leather. The Greek and Latin versions took it for the color hyacinth.

25:10 Cubits: the distance between the elbow and tip of the middle finger of an average-size person, about eighteen inches. The dimensions of the ark of the covenant were approximately 3 3/4 feet long, 2 1/4 feet wide, and 2 1/4 feet high.

25:17 Cover: the Hebrew term, kapporet, has been connected with kippur, as in the feast of Yom Kippur or Day of Atonement (Lv 16; 23:26–32): hence, influenced by the Greek and Latin versions, and Luther's German, English translations have rendered it “propitiatory,” “mercy seat,” and the like.

25:18–20 Cherubim: probably in the form of humanheaded winged lions. The cherubim over the ark formed the throne for the invisible Lord. Cf. Ps 80:2. For a more detailed description of the somewhat different cherubim in the Temple of Solomon, see 1 Kgs 6:23–28; 2 Chr 3:10–13.

25:25 A frame: probably placed near the bottom of the legs to keep them steady. The golden table of Herod's Temple is pictured thus on the Arch of Titus.

25:29–30 The plates held the showbread, that is, the holy bread which was placed upon the table every sabbath as an offering to God, and was later eaten by the priests. The cups held the incense which was strewn upon the bread. Cf. Lv 24:5–9. The libation wine was poured from the pitchers into the bowls. All these vessels were kept on the golden table.

25:31 Menorah: this traditional lampstand is still used today in Jewish liturgy.

25:33 In keeping with the arrangement of the ornaments on the shaft, the three sets of ornaments on each branch were probably so placed that one was at the top and the other two equally spaced along the length of the branch. Knob: the cupshaped seed capsule at the base of a flower.

25:34–35 Of the four ornaments on the shaft, one was at the top and one was below each of the three sets of side branches.

25:37 The lamps were probably shaped like small boats, with the wick at one end; the end with the wick was turned toward the front of the menorah.

25:38 Trays: small receptacles for the burnt-out wicks.

25:39 Talent: Heb. kikkar. The largest unit of weight used in the Bible, equivalent to 3,000 shekels (see 38:24). It is difficult to be precise about biblical weights; the Israelite talent may have weighed between 75–80 pounds.

26:1 Sheets: strips of tapestry, woven of white linen, the colored threads being used for the cherubim which were embroidered on them. These sheets were stretched across the top of the tabernacle to form a roof, their free ends hanging down inside the framework that formed the walls.

26:7 Tent: the cloth made of sheets of goat hair to cover the tabernacle.

26:9 Half the width of the end strip was folded back at the front of the tabernacle, thus leaving another half-strip to hang down at the rear. Cf. v. 12.

26:17 Arms: lit., “hands.” According to some, they served as “tongue and groove” to mortise the structural elements; according to others, they were pegs that fitted into sockets in the pedestals.

26:32 Hooks: probably placed near the tops of the columns, to hold the rope from which the veils and curtains hung.

26:36 Variegated: without definite designs such as the cherubim on the inner veil.

27:2 Horns: the horn of a ram, goat or ox is a common Old Testament figure for strength and dignity; they represent the divine character of the altar itself or the deity worshiped there.

27:4 Grating: it is not clear whether this was flush with the altar or at some small distance from it; in the latter case the space between the altar and the grating would be filled with stones and serve as a platform around the altar, which would otherwise be too high for the priest to reach conveniently.

27:8 Hollow: probably filled with earth or stones when in use. Cf. 20:24–25.

28:3 Artisans ... endowed with skill: lit., “wise of heart,” and “filled with a spirit of wisdom.” In Hebrew wisdom includes practical skills. Cf. 35:35; 36:1–2.

28:6 Ephod: this Hebrew word is retained in the translation because it is the technical term for a peculiar piece of the priestly vestments, the exact nature of which is uncertain. It seems to have been a sort of apron that hung from the shoulders of the priest by shoulder straps (v. 7) and was tied around his waist by the loose ends of the attached belt (v. 8).

28:15–30 Breastpiece: an approximately nine-inch square, pocketlike receptacle for holding the Urim and Thummim (v. 30). It formed an integral part of the ephod, to which it was attached by an elaborate system of rings and chains. Both the ephod and its breastpiece were made of brocaded linen. Span: Heb. zeret, the distance between the top of the little finger and the thumb; one half a cubit, approximately nine inches.

28:17–20 The translation of the Hebrew names of some of these gems is quite conjectural.

28:30 Urim and Thummim: both the meaning of these Hebrew words and the exact nature of the objects so designated are uncertain. They were apparently lots of some kind which were drawn or cast by the priest to ascertain God’s decision on particular questions. Hence, the pocket in which they were kept was called “the breastpiece of decision.”

28:41 Install them: lit., “fill their hands,” a technical expression used for the installation of priests.

29:22 Fatty tail: the thick layer of fat surrounding the tails of sheep and rams bred in the Middle East. It is regarded as a choice food. Cf. Lv 3:9.

29:24–26 Elevated offering: the portions of a communion offering, brisket and right thigh, which the officiating priest raised in the presence of the Lord. They were reserved for Aaron and his sons.

29:27–30 These verses are a parenthetical interruption of the installation ritual; v. 31 belongs logically immediately after v. 26.

29:36–37 Purify the altar: the purpose of the purification offering here is to cleanse, or purify, the newly constructed altar of any defilement resulting from presumably minor and inadvertent sins, but the text is not explicit about what the offenses were or who committed them. So various theories have been proposed to explain the cause of the altar's contamination. Note, however, that the offering appears to be demanded of Aaron and his sons; they are the ones who lay hands upon it (v. 10).

29:38–42 A parenthesis inserted into the rubrics for consecrating the altar; v. 43 belongs directly after v. 37.

29:40 Hin: see note on Ez 45:24.

31:2 Singled out: lit., “called by name”; cf. 35:30.

31:10 The service cloths: so the Greek. They were perhaps the colored cloths mentioned in Nm 4:4–15.

31:14–15 For the distinction between work proscribed on certain festivals and weekly Sabbaths, see note on Lv 23:3.

32:4–5 Who brought you ... a feast of the Lord: it seems that the golden calf was intended as an image, not of another god, but of the Lord, whose strength was symbolized by the strength of a young bull. The Israelites, however, had been forbidden to represent the Lord under any visible form. Cf. 20:4. In the tenth century Jeroboam made golden calves for the shrines at Bethel and Dan, presumably to function as thrones for the Lord as the ark did in Jerusalem (see 1 Kgs 12:27–30).

32:11–13 Moses uses three arguments to persuade the Lord to remain faithful to the Sinai covenant even though the people have broken it: (1) they are God's own people, redeemed with God's great power; (2) God's reputation will suffer if they are destroyed; (3) the covenant with Abraham still stands. The Lord's change of mind is a testimony to Israel's belief in the power of intercessory prayer.

32:20 The water: according to Dt 9:21, this was the stream that flowed down Mount Sinai.

32:21–24 Aaron attempts to persuade Moses not to act in anger, just as Moses persuaded the Lord. He also shifts the blame from himself to the people.

32:29 Installed as priests: lit., “fill your hands,” a term for the ordination of priests (see 28:41; 29:9, 29, 33, 35; Nm 3:3). Because of their zeal for the true worship of the Lord, the Levites were chosen to be special ministers of the ritual service.

32:32 The book that you have written: a symbolic reference to the list of God's faithful people.

33:12 Intimate friend: lit., “know by name.” The root word meaning “know” or “make known” appears four times in vv. 12–13.

33:14 I myself: lit., “my face,” that is, “my presence.” The making of the calf (32:1–4) is an attempt to control the Lord's presence. In response the Lord refuses to accompany the people (33:3) until Moses persuades him.

33:20 No one can see me and live: reflecting the tradition that to see God meant instant death. This is contradicted by the statements that Hagar (Gn 16:13), Jacob (Gn 32:31), and Manoah and his wife (Jgs 13:22) all “see God” and yet live (see also Ex 24:10–11).

34:1 Words: a common term for commandments, especially the Decalogue (see v. 28). In v. 27 “words” connotes the commands given in vv. 11–26.

34:6 Gracious ... fidelity: this succinct poetic description of God is an often-repeated statement of belief (see Nm 14:18; Ps 103:8; 145:8; Jl 2:13; Jon 4:2). All the terms describe God's relationship to the covenant people.

34:10 Never before done: lit., “created.” The verb used here (Heb. bara') is predicated only of God (see Gn 1:1, 21, 27; Ps 51:12). These wonders are a new creation and can be performed only by God.

34:13 Asherah was the name of a Canaanite goddess. In her honor wooden poles (asherot) were erected, just as stone pillars (massebot) were erected in honor of the god Baal. Both were placed near the altar in a Canaanite shrine.

34:14 Jealous: see note on 20:5. Some, by a slight emendation, render, “The Lord is jealous for his name.” Cf. Ez 39:25.

34:22 Feast of Weeks: the festival of thanksgiving for the harvest, celebrated seven weeks or fifty days after the beginning of the harvest. It was also called Pentecost (fiftieth) and coincided with the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, fifty days after the offering of the first fruits; cf. Lv 23:10–11; Dt 16:9. Feast of the Ingathering: feast of Booths.

34:29 Radiant: the Hebrew word translated “radiant” is spelled like the term for “horns.” Thus the artistic tradition of portraying Moses with horns.

38:8 The reflecting surface of ancient mirrors was usually of polished bronze. The women who served: cf. 1 Sm 2:22.

40:2 On the first day of the first month: almost a year after the departure of the Israelites from Egypt. Cf. v. 17.

The name “Leviticus” was given to the third book of the Pentateuch by the ancient Greek translators because a good part of this book deals with concerns of the priests, who are of the tribe of Levi.

The book mainly treats cultic matters (i.e., sacrifices and offerings, purity and holiness, the priesthood, the operation of the sanctuary, and feast days) but is also interested in various behavioral, ethical, and economic issues (e.g., sexual practices, idolatrous worship, treatment of others, the sale of land, slavery). The goal of the laws is not merely legislative. For the most part they cohere as a system and attempt to inculcate a way of life in the book’s hearers and readers. In addition to these concerns, Leviticus, comprising as it does the center of the Pentateuch, carries forward the narrative of Exodus (cf. chaps. 1, 8–9, 10, 16, 24).

The book is part of the Priestly tradition (P) of the Pentateuch, to which belong various narratives and legal passages (e.g., Gn 1:1–2:4; 9:1–17; 17:1–27; Ex 12:1–20, 40–50; 25:1–31:18; 35:1–40:38; Nm 1:1–10:28; 15:1–14; 17:1–19:22; 25:6–31:54). Within the Priestly material itself there are signs of variant traditions and development.

The main divisions of Leviticus are:

- I. Ritual of Sacrifices (1:1–7:38)
  - A. Instructions for the Israelites (1:1–5:26)
  - B. Instructions for the Priests (6:1–7:38)
- II. Ceremony of Ordination (8:1–10:20)
- III. Laws Regarding Ritual Purity (11:1–16:34)

IV. Holiness Laws (17:1–26:46)

V. Redemption of Offerings (27:1–34)

<sup>10</sup>If a person's burnt offering is from the flock, that is, a sheep or a goat, the offering must be a male without blemish. <sup>11</sup>It shall be slaughtered on the north side of the altar before the LORD, and Aaron's sons, the priests, shall splash its blood on all the sides of the altar. <sup>12</sup>When it has been cut into pieces, the priest shall lay these, together with the head and suet, on top of the wood and the embers on the altar; <sup>13</sup>but the inner organs and the shanks shall be washed with water. The priest shall then offer all of it, burning it on the altar. It is a burnt offering, a sweet-smelling oblation to the LORD.

<sup>14</sup>If a person offers a bird as a burnt offering to the LORD, the offering brought must be a turtledove or a pigeon.<sup>j</sup> <sup>15</sup>Having brought it to the altar, the priest shall wring its head off and burn it on the altar. The blood shall be drained out against the side of the altar.<sup>k</sup> <sup>16</sup>He shall remove its crissum* by means of its feathers and throw it on the ash heap at the east side of the altar. <sup>17</sup>Then, having torn the bird open by its wings without separating the halves, the priest shall burn it on the altar, on the wood and the embers. It is a burnt offering, a sweet-smelling oblation to the LORD.

CHAPTER 2

See RG 150–51

Grain Offerings. <sup>1*</sup> <sup>l</sup> When anyone brings a grain offering to the LORD, the offering must consist of bran flour. The offerer shall pour oil on it and put frankincense<sup>m</sup> over it, <sup>2</sup>and bring it to Aaron's sons, the priests. A priest shall take a handful of the bran flour and oil, together with all the frankincense, and shall burn it on the altar as a token of the offering,* a sweet-smelling oblation to the LORD.<sup>n</sup> <sup>3</sup>The rest of the grain offering belongs to Aaron and his sons,<sup>o</sup> a most holy<sup>p</sup> portion from the oblations to the LORD.

<sup>4</sup>When you offer a grain offering baked in an oven, it must be in the form of unleavened cakes made of bran flour mixed with oil, or of unleavened wafers spread with oil.<sup>q</sup> <sup>5</sup>If your offering is a grain offering that is fried on a griddle,<sup>r</sup> it must be of bran flour mixed with oil and unleavened. <sup>6</sup>Break it into pieces, and pour oil over it. It is a grain offering. <sup>7</sup>If your offering is a grain offering that is prepared in a pan, it must be made of bran flour, fried in oil. <sup>8</sup>A grain offering that is made in any of these ways you shall bring to the LORD. It shall be presented to the priest, who shall take it to the altar. <sup>9</sup>The priest shall then remove from the grain offering a token and burn it on the altar as a sweet-smelling oblation to the LORD. <sup>10</sup>The rest of the grain offering belongs to Aaron and his sons, a most holy portion from the oblations to the LORD.

<sup>11*</sup> Every grain offering that you present to the LORD shall be unleavened, for you shall not burn any leaven or honey as an oblation to the LORD.<sup>s</sup> <sup>12</sup> Such you may present to the LORD in the offering of the first produce that is processed,<sup>t</sup> but they are not to be placed on the altar for a pleasing odor. <sup>13</sup>You shall season all your grain offerings with salt. Do not let the salt of the covenant with your God* be lacking from your grain offering. On every offering you shall offer salt.<sup>u</sup>

<sup>14</sup>If you offer a grain offering of first ripe fruits to the LORD, you shall offer it in the form of fresh early grain, roasted by fire and crushed as a grain offering of your first ripe fruits. <sup>15</sup>You shall put oil on it and set frankincense on it. It is a grain offering. <sup>16</sup>The priest shall then burn some of the groats and oil, together with all the frankincense, as a token of the offering, an oblation to the LORD.

CHAPTER 3

See RG 150–51

Communion Sacrifices. <sup>1*</sup> <sup>v</sup> If a person's offering is a communion sacrifice, if it is brought from the herd, be it a male or a female animal, it must be presented without blemish<sup>w</sup> before the LORD. <sup>2</sup>The one offering it shall lay a hand on the head<sup>x</sup> of the offering. It shall then be slaughtered at the entrance of the tent of meeting. Aaron's sons, the priests, shall splash its blood on all the sides of the altar. <sup>3y</sup>From the communion sacrifice the individual shall offer as an oblation to the LORD the fat* that covers the inner organs, and all the fat that adheres to them, <sup>4</sup>as well as the two kidneys, with the fat on them near the loins, and the lobe of the liver, which is removed with the kidneys. <sup>5</sup>Aaron's sons shall burn this on the altar with the burnt offering that is on the wood and the embers, as a sweet-smelling oblation to the LORD.<sup>z</sup>

<sup>6</sup>If the communion sacrifice one offers to the LORD is from the flock, be it a male or a female animal, it must be presented without blemish. <sup>7</sup>If one presents a lamb as an offering, that person shall bring it before the LORD, <sup>8</sup>and after laying a hand on the head of the offering, it shall then be slaughtered before the tent of meeting. Aaron's sons shall splash its blood on all the sides of the altar. <sup>9</sup>From the communion sacrifice the individual shall present as an oblation to the LORD its fat: the whole fatty tail, which is removed close to the spine, the fat that covers the inner organs, and all the fat that adheres to them, <sup>10</sup>as well as the two kidneys, with the fat on them near the loins, and the lobe of the liver, which is removed with the kidneys. <sup>11</sup>The priest shall burn this on the altar as food,<sup>a</sup> an oblation to the LORD.

<sup>12</sup>If a person's offering is a goat, the individual shall bring it before the LORD, <sup>13</sup>and after laying a hand on its head, it shall then be slaughtered before the tent of meeting. Aaron's sons shall splash its blood on all the sides of the altar. <sup>14</sup>From this the one sacrificing shall present an offering as an oblation to the LORD: the fat that covers the inner organs, and all the fat that adheres to them, <sup>15</sup>as well as the two kidneys, with the fat on them near the loins, and the lobe of the liver, which is removed with the kidneys. <sup>16</sup>The priest shall burn these on the altar as food, a sweet-smelling oblation.

All the fat belongs to the LORD. <sup>17</sup>This shall be a perpetual ordinance for your descendants wherever they may dwell. You shall not eat any fat or any blood.* b

See RG 150–51

Purification Offerings. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2c</sup> Tell the Israelites: When a person inadvertently* does wrong by violating any one of the LORD's prohibitions—

For the Anointed Priest. <sup>3</sup>If it is the anointed priest* who thus does wrong and thereby makes the people guilty, he shall offer to the LORD an unblemished bull of the herd as a purification offering for the wrong he committed. <sup>4</sup> Bringing the bull to the entrance of the tent of meeting, before the LORD, he shall lay his hand on its head<sup>d</sup> and slaughter it before the LORD. <sup>5*</sup> The anointed priest shall then take some of the bull's blood and bring it into the tent of meeting, <sup>6</sup>where, dipping his finger in the blood, he shall sprinkle some of it seven times before the LORD, toward the veil of the sanctuary.<sup>e</sup> <sup>7</sup>The priest shall also put some of the blood on the horns of the altar of fragrant incense which stands before the LORD in the tent of meeting. The rest of the bull's blood he shall pour out at the base of the altar for burnt offerings which is at the entrance of the tent of meeting. <sup>8</sup> He shall remove all the fat of the bull of the purification offering: the fat that covers the inner organs, and all the fat that adheres to them, <sup>9</sup>as well as the two kidneys, with the fat on them near the loins, and the lobe of the liver, which is removed with the kidneys, <sup>10</sup>just as the fat pieces are removed from the ox of the communion sacrifice.<sup>f</sup> The priest shall burn these on the altar for burnt offerings. <sup>11*</sup> But the hide of the bull and its meat, with its head, shanks, inner organs and dung, <sup>12</sup>that is, the whole bull, shall be brought outside the camp to a clean place* where the ashes are deposited and there be burned in a wood fire. At the place of the ash heap, there it must be burned<sup>g</sup>

For the Community. <sup>13</sup>If the whole community of Israel errs* inadvertently and without even being aware of it violates any of the LORD's prohibitions, and thus are guilty, <sup>14</sup>when the wrong that was committed becomes known, the community shall offer a bull of the herd as a purification offering. They shall bring it before the tent of meeting. <sup>15</sup>The elders of the community shall lay their hands on the bull's head before the LORD. When the bull has been slaughtered before the LORD, <sup>16</sup>the anointed priest shall bring some of its blood into the tent of meeting, <sup>17</sup>and dipping his finger in the blood, he shall sprinkle it seven times before the LORD, toward the veil. <sup>18</sup>He shall also put some of the blood on the horns of the altar which is before the LORD in the tent of meeting. The rest of the blood he shall pour out at the base of the altar for burnt offerings which is at the entrance of the tent of meeting. <sup>19</sup>He shall remove all of its fat and burn it on the altar, <sup>20</sup>doing with this bull just as he did with the other bull of the purification offering; he will do the same thing. Thus the priest shall make atonement<sup>h</sup> on their behalf, that they may be forgiven. <sup>21</sup>This bull shall also be brought outside the camp and burned,<sup>i</sup> just as the first bull. It is a purification offering for the assembly.

For the Tribal Leader. <sup>22</sup>Should a tribal leader<sup>j</sup> do wrong inadvertently by violating any one of the prohibitions of the LORD his God, and thus be guilty, <sup>23</sup>when he learns of the wrong he committed, he shall bring as his offering an unblemished male goat. <sup>24</sup>He shall lay his hand on its head and it shall be slaughtered in the place where the burnt offering is slaughtered, before the LORD. It is a purification offering. <sup>25</sup>The priest shall then take some of the blood of the purification offering on his finger and put it on the horns<sup>k</sup> of the altar for burnt offerings. The rest of the blood he shall pour out at the base of the altar. <sup>26</sup>All of its fat he shall burn on the altar like the fat of the communion sacrifice. Thus the priest shall make atonement on the tribal leader's behalf for his wrong, that he may be forgiven.

For the General Populace. <sup>27</sup>If anyone of the general populace does wrong inadvertently by violating one of the LORD's prohibitions, and thus is guilty, <sup>28</sup>upon learning of the wrong committed, that person shall bring an unblemished she-goat as the offering for the wrong committed. <sup>29</sup>The wrongdoer shall lay a hand on the head of the purification offering, and the purification offering shall be slaughtered at the place of the burnt offerings. <sup>30</sup>The priest shall then take some of its blood on his finger and put it on the horns of the altar for burnt offerings. The rest of the blood he shall pour out at the base of the altar. <sup>31</sup>He shall remove all the fat, just as the fat is removed from the communion sacrifice. The priest shall burn it on the altar for a sweet odor to the LORD. Thus the priest shall make atonement, so that the individual may be forgiven.

<sup>32</sup>If, however, a person brings a lamb as a purification offering, that person shall bring an unblemished female, and <sup>33</sup>lay a hand on its head. It shall be slaughtered as a purification offering in the place where the burnt offering is slaughtered. <sup>34</sup>The priest shall then take some of the blood of the purification offering on his finger and put it on the horns of the altar for burnt offerings. The rest of the blood he shall pour out at the base of the altar. <sup>35</sup>He shall remove all its fat just as the fat is removed from the lamb of the communion sacrifice. The priest shall burn these on the altar with the other oblations for the LORD. Thus the priest shall make atonement on the person's behalf for the wrong committed, that the individual may be forgiven.

CHAPTER 5

Special Cases for Purification Offerings.* <sup>1</sup>If a person, either having seen or come to know something, does wrong by refusing as a witness under oath to give information,<sup>l</sup> that individual shall bear the penalty; <sup>2</sup>or if someone, without being aware of it, touches any unclean thing, such as the carcass of an unclean wild animal, or an unclean domestic animal, or an unclean swarming creature,* and thus is unclean and guilty;<sup>m</sup> <sup>3</sup>or if someone, without being aware of it, touches some human uncleanness,<sup>n</sup> whatever kind of uncleanness this may be, and then subsequently becomes aware of guilt; <sup>4</sup>or if someone, without being aware of it, rashly utters an oath with bad or good intent,<sup>o</sup> whatever kind of oath this may be, and then subsequently becomes aware of guilt in regard to any of these matters—<sup>5</sup>when someone is guilty in regard to any of these matters, that person shall confess the wrong committed, <sup>6</sup>and make reparation to the LORD for the wrong committed: a female animal from the flock, a ewe lamb or a she-goat, as a purification offering. Thus the priest shall make atonement on the individual's behalf for the wrong.

<sup>7</sup>If, however, the person cannot afford an animal of the flock,<sup>p</sup> that person shall bring to the LORD as reparation for the wrong committed two turtledoves or two pigeons, one for a purification offering and the other for a burnt offering. <sup>8</sup>The guilty party shall bring them to the priest, who shall offer the one for the purification offering first.<sup>q</sup> Wringing its head at the neck, yet without breaking it off, <sup>9</sup>he shall sprinkle some of the blood of the purification offering against the side of the altar. The rest of the blood shall be drained out against the base of the altar. It is a purification offering. <sup>10</sup>The other bird he shall offer as a burnt offering according to procedure. Thus the priest shall make atonement on the person's behalf for the wrong committed, so that the individual may be forgiven.

<sup>11</sup>If the person is unable to afford even two turtledoves or two pigeons, that person shall bring as an offering for the wrong committed one tenth of an ephah* of bran flour for a purification offering. The guilty party shall not put oil or place frankincense on it, because it is a purification offering.<sup>r</sup>

token of the offering and burn it on the altar with the other oblations for the LORD. It is a purification offering. <sup>13</sup>Thus the priest shall make atonement on the person's behalf for the wrong committed in any of the above cases, so that the individual may be forgiven. The rest of the offering, like the grain offering, shall belong to the priest.

Reparation Offerings. * <sup>14</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>15s</sup> When a person commits sacrilege by inadvertently misusing any of the LORD's sacred objects,<sup>t</sup> the wrongdoer shall bring to the LORD as reparation an unblemished ram from the flock, at the established value* in silver shekels according to the sanctuary shekel, as a reparation offering. <sup>16</sup>The wrongdoer shall also restore what has been misused of the sacred objects, adding a fifth of its value,<sup>u</sup> and give this to the priest. Thus the priest shall make atonement for the person with the ram of the reparation offering, so that the individual may be forgiven.

<sup>20</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>21</sup>When someone does wrong and commits sacrilege against the LORD by deceiving<sup>w</sup> a neighbor about a deposit or a pledge or a stolen article, or by otherwise retaining a neighbor's goods unjustly;<sup>x</sup> <sup>22</sup>or if, having found a lost article, the person lies about it, swearing falsely about any of the things that a person may do wrong—<sup>23</sup>when someone has thus done wrong and is guilty, that person shall restore the thing that was stolen, the item unjustly retained, the item left as deposit, or the lost article that was found <sup>24</sup>or whatever else the individual swore falsely about. That person shall make full restitution of the thing itself, and add one fifth of its value to it, giving it to its owner at the time of reparation. <sup>25</sup>Then that person shall bring to the priest as reparation to the LORD an unblemished ram of the flock, at the established value, as a reparation offering. <sup>26</sup>The priest shall make atonement on the person's behalf before the LORD, so that the individual may be forgiven for whatever was done to incur guilt.

B. Instructions for the Priests

CHAPTER 6

See RG 150–51

The Daily Burnt Offering. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2*</sup> <sup>y</sup> Give Aaron and his sons the following command: This is the ritual* for the burnt offering—the burnt offering that is to remain on the hearth of the altar all night until the next morning, while the fire is kept burning on the altar. <sup>3</sup>The priest, clothed in his linen robe and wearing linen pants underneath, shall take away the ashes to which the fire has reduced the burnt offering on the altar, and lay them at the side of the altar. <sup>4</sup>Then, having taken off these garments and put on other garments, he shall carry the ashes to a clean place outside the camp. <sup>5</sup>The fire on the altar is to be kept burning; it must not go out. Every morning the priest shall put firewood on it. On this he shall lay out the burnt offering<sup>z</sup> and burn the fat of the communion offering. <sup>6</sup>The fire is to be kept burning continuously on the altar; it must not go out.

The Grain Offering.* <sup>7</sup>This is the ritual of the grain offering. Aaron's sons shall offer it before the LORD, in front of the altar. <sup>8</sup>A priest shall then take from the grain offering a handful of bran flour and oil, together with all the frankincense that is on it,<sup>a</sup> and this he shall burn on the altar as a token of the offering, a sweet aroma to the LORD. <sup>9</sup>The rest of it Aaron and his sons may eat; but it must be eaten unleavened in a sacred place:<sup>b</sup> in the court of the tent of meeting they shall eat it. <sup>10</sup>It shall not be baked with leaven. I have given it to them as their portion from the oblations for the LORD; it is most holy,<sup>c</sup> like the purification offering and the reparation offering. <sup>11</sup>Every male of Aaron's descendants may eat of it perpetually throughout your generations as their rightful due from the oblations for the LORD. Whatever touches the oblations becomes holy.

High Priest's Daily Grain Offering.* <sup>12</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>13</sup>This is the offering that Aaron and his sons shall present to the LORD on the day he is anointed: one tenth of an ephah of bran flour for the regular grain offering, half of it in the morning and half of it in the evening. <sup>14</sup>You shall bring it well kneaded and fried in oil on a griddle.<sup>d</sup> Having broken the offering into pieces, you shall present it as a sweet aroma to the LORD. <sup>15</sup>The anointed priest descended from Aaron who succeeds him shall do likewise. This is the LORD's due forever. The offering shall be wholly burned.<sup>e</sup> <sup>16</sup>Every grain offering of a priest shall be a whole offering; it may not be eaten.

Purification Offerings. * <sup>17</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>18f</sup> Tell Aaron and his sons: This is the ritual for the purification offering. At the place where the burnt offering is slaughtered, there also, before the LORD, shall the purification offering be slaughtered. It is most holy.<sup>g</sup> <sup>19</sup>The priest who offers the purification offering shall eat of it; it shall be eaten in a sacred place,<sup>h</sup> in the court of the tent of meeting. <sup>20</sup>Whatever touches its flesh becomes holy. If any of its blood spatters on a garment, the stained part must be washed in a sacred place. <sup>21</sup>A clay vessel in which it has been boiled shall be broken; if it is boiled in a copper vessel, this shall be scoured afterward and rinsed with water.<sup>i</sup> <sup>22</sup>Every male of the priestly line may eat it. It is most holy. <sup>23</sup>But no purification offering of which some blood has been brought into the tent of meeting<sup>j</sup> to make atonement in the sanctuary shall be eaten; it must be burned with fire.<sup>k</sup>

CHAPTER 7

Reparation Offerings. <sup>1*</sup><sup>l</sup> This is the ritual for the reparation offering. It is most holy. <sup>2</sup>At the place where the burnt offering is slaughtered, the reparation offering shall also be slaughtered.<sup>m</sup> Its blood shall be splashed on all the sides of the altar. <sup>3</sup><sup>n</sup> All of its fat shall be offered: the fatty tail, the fat that covers the inner organs, and all the fat that adheres to them, <sup>4</sup>as well as the two kidneys with the fat on them near the loins, and the lobe of the liver, which is removed with the kidneys. <sup>5</sup>The priest shall burn these on the altar as an oblation to the LORD. It is a reparation offering. <sup>6</sup>Every male of the priestly line may eat of it; but it must be eaten in a sacred place.<sup>o</sup> It is most holy.<sup>p</sup>

<sup>7</sup>Because the purification offering and the reparation offering are alike, both have the same ritual. The reparation offering belongs to the priest who makes atonement with it. <sup>8</sup>As for the priest who offers someone's burnt offering, to him belongs the hide of the burnt offering that is offered. <sup>9*</sup><sup>q</sup> Also, every grain offering that is baked in an oven or made in a pan or on a griddle shall belong to the priest who offers it, <sup>10</sup>whereas all grain offerings<sup>r</sup> that are mixed with oil or are dry shall belong to all of Aaron's sons without distinction.

Communion Sacrifices. *<sup>11s</sup> This is the ritual for the communion sacrifice that is offered to the LORD. <sup>12*</sup> If someone offers it for thanksgiving, that person shall offer it with unleavened cakes mixed with oil, unleavened wafers spread with oil, and cakes made of bran flour mixed with oil and well kneaded. <sup>13</sup>One shall present this offering together with loaves of leavened bread along with the thanksgiving communion sacrifice. <sup>14</sup>From this the individual shall offer one bread of each type of offering as a contribution* to the LORD; this shall belong to the priest who splashes the blood of the communion offering.

on the third day must be burned in the fire. <sup>18</sup>If indeed any of the flesh of the communion sacrifice is eaten on the third day, it shall not be accepted; it will not be reckoned to the credit of the one offering it. Rather it becomes a desecrated meat. Anyone who eats of it shall bear the penalty.*

<sup>19</sup>* Should the meat touch anything unclean, it may not be eaten, but shall be burned in the fire.<sup>w</sup> As for other meat, all who are clean may eat of it. <sup>20</sup>If, however, someone in a state of uncleanness eats the meat of a communion sacrifice belonging to the LORD, that person shall be cut off* <sup>x</sup> from the people. <sup>21</sup>Likewise, if someone touches anything unclean, whether it be human uncleanness or an unclean animal or an unclean loathsome creature, and then eats the meat of the communion sacrifice belonging to the LORD, that person, too, shall be cut off from the people.

Prohibition Against Blood and Fat. <sup>22</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>23</sup>Tell the Israelites: You shall not eat the fat of any ox or sheep or goat.<sup>y</sup> <sup>24</sup>Although the fat of an animal that has died a natural death or has been killed by wild beasts may be put to any other use, you may not eat it.<sup>z</sup> <sup>25</sup>If anyone eats the fat of an animal from which an oblation is made to the LORD, that person shall be cut off from the people. <sup>26</sup><sup>a</sup> Wherever you dwell, you shall not eat any blood, whether of bird or of animal. <sup>27</sup>Every person who eats any blood shall be cut off from the people.

Portions from the Communion Sacrifice for Priests. <sup>28</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>29</sup>Tell the Israelites: The person who offers a communion sacrifice to the LORD shall be the one to bring from it the offering to the LORD. <sup>30</sup>The offerer's own hands shall carry the oblations for the LORD: the person shall bring the fat together with the brisket, which is to be raised as an elevated<sup>b</sup> offering* before the LORD. <sup>31</sup>The priest shall burn the fat on the altar,<sup>c</sup> but the brisket belongs to Aaron and his sons. <sup>32</sup> Moreover, from your communion sacrifices you shall give to the priest the right leg as a contribution. <sup>33</sup>The one among Aaron's sons who offers the blood and the fat of the communion offering shall have the right leg as his portion, <sup>34</sup>for from the communion sacrifices of the Israelites I have taken the brisket that is elevated and the leg that is a contribution, and I have given them to Aaron, the priest, and to his sons as their due from the Israelites forever.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>35</sup>This is the priestly share from the oblations for the LORD, allotted to Aaron and his sons on the day they were brought forth to be the priests of the LORD, <sup>36</sup>which the LORD ordered to be given them from the Israelites on the day they were anointed, as their due throughout their generations forever.

Summary. <sup>37</sup>This is the ritual for the burnt offering, the grain offering, the purification offering, the reparation offering, the ordination offering,<sup>e</sup> and the communion sacrifice, <sup>38</sup>which the LORD enjoined on Moses at Mount Sinai at the time when he commanded the Israelites in the wilderness of Sinai to bring their offerings to the LORD.<sup>f</sup>

II. Ceremony of Ordination

CHAPTER 8

<sup>10*</sup> Taking the anointing oil, Moses anointed and consecrated the tabernacle and all that was in it.<sup>j</sup> <sup>11</sup>Then he sprinkled some of the oil seven times on the altar, and anointed the altar, with all its utensils, and the laver, with its base, to consecrate them. <sup>12</sup>He also poured some of the anointing oil on Aaron’s head and anointed him, to consecrate him.<sup>k</sup> <sup>13</sup>Moses likewise brought forward Aaron’s sons, clothed them with tunics, girded them with sashes, and put skullcaps on them, as the LORD had commanded him to do.

entrance of the tent of meeting for seven days, until the days of your ordination are completed; for your ordination is to last for seven days.
<sup>34</sup>What has been done today the LORD has commanded be done, to make atonement for you. <sup>35</sup>You must remain at the entrance of the tent of meeting day and night for seven days, carrying out the prescriptions of the LORD, so that you do not die, for this is the command I have received.”<sup>t</sup> <sup>36</sup>So Aaron and his sons did all that the LORD had commanded through Moses.

CHAPTER 9

See RG 151–52

Octave of the Ordination. <sup>1</sup>On the eighth day* <sup>u</sup> Moses summoned Aaron and his sons, together with the elders of Israel, <sup>2</sup>and said to Aaron, “Take a calf of the herd for a purification offering and a ram for a burnt offering, both without blemish, and offer them before the LORD. <sup>3*</sup> Tell the Israelites, too: Take a he-goat for a purification offering, a calf and a lamb, both unblemished yearlings, for a burnt offering, <sup>4</sup>and an ox and a ram for a communion sacrifice, to sacrifice before the LORD, along with a grain offering mixed with oil; for today the LORD will appear to you.” <sup>5</sup>So they brought what Moses had ordered before the tent of meeting. When the whole community had come forward and stood before the LORD, <sup>6*</sup> Moses said, “This is what the LORD orders you to do, that the glory of the LORD may appear to you. <sup>7</sup>Approach the altar,” Moses then told Aaron, “and make your purification offering and your burnt offering in atonement for yourself and for your household;* then make the offering of the people in atonement for them, as the LORD has commanded.”<sup>v</sup>

<sup>8</sup>Approaching the altar, Aaron first slaughtered the calf of the purification offering that was his own offering. <sup>9</sup>When his sons presented the blood to him, he dipped his finger in the blood and put it on the horns of the altar.<sup>w</sup> The rest of the blood he poured out at the base of the altar. <sup>10</sup>He then burned on the altar the fat, the kidneys and the lobe of the liver from the purification offering, as the LORD had commanded Moses; <sup>11</sup>but the flesh and the hide he burned in the fire outside the camp.<sup>x</sup> <sup>12</sup>Then Aaron slaughtered the burnt offering. When his sons brought him the blood, he splashed it on all sides of the altar. <sup>13</sup>They then brought him the pieces and the head of the burnt offering, and he burned them on the altar. <sup>14</sup>Having washed the inner organs and the shanks, he burned these also with the burnt offering on the altar.<sup>y</sup>

<sup>15</sup>Then he had the people’s offering brought. Taking the goat that was for the people’s purification offering, he slaughtered it and offered it as a purification offering as before. <sup>16</sup>Then he brought forward the burnt offering and offered it according to procedure. <sup>17</sup>He then presented the grain offering; taking a handful of it, he burned it on the altar, in addition to the morning burnt offering.<sup>z 18</sup> Finally he slaughtered the ox and the ram, the communion sacrifice of the people. When his sons brought him the blood, Aaron splashed it on all sides of the altar.<sup>a 19</sup> The portions of fat from the ox and from the ram, the fatty tail, the covering fat, the kidneys, and the lobe of the liver<sup>20</sup> they placed on top of the briskets. Aaron burned the fat pieces on the altar,<sup>21</sup> but the briskets and the right thigh he raised as an elevated offering<sup>b</sup> before the LORD, as the LORD had commanded Moses.

Revelation of the Lord's Glory.<sup>22*</sup> Aaron then raised his hands over the people and blessed<sup>c</sup> them. When he came down from offering the purification offering, the burnt offering, and the communion offering,<sup>23</sup> Moses and Aaron went into the tent of meeting. On coming out they blessed the people. Then the glory of the LORD appeared to all the people.<sup>24*</sup> Fire came forth from the LORD's presence and consumed the burnt offering and the fat on the altar.<sup>d</sup> Seeing this, all the people shouted with joy and fell prostrate.

CHAPTER 10

Nadab and Abihu. <sup>1*</sup> Aaron's sons Nadab and Abihu took their censers and, putting incense on the fire they had set in them,<sup>e</sup> they offered before the LORD unauthorized fire, such as he had not commanded. <sup>2</sup> Fire therefore came forth from the LORD's presence and consumed them,<sup>f</sup> so that they died in the LORD's presence. <sup>3</sup>Moses then said to Aaron, "This is as the LORD said:

Through those near to me I will be sanctified;
in the sight of all the people I will obtain glory."<sup>* g</sup>

But Aaron said nothing. <sup>4*</sup> Then Moses summoned Mishael and Elzaphan, the sons of Aaron's uncle Uzziel, with the order, "Come, carry your kinsmen from before the sanctuary to a place outside the camp." <sup>5</sup>So they drew near and carried them by means of their tunics outside the camp, as Moses had commanded.

Conduct of the Priests. <sup>6</sup>Moses said to Aaron and his sons Eleazar and Ithamar, "Do not dishevel your hair<sup>h</sup> or tear your garments,<sup>i</sup> lest you die and bring God's wrath also on the whole community. While your kindred, the rest of the house of Israel, may mourn for those whom the LORD's fire has burned up, <sup>7</sup>you shall not go beyond the entrance of the tent of meeting,<sup>j</sup> else you shall die; for the anointing oil of the LORD is upon you." So they did as Moses told them.

The Eating of the Priestly Portions. <sup>12</sup>Moses said to Aaron and his surviving sons, Eleazar and Ithamar, "Take the grain offering* left over from the oblations to the LORD, and eat it beside the altar in the form of unleavened cakes, since it is most holy. <sup>13</sup>You must eat it in a sacred place because it is your and your sons' due from the oblations to the LORD; such is the command I have received. <sup>14m</sup> The brisket of the elevated offering and the leg* of the contribution, however, you and your sons and daughters may eat, in a clean place; for these have been assigned to you and your children as your due from the communion sacrifices of the Israelites. <sup>15</sup>The leg of the contribution and the brisket of the elevated offering shall be brought in with the oblations of fat to be raised as an elevated offering before the LORD. They shall belong to you and your children as your due forever, as the LORD has commanded."

<sup>16</sup>Moses inquired closely about the goat of the purification offering* and discovered that it had all been burned. So he was angry with the surviving sons of Aaron, Eleazar and Ithamar, and said, <sup>17n</sup> "Why did you not eat the purification offering in the sacred place, since it is most holy? It has been given to you that you might remove the guilt of the community and make atonement for them before the LORD. <sup>18</sup>Since its blood was not brought inside the sanctuary, you should certainly have eaten the offering in the sanctuary, as I was commanded." <sup>19</sup>Aaron answered Moses, "Even though they presented their purification offering and burnt offering before the LORD today, still this misfortune has befallen me. Had I then eaten of the purification offering today, would it have been pleasing to the LORD?" <sup>20</sup>On hearing this, Moses was satisfied.

III. Laws Regarding Ritual Purity*

CHAPTER 11

See RG 152–54

Clean and Unclean Meats.* <sup>10</sup> The LORD said to Moses and Aaron:
<sup>2</sup>Speak to the Israelites and tell them: Of all land animals these are the ones you may eat: <sup>3</sup>Any animal that has hoofs you may eat, provided it is cloven-footed and chews the cud. <sup>4</sup>But you shall not eat<sup>p</sup> any of the following from among those that only chew the cud or only have hoofs: the camel, which indeed chews the cud, but does not have hoofs and is therefore unclean for you; <sup>5</sup>the rock hyrax,* which indeed chews the cud, but does not have hoofs and is therefore unclean for you; <sup>6</sup>the hare, which indeed chews the cud, but does not have hoofs and is therefore unclean for you; <sup>7</sup>and the pig,<sup>q</sup> which does indeed have hoofs and is cloven-footed, but does not chew the cud and is therefore unclean for you. <sup>8</sup>You shall not eat their meat, and you shall not touch their carcasses; they are unclean for you.

<sup>9</sup>Of the various creatures that live in the water, you may eat the following: whatever in the seas or in river waters that has both fins and scales you may eat.<sup>r</sup> <sup>10</sup>But of the creatures that swarm in the water or of animals that otherwise live in the water, whether in the sea or in the rivers, all those that lack either fins or scales are loathsome for you, <sup>11</sup>and shall always be loathsome to you. Their meat you shall not eat, and their carcasses you shall loathe. <sup>12</sup>Every water creature that lacks fins or scales is loathsome for you.

kinds of grasshoppers.<sup>s</sup> <sup>23</sup>All other winged insects that have four legs are loathsome for you.

Purity, Cleanliness, and Ritual

IN THE THINKING of the ancient Israelites, there were certain boundaries within nature that should not be crossed or confused. These boundaries separated things of one kind from things of another kind, and things that went together were seen to have certain characteristics in common. Take, for instance, the category of “creatures that live in the water” (11:9): along with living in the water, these creatures were supposed to have fins and scales. If a creature—such as an oyster or a lobster—lived in the waters but did not have fins and scales, it did not fulfill all of the characteristics of its kind, and it therefore confused the boundaries of “creatures that live in the water” and was unclean. In the same way, the Israelites believed that animals that chewed the cud—ruminants, such as the cow—should have cloven, or divided, hoofs. The cow has divided hoofs, so it is clean. But the pig, which has divided hoofs, does not chew the cud, so it is unclean. It has confused a natural category, and is therefore to be avoided. See also Deuteronomy 14:3–21.

The clearest and strongest boundary was the one between life and death, and one had to be very careful when dealing with anything that was dead.

<sup>29</sup>Of the creatures that swarm on the ground, the following are unclean for you: the rat, the mouse, the various kinds of lizards, <sup>30</sup>the gecko, the spotted lizard, the agama, the skink, and the chameleon. <sup>31</sup>Among the various swarming creatures, these are unclean for you. Everyone who touches them when they are dead shall be unclean until evening. <sup>32</sup>Everything on which one of them falls when dead becomes unclean, including any article of wood, cloth, leather or goat hair—any article of which use can be made. It must be immersed in water and remain unclean until evening, when it again becomes clean. <sup>33</sup>Should any of these creatures fall into a clay vessel, everything in it becomes unclean, and the vessel itself you must break. <sup>34</sup>Any food that can be eaten which makes contact with water, and any liquid that may be drunk, in any such vessel become unclean. <sup>35</sup>Any object on which any part of their carcasses falls becomes unclean; if it is an oven or stove, this must be broken to pieces; they are unclean and shall always be unclean to you. <sup>36</sup>However, a spring or a cistern for collecting water remains clean; but whoever touches such an animal's carcass becomes unclean. <sup>37</sup>If any part of their carcasses falls on any sort of grain that is to be sown, it remains clean; <sup>38</sup>but if the grain has become moistened, it becomes unclean to you when any part of their carcasses falls on it.

<sup>41</sup>All the creatures that swarm on the ground are loathsome and shall not be eaten. <sup>42</sup>Whether it crawls on its belly, goes on all fours, or has many legs—any creature that swarms on the earth—you shall not eat them; they are loathsome. <sup>43</sup>Do not make yourselves loathsome by any swarming creature nor defile yourselves with them and so become unclean by them.<sup>w</sup>

<sup>44</sup>For I, the LORD, am your God. You shall make and keep yourselves holy,* because I am holy.<sup>x</sup> You shall not make yourselves unclean, then, by any swarming creature that crawls on the ground. <sup>45</sup>Since I, the LORD, am the one who brought you up from the land of Egypt that I might be your God, you shall be holy, because I am holy.

<sup>46</sup>This is the instruction for land animals, birds, and all the creatures that move about in the water, as well as any animal that swarms on the ground,

<sup>47</sup>that you may distinguish between the clean and the unclean, and between creatures that may be eaten and those that may not be eaten.<sup>y</sup>

CHAPTER 12

Uncleanness of Childbirth. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Tell the Israelites: When a woman has a child, giving birth to a boy, she shall be unclean* for seven days, with the same uncleanness as during her menstrual period.<sup>z</sup> <sup>3</sup>On the eighth day, the flesh of the boy's foreskin shall be circumcised,* <sup>a</sup> <sup>4</sup>and then she shall spend thirty-three days more in a state of blood purity; she shall not touch anything sacred nor enter the sanctuary till the days of her purification are fulfilled. <sup>5</sup>If she gives birth to a girl, for fourteen days she shall be as unclean as during her menstrual period, after which she shall spend sixty-six days* in a state of blood purity.

Scaly Infection.* <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses and Aaron: <sup>2e</sup> When someone has on the skin a mark, lesion, or blotch which appears to develop into a scaly infection, the person shall be brought to Aaron, the priest, or to one of the priests among his sons. <sup>3</sup>If the priest, upon examination of the skin's infection, finds that the hair on the infection has turned white and the infection itself appears to be deeper than the skin,* it is indeed a scaly infection; the priest, on seeing this, shall declare the person unclean. <sup>4*</sup> If, however, the blotch on the skin is white, but does not seem to be deeper than the skin, nor has the hair turned white, the priest shall quarantine the afflicted person for seven days.* <sup>5</sup>Should the priest, upon examination on the seventh day, find that the infection has remained unchanged in color and has not spread on the skin, the priest shall quarantine the person for another seven days. <sup>6</sup>Should the priest, upon examination again on the seventh day, find that the infection is now faded and has not spread on the skin, the priest shall declare the person clean; it was merely a scab. The person shall wash his garments* and so become clean. <sup>7</sup>But if, after the person was examined by the priest and declared clean, the scab spreads at all on the skin, the person shall once more be examined by the priest. <sup>8</sup>Should the priest, upon examination, find that the scab has indeed spread on the skin, he shall declare the person unclean; it is a scaly infection.

<sup>9</sup>When someone is afflicted with a scaly infection, that person shall be brought to the priest. <sup>10</sup>Should the priest, upon examination, find that there is a white mark on the skin which has turned the hair white and that there is raw flesh in it, <sup>11</sup>it is a chronic scaly infection on the skin. The priest shall declare the person unclean without quarantine, since the individual is certainly unclean. <sup>12*</sup> If the scaly infection breaks out on the skin and, as far as the priest can see, covers all the skin of the afflicted person from head to foot, <sup>13</sup>should the priest then, upon examination, find that the scaly infection does cover the whole body, he shall declare the afflicted person clean; since the person has turned completely white; that individual is clean. <sup>14</sup>But as soon as raw flesh appears, the individual is unclean; <sup>15</sup>on observing the raw flesh, the priest shall declare the person unclean, because raw flesh is unclean; it is a scaly infection. <sup>16</sup>If, however, the raw flesh again turns white, the person shall return to the priest; <sup>17</sup>should the latter, upon examination, find that the infection has indeed turned white, he shall declare the afflicted person clean; the individual is clean.

<sup>18</sup>If a boil appeared on a person's skin which later healed, <sup>19</sup>should now in the place of the boil a white mark or a reddish white blotch develop, the person shall be examined by the priest. <sup>20</sup>If the latter, upon examination, finds that it is deeper than the skin and that the hair has turned white, he shall declare the person unclean; it is a scaly infection that has broken out in the boil. <sup>21</sup>But if the priest, upon examination, finds that there is no white hair in it and that it is not deeper than the skin and is faded, the priest shall quarantine the person for seven days. <sup>22</sup>If it has then spread on the skin, the priest shall declare the person unclean; it is an infection. <sup>23</sup>But if the blotch remains the same without spreading, it is merely the scar of the boil; the priest shall therefore declare the person clean.

<sup>29*</sup> When a man or a woman has an infection on the head or in the beard, <sup>30</sup>should the priest, upon examination, find that the infection appears to be deeper than the skin and that there is fine yellow hair in it, the priest shall declare the person unclean; it is a scall. It is a scaly infection of the head or beard. <sup>31</sup>But if the priest, upon examining the scall infection, finds that it does not appear to be deeper than the skin, though the hair in it may not be black, the priest shall quarantine the scall-stricken person for seven days.

<sup>32</sup>Should the priest, upon examining the infection on the seventh day find that the scall has not spread and has no yellow hair in it and does not seem to be deeper than the skin, <sup>33</sup>the person shall shave, but not the scall spot. Then the priest shall quarantine the scall-diseased person for another seven days. <sup>34</sup>If the priest, upon examining the scall on the seventh day, finds that it has not spread on the skin and that it does not appear to be deeper than the skin, he shall declare the person clean; the latter shall wash his garments, and will thus be clean. <sup>35</sup>But if the scall spreads at all on the skin after the person has been declared clean— <sup>36</sup>should the priest, upon examination, find that the scall has indeed spread on the skin, he need not look for yellow hair; the individual is unclean. <sup>37</sup>If, however, the scall has remained unchanged in color and black hair has grown in it, the disease has been healed; the person is clean, and the priest shall declare the individual clean.

Fungal Infection of Fabrics and Leather. <sup>47</sup>When a fungal infection is on a garment of wool or of linen, <sup>48</sup>or on the warp and woof* of linen or wool, or on a hide or anything made of leather, <sup>49</sup>if the infection on the garment or hide, or on the warp or woof, or on any leather article is greenish or reddish, the thing is indeed a fungal infection and must be examined by the priest. <sup>50</sup>Having examined the infection, the priest shall quarantine the infected article for seven days. <sup>51</sup>If the priest, upon inspecting the infection on the seventh day, finds that it has spread on the garment, or on the warp or woof, or on the leather, whatever be its use, the infection is a harmful fungus; the article is unclean. <sup>52</sup>He shall therefore burn up the garment, or the warp or woof, be it of wool or linen, or any leather article which is infected; since it is a harmful fungus, it must be destroyed by fire. <sup>53</sup>But if the priest, upon examination, finds that it has not spread on the garment, or on the warp or woof, or on the leather article, <sup>54</sup>he shall give orders to have the infected article washed and then quarantined for another seven days. <sup>55</sup>If the priest, upon examination after the infection was washed, finds that it has not changed its color, even though it may not have spread, the article is unclean. You shall burn it with fire. It is a fray, be it on its inner or outer side. <sup>56</sup>But if the priest, upon examination, finds that the infection has faded after the washing, he shall cut it out of the garment, or the leather, or the warp or woof. <sup>57</sup>If, however, the infection again appears on the garment, or on the warp or woof, or on the leather article, it is still virulent and you shall burn the thing infected with fire. <sup>58</sup>But if, after the washing, the infection has disappeared from the garment, or the warp or woof, or the leather article, the thing shall be washed a second time, and thus it will be clean. <sup>59</sup>This is the instruction for a fungal<sup>j</sup> infection on a garment of wool or linen, or on a warp or woof, or on any leather article, to determine whether it is clean or unclean.

Poor Person's Sacrifices. <sup>21</sup>If a person is poor and cannot afford so much,<sup>w</sup> that person shall take one male lamb for a reparation offering, to be used as an elevated offering in atonement, one tenth of an ephah of bran flour mixed with oil for a grain offering, a log of oil, <sup>22</sup>and two turtledoves or pigeons, which the individual can more easily afford, the one as a purification offering and the other as a burnt offering. <sup>23</sup>On the eighth day of purification the person shall bring them to the priest, at the entrance of the tent of meeting before the LORD. <sup>24</sup>Taking the lamb of the reparation offering, along with the log of oil, the priest shall raise them as an elevated offering before the LORD. <sup>25</sup>When the lamb of the reparation offering has been slaughtered, the priest shall take some of its blood, and put it on the lobe of the right ear, on the thumb of the right hand, and on the big toe of the right foot of the person being purified. <sup>26</sup>The priest shall then pour some of the oil into the palm of his own left hand <sup>27</sup>and with his right finger sprinkle some of the oil in his left palm seven times before the LORD. <sup>28</sup>Some of the oil in his hand the priest shall also put on the lobe of the right ear, the thumb of the right hand, and the big toe of the right foot of the person being purified, where he had sprinkled the blood of the reparation offering. <sup>29</sup>The rest of the oil in his hand the priest shall put on the head of the one being purified. Thus shall he make atonement for the individual before the LORD. <sup>30</sup>Then, of the turtledoves or pigeons, such as the person can afford, <sup>31</sup>the priest shall offer one as a purification offering and the other as a burnt offering,<sup>x</sup> along with the grain offering. Thus shall the priest make atonement before the LORD for the person who is being purified.<sup>32</sup> This is the ritual for one afflicted with a scaly infection who has insufficient means for purification.

Fungal Infection of Houses. <sup>33*</sup> The LORD said to Moses and Aaron:
<sup>34</sup> When you come into the land of Canaan, which I am giving you to possess, if I put<sup>y</sup> a fungal infection in any house of the land you occupy,
<sup>35</sup> the owner of the house shall come and report to the priest, "Something like an infection has appeared in my house." <sup>36</sup> The priest shall then order the house to be cleared out before he goes in to examine the infection, lest everything in the house become unclean. Only after this is he to go in to examine the house. <sup>37</sup> If the priest, upon inspection, finds that the infection on the walls of the house consists of greenish or reddish spots<sup>z</sup> which seem to go deeper than the surface of the wall, <sup>38</sup> he shall go out of the house to the doorway and quarantine the house for seven days. <sup>39</sup> On the seventh day the priest shall return. If, upon inspection, he finds that the infection has spread on the walls, <sup>40</sup> he shall order the infected stones to be pulled out and cast in an unclean place outside the city. <sup>41</sup> The whole inside of the house shall then be scraped, and the mortar that has been scraped off shall be dumped in an unclean place outside the city. <sup>42</sup> Then other stones shall be brought and put in the place of the old stones, and new mortar obtained and plastered on the house. <sup>43</sup> If the infection breaks out once more in the house after the stones have been pulled out and the house has been scraped and replastered, <sup>44</sup> the priest shall come; and if, upon inspection, he finds that the infection has spread in the house, it is a corrosive fungus in the house, and it is unclean. <sup>45</sup> It shall be pulled down, and all its stones, beams and mortar shall be hauled away to an unclean place outside the city. <sup>46a</sup> Whoever enters a house while it is quarantined shall be unclean until evening. <sup>47</sup> Whoever sleeps or eats in such a house shall also wash his garments.

<sup>48b</sup> If the priest finds, when he comes to the house, that the infection has in fact not spread in the house after the plastering, he shall declare the house clean, since the infection has been healed. <sup>49</sup> To purify the house, he shall take two birds, as well as cedar wood, scarlet yarn, and hyssop. <sup>50</sup> One of the birds he shall slaughter over an earthen vessel with fresh water in it. <sup>51</sup> Then, taking the cedar wood, the hyssop and the scarlet yarn, together with the living bird, he shall dip them all in the blood of the slaughtered bird and the fresh water, and sprinkle the house seven times. <sup>52</sup>Thus he shall purify the house with the bird's blood and the fresh water, along with the living bird, the cedar wood, the hyssop, and the scarlet yarn. <sup>53</sup>He shall then let the living bird fly away over the countryside outside the city. Thus he shall make atonement for the house, and it will be clean.

CHAPTER 15

Sexual Uncleanness. <sup>*1</sup>The LORD said to Moses and Aaron: <sup>2*</sup> Speak to the Israelites and tell them: When any man has a genital discharge, he is thereby unclean.<sup>c</sup> <sup>3</sup>Such is his uncleanness from this discharge, whether his body* drains freely with the discharge or is blocked up from the discharge. His uncleanness is on him all the days that his body discharges or is blocked up from his discharge; this is his uncleanness. <sup>4</sup>Any bed on which the man with the discharge lies is unclean, and any article on which he sits is unclean. <sup>5</sup>Anyone who touches his bed shall wash his garments, bathe in water, and be unclean until evening. <sup>6</sup>Whoever sits on an article on which the man with the discharge was sitting shall wash his garments, bathe in water, and be unclean until evening. <sup>7</sup>Who-ever touches the body of the man with the discharge shall wash his garments, bathe in water, and be unclean until evening. <sup>8</sup>If the man with the discharge spits on a clean person, the latter shall wash his garments, bathe in water, and be unclean until evening. <sup>9</sup>Any saddle on which the man with the discharge rides is unclean. <sup>10</sup>Whoever touches anything that was under him shall be unclean until evening; whoever carries any such thing shall wash his garments, bathe in water, and be unclean until evening.<sup>d</sup> <sup>11</sup>Anyone whom the man with the discharge touches with his unrinsed hands shall wash his garments, bathe in water, and be unclean until evening. <sup>12</sup>Earthenware touched by the man with the discharge shall be broken; and every wooden article shall be rinsed with water.

with semen on it shall be washed with water and be unclean until evening.

<sup>18</sup>If a man has sexual relations with a woman, they shall both bathe in water and be unclean until evening.

<sup>32</sup>This is the ritual for the man with a discharge, or who has an emission of semen, and thereby becomes unclean; <sup>33</sup>as well as for the woman who has her menstrual period; or one who has a discharge, male or female; and also for the man who lies with an unclean woman.

CHAPTER 16

See RG 131

The Day of Atonement. <sup>1*</sup> After the death of Aaron's two sons,<sup>m</sup> who died when they encroached on the LORD's presence, the LORD spoke to Moses <sup>2</sup>and said to him: Tell your brother Aaron that he is not to come whenever he pleases* into the inner sanctuary, inside the veil,<sup>n</sup> in front of the cover on the ark, lest he die, for I reveal myself in a cloud above the ark's cover. <sup>3</sup>Only in this way may Aaron enter the inner sanctuary. He shall bring a bull of the herd for a purification offering and a ram for a burnt offering. <sup>4</sup>He shall wear the sacred linen tunic, with the linen pants underneath, gird himself with the linen sash and put on the linen turban.<sup>o</sup> But since these vestments are sacred, he shall not put them on until he has first bathed his body in water.<sup>p</sup> <sup>5</sup>From the Israelite community he shall receive two male goats for a purification offering and one ram for a burnt offering.

<sup>11</sup>Thus shall Aaron offer his bull for the purification offering, to make atonement for himself and for his family. When he has slaughtered it, <sup>12</sup>he shall take a censer full of glowing embers from the altar before the LORD, as well as a double handful of finely ground fragrant incense, and bringing them inside the veil, <sup>13</sup>there before the LORD he shall put incense on the fire, so that a cloud of incense may shield the cover that is over the covenant, else he will die. <sup>14</sup>Taking some of the bull's blood, he shall sprinkle it with his finger on the front of the ark's cover and likewise sprinkle some of the blood with his finger seven times in front of the cover.

<sup>15</sup>Then he shall slaughter the goat of the people's purification offering, and bringing its blood inside the veil, he shall do with it as he did with the bull's blood, sprinkling it on the ark's cover and in front of it. <sup>16</sup>Thus he shall purge the inner sanctuary* of all the Israelites' impurities and trespasses, including all their sins. He shall do the same for the tent of meeting,<sup>s</sup> which is set up among them in the midst of their uncleanness. <sup>17</sup>No one else may be in the tent of meeting from the time he enters the inner sanctuary to make atonement until he departs. When he has made atonement for himself and his household, as well as for the whole Israelite assembly, <sup>18*</sup> he shall come out to the altar before the LORD and purge it also. Taking some of the bull's and the goat's blood, he shall put it on the horns around the altar, <sup>19</sup>and with his finger sprinkle some of the blood on it seven times.<sup>t</sup> Thus he shall purify it and sanctify it from the impurities of the Israelites.

The Scapegoat. <sup>20</sup>When he has finished purging the inner sanctuary, the tent of meeting and the altar, Aaron shall bring forward the live goat. <sup>21</sup>Laying both hands* on its head, he shall confess over it all the iniquities of the Israelites and their trespasses, including all their sins, and so put them on the goat's head.<sup>u</sup> He shall then have it led into the wilderness by an attendant. <sup>22</sup>The goat will carry off all their iniquities to an isolated region.<sup>v</sup>

When the goat is dispatched into the wilderness, <sup>23</sup>Aaron shall go into the tent of meeting, strip off the linen vestments he had put on when he entered the inner sanctuary, and leave them in the tent of meeting. <sup>24</sup>After bathing his body with water in a sacred place, he shall put on his regular vestments, and then come out and offer his own and the people's burnt offering, in atonement for himself and for the people, <sup>25</sup>and also burn the fat of the purification offering on the altar.

<sup>26</sup>The man who led away the goat for Azazel shall wash his garments and bathe his body in water; only then may he enter the camp. <sup>27</sup>The bull and the goat of the purification offering whose blood was brought to make atonement in the inner sanctuary, shall be taken outside the camp.<sup>w</sup> where their hides and flesh and dung shall be burned in the fire. <sup>28</sup>The one who burns them shall wash his garments and bathe his body in water; only then may he enter the camp.

The Fast. <sup>29x</sup> This shall be an everlasting statute for you: on the tenth day of the seventh month every one of you, whether a native or a resident alien, shall humble yourselves* and shall do no work. <sup>30</sup>For on this day atonement is made for you to make you clean; of all your sins you will be cleansed before the LORD. <sup>31</sup>It shall be a sabbath of complete rest for you, on which you must humble yourselves—an everlasting statute.

<sup>32</sup>This atonement is to be made by the priest who has been anointed and ordained to the priesthood in succession to his father. He shall wear the linen garments, the sacred vestments, <sup>33</sup>and purge the most sacred part of the sanctuary, as well as the tent of meeting, and the altar. He shall also make atonement for the priests and all the people of the assembly. <sup>34</sup>This, then, shall be an everlasting statute for you: once a year atonement shall be made on behalf of the Israelites for all their sins. And Moses did as the LORD had commanded him.

Sacredness of Blood. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Speak to Aaron and his sons, as well as to all the Israelites, and tell them: This is what the LORD has commanded: <sup>3*</sup> Any Israelite who slaughters an ox or a sheep or a goat, whether in the camp or outside of it, <sup>4</sup>without first bringing it to the entrance of the tent of meeting to present it as an offering to the LORD in front of the LORD's tabernacle, shall be judged guilty of bloodshed* <sup>y</sup>—that individual has shed blood, and shall be cut off<sup>z</sup> from the people. <sup>5</sup>This is so that such sacrifices as they used to offer in the open field the Israelites shall henceforth bring to the LORD at the entrance of the tent of meeting, to the priest, and sacrifice them there as communion sacrifices to the LORD.<sup>a</sup> <sup>6</sup>The priest will splash the blood on the altar of the LORD at the entrance of the tent of meeting and burn the fat for an odor pleasing to the LORD. <sup>7</sup>No longer shall they offer their sacrifices to the demons* with whom they prostituted themselves.<sup>b</sup> This shall be an everlasting statute for them and their descendants.

<sup>8</sup>Tell them, therefore: Anyone, whether of the house of Israel or of the aliens residing among them, who offers a burnt offering or sacrifice <sup>9</sup>without bringing it to the entrance of the tent of meeting to offer it to the LORD, shall be cut off from the people. <sup>10c</sup> As for anyone, whether of the house of Israel or of the aliens residing among them, who consumes any blood, I will set myself against that individual and will cut that person off from among the people, <sup>11</sup>since the life of the flesh is in the blood,<sup>d</sup> and I have given it to you to make atonement* on the altar for yourselves, because it is the blood as life that makes atonement. <sup>12</sup>That is why I have told the Israelites: No one among you, not even a resident alien, may consume blood.

<sup>13</sup>Anyone hunting,* whether of the Israelites or of the aliens residing among them, who catches an animal or a bird that may be eaten, shall pour out its blood and cover it with earth,<sup>e</sup> <sup>14</sup>since the life of all flesh is its blood. I have told the Israelites: You shall not consume the blood of any flesh. Since the life of all flesh is its blood, anyone who consumes it shall be cut off.

<sup>15</sup>Everyone, whether a native or an alien, who eats of an animal that died of itself or was killed by a wild beast, shall wash his garments, bathe in water, and be unclean until evening, and then become clean.<sup>f</sup> <sup>16</sup>If one does not wash his garments and bathe, that person shall bear the penalty.

CHAPTER 18

Laws Concerning Sexual Behavior. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Speak to the Israelites and tell them: I, the LORD, am your God.* <sup>3</sup>You shall not do as they do in the land of Egypt, where you once lived, nor shall you do as they do in the land of Canaan, where I am bringing you; do not conform to their customs.<sup>g</sup> <sup>4</sup>My decrees you shall carry out, and my statutes you shall take care to follow. I, the LORD, am your God. <sup>5</sup>Keep, then, my statutes and decrees, for the person who carries them out will find life* through them. I am the LORD.<sup>h</sup>

<sup>24</sup>Do not defile yourselves by any of these things, because by them the nations whom I am driving out of your way have defiled themselves. <sup>25</sup>And so the land has become defiled, and I have punished it for its wickedness, and the land has vomited out its inhabitants.<sup>w</sup> <sup>26</sup>You, however, must keep my statutes and decrees, avoiding all these abominations, both the natives and the aliens resident among you— <sup>27</sup>because the previous inhabitants did all these abominations and the land became defiled; <sup>28</sup>otherwise the land will vomit you out also for having defiled it, just as it vomited out the nations before you. <sup>29</sup>For whoever does any of these abominations shall be cut off from the people. <sup>30</sup>Heed my charge, then, not to observe the abominable customs that have been observed before your time, and thus become impure by them.<sup>x</sup> I, the LORD, am your God.

Various Rules of Conduct. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Speak to the whole Israelite community and tell them: Be holy, for I, the LORD your God, am holy.* <sup>y</sup> <sup>3</sup>* Each of you revere your mother and father,<sup>z</sup> and keep my sabbaths.<sup>a</sup> I, the LORD, am your God.

<sup>9</sup>* When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not be so thorough that you reap the field to its very edge, nor shall you gather the gleanings of your harvest.<sup>e</sup> <sup>10</sup>Likewise, you shall not pick your vineyard bare, nor gather up the grapes that have fallen. These things you shall leave for the poor and the alien. I, the LORD, am your God.

<sup>13</sup>You shall not exploit your neighbor. You shall not commit robbery. You shall not withhold overnight the wages of your laborer.<sup>h</sup> <sup>14</sup>* You shall not insult the deaf, or put a stumbling block in front of the blind, but you shall fear your God. I am the LORD.

<sup>17</sup>* You shall not hate any of your kindred in your heart. Reprove your neighbor openly so that you do not incur sin because of that person.<sup>j</sup> <sup>18</sup>Take no revenge and cherish no grudge against your own people. You shall love your neighbor as yourself. I am the LORD.<sup>k</sup>

<sup>19</sup>* Keep my statutes: do not breed any of your domestic animals with others of a different species; do not sow a field of yours with two different kinds of seed; and do not put on a garment woven with two different kinds of thread.<sup>l</sup>

<sup>20</sup>* <sup>m</sup> If a man has sexual relations with a female slave who has been acquired by another man but has not yet been redeemed or given her freedom, an investigation shall be made. They shall not be put to death, because she has not been freed. <sup>21</sup> The man shall bring to the entrance of the tent of meeting as his reparation to the LORD a ram as a reparation offering.<sup>n</sup> <sup>22</sup> With the ram of the reparation offering the priest shall make atonement before the LORD for the wrong the man has committed, so that he will be forgiven for the wrong he has committed.

<sup>23</sup> When you come into the land and plant any fruit tree there,<sup>o</sup> first look upon its fruit as if it were uncircumcised. For three years, it shall be uncircumcised for you; it may not be eaten. <sup>24</sup> In the fourth year, however, all of its fruit shall be dedicated to the LORD in joyous celebration. <sup>25</sup> Not until the fifth year may you eat its fruit, to increase the yield for you. I, the LORD, am your God.

<sup>31</sup> Do not turn to ghosts or consult spirits, by which you will be defiled.<sup>u</sup> I, the LORD, am your God.

<sup>32</sup> Stand up in the presence of the aged, show respect for the old, and fear your God. I am the LORD.

<sup>33</sup> When an alien resides with you in your land, do not mistreat such a one.<sup>v</sup> <sup>34</sup> You shall treat the alien who resides with you no differently than the natives born among you; you shall love the alien as yourself; for you too were once aliens in the land of Egypt.<sup>w</sup> I, the LORD, am your God.

<sup>35</sup>Do not act dishonestly in using measures of length or weight or capacity. <sup>36</sup>You shall have a true scale and true weights, an honest ephah and an honest hin.<sup>* x</sup> I, the LORD, am your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt. <sup>37</sup>Be careful, then, to observe all my statutes and decrees. I am the LORD.

CHAPTER 20

See RG 154–56

Penalties for Various Sins. <sup>1*</sup> The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Tell the Israelites: Anyone, whether an Israelite or an alien residing in Israel, who gives offspring to Molech shall be put to death.<sup>y</sup> The people of the land shall stone that person. <sup>3z</sup> I myself will turn against and cut off<sup>a</sup> that individual from among the people; for in the giving of offspring to Molech, my sanctuary was defiled<sup>b</sup> and my holy name was profaned. <sup>4</sup>If the people of the land condone the giving of offspring to Molech, by failing to put the wrongdoer to death, <sup>5</sup>I myself will turn against that individual and his or her family, and I will cut off from their people both the wrongdoer and all who follow this person by prostituting themselves with Molech.

<sup>6</sup>Should anyone turn to ghosts and spirits and prostitute oneself with them,<sup>c</sup> I will turn against that person and cut such a one off from among the people. <sup>7</sup>Sanctify yourselves, then, and be holy; for I, the LORD, your God,<sup>d</sup> am holy. <sup>8</sup>Be careful, therefore, to observe my statutes. I, the LORD, make you holy.

disgraceful; they shall be publicly cut off* from the people; the man shall bear the penalty of having had intercourse with his own sister. <sup>18</sup>If a man lies with a woman during her menstrual period and has intercourse with her, he has laid bare the source of her flow and she has uncovered it.<sup>n</sup> The two of them shall be cut off from the people. <sup>19</sup>You shall not have intercourse with your mother's sister or your father's sister,<sup>o</sup> because that dishonors one's own flesh; they shall bear their penalty. <sup>20</sup>If a man lies with his uncle's wife, he disgraces his uncle;<sup>p</sup> they shall bear the penalty; they shall die childless. <sup>21</sup>If a man takes his brother's wife, it is severe defilement and he has disgraced his brother;<sup>q</sup> they shall be childless.

<sup>22</sup>Be careful to observe all my statutes and all my decrees; otherwise the land where I am bringing you to dwell will vomit you out.<sup>r</sup> <sup>23</sup>Do not conform, therefore, to the customs of the nations<sup>s</sup> whom I am driving out of your way, because all these things that they have done have filled me with disgust for them. <sup>24</sup>But to you I have said:<sup>t</sup> You shall take possession of their land. I am giving it to you to possess, a land flowing with milk and honey. I, the LORD, am your God, who have set you apart from other peoples. <sup>25u</sup> You, too, must set apart, then, the clean animals from the unclean, and the clean birds from the unclean, so that you do not make yourselves detestable through any beast or bird or any creature which creeps on the ground that I have set apart for you as unclean. <sup>26</sup>To me, therefore, you shall be holy; for I, the LORD, am holy,<sup>v</sup> and I have set you apart from other peoples to be my own.

<sup>27</sup>A man or a woman who acts as a medium or clairvoyant<sup>w</sup> shall be put to death. They shall be stoned to death; their bloodguilt is upon them.

CHAPTER 21

See RG 154–56

Sanctity of the Priesthood. <sup>1*</sup> The LORD said to Moses: Speak to the priests, Aaron's sons, and tell them: None of you shall make himself unclean for any dead person among his kindred,<sup>x</sup> <sup>2</sup>except for his nearest relatives, his mother or father, his son or daughter, his brother<sup>y</sup> <sup>3</sup>or his unmarried sister, who is of his own family while she remains single; for these he may make himself unclean. <sup>4</sup>But as a husband among his kindred* he shall not make himself unclean and thus profane himself.

<sup>9</sup>If a priest's daughter debases herself by prostitution, she thereby debases her father; she shall be burned with fire.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>10</sup>The most exalted of the priests, upon whose head the anointing oil has been poured and who has been ordained to wear the special vestments, shall not dishevel his hair or rend his garments, <sup>11</sup>nor shall he go near any dead person.<sup>d</sup> Not even for his father or mother may he thus become unclean; <sup>12</sup>nor shall he leave the sanctuary and profane the sanctuary of his God, for the consecration of the anointing oil of his God is upon him.<sup>e</sup> I am the LORD.

Priestly Blemishes. * <sup>16</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>17</sup>Say to Aaron: None of your descendants, throughout their generations, who has any blemish shall come forward to offer the food of his God. <sup>18</sup>Anyone who has any of the following blemishes may not come forward:<sup>9</sup> he who is blind, or lame, or who has a split lip, or a limb too long,<sup>19</sup> or a broken leg or arm,<sup>20</sup> or who is a hunchback or dwarf or has a growth in the eye, or who is afflicted with sores, scabs, or crushed testicles.<sup>21</sup> No descendant of Aaron the priest who has any such blemish may draw near to offer the oblations of the LORD; on account of his blemish he may not draw near to offer the food of his God.<sup>22</sup> He may, however, eat the food of his God: of the most sacred as well as sacred offerings.<sup>h</sup><sup>23</sup> Only, he may not enter through the veil nor draw near to the altar on account of his blemish; he shall not profane my sacred precincts, for it is I, the LORD, who make them holy.

CHAPTER 22

See RG 154–56

Priestly Purity. * <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Tell Aaron and his sons to treat with respect the sacred offerings which the Israelites consecrate to me; otherwise they will profane my holy name. I am the LORD.

<sup>3*</sup> Tell them: If any one of you, or of your descendants in any future generation, dares, while he is in a state of uncleanness, to draw near the sacred offerings which the Israelites consecrate to the LORD, such a one shall be cut off from my presence. <sup>i</sup> I am the LORD.

<sup>4</sup>No descendant of Aaron who is stricken with a scaly infection, <sup>j</sup> or who suffers from a genital discharge, <sup>k</sup> may eat of the sacred offerings, until he again becomes clean. Moreover, if anyone touches a person who has become unclean by contact with a corpse, <sup>l</sup> or if anyone has had an emission of semen, <sup>m</sup> <sup>5</sup>or if anyone touches any swarming creature <sup>n</sup> whose uncleanness is contagious or any person whose uncleanness, of whatever kind it may be, is contagious—<sup>o</sup> <sup>6</sup>the one who touches such as these shall be unclean until evening and may not eat of the sacred portions until he has first bathed his body in water. <sup>p</sup> <sup>7</sup>Then, when the sun sets, he shall be clean. <sup>q</sup> Only then may he eat of the sacred offerings, for they are his food. <sup>8*</sup> He shall not make himself unclean by eating of any animal that has died of itself or has been killed by wild beasts. <sup>r</sup> I am the LORD.

<sup>9</sup>They shall keep my charge so that they will not bear the punishment in this matter and die <sup>s</sup> for their profanation. I am the LORD who makes them holy.

sacred offerings which the Israelites contribute to the LORD to be profaned<sup>v</sup> <sup>16</sup>nor make them incur a penalty when they eat their sacred offerings. For I, the LORD, make them holy.

Unacceptable Victims. <sup>17*</sup> The LORD said to Moses: <sup>18</sup>Speak to Aaron and his sons and to all the Israelites, and tell them: When anyone of the house of Israel, or any alien residing in Israel, who presents an offering, brings a burnt offering<sup>w</sup> as a votive offering or as a voluntary offering to the LORD, <sup>19</sup>if it is to be acceptable for you, it must be an unblemished male of the herd, of the sheep or of the goats.<sup>x</sup> <sup>20</sup>You shall not offer one that has any blemish, for such a one would not be acceptable on your behalf.<sup>y</sup> <sup>21</sup> When anyone presents a communion sacrifice<sup>z</sup> to the LORD from the herd or the flock in fulfillment of a vow, or as a voluntary offering, if it is to find acceptance, it must be unblemished; it shall not have any blemish. <sup>22</sup> One that is blind or lame or maimed, or one that has running lesions or sores or scabs, you shall not offer to the LORD; do not put such an animal on the altar as an oblation to the LORD. <sup>23*</sup> An ox or a sheep that has a leg that is too long or is stunted you may indeed present as a voluntary offering, but it will not be acceptable as a votive offering. <sup>24</sup>One that has its testicles bruised or crushed or torn out or cut off you shall not offer to the LORD. You shall neither do this in your own land <sup>25</sup>nor receive from a foreigner any such animals to offer up as the food of your God; since they are deformed or blemished, they will not be acceptable on your behalf.

<sup>26*</sup> The LORD said to Moses: <sup>27</sup>When an ox or a lamb or a goat is born, it shall remain with its mother for seven days; only from the eighth day onward will it be acceptable, to be offered as an oblation to the LORD.<sup>a</sup> <sup>28</sup>You shall not slaughter an ox or a sheep on one and the same day with its young. <sup>29</sup>Whenever you offer a thanksgiving sacrifice to the LORD, so offer it that it may be acceptable on your behalf; <sup>30</sup>it must be eaten on the same day; none of it shall be left over until morning.<sup>b</sup> I am the LORD.

<sup>31</sup>Be careful to observe my commandments. I am the LORD. <sup>32</sup>Do not profane my holy name, that in the midst of the Israelites I may be hallowed. I, the LORD, make you holy, <sup>33</sup> who led you out of the land of Egypt to be your God. I am the LORD.

CHAPTER 23

See RG 154–56

Holy Days. * <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Speak to the Israelites and tell them: The following are the festivals<sup>c</sup> of the LORD, which you shall declare holy days. These are my festivals:

<sup>9*</sup> The LORD said to Moses: <sup>10</sup>Speak to the Israelites and tell them: When you come into the land which I am giving you, and reap its harvest, you shall bring the first sheaf of your harvest to the priest, <sup>11</sup>who shall elevate<sup>h</sup> the sheaf before the LORD that it may be acceptable on your behalf.<sup>i</sup> On the day after the sabbath* the priest shall do this. <sup>12</sup>On this day, when your sheaf is elevated, you shall offer to the LORD for a burnt offering an unblemished yearling lamb. <sup>13</sup>Its grain offering shall be two tenths of an ephah of bran flour mixed with oil, as a sweet-smelling oblation to the LORD; and its libation shall be a fourth of a hin of wine. <sup>14</sup>You shall not eat any bread or roasted grain or fresh kernels until this day, when you bring the offering for your God. This shall be a perpetual statute throughout your generations wherever you dwell.

Pentecost. <sup>15</sup>Beginning with the day after the sabbath, the day on which you bring the sheaf for elevation, you shall count seven full weeks;<sup>j</sup> <sup>16</sup>you shall count to the day after the seventh week, fifty days.* <sup>k</sup> Then you shall present a new grain offering to the LORD. <sup>17</sup>For the elevated offering of your first-ripened fruits to the LORD, you shall bring with you from wherever you live two loaves of bread made of two tenths of an ephah of bran flour and baked with leaven. <sup>18</sup>Besides the bread, you shall offer to the LORD a burnt offering of seven unblemished yearling lambs, one bull of the herd, and two rams, along with their grain offering and libations, as a sweet-smelling oblation to the LORD. <sup>19</sup>One male goat shall be sacrificed as a purification offering, and two yearling lambs as a communion sacrifice. <sup>20</sup>The priest shall elevate them—that is, the two lambs—with the bread of the first-ripened fruits as an elevated offering before the LORD; these shall be sacred to the LORD and belong to the priest. <sup>21</sup>On this same day you shall make a proclamation: there shall be a declared holy day for you; no heavy work may be done. This shall be a perpetual statute through all your generations wherever you dwell.

<sup>22</sup> When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not be so thorough that you reap the field to its very edge, nor shall you gather the gleanings of your harvest. These things you shall leave for the poor and the alien. I, the LORD, am your God.

New Year's Day. <sup>23</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>24</sup>Tell the Israelites: On the first day of the seventh month <sup>* m</sup> you will have a sabbath rest, with trumpet blasts as a reminder, a declared holy day; <sup>25</sup>you shall do no heavy work, and you shall offer an oblation to the LORD.

The Day of Atonement. <sup>26</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>27</sup>Now the tenth day of this seventh month is the Day of Atonement. <sup>* n</sup> You will have a declared holy day. You shall humble yourselves and offer an oblation to the LORD. <sup>28</sup>On this day you shall not do any work, because it is the Day of Atonement, when atonement is made for you before the LORD, your God. <sup>29</sup>Those who do not humble themselves on this day shall be cut off from the people. <sup>30</sup>If anyone does any work on this day, I will remove that person from the midst of the people. <sup>31</sup>You shall do no work; this is a perpetual statute throughout your generations wherever you dwell; <sup>32</sup>it is a sabbath of complete rest for you. You shall humble yourselves. Beginning on the evening of the ninth of the month, you shall keep your sabbath from evening to evening.

The Feast of Booths. <sup>33</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>34</sup>Tell the Israelites: The fifteenth day of this seventh month is the LORD's feast of Booths, <sup>* o</sup> which shall continue for seven days. <sup>35</sup>On the first day, a declared holy day, you shall do no heavy work. <sup>36</sup>For seven days you shall offer an oblation to the LORD, and on the eighth day you will have a declared holy day. You shall offer an oblation to the LORD. It is the festival closing. You shall do no heavy work.

<sup>37*</sup> These, therefore, are the festivals of the LORD which you shall declare holy days, in order to offer as an oblation to the LORD burnt offerings and grain offerings, sacrifices and libations, as prescribed for each day, <sup>38</sup>in addition to the LORD's sabbaths, your donations, your various votive offerings, and the voluntary offerings that you present to the LORD.

<sup>39</sup>On the fifteenth day, then, of the seventh month, when you have gathered in the produce of the land, you shall celebrate the feast of the LORD* for a whole week. The first and the eighth day shall be days of rest. <sup>40</sup>On the first day you shall gather fruit of majestic trees, branches of palms, and boughs* of leafy trees and valley willows. Then for a week you shall make merry before the LORD, your God. <sup>41</sup>You shall keep this feast of the LORD for one whole week in the year. By perpetual statute throughout your generations in the seventh month of the year, you shall keep it. <sup>42</sup> You shall dwell in booths for seven days; every native-born Israelite shall dwell in booths, <sup>43</sup>that your descendants may realize that, when I led the Israelites out of the land of Egypt, I made them dwell in booths. I, the LORD, am your God.

CHAPTER 24

The Sanctuary Light.* <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Order the Israelites to bring you clear oil of crushed olives for the light, so that you may keep the lamp burning regularly.<sup>p</sup> <sup>3</sup>In the tent of meeting, outside the veil that hangs in front of the covenant, Aaron shall set up the lamp to burn before the LORD regularly, from evening till morning, by a perpetual statute throughout your generations. <sup>4</sup>He shall set up the lamps on the pure gold menorah to burn regularly before the LORD.

The Showbread.* <sup>5</sup>You shall take bran flour and bake it into twelve cakes,<sup>q</sup> using two tenths of an ephah of flour for each cake. <sup>6</sup>These you shall place in two piles, six in each pile, on the pure gold table before the LORD. <sup>7</sup>With each pile put some pure frankincense, which shall serve as an oblation to the LORD, a token of the bread offering. <sup>8</sup>Regularly on each sabbath day the bread<sup>r</sup> shall be set out before the LORD on behalf of the Israelites by an everlasting covenant. <sup>9</sup>It shall belong to Aaron and his sons, who must eat it in a sacred place, since it is most sacred,<sup>s</sup> his as a perpetual due from the oblations to the LORD.

Punishment of Blasphemy.<sup>*10</sup> A man born of an Israelite mother and an Egyptian father went out among the Israelites, and in the camp a fight broke out between the son of the Israelite woman and an Israelite man. <sup>11</sup>The son of the Israelite woman uttered the LORD's name in a curse and blasphemed. So he was brought to Moses—now his mother's name was Shelomith, daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan—<sup>12</sup>and he was kept in custody till a decision from the LORD should settle the case for them.<sup>t</sup> <sup>13</sup>The LORD then said to Moses: <sup>14</sup>Take the blasphemer outside the camp, and when all who heard him have laid their hands* on his head,<sup>u</sup> let the whole community stone him. <sup>15</sup>Tell the Israelites: Anyone who blasphemes God shall bear the penalty; <sup>16</sup>whoever utters the name of the LORD in a curse shall be put to death.<sup>v</sup> The whole community shall stone that person; alien and native-born alike must be put to death for uttering the LORD's name in a curse.

her neighbor shall receive the same in return: <sup>20</sup>fracture for fracture, eye for eye, tooth for tooth. The same injury that one gives another shall be inflicted in return.<sup>y</sup> <sup>21</sup>Whoever takes the life of an animal shall make restitution, but whoever takes a human life shall be put to death. <sup>22</sup>You shall have but one rule, for alien and native-born alike.<sup>z</sup> I, the LORD, am your God.

<sup>23</sup>When Moses told this to the Israelites, they took the blasphemer outside the camp and stoned him;<sup>a</sup> they did just as the LORD commanded Moses.

See RG 154–56

The Sabbatical Year. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses on Mount Sinai: <sup>2*</sup> Speak to the Israelites and tell them: When you enter the land that I am giving you, let the land, too, keep a sabbath for the LORD. <sup>3</sup>For six years you may sow your field, and for six years prune your vineyard, gathering in their produce.<sup>b</sup> <sup>4</sup> But during the seventh year the land shall have a sabbath of complete rest, a sabbath for the LORD,<sup>c</sup> when you may neither sow your field nor prune your vineyard. <sup>5</sup>The aftergrowth of your harvest you shall not reap, nor shall you pick the grapes of your untrimmed vines. It shall be a year of rest for the land. <sup>6</sup>While the land has its sabbath, all its produce will be food to eat for you yourself and for your male and female slave, for your laborer and the tenant who live with you, <sup>7</sup>and likewise for your livestock and for the wild animals on your land.

The Jubilee Year. <sup>8*</sup> You shall count seven weeks of years—seven times seven years—such that the seven weeks of years amount to forty-nine years. <sup>9</sup>Then, on the tenth day of the seventh month* let the ram's horn resound; on this, the Day of Atonement,<sup>d</sup> the ram's horn blast shall resound throughout your land. <sup>10</sup>You shall treat this fiftieth year as sacred. You shall proclaim liberty in the land for all its inhabitants.<sup>e</sup> It shall be a jubilee for you, when each of you shall return to your own property, each of you to your own family. <sup>11</sup>This fiftieth year is your year of jubilee; you shall not sow, nor shall you reap the aftergrowth or pick the untrimmed vines, <sup>12</sup>since this is the jubilee. It shall be sacred for you. You may only eat what the field yields of itself.

<sup>13</sup>In this year of jubilee, then, each of you shall return to your own property. <sup>14</sup>Therefore, when you sell any land to your neighbor or buy any from your neighbor, do not deal unfairly with one another. <sup>15</sup>On the basis of the number of years since the last jubilee you shall purchase the land from your neighbor,<sup>f</sup> and so also, on the basis of the number of years of harvest, that person shall sell it to you. <sup>16</sup>When the years are many, the price shall be so much the more; when the years are few, the price shall be so much the less. For it is really the number of harvests that the person sells you. <sup>17</sup>Do not deal unfairly with one another, then; but stand in fear of your God. I, the LORD, am your God.

<sup>18</sup>Observe my statutes and be careful to keep my ordinances, so that you will dwell securely in the land. <sup>19</sup>The land will yield its fruit and you will eat your fill, and live there securely.<sup>g</sup> <sup>20</sup>And if you say, “What shall we eat in the seventh year, if we do not sow or reap our crop?”<sup>h</sup> <sup>21</sup>I will command such a blessing for you in the sixth year that there will be crop enough for three years, <sup>22</sup> and when you sow in the eighth year, you will still be eating from the old crop; even into the ninth year, until the crop comes in, you will still be eating from the old crop.<sup>i</sup>

Redemption of Property.* <sup>23</sup>The land shall not be sold irrevocably; for the land is mine, and you are but resident aliens and under my authority. <sup>24</sup>Therefore, in every part of the country that you occupy, you must permit the land to be redeemed. <sup>25</sup>When one of your kindred is reduced to poverty and has to sell some property, that person’s closest relative,* who has the duty to redeem it, shall come and redeem what the relative has sold.<sup>j</sup> <sup>26</sup>If, however, the person has no relative to redeem it, but later on acquires sufficient means to redeem it, <sup>27</sup>the person shall calculate the years since the sale, return the balance to the one to whom it was sold, and thus regain the property.<sup>k</sup> <sup>28</sup> But if the person does not acquire sufficient means to buy back the land, what was sold shall remain in the possession of the purchaser until the year of the jubilee, when it must be released and returned to the original owner.<sup>l</sup>

<sup>29*</sup> When someone sells a dwelling in a walled town, it can be redeemed up to a full year after its sale—the redemption period is one year. <sup>30</sup>But if such a house in a walled town has not been redeemed at the end of a full year, it shall belong irrevocably to the purchaser throughout the generations; it shall not be released in the jubilee. <sup>31</sup>However, houses in villages that are not encircled by walls shall be reckoned as part of the surrounding farm land; they may be redeemed, and in the jubilee they must be released.

belonging to their cities shall not be sold at all; it must always remain their possession.

<sup>35</sup>When one of your kindred is reduced to poverty and becomes indebted to you, you shall support that person like a resident alien; let your kindred live with you. <sup>36</sup>Do not exact interest in advance or accrued interest,* but out of fear of God let your kindred live with you. <sup>37</sup><sup>o</sup> Do not give your money at interest or your food at a profit. <sup>38</sup>I, the LORD, am your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt to give you the land of Canaan and to be your God.

<sup>39</sup>* When your kindred with you, having been so reduced to poverty, sell themselves to you, do not make them work as slaves.<sup>p</sup> <sup>40</sup>Rather, let them be like laborers or like your tenants, working with you until the jubilee year, <sup>41</sup>when, together with any children, they shall be released from your service and return to their family and to their ancestral property. <sup>42</sup>Since they are my servants, whom I brought out of the land of Egypt, they shall not sell themselves as slaves are sold. <sup>43</sup>Do not lord it over them harshly, but stand in fear of your God.

<sup>44</sup>* The male and female slaves that you possess—these you shall acquire from the nations round about you.<sup>q</sup> <sup>45</sup>You may also acquire them from among the resident aliens who reside with you, and from their families who are with you, those whom they bore in your land. These you may possess, <sup>46</sup>and bequeath to your children as their hereditary possession forever. You may treat them as slaves. But none of you shall lord it harshly over any of your fellow Israelites.<sup>r</sup>

<sup>47</sup>When your kindred, having been so reduced to poverty, sell themselves to a resident alien who has become wealthy or to descendants of a resident alien's family, <sup>48</sup>even after having sold themselves, they still may be redeemed by one of their kindred, <sup>49</sup>by an uncle or cousin, or by some other relative from their family; or, having acquired the means, they may pay the redemption price themselves. <sup>50</sup>With the purchaser they shall compute the years from the sale to the jubilee, distributing the sale price over these years as though they had been hired as laborers. <sup>51</sup>The more years there are, the more of the sale price they shall pay back as the redemption price; <sup>52</sup>the fewer years there are before the jubilee year, the more they have as credit; in proportion to the years of service they shall pay the redemption price. <sup>53</sup>The tenant alien shall treat those who sold themselves as laborers hired on an annual basis, and the alien shall not lord it over them harshly before your very eyes. <sup>54</sup>And if they are not redeemed by these means, they shall nevertheless be released, together with any children, in the jubilee year. <sup>55</sup>For the Israelites belong to me as servants; they are my servants, whom I brought out of the land of Egypt, I, the LORD, your God.

CHAPTER 26

The Reward of Obedience. <sup>1*</sup> Do not make idols for yourselves. You shall not erect a carved image or a sacred stone for yourselves, nor shall you set up a carved stone for worship in your land;<sup>s</sup> for I, the LORD, am your God. <sup>2</sup>Keep my sabbaths,<sup>t</sup> and reverence my sanctuary. I am the LORD.

<sup>3*</sup> <sup>u</sup> If you live in accordance with my statutes and are careful to observe my commandments, <sup>4</sup>I will give you your rains in due season, so that the land will yield its crops, and the trees their fruit;<sup>v</sup> <sup>5</sup>your threshing will last till vintage time, and your vintage till the time for sowing, and you will eat your fill of food, and live securely in your land.<sup>w</sup> <sup>6</sup>I will establish peace in the land, and you will lie down to rest with no one to cause you anxiety. I will rid the country of ravenous beasts, and no sword shall sweep across your land. <sup>7</sup>You will rout your enemies, and they shall fall before your sword. <sup>8</sup>Five of you will put a hundred of your foes to flight, and a hundred of you will put to flight ten thousand, till your enemies fall before your sword.<sup>x</sup> <sup>9</sup>I will look with favor upon you, and make you fruitful and numerous,<sup>y</sup> as I carry out my covenant with you. <sup>10</sup>You shall eat the oldest stored harvest, and have to discard it to make room for the new.<sup>z</sup> <sup>11a</sup> I will set my tabernacle in your midst, and will not loathe you. <sup>12</sup>Ever present in your midst, I will be your God, and you will be my people; <sup>13</sup>I, the LORD, am your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt to be their slaves no more, breaking the bars of your yoke and making you walk erect.<sup>b</sup>

The Punishment of Disobedience. <sup>*14c</sup> But if you do not heed me and do not keep all these commandments, <sup>15</sup>if you reject my statutes and loathe my decrees, refusing to obey all my commandments and breaking my covenant, <sup>16</sup>then I, in turn, will do this to you: I will bring terror upon you—with consumption and fever to dim the eyes and sap the life. You will sow your seed in vain, for your enemies will consume the crop. <sup>17</sup>I will turn against you, and you will be beaten down before your enemies<sup>d</sup> and your foes will lord it over you. You will flee though no one pursues you.

<sup>18</sup>If even after this you do not obey me, I will increase the chastisement for your sins sevenfold,<sup>e</sup> <sup>19</sup>to break your proud strength. I will make the sky above you as hard as iron, and your soil as hard as bronze, <sup>20</sup>so that your strength will be spent in vain; your land will bear no crops, and its trees no fruit.

<sup>21</sup>If then you continue hostile, unwilling to obey me, I will multiply my blows sevenfold, as your sins deserve. <sup>22</sup>I will unleash wild beasts against you, to rob you of your children and wipe out your livestock, till your population dwindles away and your roads become deserted.

<sup>23</sup>If, with all this, you still do not accept my discipline and continue hostile to me, <sup>24f</sup> I, too, will continue to be hostile to you and I, for my part, will smite you for your sins sevenfold. <sup>25</sup>I will bring against you the sword, the avenger of my covenant. Though you then huddle together in your cities, I will send pestilence among you, till you are delivered to the enemy. <sup>26</sup>When I break your staff of bread, ten women will need but one oven for baking your bread, and they shall dole it out to you by weight;<sup>g</sup> and though you eat, you shall not be satisfied.

<sup>27</sup>If, despite all this, you disobey and continue hostile to me, <sup>28</sup>I will continue in my hostile rage toward you, and I myself will discipline you for your sins sevenfold, <sup>29</sup>till you begin to eat the flesh of your own sons and daughters.<sup>h</sup> <sup>30</sup>I will demolish your high places, overthrow your incense stands, and cast your corpses upon the corpses of your idols.<sup>i</sup> In my loathing of you, <sup>31</sup>I will lay waste your cities and desolate your sanctuaries, refusing your sweet-smelling offerings. <sup>32</sup>So devastated will I leave the land that your enemies who come to live there will stand aghast at the sight of it.<sup>j</sup> <sup>33</sup>And you I will scatter among the nations<sup>k</sup> at the point of my drawn sword, leaving your countryside desolate and your cities deserted. <sup>34</sup>Then shall the land, during the time it lies waste, make up its lost sabbaths, while you are in the land of your enemies; then shall the land have rest and make up for its sabbaths<sup>l</sup> <sup>35</sup>during all the time that it lies desolate, enjoying the rest that you would not let it have on your sabbaths when you lived there.

<sup>36</sup>Those of you who survive in the lands of their enemies, I will make so fainthearted that the sound of a driven leaf will pursue them, and they shall run as if from the sword, and fall though no one pursues them; <sup>37</sup>stumbling over one another as if to escape a sword, while no one is after them—so helpless will you be to take a stand against your foes! <sup>38</sup>You shall perish among the nations, swallowed up in your enemies' country. <sup>39</sup>Those of you who survive will waste away in the lands of their enemies, for their own and their ancestors' guilt.<sup>m</sup>

<sup>40*</sup> They will confess<sup>n</sup> their iniquity and the iniquity of their ancestors in their treachery against me and in their continued hostility toward me, <sup>41</sup>so that I, too, had to be hostile to them and bring them into their enemies' land. Then, when their uncircumcised hearts are humbled and they make amends for their iniquity, <sup>42</sup>I will remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac; and also my covenant with Abraham I will remember.<sup>o</sup> The land, too, I will remember. <sup>43</sup>The land will be forsaken by them, that in its desolation without them, it may make up its sabbaths, and that they, too, may make good the debt of their guilt for having spurned my decrees and loathed my statutes. <sup>44</sup>Yet even so, even while they are in their enemies' land, I will not reject or loathe them to the point of wiping them out, thus making void my covenant with them; for I, the LORD, am their God. <sup>45</sup>I will remember for them the covenant I made with their forebears, whom I brought out of the land of Egypt before the eyes of the nations,<sup>p</sup> that I might be their God. I am the LORD.

<sup>46</sup>These are the statutes, decrees and laws which the LORD established between himself and the Israelites through Moses on Mount Sinai.<sup>q</sup>

V. Redemption of Offerings

CHAPTER 27

Votive Offerings and Dedications. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2*</sup> Speak to the Israelites and tell them: When anyone makes a vow to the LORD<sup>r</sup> with respect to the value of a human being, <sup>3</sup>the value for males between the ages of twenty and sixty shall be fifty silver shekels, by the sanctuary shekel; <sup>4</sup>and for a female, the value shall be thirty shekels. <sup>5</sup>For persons between the ages of five and twenty, the value for a male shall be twenty shekels, and for a female, ten shekels. <sup>6</sup>For persons between the ages of one month and five years, the value for a male shall be five silver shekels, and for a female, three shekels. <sup>7</sup>For persons of sixty or more, for a male the value shall be fifteen shekels, and ten shekels for a female. <sup>8</sup>However, if the one who made the vow is too poor to meet the sum,<sup>s</sup> the person must be set before the priest, who shall determine a value; the priest will do this in keeping with the means of the one who made the vow.

<sup>9</sup>If the offering vowed to the LORD is an animal that may be sacrificed, every such animal given to the LORD becomes sacred.<sup>t</sup> <sup>10</sup>The offerer shall not substitute or exchange another for it, either a worse or a better one. If the offerer exchanges one animal in place of another, both the original and its substitute shall become sacred. <sup>11</sup>If any unclean animal which is unfit for sacrifice<sup>u</sup> to the LORD is vowed, it must be set before the priest, <sup>12</sup>who shall determine its value* in keeping with its good or bad qualities, and the value set by the priest shall stand. <sup>13</sup>If the offerer wishes to redeem the animal, the person shall pay one fifth more than this valuation.<sup>v</sup>

<sup>14*</sup> When someone dedicates a house as sacred to the LORD,* the priest shall determine its value in keeping with its good or bad qualities, and the value set by the priest shall stand. <sup>15</sup>A person dedicating a house who then wishes to redeem it shall pay one fifth more than the price thus established, and then it will again belong to that individual.<sup>w</sup>

priest shall estimate its money value according to the number of years left until the next jubilee year, with a corresponding reduction on the valuation.<sup>x</sup>

<sup>22</sup>If someone dedicates to the LORD a field that was purchased and was not part of hereditary property, <sup>23</sup>the priest shall compute its value in proportion to the number of years until the next jubilee, and on the same day the person shall pay the price thus established, a sacred donation to the LORD; <sup>24</sup>at the jubilee the field shall revert to the hereditary owner of this land from whom it had been purchased.*

<sup>25</sup>Every valuation shall be made according to the standard of the sanctuary shekel. There are twenty gerahs to the shekel.

Irredeemable Offerings. <sup>26*</sup> Note that a firstborn animal,<sup>a</sup> which as such already belongs to the LORD, may not be dedicated. Whether an ox or a sheep, it is the LORD's. <sup>27</sup>But if it is an unclean animal,* it may be redeemed by paying one fifth more than its value. If it is not redeemed, it shall be sold at its value.

1:2 Any one of you: women as well as men bring sacrifices (see 12:6–8; 15:28–30) and are explicitly obligated in other ritual matters (e.g., 13:29, 38; Nm 5:6; 6:2; Lk 2:24). Thus, though the Hebrew formulates sacrificial and other law with male reference, the translation reflects the inclusion of women in ritual requirements. From the herd or from the flock: the only animals which could be used as sacrificial victims were domestic animals either of the bovine class (bulls, cows and calves) or the ovine class (sheep and lambs, goats and kids). Excluded, therefore, were not only all wild animals, but also such “unclean” domestic animals as the camel and the donkey (cf. 11:1–47; 27:26–27).

1:3–5 Entrance of the tent of meeting ... before the LORD: probably the forecourt from the entrance of the court to the entrance of the tent (cf. Ex 27). Thus the altar in front of the tent was entirely accessible to the laity.

1:3 The burnt offering is used for regular daily (6:1–6) offerings, public festivals (Nm 28–29), purification rituals (Lv 12:6–8; 14:19–20; 15:15, 30), and individuals’ vows and voluntary offerings (22:18–20).

1:4 Lay a hand: the imposition of a single hand for the sacrifices in chaps. 1–5 may be a means of designating the animal as belonging to the offerer. See note on 16:21. Atonement: see note on 16:6.

1:5 Shall then be slaughtered: lit., “he shall slaughter the bull.” Slaughtering is not something the offerer must do (as opposed to, for example, hand placement [v. 4] or the presentation of sacrificial portions as an elevated offering [7:29–34]). Thus the verb is construed impersonally here.

1:16 Crissum: the area around the anus of the bird, lying beneath the bird’s tail.

2:1 Grain offerings are used as independent offerings (those in this chapter and cf. 6:12–16; 8:26–27; 23:10–11), as substitutes for other offerings in a case of poverty (5:11–13), and as accompaniments to animal offerings (cf. Nm 15:1–12; 28:1–29:39; Lv 14:20; 23:12, 18, 37). Chapter 2 describes two basic types of grain offering: uncooked (vv. 1–3) and cooked (vv. 4–10). The flour (sōlet) used was made of wheat (Ex 29:2) and Jewish tradition and Semitic cognates indicate that it is a coarse rather than a fine flour.

2:2 Token of the offering: lit., “reminder.” Instead of burning the whole grain offering, only this part is burned on the altar.

2:11–12 No grain offering that is leavened can be offered on the altar. Those in 7:13 and 23:17 are leavened but not offered on the altar. The Hebrew word for “honey” may refer to fruit syrup as well as to bee honey.

2:13 The salt of the covenant with your God: partaking of salt in common was an ancient symbol of friendship and alliance. Cf. Mark 9:49–50 and Col 4:6.

3:1 The exact meaning of Hebrew shelamim, “communion sacrifice,” is not clear. It has also been rendered “gift,” “(re)payment,” “peace,” “well-being,” or “covenant” offering. This offering may be brought for a vow or voluntary offering (cf. 22:21). A distinct version of the communion sacrifice is the thanksgiving offering (7:11–15 vis-a-vis vv. 16–18).

3:3–5 Fat: only part of the offering is devoted to God, as opposed to the burnt offering (chap. 1), which is wholly burnt (except for the skin). The meat is distributed among the offerer (and the offerer’s party) and the priests (cf. 7:11–36).

3:17 Any fat or any blood: this prohibition is mentioned here because portions of this offering could be eaten by lay Israelites, who may not be entirely familiar with the prohibition (cf. 7:22–27; 19:26). The fat prohibited is only the visceral fat mentioned in 3:9–10, 14–15, not muscular fat.

4:2 Inadvertently: the concern in this chapter, and much of chap. 5, is wrongs done unintentionally. Intentional (“highhanded”) sins are punished with being “cut off” from the people (Nm 15:30–31). See note on Lv 7:20. LORD’s prohibitions: not included in the faults figured here is failure to perform positive commandments. Failing to perform positive commands, however, still renders the individual liable to other punishment (e.g., failing to observe the Passover, Nm 9:13). Cf. Nm 15:22–31.

4:3 The anointed priest: the chapter presents four cases of inadvertent wrong, arranged in descending order according to the status of the wrongdoer: high priest (vv. 3–12), entire community (vv. 13–21), tribal leader (vv. 22–26), and general populace (vv. 27–35). The higher one's position, the more deeply the sin affects the sanctuary (vv. 5–7, 17–18 versus vv. 25, 29, 34). See note on 16:6. Purification offering: the Hebrew verb hittē' means “remove sin, purify” (Lv 8:15; Ez 43:20–23; 45:18–19; cf. Ex 29:36). The offering cleansed the various places to which the blood was applied or the rooms in which it was sprinkled.

4:5–7 On the structure of the sanctuary, see Ex 26–27.

4:11–12 See note on 6:17–23.

4:12 Clean place: i.e., ritually “clean” or pure. It has nothing to do with the presence of dirt or waste. See 6:4.

4:13 Whole community ... errs: this case probably complements that of vv. 3–12. There the high priest sins so that the people become guilty. Those verses deal with his requirements for atonement; vv. 13–21 deal with the people's requirements.

5:1–13 This differs from the prescriptions for purification offerings in chap. 4 by listing four specific wrongs for which a purification offering is brought and allowing the substitution of birds and grain offerings in the case of poverty.

5:2 Swarming creature: a rather imprecise categorization that includes various small creatures in the seas, such as fish that go about in large groups or swarms (Gn 1:20; Lv 11:10); or, similarly, various winged insects that mass in the skies (Lv 11:20; Dt 14:19); and, finally, various small creatures that move in swarms on land, whether crawlers, quadrupeds, or of the multilegged variety (Lv 11:41–42). According to 11:29–30, even various rodents and lizards can be included in this category.

5:11 Ephah: see note on Is 5:10.

5:14–26 This last half of the chapter deals with a distinct sacrifice, the reparation offering (Heb. 'asham). The Hebrew root for this term has a basic meaning of “be guilty.” The noun can have a consequential sense of “that which is due from guilt,” i.e., “compensation, indemnification, reparation”; hence the translation “reparation offering,” rather than the alternatives “guilt offering” or “trespass offering.” This offering is brought most often in cases of sacrilege.

5:15 At the established value: the Hebrew term 'erkēkā, which in context means “(established) value,” may indicate that a person could bring the monetary equivalent of a ram instead of an actual animal. See vv. 18, 25.

6:2–6 This passage may have reference to the burnt offering that is offered in the morning and late afternoon each day (cf. Ex 29:38–42; Nm 28:3–8).

6:2 Ritual: Hebrew torah, which also has the broader meaning of “instruction.” The treatment of sacrifices in chaps. 6–7 recapitulates the offerings treated in 1–5 but now with more emphasis on priestly duties and prerogatives.

6:7–11 The passage is apparently concerned with the raw grain offering of 2:1–3.

6:12–16 This seems to refer to a grain offering offered twice daily by the high priest, perhaps identical to the regular grain offering in Nm 4:16 (cf. Neh 10:34). This offering is distinct from the grain offering that accompanies the daily burnt offering.

6:17–23 There are two types of purification offering: one whose blood is used inside the tent sanctuary (4:1–12, 13–21) and another whose blood was only used at the outer sacrificial altar (4:22–26, 27–31, 32–35). The carcasses of the former, as well as of purification offerings brought by the priests themselves (cf. 8:14–17; 9:8–11), are not eaten by priests but disposed of at the ash heap outside the camp, which itself is set up around the sanctuary (Ex 29:14; Lv 4:11–12, 21; 6:23; 8:17;

9:11; 16:27). The Letter to the Hebrews compares Jesus' suffering "outside the gate" to the disposal of purification offering carcasses outside the camp (Heb 13:11–13).

7:1–6 These prescriptions may appear here rather than in 5:14–26 where this offering is first treated because the monetary equivalent of the offering might have been brought instead of an actual animal. See note on 5:15.

7:9–10 For the distinction between uncooked and cooked grain offerings, see 2:1–10 and note on 2:1. The contradiction between v. 9 and 2:10 may reflect a development in custom, with the distribution in v. 9 coming from earlier times, when sanctuary personnel was more limited.

7:11–36 This section discusses three types of communion sacrifice: the thanksgiving offering (vv. 12–15), a votive offering, and a voluntary offering (vv. 16–18). The latter two are similar and are thus mentioned together. Verses 19–36 apply to all types of communion sacrifice.

7:12–13 Four types of breads accompany the thanksgiving offering. Three types are cooked grain offerings comparable to those in 2:4–10. Also required are loaves of leavened bread (see 2:11).

7:14 Contribution: Hebrew terumah. This does not indicate a particular ritual action. The word simply means "gift, something set apart."

7:15–18 Sacrifices must be properly consumed for them to be effective (cf. also 19:5–8; 22:30). Similar rules obtain for the Passover offering (Ex 12:10; Nm 9:12; cf. Ex 23:18; 34:25; Dt 16:4) and the ordination offering (Ex 29:34; Lv 8:32).

7:16 Votive or a voluntary offering: these are not specific types of offerings but rather motivations for bringing the communion sacrifice (cf. 22:18). A votive offering is brought as the consequence of a promise (vow) made to God. A voluntary offering is a spontaneous gift to God independent of a prior promise. See note on 27:2–13.

7:18 Bear the penalty: this refers in many cases to punishment by God (cf. 17:16; 19:8; 20:17, 19; Nm 18:1, 23; 30:16).

7:19–21 For ritual impurity, see note on 11:1–15:33.

7:20 Cut off: a common term in the Priestly source that cannot always be reduced to a simple English equivalent, since its usage appears to involve a number of associated punishments, some or all of which may come into play in any one instance (see Ex 12:15 and note). All the same, as a punishment from God, to be "cut off" (from one's people) frequently appears to refer to termination of the offender's family line (and perhaps in some cases an early death); see Lv 20:2–3, 20–21; Ru 4:10; Ps 109:13; Mal 2:12.

7:30 Raised as an elevated offering: these portions of the sacrifices were specially dedicated by lifting them in presentation before God's abode. The sanctifying effect of this action is clearly seen in 23:17–20; Nm 6:19–20.

8:1–2 This chapter presents the fulfillment of the commands in Ex 28–29; 30:26–30; and 40:9–15.

8:3–4 Community: this word (Heb. 'edah) may refer to tribal leaders, all adult males, or the entire nation. The last is probably intended here.

8:7–9, 13 On the priestly clothing, see Ex 28–29. Ephod: according to Ex 28:6–14, the term for one of Aaron's special vestments made of gold thread, with multicolored woolen thread woven into it as well as fine linen. In appearance it resembled a kind of apron, hung on the priest by shoulder straps and secured by an embroidered belt. A somewhat simpler "apron" was presumably worn by other priests (1 Sm 22:18).

8:8 The Urim and Thummim: see Ex 28:30 and note there. Although these terms and the object(s) they refer to are still unexplained, they appear to be small objects that functioned like dice or lots to render a decision for those making an inquiry of God, perhaps originally in legal cases where the guilt of the accused could not otherwise be determined (cf. Ex 28:30; Nm 27:21; Dt 33:8; 1 Sm 28:6; Ezr 2:63; Neh 7:65).

8:9 Headband: see Ex 39:30–31. The gold medallion, together with its cords, comprises the sacred headband.

8:10–12 Anointing with the specially prepared oil (cf. Ex 30:22–33) is one of the means of making objects and persons holy by setting them apart for a special function or purpose.

8:15 Moses took the blood: Moses is acting as a priest in this chapter.

8:22–32 The priestly ordination offering is a unique type of sacrifice but similar in many respects to the communion sacrifice (chap. 3; 7:11–34).

8:23–24 Lobe ... thumb ... toe: these parts of the body are meant to represent the body as a whole. The application of the blood symbolizes the priests' passing from a profane to a holy state. Cf. 14:14–17.

8:33–35 You are not to depart: the tenor and context of this requirement in vv. 33 and 35 seem to indicate that the priests are not to leave the sanctuary precincts for any reason. Your ordination is to last for seven days ... what has been done today ... be done: the consecration rites in Exodus are to be performed every day for seven days (cf. Ex 29:30, 35–37).

9:1 Eighth day: this is the conclusion of the priestly initiation ceremony.

9:3–4 The seven-day consecration of the priests in chap. 8 did not require sacrifices from the community. Now communal sacrifices as well as priestly sacrifices are required.

9:6–21 Aaron and his sons now perform the offerings, instead of Moses (see note on 8:15).

9:7 For your household: unlike the Septuagint, the Hebrew reads be'ad ha'am, "for the people."

9:22–23 The people are blessed twice. For the possible content of the blessing, compare the priestly blessing in Nm 6:22–27. Solomon offers a double blessing at the dedication of the Temple (1 Kgs 8:14–21, 55–61).

9:24 The theophany consists of a fire that apparently comes from the tent of meeting. God's fiery glory is also manifested in the pillar of cloud and fire that led the Israelites and rested over the tent of meeting (Ex 13:21; 40:38; Nm 9:15–23; 10:11). On God's fiery glory, see also Ex 24:17; Ez 1:27–28.

10:1–2 Nadab and Abihu are the older sons of Aaron (Ex 6:23–24). Their sin apparently involves using embers from an unapproved source instead of the altar (cf. 16:12). The fire that destroys them is the same type found in 9:24.

10:3 The explanation for the divine reaction indicates that improper cultic actions desecrate God and compromise God's glory. Desecration evokes divine punishment (cf. Ex 28:43; Nm 4:15, 19–20). Those near to me: i.e., cultic officials.

10:4–5 Moses has lay people remove the bodies so that the priests can continue their cultic activities free of contamination by a corpse (cf. Nm 19).

10:10 Sacred and ... profane ... clean and ... unclean: something or someone may be either sacred or profane (i.e., ordinary, not set apart), and at the same time clean or unclean. Priests would be particularly concerned about keeping what is unclean away from the sacred.

10:12–13 Grain offering: this is the grain offering of the people of 9:4, 17. Only the token offering had been offered; the rest was for the priests' consumption.

10:14 Brisket ... leg: these are from the Israelites' communion sacrifices in 9:4, 18–21.

10:16–20 Goat of the purification offering: this is the people's purification offering of 9:3, 15. Since its blood is not brought into the sanctuary, then, according to 6:17–23, this is the type of purification offering which is to be eaten by the priests in a holy place. Eleazar and Ithamar: they burned the entire goat of the people's purification offering (9:15) instead of eating it in a sacred place (6:19) to remove ritually the sin of the community by the ingestion of the meat of the offering. Aaron's defense of this action of his sons is somewhat vague: he merely alludes to the loss suffered in the death of Nadab and Abihu, without giving an explicit reason for Eleazar and Ithamar's not eating the people's purification offering, as required.

11:1–15:33 Priestly legislation manifests two types of impurity or uncleanness: tolerated and prohibited. Prohibited impurity arises from various sins (e.g., 4:1–5; 5:2–3; 18:6–23; 20:2–5; Nm 5:13–14; 6:6–7). Tolerated impurity has three main sources: certain dead bodies (animal and human; cf. Lv 11 and Nm 19), various regular and abnormal genital discharges (Lv 12; Lv 15), and diseases (specifically “scaly infection,” chaps. 13–14). An additional tolerated impurity is that generated by the cult in order to rectify the effect of these impurities or sins (cf. chap. 4; 16:26, 28).

11:1–47 Apart from the introduction and conclusion (vv. 1–2a, 46–47), this chapter has three sections: (1) prohibitions against eating certain land, water, and air animals (vv. 2b–23); (2) consequences of contact with various animals (vv. 24–41); (3) a prohibition against eating small land animals, which is motivated by the requirement that Israel be holy as God is holy (vv. 41–45). These animals are impure only when dead. Cf. Dt 14:3–21.

11:5–6 According to modern zoology, the rock hyrax (Hyrax syriacus) is classified as an ungulate, and the hare as a rodent; neither is a ruminant. They appear to chew their food as the true ruminants do, and it is upon this appearance that the classification in the text is based.

11:13–23, 30 Birds: the term is broader, including all animals that fly (including bats, v. 19, and flying insects, vv. 20–23). The identification of the various Hebrew names for these birds and reptiles is in many cases uncertain.

11:39–40 These animals create uncleanness, but are not prohibited as food (cf. 17:15–16). Priests who have a higher degree of holiness than other Israelites may not eat these animals (22:8; cf. Ez 44:31). Cf. Ex 22:30; Dt 14:21.

11:44–45 Keep yourselves holy ... you shall be holy: a similar idea is expressed in 20:25–26. There, distinguishing between the animals is compared to God’s distinguishing between the peoples and choosing Israel.

12:2–5 The mother has two stages of uncleanness or impurity: the first where her uncleanness is as severe as during her menstrual period and is contagious to profane persons and objects (cf. 15:19–24), and the second where she does not contaminate persons and objects but is still impure to what is holy, such as the sanctuary (12:4) or sacrifices. The implication is that in the second stage she may resume sexual relations with her husband (which would be prohibited in the first stage according to 18:19).

12:3 Circumcision is the sign of the covenant between God and Israel (Gn 17:1–27) and allows full participation in the religious community (Ex 12:43–49; Jos 5:2–10). This command was fulfilled after Jesus’ birth (Lk 2:21).

12:5 If she gives birth to a girl ... sixty-six days: while the longer period of uncleanness following the birth of a girl, compared to that following the birth of a boy, might reflect the relative disparity in social status between men and women in ancient Israel (and attested in other cultures), this is by no means certain. There is no simple correlation in the Bible between the worth of something and the degree of impurity it can occasion.

12:6–8 Certain tolerated impurities (see note on 11:1–15:33) are strong enough to pollute the sanctuary and require purification offerings, including the parturient (see also 14:10–32; 15:13–15, 28–30). Cf. note on 4:3. Mary fulfilled the command of bringing sacrifices after the birth of Jesus (Lk 2:22–24).

13:1–14:57 These chapters deal with scaly or fungal infections (Hebrew sāra’at). The older translation “leprosy” is misleading because sāra’at refers to not just one but several chronic and enduring skin diseases in human beings. The disease known as “leprosy” (Hansen’s disease) is probably not included among the conditions described in the chapter. Also the term sāra’at refers to fungal growths in fabrics and on the walls of houses. The reason why these conditions, and not other diseases, were considered unclean may be that they were quite visible, associated with death (cf. Nm 12:9–12), and traditionally connected with punishment by the deity (Lv 14:34; Dt 28:27, 35; 2 Sm 3:29; 2 Kgs 5:26–27; 2 Chr 26:16–21).

13:3 The symptoms of white hair and depth (perhaps a subcutaneous lesion) do not clearly correlate with known skin diseases or lesions. It may be that the symptoms are a hybrid ideal that do not reflect reality and are the result of priestly systematization. The same judgment applies to the conditions in vv. 10–11, 20, 25; cf. note on vv. 12–17.

13:4–8 The symptoms here involve a flaky patch of skin that spreads after one week or stays the same after two. This correlates with many skin diseases, such as psoriasis, seborrhoeic dermatitis, certain mycotic infections, patchy eczema, and pityriasis rosea.

13:4 Quarantine ... seven days: unless lesions have unmistakable symptoms of scaly infection, time is needed to distinguish disease from a condition which is following the natural course of healing and remission. Cf. vv. 5, 21, 26, 27, 31, 33, 50, 54; 14:38.

13:6 Wash his garments: even suspected scaly infections create some impurity, not just diagnosed infections (vv. 45–46).

13:12–17 This is not a paradox, namely where a limited lesion is impure but one that covers the whole body is pure. Rather, a white lesion that lacks ulcerated skin (“raw flesh”) is pure, even if it covers the whole body. This formulation reflects priestly interest in systematization.

13:29–37 The symptoms in this unit may include either favus (a mycotic infection) or a protein deficiency syndrome (Kwashiorkor) where the hair may be fine and copper-red to yellow.

13:38–39 This may refer to vitiligo, where patches of the skin and hair lose pigmentation.

13:45–46 The symbolic association with death is found in the mourning activities in which those diagnosed with these afflictions engage: rending clothes, disheveling the hair, and covering the mouth. They are also excluded from the camp. Cf. examples of exclusion in Nm 5:1–4; 12:14–15; 2 Kgs 7:3–10; 15:5; 2 Chr 26:21. Persons with scaly infections must have been able to pollute others in the priestly system, though this is not stated. Hence, they must cry out “Unclean, unclean!” to warn others of their presence.

13:48 Warp and woof: it is possible that the nature of the weave allowed fungus to grow separately along warp or woof. Otherwise, this may refer to the yarns before they are woven together.

14:1–32 The rites here are for purification from human scaly infections after recovery, not for healing (but cf. 2 Kgs 5:10–14).

14:4–7 The bird rite is also found for purifying a house from a fungus (vv. 49–53). The rite apparently removes impurity from the individual and, by means of the live bird, sends it away to unpopulated areas (v. 7). This is similar to the dispatch of a goat laden with sins on the Day of Atonement (16:21–22).

14:5–7 The blood from the bird serves as a ritual detergent, much like the blood from the purification offering (see notes on 4:3). It is not a sacrifice, however, since it is not performed at the sanctuary. Fresh water: lit., “living water,” taken from some source of running water, not from a cistern.

14:8 Bathe in water: This phrase occurs frequently in Lv 14–16 and is imprecise. It can refer to both ordinary and cultic washing. The context will determine the meaning. At this early period in Israel’s history it is probably not a reference to cultic immersion in a Mikveh—a Second Temple period ritual.

14:10 Log: a liquid measure of capacity attested in the Bible only here. It is apparently equal in capacity to one-half liter.

14:14–17 The application of blood and oil here facilitates the movement of the person from the severely impure to the pure profane sphere; it reintegrates him or her into the community. Cf. 8:23–24.

14:33–53 Discussion of fungi in houses is probably delayed until here because it deals with a case pertaining to living in the land (v. 34) as opposed to the foregoing cases which apply even in the wilderness. The rules on fabrics (13:47–58) apply to the tent dwellings in the wilderness.

15:1–33 Sexual discharges may be unclean partly because they involve the loss of life fluids or are otherwise involved with phenomena at the margins of life and death.

15:2–3 The uncleanness here is perhaps a discharge of pus because of urethritis (often but not solely associated with gonorrhea).

15:3 Body: here a euphemism in the Hebrew for “penis.”

15:13 Becomes clean: i.e., when his discharge ceases. The rite that follows is for purification, not a cure; see note on 14:1–32.

15:16–18 Menstrual blood, semen, and other impurities in Lv 11–15 are considered “impure” either because they are force of life whose “loss” represents death or because, as uniquely human conditions, they are symbolically incompatible with the deity and the divine abode, the sanctuary. Lv 15:16 refers to a spontaneous nocturnal emission, and either because this marks life and death boundaries or because of its uniquely human (versus divine) character, any contact with it renders the object or person ritually unclean. Thus, in 15:18 it is not the marital act itself that is polluting, but only semen.

15:19–24 This is normal menstruation.

15:23 An object: the Hebrew is unclear. This translation means that even an object on the woman’s unclean bed or chair can mediate uncleanness to another, but only if all the object touched is still on the bed or article sat upon, thus forming a chain of simultaneous contact.

15:25–30 This is menstruation outside the normal cycle or for periods longer than normal. A woman with a chronic blood flow was healed by touching the tassel of Jesus’ cloak (Mt 9:20–22; Mk 5:25–34; Lk 8:43–48).

16:1–34 This is the narrative sequel of the story in chap. 10. The ritual in Chapter 16 originally may have been an emergency rite in response to unexpected pollution of the sanctuary.

16:2 Not to come whenever he pleases: access to the various parts of the sanctuary is strictly controlled. Only the high priest can enter the most holy place, and only once a year. The veil: the Letter to the Hebrews makes use of the imagery of the Day of Atonement (in Hebrew Yom Kippur) to explain Jesus’ sacrifice (Heb 9:1–14, 23–28). Ark’s cover: the meaning of kappōret is not certain. It may be connected with the verb kipper “to atone, purge” (see note on v. 6) and thus refer to this part of the ark as a focus of atonement or purification.

16:6 Make atonement: the Hebrew verb kipper refers specifically to the removal of sin and impurity (cf. Ex 30:10; Lv 6:23; 8:15; 16:16, 18, 20, 27, 33; Ez 43:20, 26; 45:20), thus “to purge” in vv. 16, 18, 20, and 33, and more generally to the consequence of the sacrificial procedure, which is atonement (cf. Lv 17:11). “Atonement” is preeminently a function of the purification sacrifice, but other sacrifices, except apparently for the communion sacrifice, achieve this as well.

16:8 Azazel: a name for a demon (meaning something like “angry/fierce god”). See note on 17:7.

16:16 Inner sanctuary: this refers to the most holy room (vv. 2, 11–15). Trespasses, including all their sins: the term for “trespasses” (Heb. pesha’im), which has overtones of rebellion, and the phrase “all their sins” indicate that even sins committed intentionally are included (such as when the sinner “acts defiantly,” as in Nm 15:30–31). This complements the scheme found in Lv 4 (see note on 4:3): intentional sins pollute the sanctuary more and penetrate even further than inadvertent sins, namely to the most holy place. The same for the tent of meeting: this rite may be that found in 4:5–7, 16–18 where blood is sprinkled in the anterior room and blood is placed on the horns of the incense altar there. Cf. Ex 30:10.

16:18–19 Thus a third locale in the sanctuary complex, the open-air altar, is purified. See the summaries in 16:20, 33.

16:21 Both hands: this gesture is for transferring sins to the head of the goat and is apparently different in meaning from the one-handed gesture that precedes the slaughtering of sacrificial animals (1:4; 3:2; 4:4; see note on 1:4).

16:29 Humble yourselves: also v. 31%. The idiom used here (Heb. 'innâ nephesh) involves mainly fasting (Ps 35:13), but probably prohibits other activities such as anointing (Dn 10:3) and sexual intercourse (2 Sm 12:15–24). Such acts of self-denial display the need for divine favor. Fasting is often undertaken in times of emergency and mourning (cf. 1 Sm 14:24; 2 Sm 1:12; 3:35; cf. Mk 2:18–22).

17:3–4 Any animal slaughtered must be brought to the tent of meeting as an offering. This differs from Dt 12:15–28, which allows those living too far from the temple to slaughter an animal for food at home without offering it as a sacrifice.

17:4 Guilty of bloodshed: human beings and animals can incur blood guilt for killing human beings (cf. Gn 9:5–6); human beings can incur blood guilt for killing animals (see note on Lv 24:17–22).

17:7 Demons: for Hebrew še'îrîm, lit., “goats.” Like the demon Azazel (cf. 16:8, 10, 21–22), they dwell in the open country (17:5). Cf. Is 13:21; 34:14.

17:11 To make atonement: this is probably to be understood in the context of liability for shedding animal blood (cf. v. 4). Placing the blood on the altar exonerates the slaughterer from guilt for the killing. See note on 16:6.

17:13 Hunting: game animals are not permitted as offerings. One nonetheless has to treat the blood of these animals carefully by covering it with earth. Cf. Dt 12:16, 24.

18:2 I, the LORD, am your God: this declaration appears frequently elsewhere throughout chaps. 17–26, sometimes with a statement of God’s holiness or his sanctifying activity. It emphasizes the importance of the laws and the relationship of the divine lawgiver to the people.

18:5 Find life: in Dt 30:15–20 Moses sets before the people life and death. The alternatives are set out in detail in Lv 26 and Dt 28. Cf. Ez 20:11, 13, 21.

18:6–23 These laws deal with illicit sexual behavior. Lv 20:10–21 reiterates most of these cases, with penalties. Cf. also Dt 27:15–26; Ez 22:7–12. The ordering of the cases in Lv 18 seems to be: blood relatives (vv. 6–13), those related by marriage (vv. 14–18), then other cases (vv. 19–23).

18:6 Close relative: this refers to a blood relative and includes those not specifically mentioned in the list, such as one’s own daughter and a full sister. Have sexual intercourse: lit., “to uncover nakedness.”

18:7–8 Cf. the story of Reuben lying with Bilhah, his father’s concubine and Rachel’s maid (Gn 35:22; 49:4).

18:9, 11 Cf. actual or possible marriage to a half sister in Gn 20:12 and 2 Sm 13:13.

18:10 Daughter incest is found in the story of Lot (Gn 19:30–38).

18:15 Judah had intercourse with his daughter-in-law Tamar (Gn 38), but did not know her true identity until her pregnancy was discovered.

18:16 This refers to cohabiting with one’s sister-in-law not only while the brother is alive, but also after he is dead. Dt 25:5–10 allows for the marriage to the wife of a brother when that brother died without a male heir. Cf. Gn 38:6–14. It was the violation of this law of Leviticus which aroused the wrath of John the Baptist against Herod Antipas (Mt 14:4; Mk 6:18).

18:20 Adultery in the Hebrew Bible and the ancient Near East is intercourse between a married or betrothed woman and any male. In the Bible it is generally punishable by the death of both individuals (20:10; cf. Dt 22:22–27). Intercourse with an unmarried or unbetrothed woman is not prohibited but carries responsibilities and fines (cf. Ex 22:15–16; Dt 22:28–29). Cf. Lv 19:20–22.

18:21 Immolation to Molech: the reference is to the custom of sacrificing children to the god Molech. Cf. Ez 16:20–21; 20:26, 31; 23:37. See note on Lv 20:1–5.

19:2 Be holy, for I ... am holy: in the writings commonly attributed to the Priestly collection, Israel is called to be holy through obeying God’s precepts (11:44–45; 20:7–8, 24–26; Nm 15:40–41). Cf. Dt 14:2, 21; 26:19; and Ex 19:6.

19:3–4 Cf. the Decalogue laws on revering parents (Ex 20:12; Dt 5:16), keeping sabbaths (Ex 20:8–11; Dt 5:12–15), and not making or worshiping idols (Ex 20:2–6; Dt 5:7–10).

19:9–10 The Israelites maintain the poor in part by letting them gather unharvested portions of fields and vineyards. Cf. 23:22; Ru 2:1–10.

19:11–13 Cf. the Decalogue commandments against stealing (Ex 20:15; Dt 5:19), wrongly using God's name (Ex 20:7; Dt 5:11), and swearing falsely against another (Ex 20:16; Dt 5:20).

19:14 In Dt 27:18 a curse falls on the head of the one who misleads the blind.

19:17–18 These verses form a unit and describe different attitudes and actions towards one's fellow Israelites. A separate passage is necessary to advise a similar attitude toward aliens (vv. 33–34). Cf. 25:39–46. The admonition at the end of v. 18 came to be viewed in Judaism and Christianity as one of the central commandments. (See Mt 22:34–40; Mk 12:28–34; Lk 10:25–28; cf. Mt 19:19; Rom 13:8–10; Gal 5:14). The New Testament urges love for enemies as well as neighbors (Mt 5:43–48; Lk 6:27–36; cf. Prv 25:21–22).

19:19 One reason why mixtures are prohibited seems to be that they are holy (see Dt 22:9, 10–11). Israelites are allowed mixtures in the wearing of fringes on the edges or corners of their clothing (Nm 15:37–41; Dt 22:12). Some mixtures are considered abominations (cf. Lv 18:23; Dt 22:5).

19:20–22 On adultery, see note on 18:20. Here it is not adultery in the technical sense since the woman is not free. A reparation offering is required as a penalty (see 5:14–26).

19:26 Recite charms ... soothsaying: methods of divination (cf. Gn 44:5, 15; Is 2:6; Ez 21:26–28). Legitimate means of learning the future or God's will were through the Urim and Thummim stones (see Lv 8:8), lots (see Lv 16:8) and prophets (cf. Dt 18:9–22; 1 Sm 28:6–7).

19:28 Do not tattoo yourselves: see note on Gn 4:15. This prohibition probably refers only to the common ancient Near Eastern practice of branding a slave with its owner's name as well as branding the devotees of a god with its name.

19:36 Ephah: see note on Is 5:10; hin: see note on Ez 45:24.

20:1–5 The term Molech may refer to a deity, perhaps with an underworld association, and the activity forbidden here may be connected with divination. Cf. Dt 18:10; 2 Kgs 17:17; 21:6. In the kingdom of Judah the cult appears to have been practiced in the Valley of Hinnom, just outside Jerusalem on the west and south (2 Kgs 23:10; Jer 32:35).

20:9 Curses father or mother ... put to death: this is more than a simple expletive uttered in anger against one's parents. See note on Ex 21:17.

20:9–21 Bloodguilt: these penalties, beginning with cursing one's parents, reflect the concerns of a patriarchal society that the breakdown of one's relations with one's parents can lead to the breakdown of all other familial relationships, resulting in the breakdown of society.

20:10–21 See 18:6–23 and notes there. It appears that the inclusion of various penalties in 20:10–21 accounts for the different order of the cases here compared to the order found in 18:6–23. The reason why the offenses in 20:10–21 carry different penalties, however, is not clear. Perhaps the cases in vv. 17–21 were considered slightly less serious, being condemned but not criminally prosecuted.

20:17 Cut off: see note on 7:20.

21:1–12 While off duty the regular priests are not to become corpse-contaminated except for the close relatives listed in vv. 2–3. While on duty they presumably could not become impure at all. The high priest is restricted from all corpse contamination, on or off duty (vv. 11–12). Lay Israelites are not restricted from corpse contamination, except when in contact with what is holy (cf. Dt 26:14). See note on Lv 11:39–40. Israelites who undertake a nazirite vow enter into a sanctified state and cannot contact corpses (Nm 6:6–12). Cf. Ez 44:25–27.

21:4 Husband among his kindred: this probably refers to relatives by marriage and may even include his wife.

21:7 The ideal seems to be that a priest marry a virgin. This is explicitly stated for the high priest (cf. vv. 13–14; so also Ez 44:22, except there priests may marry widows of priests). The high priest has the added limitation that his wife must come from his kindred, i.e., the priestly family (cf. Ez 44:22).

21:16–23 Though priests with certain bodily imperfections cannot serve at the altar (vv. 18–20), they are not impure, since they may still eat of the offerings, which are holy, and do so within the sanctuary precincts since it is there the most holy offerings are to be eaten (v. 22).

22:1–16 While priests with bodily imperfections may eat the holy sacrifices (21:16–23), those impure and those not of the priestly household may not.

22:3–8 On uncleanness, see chaps. 11–15 and notes there.

22:8 See note on 11:39–40.

22:11 Slave: in contrast to the tenant or hired worker of v. 10, the slave, who is by definition a foreigner, is part of the priest's household and therefore may eat of sacrifices.

22:12–13 A priest's daughter, when a dependent of her father, may eat of the lesser holy offerings.

22:17–25 This passage complements the section on the bodily imperfections of priests in 21:16–23. The laws taken together indicate that whoever and whatever approaches and contacts the altar needs to be physically unimpaired.

22:23 Burnt offerings and communion sacrifices brought as voluntary offerings may have slight defects, probably because they are freely given and do not depend upon a prior promise as do votive offerings.

22:26–30 Other activities and procedures that would impair sacrifice are appended here. The rules in vv. 27–28 are reminiscent of the rule not to boil a young goat in its mother's milk (Ex 23:19; 34:26; Dt 14:21) and not to take a bird and its eggs (Dt 22:6–7), all of which have a humanitarian tenor.

23:1–44 This is paralleled by another calendar from the Priestly tradition, in Nm 28–29. Non-Priestly resumes of festal and holy observances are found in Ex 23:10–17; 34:18–24 and Dt 16:1–17.

23:3 Sabbath of complete rest: the sabbath and the Day of Atonement are called “sabbaths of complete rest” (Ex 16:23; 31:15; 35:2; Lv 16:31; 23:32). Work of any sort is prohibited on these days (Lv 23:3, 28; Nm 29:7) as opposed to other holy days where only laborious work is prohibited but light work, such as preparing food, is allowed (Ex 12:16; cf. Lv 23:7, 8, 21, 25, 35, 36; Nm 28:18, 25, 26; 29:1, 12, 35).

23:5–6 The Passover of the LORD ... feast of Unleavened Bread: the two occasions were probably separate originally. Combined they celebrate the exodus from Egypt. Cf. Ex 12:1–20, 43–49; Nm 28:16–25.

23:9–14 Around Passover a first fruits offering is to be brought (see 2:14), consisting of a sheaf of barley, the crop that matures at this time of year.

23:11 Day after the sabbath: the singular term shabbat “sabbath” may mean “week” here and refer to the seven-day period of the feast of Unleavened Bread. According to this interpretation, the barley sheaf is offered the day after the week of Unleavened Bread. Others understand it as referring to the first or last day of Unleavened Bread.

23:16–21 Fifty days: Pentecost. This festival occurs on a single day, fifty days after the feast of Unleavened Bread, elsewhere called the “feast of the Harvest” (Ex 23:16), “Day of First Fruits” (Nm 28:26), and “feast of Weeks” (Ex 34:22; Dt 16:10, 16). The name Pentecost comes from the later Greek term for the holy day (cf. Acts 2:1; 20:16; 1 Cor 16:8), referring to the fiftieth day. This is the occasion for bringing the first fruits of the wheat harvest.

23:24 First day of the seventh month: the seventh new moon is counted from a new year beginning in the spring (cf. v. 5). Like the seventh day in the week, it is preeminent among the new moon days (cf. Nm 28:11–15; 29:1–6).

23:27 Day of Atonement: see chap. 16 and notes there.

23:34 Feast of Booths: this is the final harvest festival of the year celebrating the remaining harvest. It is called the “feast of Ingathering” (Ex 23:16; 34:22), the “feast of Booths” (Lv 23:34; Dt 16:13), or simply the “feast” (1 Kgs 8:65). It is a seven-day festival with an eighth closing day. The first and eighth days are rest days (see note on v. 3).

23:37–38 This appears to be the original conclusion of the chapter.

23:39–43 The feast of the LORD: the feast of Booths, the preeminent festival. This section supplements vv. 33–36 by prescribing the popular activities for the festival.

23:40–43 Fruit ... branches ... boughs: the fruit and/or foliage from these trees is to be gathered, but it is not said how they are used. The command to make merry suggests they may have been used in a procession or even circumambulation of the altar (cf. Ps 26:6). Later tradition understood these prescriptions as referring to making the booths out of the foliage (Neh 8:15).

24:1–4 On the lamp, see Ex 25:31–40; 26:35; 27:20–21; 37:17–24; 40:24–25; Nm 8:1–4. It occupies the south side of the anterior room of the sanctuary tent and provides light for that room.

24:5–9 On the bread table, see Ex 25:23–29; 26:35; 37:10–16; 40:22–23. It occupies the north side of the anterior room of the sanctuary tent. The bread is a type of grain offering (see note on 2:1).

24:10–22 This is a narrative where an offense leads to clarifying revelation similar to the cases in Lv 10:1–7 and 16:1–34; Nm 9:6–14 and 15:32–36.

24:14 Laid their hands: see notes on 1:4 and 16:21. It may be that blasphemy generated a type of pollution which the hearers return to the culprit by this gesture.

24:17–22 A digression dealing with bodily injury follows the blasphemy rules. It may have been appended since the first case is another example of the death penalty. But the section develops according to its own logic. All legal traditions require death for homicide: Gn 9:5–6; Ex 21:12–14; Nm 35:9–34; Dt 19:1–13; cf. Ex 20:13 and Dt 5:17.

24:19–20 The phrase “life for a life” in v. 18 leads to introducing the law of talion in vv. 19–20. Some have interpreted the law here and the similar expressions in Ex 21:23–25 and Dt 19:21 to mean that monetary compensation equal to the injury is to be paid, though the wording of the law here and the context of Dt 19:21 indicate an injury is to be inflicted upon the injurer.

25:2–7 As every seventh day is to be a day of rest (cf. 23:3), so every seventh year is a year of rest (cf. 26:34–35, 43). The rest consists in not doing agricultural work. The people are to live off what grows naturally in the fields (vv. 6–7). Verses 19–22 add insurance by saying that God will make the sixth-year crop abundant such that its excess will stretch over the seventh sabbatical year as well as the eighth year when new crops are not yet harvested (cf. 26:10). Cf. Ex 23:10–11.

25:8–17 The fiftieth year is the jubilee, determined by counting off “seven weeks of years.” It is sacred, like the sabbath day. Specifically, in it indentured Israelites return to their own households and land that has been sold returns to its original owner. Different laws are found in Ex 21:1–6; Dt 15:1–3, 12–18 (cf. Jer 34:8–22).

25:9 Seventh month: the priestly laws reflect the use of two calendars, one starting in the spring (cf. chap. 23) and one in the fall. The jubilee is calculated on the basis of the latter. Ram’s horn: Hebrew shophar. The name for the year, jubilee (Heb. yobel), also means “ram’s horn” and comes from the horn blown to announce the occasion.

25:23–55 This is a series of laws dealing mainly with situations of poverty in which one has to sell land, obtain a loan, or become indentured. Many of the laws are connected with the release of debts in the jubilee year.

25:25 A close family member is responsible for redemption. Some of these are specified in v. 49.

25:29–31 Not being able to redeem a house in a walled city after one year is probably due to the demographic and economic situation of large towns as opposed to small villages and open agricultural areas. The agricultural lands associated with the latter were the foundation for the economic viability of the Israelite family, and as such, God—who is the ultimate owner of the land (25:23)—has assigned them to the Israelites as permanent holdings.

25:32–34 An exception to the rule in vv. 29–31 is made for levitical cities (Nm 35:1–8), since the Levites have no broad land holdings. Their houses can be redeemed and are to be released in the jubilee year.

25:36 Interest in advance or accrued interest: two types of interest are mentioned here. The former may refer to interest subtracted from the loaned amount in advance, and the latter, to interest or a payment in addition to the loaned amount.

25:39–43 Here the individual Israelite has no assets and must become indentured to another Israelite for economic survival. No provision is given for redemption before the jubilee year, though such is probably allowed.

25:44–46 While Israelites may not be held as permanent slaves (vv. 39–43, 47–55), foreigners may be. They are not released in the jubilee, but may be bequeathed to one's children. They may be treated as "slaves," i.e., harshly (cf. Ex 21:20–21).

26:1–46 This chapter concludes the revelation of laws at Mount Sinai (cf. v. 46). Blessings and curses are also found at the end of Deuteronomy's law collection (Dt 28). Similar lists of blessings and curses appear in the conclusions of ancient Near Eastern treaties.

26:3–13 The blessings are concerned with the well-being of the nation and its land and involve agricultural bounty, national security, military success and population growth.

26:14–46 To encourage obedience, the list of punishments is longer than the blessings (cf. a similar proportion in Dt 28). The punishments are presented in waves (vv. 14–17, 18–20, 21–22, 23–26, 27–39), one group following another if the people do not return to obedience. Punishments involve sickness, pestilence, agricultural failure and famine, attack of wild animals, death of the people's children, destruction of illicit and even licit cults, military defeat, panic, and exile.

26:40–45 Even though the people may be severely punished, God will remember the covenant when the people repent.

27:2–13 Vows are conditional promissory oaths. One covenants to do something for the benefit of God, usually to make a dedication, if God fulfills the individual's accompanying request (cf. Gn 28:20–21; Jgs 11:30–31; 1 Sm 1:11; 2 Sm 15:7–8; Ps 56:13–14). Vows must be fulfilled (Nm 30:3; Dt 23:22; cf. Ps 66:13–15). Verses 2–8 deal with votive offerings involving human beings. Actual dedication of human beings (cf. Jgs 11:30–31, 34–40; 1 Sm 1:11, 24–28) is obviated by payment of the person's value (mentioned in the temple income in 2 Kgs 12:5). The values reflect the different economic and administrative roles of people in different age and gender groups within ancient Israelite society. Verses 9–13 concern the bringing of animals for a vow.

27:12 Determine its value: in contrast to human beings (vv. 3–7) there are no set values for unclean animals, and the condition of the animal is taken into consideration (cf. vv. 14, 27).

27:14–24 These verses deal with dedications. They take effect when uttered and, unlike vows, they are not conditional. They are related to the jubilee year laws in 25:23–31.

27:14 House as sacred to the Lord: the house becomes sanctuary property and presumably may be sold to another if the owner does not redeem it (cf. notes on vv. 20 and 21). While 25:31 requires that unredeemed houses in unwalled towns be returned to the original owners at the jubilee, in the laws here such houses apparently become the property of the sanctuary (cf. v. 21). It is likely that dedicated houses in a walled city needed to be redeemed within one year, following 25:29–30.

27:16 Homer: see note on Is 5:10.

27:19 Redeem: the person apparently can redeem the land up to the jubilee year, following 25:23–28. See note on v. 21.

27:20 If ... one sells it: the verse is difficult since the person should not be able to sell the land after it is dedicated. The verb "sells" may be construed impersonally here: "If . . . it is sold," i.e., by the sanctuary.

27:21 Released as sacred: the dedication changes the ownership of the land. It now belongs to the sanctuary. It returns to the sanctuary's possession after leasing it out (v. 20). Presumably if the land remained in the sanctuary's possession until the jubilee, and it was not redeemed, the land would belong permanently to the sanctuary and priests.

27:24 In contrast to the cases in vv. 14–15 and 16–21, this land returns to the original owner since that individual did not personally make the dedication. The principle is that one cannot permanently dedicate what one does not own. Cf. 2 Sm 24:22–25.

27:26 Firstborn animals and human beings already belong to God (cf. Ex 13:1–2, 12; 34:19); they cannot be vowed or dedicated. Cf. Nm 18:15–18; Dt 15:19–23.

27:27 An unclean animal: such as the firstborn of a donkey, which was unfit for sacrifice. According to Ex 13:13; 34:20, a firstborn donkey was to be redeemed by offering a sheep in its stead, or was to have its neck broken.

27:28 Puts under the ban: this is a higher form of dedication to God than that found in vv. 14–24. Anything so dedicated is beyond redemption and cannot be sold by the sanctuary and priests (contrast vv. 15, 19, 20). This type of dedication is found mostly in contexts of war (e.g., Jos 6:17–21; 8:26; 10:1, 28). Lv 27:28 shows that the ban can apply to one's own property.

The Book of Numbers derives its name from the account of the two censuses taken of the Hebrew people, one near the beginning and the other toward the end of the journey in the wilderness (chaps. 1 and 26). It continues the story of that journey begun in Exodus, and describes briefly the experiences of the Israelites for a period of thirty-eight years, from the end of their encampment at Sinai to their arrival at the border of the promised land. Numerous legal ordinances are interspersed in the account, making the book a combination of law and history.

The book divides neatly into two parts. Each part begins with a census of the people (chaps. 1 and 26) and inaugurates a period of preparation prior to entering the promised land. In the first case these preparations come to a tragic end when scouts are sent forth to survey the promised land (chaps. 13–14). Upon their return, the people are so disheartened by the description of the native inhabitants and the seemingly impossible task that lies in front of them that they refuse to enter the land. This results in a decision to doom that entire generation to death and to allow another generation the chance to enter. After the death of the first generation, then, a second census is taken (chap. 26) and again preparations are made to enter the land. In this case, however, the birth of a new generation suggests these preparations will not be in vain. The book ends with the Israelites across the Jordan outside the land of Canaan, underscoring a chief theme of the Pentateuch as a whole: the people anticipating the fulfillment of God's promise of the land.

In the New Testament numerous allusions to incidents in the Book of Numbers appear: the bronze serpent (Jn 3:14–15), the sedition of Korah and its consequences (1 Cor 10:10), the prophecies of Balaam (2 Pt 2:15–16), and the water gushing from the rock (1 Cor 10:4).

The chief divisions of the Book of Numbers are as follows:

- I. Census and Preparation for the Departure from Sinai (1:1–10:10)
  - II. Departure, Rebellion, and Wandering in the Wilderness for Forty Years (10:11–25:18)
  - III. Second Census of a New Generation and Preparation to Enter the Promised Land (25:19–36:13)

I. Census and Preparation for the Departure from Sinai

CHAPTER 1

See RG 158–61

The Census.<sup>1</sup>In the second year after the Israelites' departure from the land of Egypt, on the first day of the second month, the LORD said to Moses at the tent of meeting in the wilderness of Sinai: <sup>2*</sup> Take a census of the whole community of the Israelites,<sup>a</sup> by clans and ancestral houses, registering by name each male individually. <sup>3</sup>You and Aaron shall enroll in companies all the men in Israel of twenty years or more who are fit for military service.

Moses' Assistants. <sup>4</sup>With you there shall be a man from each tribe, each the head of his ancestral house. <sup>5b</sup> These are the names of those who are to assist you:

from Reuben: Elizur, son of Shedeur;

<sup>6</sup>from Simeon: Shelumiel, son of Zurishaddai;

<sup>7</sup>from Judah:<sup>c</sup> Nahshon, son of Amminadab;

<sup>8</sup>from Issachar: Nethanel, son of Zuar;

<sup>10</sup>for the descendants of Joseph: from Ephraim: Elishama, son of Ammihud; and from Manasseh: Gamaliel, son of Pedahzur;

ancestral house, <sup>19</sup>as the LORD had commanded Moses. So he enrolled them in the wilderness of Sinai.

Count of the Twelve Tribes. <sup>20</sup>Of the descendants of Reuben, the firstborn of Israel, registered individually by name and lineage according to their clans and ancestral houses, every male of twenty years or more, everyone fit for military service: <sup>21</sup>those enrolled from the tribe of Reuben were forty-six thousand five hundred.

<sup>22</sup>Of the descendants of Simeon, registered individually by name and lineage according to their clans and ancestral houses, every male of twenty years or more, everyone fit for military service: <sup>23</sup>those enrolled from the tribe of Simeon were fifty-nine thousand three hundred.

<sup>24</sup>Of the descendants of Gad, registered by name and lineage according to their clans and ancestral houses, every male of twenty years or more, everyone fit for military service: <sup>25</sup>those enrolled from the tribe of Gad were forty-five thousand six hundred and fifty.

<sup>26</sup>Of the descendants of Judah, registered by name and lineage according to their clans and ancestral houses, every male of twenty years or more, everyone fit for military service: <sup>27</sup>those enrolled from the tribe of Judah were seventy-four thousand six hundred.

<sup>28</sup>Of the descendants of Issachar, registered by name and lineage according to their clans and ancestral houses, every male of twenty years or more, everyone fit for military service: <sup>29</sup>those enrolled from the tribe of Issachar were fifty-four thousand four hundred.

<sup>30</sup>Of the descendants of Zebulun, registered by name and lineage according to their clans and ancestral houses, every male of twenty years or more, everyone fit for military service: <sup>31</sup>those enrolled from the tribe of Zebulun were fifty-seven thousand four hundred.

Of the descendants of Ephraim, registered by name and lineage according to their clans and ancestral houses, every male of twenty years or more, everyone fit for military service: <sup>33</sup>those enrolled from the tribe of Ephraim were forty thousand five hundred.

<sup>34</sup>Of the descendants of Manasseh, registered by name and lineage according to their clans and ancestral houses, every male of twenty years or more, everyone fit for military service: <sup>35</sup>those enrolled from the tribe of Manasseh were thirty-two thousand two hundred.

<sup>36</sup>Of the descendants of Benjamin, registered by name and lineage according to their clans and ancestral houses, every male of twenty years or more, everyone fit for military service: <sup>37</sup>those enrolled from the tribe of Benjamin were thirty-five thousand four hundred.

<sup>38</sup>Of the descendants of Dan, registered by name and lineage according to their clans and ancestral houses, every male of twenty years or more, everyone fit for military service: <sup>39</sup>those enrolled from the tribe of Dan were sixty-two thousand seven hundred.

<sup>40</sup>Of the descendants of Asher, registered by name and lineage according to their clans and ancestral houses, every male of twenty years or more, everyone fit for military service: <sup>41</sup>those enrolled from the tribe of Asher were forty-one thousand five hundred.

<sup>42</sup>Of the descendants of Naphtali, registered by name and lineage according to their clans and ancestral houses, every male of twenty years or more, everyone fit for military service: <sup>43</sup>those enrolled from the tribe of Naphtali were fifty-three thousand four hundred.

<sup>44</sup>It was these who were enrolled, each according to his ancestral house, by Moses and Aaron and the twelve leaders of Israel. <sup>45</sup>The total enrollment of the Israelites of twenty years or more, according to their ancestral houses, everyone fit for military service in Israel— <sup>46</sup>the total enrollment was six hundred and three thousand, five hundred and fifty.

Levites Omitted in the Census. <sup>47</sup>Now the Levites were not enrolled<sup>e</sup> by their ancestral tribe with the others. * <sup>48</sup>For the LORD had told Moses, <sup>49</sup>The tribe of Levi alone you shall not enroll nor include in the census along with the other Israelites. <sup>50</sup>You are to give the Levites charge of the tabernacle of the covenant with all its equipment and all that belongs to it. It is they who shall carry the tabernacle with all its equipment and who shall be its ministers;<sup>f</sup> and they shall camp all around the tabernacle. <sup>51</sup>When the tabernacle is to move on, the Levites shall take it down; when the tabernacle is to be pitched, it is the Levites who shall set it up. Any unauthorized person who comes near* it shall be put to death.<sup>g</sup> <sup>52</sup>The other Israelites shall camp according to their companies, each in their own divisional camps,<sup>h</sup> <sup>53</sup>but the Levites shall camp around the tabernacle of the covenant to ensure that God's wrath will not fall upon the Israelite community. The Levites shall keep guard over the tabernacle of the covenant.<sup>i 54</sup> The Israelites complied; they did just as the LORD had commanded Moses.

CHAPTER 2

See RG 158–61

Arrangement of the Tribes. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses and Aaron: <sup>2</sup>The Israelites shall camp, each in their own divisions, under the ensigns of their ancestral houses.<sup>j</sup> They shall camp at some distance all around the tent of meeting.

Tribal Lists in Genesis, Numbers, and Deuteronomy

THE LISTS OF the names of the tribes that made up the people of Israel are not always identical. This indicates that there were slight variations in the traditions that stand behind these lists. The list in Numbers 34 omits the tribes of Reuben and Gad, who did not cross the Jordan. The lists in Numbers also do not include the names of Joseph or Levi, but instead substitute the names of Joseph's sons, Ephraim and Manasseh. (For purposes of comparison, the order of the names is the same in each of these lists, but the numbers beneath each name show its position in the list given in the biblical text.)

<sup>3*</sup> Encamped on the east side, toward the sunrise, shall be the divisional camp of Judah, arranged in companies. The leader of the Judahites is Nahshon, son of Amminadab, <sup>4</sup>and the enrollment of his company is seventy-four thousand six hundred. <sup>5</sup>Encamped beside it is the tribe of Issachar. The leader of the Issacharites is Nethanel, son of Zuar, <sup>6</sup>and the enrollment of his company is fifty-four thousand four hundred. <sup>7</sup>Also the tribe of Zebulun. The leader of the Zebulunites is Eliab, son of Helon, <sup>8</sup>and the enrollment of his company is fifty-seven thousand four hundred. <sup>9</sup>The total enrollment of the camp of Judah by companies is one hundred and eighty-six thousand four hundred. They shall be first on the march.

<sup>10</sup>The divisional camp of Reuben shall be on the south side, by companies. The leader of the Reubenites is Elizur, son of Shedeur, <sup>11</sup>and the enrollment of his company is forty-six thousand five hundred. <sup>12</sup>Encamped beside it is the tribe of Simeon. The leader of the Simeonites is Shelumiel, son of Zurishaddai, <sup>13</sup>and the enrollment of his company is fifty-nine thousand three hundred. <sup>14</sup>Next is the tribe of Gad. The leader of the Gadites is Eliasaph, son of Reuel, <sup>15</sup>and the enrollment of his company is forty-five thousand six hundred and fifty. <sup>16</sup>The total enrollment of the camp of Reuben by companies is one hundred and fifty-one thousand four hundred and fifty. They shall be second on the march.

<sup>17</sup>Then the tent of meeting and the camp of the Levites shall set out in the midst of the divisions. As they camp, so also they will march, each in place, by their divisions.

enrollment of his company is sixty-two thousand seven hundred.

<sup>32k</sup> These are the enrollments of the Israelites according to their ancestral houses. The total enrollment of the camps by companies is six hundred and three thousand five hundred and fifty. <sup>33</sup>The Levites, however, were not enrolled with the other Israelites, just as the LORD had commanded Moses. <sup>34</sup>The Israelites did just as the LORD had commanded Moses; both in camp and on the march they were in their own divisions, everyone by clan and according to ancestral house.

CHAPTER 3

Levites in Place of the Firstborn. <sup>5</sup>Now the LORD said to Moses: <sup>6</sup>Summon the tribe of Levi and station them before Aaron the priest to serve him.<sup>n</sup> <sup>7</sup>They shall discharge his obligations and those of the whole community before the tent of meeting<sup>o</sup> by maintaining the tabernacle. <sup>8</sup>They shall have responsibility for all the furnishings of the tent of meeting and discharge the obligations of the Israelites by maintaining the tabernacle. <sup>9</sup>You shall assign the Levites to Aaron and his sons;<sup>p</sup> they have been assigned unconditionally to him from among the Israelites. <sup>10</sup>But you will appoint only Aaron and his descendants to exercise the priesthood.<sup>q</sup> Any unauthorized person who comes near shall be put to death.

<sup>11</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>12</sup>I hereby take the Levites from the Israelites in place of every firstborn that opens the womb among the Israelites.<sup>r</sup> The Levites, therefore, are mine, <sup>13</sup>because every firstborn is mine. When I struck down all the firstborn in the land of Egypt, I consecrated to me every firstborn in Israel, human being and beast alike. They belong to me; I am the LORD.

Census of the Levites.<sup>14</sup>The LORD said to Moses in the wilderness of Sinai: <sup>15</sup>Enroll the Levites by their ancestral houses and clans, enrolling every male of a month or more.<sup>s</sup> <sup>16</sup>Moses, therefore, enrolled them at the direction of the LORD, just as the LORD had charged.

and Uzziel. <sup>20</sup>The sons of Merari, by their clans, were Mahli and Mushi. These were the clans of the Levites by their ancestral houses.

Duties of the Levitical Clans. <sup>21</sup>To Gershon belonged the clan of the Libnites and the clan of the Shimeites; these were the clans of the Gershonites. <sup>22</sup>Their enrollment, registering every male of a month or more, was seven thousand five hundred. <sup>23</sup>The clans of the Gershonites camped behind the tabernacle, to the west. <sup>24</sup>The leader of the ancestral house of the Gershonites was Eliasaph, son of Lael. <sup>25u</sup> At the tent of meeting their responsibility was the tabernacle: * the tent and its covering, the curtain at the entrance of the tent of meeting, <sup>26</sup>the hangings of the court, the curtain at the entrance of the court enclosing both the tabernacle and the altar, and the ropes—whatever pertained to their maintenance.

<sup>27</sup>To Kohath belonged the clans of the Amramites, the Izharites, the Hebronites, and the Uzzielites; these were the clans of the Kohathites. <sup>28</sup>Their enrollment, registering every male of a month or more, was eight thousand three hundred. They were the ones who performed the duties of the sanctuary. <sup>29</sup>The clans of the Kohathites camped on the south side of the tabernacle. <sup>30</sup>And the leader of their ancestral house of the clan of the Kohathites was Elizaphan, son of Uzziel. <sup>31</sup>Their responsibility was the ark, the table, the menorah, the altars, the utensils of the sanctuary with which the priests minister, the veil, and everything pertaining to their maintenance.* <sup>32</sup>The chief of the leaders of the Levites, however, was Eleazar, son of Aaron the priest; he was in charge of those who performed the duties of the sanctuary.

<sup>33</sup>To Merari belonged the clans of the Mahlites and the Mushites; these were the clans of Merari. <sup>34</sup>Their enrollment, registering every male of a month or more, was six thousand two hundred. <sup>35</sup>The leader of the ancestral house of the clans of Merari was Zuriel, son of Abihail. They camped at the north side of the tabernacle. <sup>36*</sup> The Merarites were assigned responsibility for the boards of the tabernacle, its bars, columns, pedestals, and all its fittings—and everything pertaining to their maintenance, <sup>37</sup>as well as the columns of the surrounding court with their pedestals, pegs and ropes.

<sup>38</sup>East of the tabernacle, that is, in front of the tent of meeting, toward the sunrise, were camped Moses and Aaron and the latter's sons, performing the duties of the sanctuary incumbent upon the Israelites. Any unauthorized person who came near was to be put to death.

<sup>39</sup>The total enrollment of the Levites whom Moses and Aaron enrolled at the direction of the LORD, by clans, every male a month old or more, was twenty-two thousand.

Census and Ransom of Firstborn. <sup>40</sup>The LORD then said to Moses: Enroll every firstborn male of the Israelites a month old or more, and count the number of their names. <sup>41</sup>Then take the Levites for me—I am the LORD—in place of all the firstborn of the Israelites, as well as the Levites' cattle, in place of all the firstborn among the cattle of the Israelites. <sup>42</sup>So Moses enrolled all the firstborn of the Israelites, as the LORD had commanded him. <sup>43</sup>All the firstborn males, registered by name, of a month or more, numbered twenty-two thousand two hundred and seventy-three.

<sup>44</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>45</sup>Take the Levites in place of all the firstborn of the Israelites, and the Levites' cattle in place of their cattle, that the Levites may belong to me. I am the LORD. <sup>46</sup>As a redemption-price for the two hundred and seventy-three firstborn of the Israelites over and above the number of the Levites, <sup>47</sup>you shall take five shekels for each individual, according to the sanctuary shekel, twenty gerahs to the shekel. <sup>48</sup>Give this money to Aaron and his sons as a redemption-price for the extra number. <sup>49</sup>So Moses took the redemption money for those over and above the ones redeemed by the Levites. <sup>50</sup>From the firstborn of the Israelites he took the money, one thousand three hundred and sixty-five shekels according to the sanctuary shekel. <sup>51</sup>He then gave this redemption money to Aaron and his sons, at the direction of the LORD, just as the LORD had commanded Moses.

CHAPTER 4

Duties Further Defined. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses and Aaron: <sup>2</sup>Take a census among the Levites of the Kohathites, by clans and ancestral houses, <sup>3</sup>all between thirty* and fifty years of age, who will join the personnel for doing tasks in the tent of meeting.<sup>w</sup>

<sup>4</sup>This is the task of the Kohathites in the tent of meeting: the most sacred objects. <sup>5</sup>In breaking camp, Aaron and his sons shall go in and take down the screening curtain* and cover the ark of the covenant with it. <sup>6</sup>Over these they shall put a cover of yellow-orange skin, and on top of this spread an all-violet cloth and put the poles in place. <sup>7</sup>On the table of the Presence they shall spread a violet cloth and put on it the plates and cups, as well as the bowls and pitchers for libations; the established bread offering shall remain on the table. <sup>8</sup>Over these they shall spread a scarlet cloth and cover it with a covering of yellow-orange skin, and put the poles in place. <sup>9</sup>They shall use a violet cloth to cover the menorah of the light with its lamps, tongs, and trays, as well as the various containers of oil from which it is supplied. <sup>10</sup>The menorah with all its utensils they shall then put in a covering of yellow-orange skin, and place on a litter. <sup>11</sup>Over the golden altar* they shall spread a violet cloth, and cover this also with a covering of yellow-orange skin, and put the poles in place. <sup>12</sup>Taking the utensils of the sanctuary service, they shall put them all in violet cloth and cover them with a covering of yellow-orange skin. They shall then place them on a litter. <sup>13</sup>After cleansing the altar* of its ashes, they shall spread a purple cloth over it. <sup>14</sup>On this they shall put all the utensils with which it is served: the fire pans, forks,* shovels, basins, and all the utensils of the altar. They shall then spread a covering of yellow-orange skin over this, and put the poles in place.

<sup>15</sup>Only after Aaron and his sons have finished covering the sacred objects and all their utensils on breaking camp, can the Kohathites enter to carry them. But they shall not touch the sacred objects; if they do they will die.<sup>x</sup> These, then, are the objects in the tent of meeting that the Kohathites shall carry.

<sup>16</sup>Eleazar, son of Aaron the priest, shall be in charge of the oil for the light, the fragrant incense, the established grain offering, and the anointing oil. He shall be in charge of the whole tabernacle with all the sacred objects and utensils that are in it.

<sup>17</sup>The LORD said to Moses and Aaron: <sup>18</sup>Do not let the group of Kohathite clans perish from among the Levites. <sup>19</sup>That they may live and not die when they approach the most sacred objects, this is what you shall do for them: Aaron and his sons shall go in and assign to each of them his task and what he must carry; <sup>20</sup>but the Kohathites shall not go in to look upon the sacred objects even for an instant, or they will die.<sup>y</sup>

<sup>21</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>22</sup>Take a census of the Gershonites also, by ancestral houses and clans, <sup>23</sup>enrolling all between thirty and fifty years of age who will join the personnel to do the work in the tent of meeting. <sup>24</sup>This is the task of the clans of the Gershonites, what they must do and what they must carry: <sup>25</sup>they shall carry the curtains of the tabernacle, the tent of meeting with its covering and the outer wrapping of yellow-orange skin, the curtain at the entrance of the tent of meeting, <sup>26</sup>the hangings of the court, the curtain at the entrance to the gate of the court that encloses both the tabernacle and the altar, together with their ropes and all other objects necessary for their use. Whatever is to be done to maintain these things, they shall do. <sup>27</sup>The service of the Gershonites shall be entirely under the direction of Aaron and his sons, with regard to what they must carry and what they must do; you shall list for them by name what they are to carry. <sup>28</sup>This, then, is the task of the clans of the Gershonites in the tent of meeting; and they shall be under the supervision of Ithamar, son of Aaron the priest.

<sup>29</sup>The Merarites, too, you shall enroll by clans and ancestral houses, <sup>30</sup>enrolling all between thirty and fifty years of age who will join the personnel to maintain the tent of meeting. <sup>31z</sup> This is what they shall be responsible for carrying, with respect to all their service in the tent of meeting: the boards of the tabernacle with its bars, columns and pedestals, <sup>32</sup>and the columns of the surrounding court with their pedestals, pegs and ropes, including all their accessories and everything for their maintenance. You shall list by name the objects they shall be responsible for carrying. <sup>33</sup>This, then, is the task of the clans of the Merarites with respect to all their service in the tent of meeting under the supervision of Ithamar, son of Aaron the priest.

Number of Adult Levites. <sup>34</sup>So Moses and Aaron and the leaders of the community enrolled the Kohathites, by clans and ancestral houses, <sup>35</sup>all between thirty and fifty years of age who will join the personnel to work in the tent of meeting; <sup>36</sup>their enrollment by clans was two thousand seven hundred and fifty. <sup>37</sup>Such was the enrollment of the clans of the Kohathites, everyone who was to serve in the tent of meeting, whom Moses enrolled, together with Aaron, as the LORD directed through Moses.

<sup>38</sup>As for the enrollment of the Gershonites, by clans and ancestral houses, <sup>39</sup>all between thirty and fifty years of age who will join the personnel to work in the tent of meeting— <sup>40</sup>their enrollment by clans and ancestral houses was two thousand six hundred and thirty. <sup>41</sup>Such was the enrollment of the clans of the Gershonites, everyone who was to serve in the tent of meeting, whom Moses enrolled, together with Aaron, as the LORD directed.

<sup>42</sup>As for the enrollment of the clans of the Merarites, by clans and ancestral houses, <sup>43</sup>all from thirty up to fifty years of age who will join the personnel to work in the tent of meeting— <sup>44</sup>their enrollment by clans was three thousand two hundred. <sup>45</sup>Such was the enrollment of the clans of the Merarites, whom Moses enrolled, together with Aaron, as the LORD directed through Moses.

<sup>46</sup>As for the total enrollment of the Levites, which Moses and Aaron and the Israelite leaders had made, by clans and ancestral houses, <sup>47</sup>all between thirty and fifty years of age who were to undertake tasks of service or transport for the tent of meeting— <sup>48</sup>their total enrollment was eight thousand five hundred and eighty. <sup>49</sup>As the LORD directed through Moses, they gave each of them their assignments for service and for transport; just as the LORD had commanded Moses.

CHAPTER 5

See RG 158–61

The Unclean Expelled. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Order the Israelites to expel from camp everyone with a scaly infection, and everyone suffering from a discharge, and everyone who has become unclean by contact with a corpse.* <sup>a</sup> <sup>3</sup>Male and female alike, you shall expel them. You shall expel them from the camp so that they do not defile their camp, where I dwell in their midst.<sup>b</sup> <sup>4</sup>This the Israelites did, expelling them from the camp; just as the LORD had commanded Moses, so the Israelites did.

Unjust Possession.* <sup>5</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>6c</sup> Tell the Israelites: If a man or a woman commits any offense against another person, thus breaking faith with the LORD, and thereby becomes guilty, <sup>7</sup>that person shall confess the wrong that has been done, make restitution in full, and in addition give one fifth of its value to the one that has been wronged. <sup>8</sup>However, if there is no next of kin,* one to whom restitution can be made, the restitution shall be made to the LORD and shall fall to the priest; this is apart from the ram of atonement with which the priest makes atonement for the guilty individual. <sup>9</sup>Likewise, every contribution among the sacred offerings that the Israelites present to the priest will belong to him.<sup>d</sup> <sup>10</sup>Each shall possess his own sacred offerings; what is given to a priest shall be his.<sup>e</sup>

woman stand before the LORD, the priest shall uncover her head and place in her hands the grain offering of remembrance, that is, the grain offering of jealousy, while he himself shall hold the water of bitterness that brings a curse. <sup>19</sup>Then the priest shall adjure the woman, saying to her, “If no other man has had intercourse with you, and you have not gone astray by defiling yourself while under the authority of your husband, be immune to this water of bitterness that brings a curse. <sup>20</sup>But if you have gone astray while under the authority of your husband, and if you have defiled yourself and a man other than your husband has had intercourse with you”—<sup>21</sup>so shall the priest adjure the woman with this imprecation—“may the LORD make you a curse and malediction* among your people by causing your uterus to fall and your belly to swell! <sup>22</sup>May this water, then, that brings a curse, enter your bowels to make your belly swell and your uterus fall!”<sup>h</sup> And the woman shall say, “Amen, amen!”* <sup>23</sup>The priest shall put these curses in writing and shall then wash them off into the water of bitterness, <sup>24</sup>and he will have the woman drink the water of bitterness that brings a curse, so that the water that brings a curse may enter into her to her bitter hurt. <sup>25</sup>But first the priest shall take the grain offering of jealousy from the woman’s hand, and having elevated the grain offering before the LORD, shall bring it to the altar, <sup>26</sup>where he shall take a handful of the grain offering as a token offering and burn it on the altar.<sup>i</sup> Only then shall he have the woman drink the water. <sup>27</sup>Once he has had her drink the water, if she has defiled herself and been unfaithful to her husband, the water that brings a curse will enter into her to her bitter hurt, and her belly will swell and her uterus will fall, so that she will become a curse among her people. <sup>28</sup>If, however, the woman has not defiled herself, but is still pure, she will be immune and will still be fertile.

<sup>29</sup>This, then, is the ritual for jealousy when a woman goes astray while under the authority of her husband and defiles herself, <sup>30</sup>or when such a feeling of jealousy comes over a man that he becomes suspicious of his wife; he shall have her stand before the LORD, and the priest shall perform this entire ritual for her. <sup>31</sup>The man shall be free from punishment,* but the woman shall bear her punishment.

CHAPTER 6

See RG 158–61

Laws Concerning Nazirites. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Speak to the Israelites and tell them: When men or women solemnly take the nazirite* vow to dedicate themselves to the LORD, <sup>3</sup>they shall abstain from wine and strong drink;<sup>j</sup> they may neither drink wine vinegar, other vinegar, or any kind of grape juice, nor eat either fresh or dried grapes. <sup>4</sup>As long as they are nazirites they shall not eat anything of the produce of the grapevine; not even the seeds or the skins. <sup>5</sup>While they are under the nazirite vow, no razor shall touch their hair.<sup>k</sup> Until the period of their dedication to the LORD is over, they shall be holy, letting the hair of their heads grow freely. <sup>6</sup>As long as they are dedicated to the LORD, they shall not come near a dead person.<sup>l</sup> <sup>7</sup>Not even for their father or mother, sister or brother, should they defile themselves, when these die, since their heads bear their dedication to God. <sup>8</sup>As long as they are nazirites they are holy to the LORD.

offer the grain offering and libation. <sup>18</sup>Then at the entrance of the tent of meeting the nazirite shall shave his or her dedicated head, take the hair of the dedicated head, and put it in the fire under the communion sacrifice. <sup>19</sup>After the nazirite has shaved off the dedicated hair, the priest shall take a boiled shoulder of the ram, as well as one unleavened cake from the basket and one unleavened wafer, and shall put them in the hands of the nazirite. <sup>20</sup>The priest shall then elevate them as an elevated offering before the LORD. They are an offering belonging to the priest, along with the brisket of the elevated offering and the leg of the contribution. Only after this may the nazirite drink wine.

<sup>21</sup>This, then, is the law for the nazirites, that is, what they vow as their offering to the LORD in accord with their dedication, apart from anything else which their means may allow. In keeping with the vow they take so shall they do, according to the law of their dedication.

The Priestly Blessing.<sup>22</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>23</sup>Speak to Aaron and his sons and tell them: This is how you shall bless the Israelites. Say to them:

<sup>24</sup>The LORD bless you and keep you!

<sup>25</sup>The LORD let his face shine upon you, and be gracious to you!

<sup>26</sup>The LORD look upon you kindly and give you peace! *

<sup>27</sup>So shall they invoke my name upon the Israelites, and I will bless them.

CHAPTER 7

See RG 158–61

Offerings of the Tribal Leaders. <sup>1</sup>Now, when Moses had completed the erection of the tabernacle, he anointed and consecrated it with all its equipment,<sup>n</sup> as well as the altar with all its equipment. After he anointed and consecrated them, <sup>2</sup>an offering was made by the tribal leaders of Israel, who were heads of ancestral houses, the same leaders of the tribes who supervised those enrolled. <sup>3</sup>The offering they brought before the LORD consisted of six wagons for baggage and twelve oxen, that is, a wagon for every two tribal leaders, and an ox for each. These they presented before the tabernacle.

<sup>4</sup>The LORD then said to Moses: <sup>5</sup>Accept their offering, that these things may be put to use to maintain the tent of meeting. Assign them to the Levites, to each according to his duties. <sup>6</sup>So Moses accepted the wagons and oxen, and assigned them to the Levites. <sup>7</sup>He gave two wagons and four oxen to the Gershonites<sup>o</sup> according to their duties, <sup>8</sup>and four wagons and eight oxen to the Merarites according to their duties, under the supervision of Ithamar, son of Aaron the priest. <sup>9</sup>He gave none to the Kohathites, because they were responsible for maintenance of the sacred objects that had to be carried on their shoulders.<sup>p</sup>

<sup>10</sup>For the dedication of the altar also, the tribal leaders brought offerings when it was anointed;<sup>q</sup> the leaders presented their offering before the altar. <sup>11</sup>But the LORD said to Moses: Let one leader each day present his offering for the dedication of the altar.

<sup>12*</sup> The one who presented his offering on the first day was Nahshon, son of Amminadab, of the tribe of Judah. <sup>13</sup>His offering consisted of one silver plate weighing a hundred and thirty shekels and one silver basin weighing seventy shekels according to the sanctuary shekel, both filled with bran flour mixed with oil for a grain offering; <sup>14</sup> one gold cup of ten shekels' weight filled with incense; <sup>15</sup>one bull from the herd, one ram, and one yearling lamb for a burnt offering; <sup>16</sup>one goat for a purification offering; <sup>17</sup>and two bulls, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs for a communion sacrifice. This was the offering of Nahshon, son of Amminadab.

hundred and thirty shekels and one silver basin weighing seventy shekels according to the sanctuary shekel, both filled with bran flour mixed with oil for a grain offering; <sup>20</sup>one gold cup of ten shekels' weight filled with incense; <sup>21</sup>one bull from the herd, one ram, and one yearling lamb for a burnt offering; <sup>22</sup>one goat for a purification offering; <sup>23</sup>and two bulls, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs for a communion sacrifice. This was the offering of Nethanel, son of Zuar.

<sup>24</sup>On the third day it was the turn of the tribal leader of the Zebulunites, Eliab, son of Helon. <sup>25</sup>His offering consisted of one silver plate weighing a hundred and thirty shekels and one silver basin weighing seventy shekels according to the sanctuary shekel, both filled with bran flour mixed with oil for a grain offering; <sup>26</sup>one gold cup of ten shekels' weight filled with incense; <sup>27</sup>one bull from the herd, one ram, and one yearling lamb for a burnt offering; <sup>28</sup>one goat for a purification offering; <sup>29</sup>and two bulls, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs for a communion sacrifice. This was the offering of Eliab, son of Helon.

a hundred and thirty shekels and one silver basin weighing seventy shekels according to the sanctuary shekel, both filled with bran flour mixed with oil for a grain offering; <sup>44</sup>one gold cup of ten shekels' weight filled with incense; <sup>45</sup>one bull from the herd, one ram, and one yearling lamb for a burnt offering; <sup>46</sup>one goat for a purification offering; <sup>47</sup>and two bulls, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs for a communion sacrifice. This was the offering of Eliasaph, son of Reuel.

<sup>78</sup>On the twelfth day it was the turn of the tribal leader of the Naphtalites, Ahira, son of Enan. <sup>79</sup>His offering consisted of one silver plate weighing a hundred and thirty shekels and one silver basin weighing seventy shekels according to the sanctuary shekel, both filled with bran flour mixed with oil for a grain offering; <sup>80</sup>one gold cup of ten shekels' weight filled with incense; <sup>81</sup>one bull from the herd, one ram, and one yearling lamb for a burnt offering; <sup>82</sup>one goat for a purification offering; <sup>83</sup>and two bulls, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs for a communion sacrifice. This was the offering of Ahira, son of Enan.

<sup>84</sup>These were the offerings for the dedication of the altar, given by the tribal leaders of Israel on the occasion of its anointing: twelve silver plates, twelve silver basins, and twelve gold cups. <sup>85</sup>Each silver plate weighed a hundred and thirty shekels, and each silver basin seventy, so that all the silver of these vessels amounted to two thousand four hundred shekels, according to the sanctuary shekel. <sup>86</sup>The twelve gold cups that were filled with incense weighed ten shekels apiece, according to the sanctuary shekel, so that all the gold of the cups amounted to one hundred and twenty shekels. <sup>87</sup>The animals for the burnt offerings were, in all, twelve bulls, twelve rams, and twelve yearling lambs, with their grain offerings; those for the purification offerings were twelve goats. <sup>88</sup>The animals for the communion sacrifices were, in all, twenty-four bulls, sixty rams, sixty he-goats, and sixty yearling lambs. These, then, were the offerings for the dedication of the altar after it was anointed.

The Voice. <sup>89</sup>When Moses entered the tent of meeting to speak with God, he heard the voice addressing him from above the cover<sup>r</sup> on the ark of the covenant, from between the two cherubim; and so it spoke to him.

CHAPTER 8

The Menorah. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Speak to Aaron and say: “When you set up the menorah-lamps,<sup>s</sup> have the seven lamps throw their light in front of the menorah.”* <sup>3</sup>Aaron did so, setting up the menorah-lamps to face the area in front of the menorah, just as the LORD had commanded Moses. <sup>4</sup>This is the construction of the menorah: hammered gold,<sup>t</sup> from its base to its bowls* it was hammered; according to the pattern which the LORD had shown Moses, so he made the menorah.

Purification of the Levites. <sup>5</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>6</sup>Take the Levites from among the Israelites and cleanse them.* <sup>7</sup>This is what you shall do to them to cleanse them. Sprinkle them with the water of purification, have them shave their whole bodies and wash their garments, and so cleanse themselves. <sup>8</sup>Then they shall take a bull from the herd, along with its grain offering of bran flour mixed with oil; and you shall take another bull from the herd for a purification offering. <sup>9</sup>Bringing the Levites before the tent of meeting, you shall assemble also the whole community of the Israelites. <sup>10</sup>When you have brought the Levites before the LORD, the Israelites shall lay their hands upon them. <sup>11</sup>Aaron shall then present the Levites before the LORD as an elevated offering from the Israelites, that they may perform the service of the LORD. <sup>12</sup>The Levites in turn shall lay their hands on the heads of the bulls, offering one as a purification offering and the other as a burnt offering to the LORD, to make atonement for the Levites. <sup>13</sup>Then you shall have the Levites stand before Aaron and his sons, and you shall present them as an elevated offering to the LORD; <sup>14</sup> thus you shall separate the Levites from the rest of the Israelites, and the Levites shall belong to me.<sup>u</sup>

<sup>15</sup>Only then shall the Levites enter upon their service in the tent of meeting, when you have cleansed them and presented them as an elevated offering. <sup>16</sup>For they, among the Israelites, are totally dedicated to me; I have taken them for myself in place of everyone that opens the womb, the firstborn of all the Israelites.<sup>v</sup> <sup>17</sup>Indeed, all the firstborn among the Israelites, human being and beast alike, belong to me; I consecrated them to myself on the day I killed all the firstborn in the land of Egypt.<sup>w</sup> <sup>18</sup>But I have taken the Levites in place of all the firstborn Israelites; <sup>19</sup>and from among the Israelites

I have given to Aaron and his sons these Levites, who are to be dedicated,<sup>x</sup> to perform the service of the Israelites in the tent of meeting and to make atonement for them, so that no plague may strike among the Israelites should they come too near the sanctuary.

<sup>20</sup>This, then, is what Moses and Aaron and the whole community of the Israelites did with respect to the Levites; the Israelites did exactly as the LORD had commanded Moses concerning them. <sup>21</sup>When the Levites had purified themselves* and washed their garments, Aaron presented them as an elevated offering before the LORD, and made atonement for them to cleanse them. <sup>22</sup>Only then did they enter upon their service in the tent of meeting under the supervision of Aaron and his sons. Exactly as the LORD had commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so it was done with regard to them.

Age Limits for Levitical Service. <sup>23</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>24</sup>This is the rule for the Levites. Everyone twenty-five years old or more shall join the personnel in the service of the tent of meeting.<sup>y</sup> <sup>25</sup>But everyone fifty on up shall retire from the work force and serve no more. <sup>26</sup>They shall assist their fellow Levites in the tent of meeting in performing their duties, but they shall not do the work. This, then, is how you are to regulate the duties of the Levites.

CHAPTER 9

Second Passover. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the first month of the second year following their departure from the land of Egypt: <sup>2</sup>Tell the Israelites to celebrate the Passover at the prescribed time. <sup>3</sup>In the evening twilight of the fourteenth day of this month<sup>z</sup> you shall celebrate it at its prescribed time, in accord with all its statutes and regulations. <sup>4</sup>So Moses told the Israelites to celebrate the Passover, <sup>5</sup>and they did celebrate the Passover on the fourteenth day of the first month during the evening twilight in the wilderness of Sinai. Just as the LORD had commanded Moses, so the Israelites did.

<sup>6</sup>There were some, however, who were unclean because of a human corpse and so could not celebrate the Passover that day. These men came up to Moses and Aaron that same day <sup>7</sup>and they said to them, “Although we are unclean because of a human corpse, why should we be deprived of presenting the LORD’s offering at its prescribed time along with other Israelites?” <sup>8</sup>Moses answered them, “Wait so that I can learn what the LORD will command in your regard.”

<sup>9</sup>The LORD then said to Moses: <sup>10</sup>Speak to the Israelites: “If any one of you or of your descendants is unclean because of a human corpse, or is absent on a journey, you may still celebrate the LORD’s Passover. <sup>11</sup>But you shall celebrate it in the second month,<sup>a</sup> on the fourteenth day of that month during the evening twilight, eating it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs, <sup>12</sup>and not leaving any of it over till morning, nor breaking any of its bones,<sup>b</sup> but observing all the statutes of the Passover. <sup>13</sup>However, anyone who is clean and not away on a journey, who yet fails to celebrate the Passover, shall be cut off from the people, for not presenting the LORD’s offering at the prescribed time. That person shall bear the consequences of this sin.

<sup>14</sup>“If an alien* who lives among you would celebrate the LORD’s Passover, it shall be celebrated according to the statutes and regulations for the Passover. You shall have the same law for the resident alien as for the native of the land.”<sup>c</sup> until morning it took on the appearance of fire over the tabernacle.<sup>d</sup> <sup>16</sup>It was always so: during the day the cloud covered the tabernacle and at night had the appearance of fire. <sup>17</sup>Whenever the cloud rose from the tent, the Israelites would break camp; wherever the cloud settled, the Israelites would pitch camp.<sup>e</sup> <sup>18</sup>At the direction of the LORD the Israelites broke camp, and at the LORD's direction they pitched camp.<sup>f</sup> As long as the cloud stayed over the tabernacle, they remained in camp.

<sup>19</sup>Even when the cloud lingered many days over the tabernacle, the Israelites kept the charge of the LORD and would not move on. <sup>20</sup>Yet if it happened the cloud was over the tabernacle only for a few days, at the direction of the LORD they stayed in camp; and at the LORD's direction they broke camp. <sup>21</sup>If it happened the cloud remained there only from evening until morning, when the cloud rose in the morning, they would break camp. Whether the cloud lifted during the day or the night they would then break camp. <sup>22</sup>Whether the cloud lingered over the tabernacle for two days or for a month or longer, the Israelites remained in camp and did not break camp; but when it lifted, they broke camp. <sup>23</sup>At the direction of the LORD they pitched camp, and at the LORD's direction they broke camp; they kept the charge of the LORD, as the LORD directed them through Moses.

CHAPTER 10

The Silver Trumpets. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Make two trumpets of silver, making them of hammered silver, for you to use in summoning the community and in breaking camp. <sup>3</sup>When both are blown, the whole community shall gather round you at the entrance of the tent of meeting; <sup>4</sup>but when one of them is blown, only the tribal leaders, the heads of the clans of Israel, shall gather round you. <sup>5</sup>When you sound the signal, those encamped on the east side shall break camp; <sup>6</sup>when you sound a second signal, those encamped on the south side shall break camp; when you sound a third signal, those encamped on the west side shall break camp; when you sound a fourth signal, those encamped on the north side shall break camp. Thus shall the signal be sounded for them to break camp. <sup>7</sup>But in calling forth an assembly you are to blow a blast, without sounding the signal.

<sup>8</sup>The sons of Aaron, the priests, shall blow the trumpets; this is prescribed forever for you and your descendants. <sup>9g</sup> When in your own land you go to war against an enemy that is attacking you, you shall sound the alarm on the trumpets, and you shall be remembered before the LORD, your God, and be saved from your foes. <sup>10</sup>And when you rejoice* on your festivals, and your new-moon feasts, you shall blow the trumpets over your burnt offerings and your communion sacrifices,<sup>h</sup> so that this serves as a reminder of you before your God. I, the LORD, am your God.

II. Departure, Rebellion, and Wandering in the Wilderness for Forty Years

Departure from Sinai. <sup>11</sup>In the second year, on the twentieth day of the second month, the cloud rose from the tabernacle of the covenant, <sup>12</sup>and the Israelites moved on from the wilderness of Sinai by stages, until the cloud came to rest in the wilderness of Paran.

<sup>13</sup>The first time that they broke camp at the direction of the LORD through Moses, <sup>14i</sup> the divisional camp of the Judahites, arranged in companies, was the first to set out. Over its whole company was Nahshon, son of Amminadab, <sup>15</sup>with Nethanel, son of Zuar, over the company of the tribe of Issacharites, <sup>16</sup>and Eliab, son of Helon, over the company of the tribe of Zebulunites. <sup>17</sup>Then, after the tabernacle was dismantled, the Gershonites and Merarites who carried the tabernacle set out. <sup>18</sup>The divisional camp of the Reubenites, arranged in companies, was the next to set out. Over its whole company was Elizur, son of Shedeur, <sup>19</sup>with Shelumiel, son of Zurishaddai, over the company of the tribe of Simeonites, <sup>20</sup>and Eliasaph, son of Reuel, over the company of the tribe of Gadites. <sup>21</sup>The Kohathites, who carried the sacred objects, then set out. Before their arrival the tabernacle would be erected. <sup>22</sup>The divisional camp of the Ephraimites set out next, arranged in companies. Over its whole company was Elishama, son of Ammihud, <sup>23</sup>with Gamaliel, son of Pedahzur, over the company of the tribe of Manassites, <sup>24</sup>and Abidan, son of Gideoni, over the company of the tribe of Benjaminites. <sup>25</sup>Finally, as rear guard for all the camps, the divisional camp of the Danites set out, arranged in companies. Over its whole company was Ahiezer, son of Ammishaddai, <sup>26</sup>with Pagiel, son of Ochran, over the company of the tribe of Asherites, <sup>27</sup>and Ahira, son of Enan, over the company of the tribe of Naphtalites. <sup>28</sup>This was the order of march for the Israelites, company by company, when they set out.

Hobab as Guide. <sup>29</sup>Moses said to Hobab, *son of Reuel the Midianite, Moses' father-in-law, "We are setting out for the place concerning which the LORD has said, 'I will give it to you.' Come with us, and we will be generous toward you, for the LORD has promised prosperity to Israel." <sup>30</sup>But he answered, "No, I will not come. I am going instead to the land of my birth." <sup>31</sup>Moses said, "Please, do not leave us; you know where we can camp in the wilderness, and you can serve as our guide. <sup>32</sup>If you come with us, we will share with you the prosperity the LORD will bestow on us."

Into the Wilderness. <sup>33j</sup>From the mountain of the LORD *they made a journey of three days, and the ark of the covenant of the LORD went before them for the three-day journey to seek out a resting place for them. <sup>34</sup>And the cloud of the LORD was over them by day when they set out from camp.

<sup>35</sup>Whenever the ark set out, Moses would say,

"Arise, O LORD, may your enemies be scattered, and may those who hate you flee

before you.”

<sup>36</sup>And when it came to rest, he would say,

“Bring back, O LORD, the myriads of Israel’s troops!”

CHAPTER 11

See RG 161–64

Discontent of the People. <sup>1</sup>Now the people complained bitterly in the hearing of the LORD;<sup>k</sup> and when he heard it his wrath flared up, so that the LORD's fire burned among them and consumed the outskirts of the camp. <sup>2</sup>But when the people cried out to Moses, he prayed to the LORD and the fire died out. <sup>3</sup>Hence that place was called Taberah,* because there the fire of the LORD burned among them.

<sup>4</sup>The riffraff among them were so greedy for meat that even the Israelites lamented again,<sup>l</sup> “If only we had meat for food! <sup>5</sup>We remember the fish we used to eat without cost in Egypt, and the cucumbers, the melons, the leeks, the onions, and the garlic. <sup>6</sup>But now we are famished; we have nothing to look forward to but this manna.”<sup>m</sup>

<sup>7n</sup> Manna was like coriander seed* and had the appearance of bdellium. <sup>8</sup>When they had gone about and gathered it up, the people would grind it between millstones or pound it in a mortar, then cook it in a pot and make it into loaves, with a rich creamy taste. <sup>9</sup>At night, when the dew fell upon the camp, the manna also fell.<sup>o</sup>

<sup>10</sup>When Moses heard the people, family after family, crying at the entrance of their tents, so that the LORD became very angry, he was grieved. <sup>11</sup>“Why do you treat your servant so badly?” Moses asked the LORD. “Why are you so displeased with me that you burden me with all this people? <sup>12</sup>Was it I who conceived all this people? or was it I who gave them birth, that you tell me to carry them at my breast, like a nurse carrying an infant, to the land you have promised under oath to their fathers? <sup>13</sup>Where can I get meat to give to all this people? For they are crying to me, ‘Give us meat for our food.’ <sup>14</sup>I cannot carry all this people by myself, for they are too heavy for me. <sup>15</sup>If this is the way you will deal with me, then please do me the favor of killing me at once, so that I need no longer face my distress.”

The Seventy Elders. <sup>16</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: Assemble for me seventy of the elders of Israel, whom you know to be elders and authorities among the people, and bring them to the tent of meeting. When they are in place beside you, <sup>17</sup>I will come down and speak with you there. I will also take some of the spirit that is on you and will confer it on them, that they may share the burden of the people with you. You will then not have to bear it by yourself.

<sup>18</sup>To the people, however, you shall say: “Sanctify yourselves for tomorrow, when you shall have meat to eat. For in the hearing of the LORD you have cried, ‘If only we had meat for food! Oh, how well off we were in Egypt!’ Therefore the LORD will give you meat to eat, <sup>19</sup>and you will eat it, not for one day, or two days, or five, or ten, or twenty days, <sup>20</sup>but for a whole month—until it comes out of your very nostrils and becomes loathsome to you. For you have rejected the LORD who is in your midst, and in his presence you have cried, ‘Why did we ever leave Egypt?’ ”

<sup>21</sup>But Moses said, “The people around me include six hundred thousand soldiers; yet you say, ‘I will give them meat to eat for a whole month.’ <sup>22</sup>Can enough sheep and cattle be slaughtered for them? If all the fish of the sea were caught for them, would they have enough?” <sup>23</sup>The LORD answered Moses: Is this beyond the LORD’s reach? You shall see now whether or not what I have said to you takes place.

The Spirit on the Elders. <sup>24</sup>So Moses went out and told the people what the LORD had said. Gathering seventy elders of the people, he had them stand around the tent. <sup>25</sup>The LORD then came down in the cloud and spoke to him. Taking some of the spirit that was on Moses, he bestowed it on the seventy elders; and as the spirit came to rest on them, they prophesied* but did not continue.

<sup>26</sup>Now two men, one named Eldad and the other Medad, had remained in the camp, yet the spirit came to rest on them also. They too had been on the list, but had not gone out to the tent; and so they prophesied in the camp. <sup>27</sup>So, when a young man ran and reported to Moses, “Eldad and Medad are prophesying in the camp,” <sup>28</sup>Joshua, son of Nun, who from his youth had been Moses’ aide, said, “My lord, Moses, stop them.” <sup>29</sup>But Moses answered him, “Are you jealous for my sake? If only all the people of the LORD were prophets! If only the LORD would bestow his spirit on them!” <sup>30</sup>Then Moses retired to the camp, along with the elders of Israel.

The Quail. <sup>31</sup>There arose a wind<sup>p</sup> from the LORD that drove in quail from the sea and left them all around the camp site, to a distance of a day’s journey and at a depth of two cubits upon the ground. <sup>32q</sup> So all that day, all night, and all the next day the people set about to gather in the quail. Even the one who got the least gathered ten homers* of them. Then they spread them out all around the camp. <sup>33</sup>But while the meat was still between their teeth, before it could be chewed, the LORD'S wrath flared up against the people, and the LORD struck them with a very great plague. <sup>34</sup>So that place was named Kibroth-hattaavah,* because it was there that the greedy people were buried.

<sup>35</sup>From Kibroth-hattaavah the people set out for Hazeroth, where they stayed.

CHAPTER 12

See RG 161–64

Jealousy of Aaron and Miriam. <sup>1</sup>Miriam and Aaron spoke against Moses on the pretext of the Cushite woman he had married; for he had in fact married a Cushite woman.* <sup>2</sup>They complained,* “Is it through Moses alone that the LORD has spoken? Has he not spoken through us also?” And the LORD heard this. <sup>3r</sup> Now the man Moses was very humble, more than anyone else on earth. <sup>4</sup>So at once the LORD said to Moses and Aaron and Miriam: Come out, you three, to the tent of meeting. And the three of them went. <sup>5</sup>Then the LORD came down in a column of cloud, and standing at the entrance of the tent, called, “Aaron and Miriam.” When both came forward, <sup>6</sup>the LORD said: Now listen to my words:

If there are prophets among you,
in visions I reveal myself to them,
in dreams I speak to them;

<sup>7</sup>Not so with my servant Moses!
Throughout my house he is worthy of trust: *<sup>s</sup>

<sup>8</sup>face to face I speak to him,<sup>t</sup>
plainly and not in riddles.
The likeness of the LORD he beholds.

Why, then, do you not fear to speak against my servant Moses? <sup>9</sup>And so the LORD’s wrath flared against them, and he departed.

Miriam’s Punishment. <sup>10</sup>Now the cloud withdrew from the tent, and there was Miriam,<sup>u</sup> stricken with a scaly infection, white as snow! * <sup>11</sup>When Aaron turned toward Miriam and saw her stricken with snow-white scales, <sup>12</sup>he said to Moses, “Ah, my lord! Please do not charge us with the sin that we have foolishly committed! <sup>13</sup>Do not let her be like the stillborn baby that comes forth from its mother’s womb with its flesh half consumed.” <sup>14</sup>Then Moses cried to the LORD, “Please, not this! Please, heal her!” <sup>15</sup>But the LORD answered Moses: Suppose her father had spit in her face, would she not bear her shame for seven days? Let her be confined outside the camp for seven days; afterwards she may be brought back. <sup>16</sup>So Miriam was confined outside the camp for seven days, and the people did not start out again until she was brought back.

<sup>16</sup>After that the people set out from Hazeroth and encamped in the wilderness of Paran.

CHAPTER 13

See RG 161–64

The Twelve Scouts. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Send men to reconnoiter the land of Canaan, which I am giving the Israelites. You shall send one man from each ancestral tribe, every one a leader among them. <sup>3v</sup> So Moses sent them from the wilderness of Paran, at the direction of the LORD. All of them were leaders among the Israelites. <sup>4</sup>These were their names:

from the tribe of Reuben, Shammua, son of Zaccur;

<sup>5</sup>from the tribe of Simeon, Shaphat, son of Hori;

<sup>6</sup>from the tribe of Judah, Caleb, son of Jephunneh;

<sup>7</sup>from the tribe of Issachar, Igal;

<sup>8</sup>for the Josephites, from the tribe of Ephraim, Hoshea, son of Nun;

<sup>9</sup>from the tribe of Benjamin, Palti, son of Raphu;

<sup>10</sup>from the tribe of Zebulun, Gaddiel, son of Sodi;

<sup>11</sup>for the Josephites, from the tribe of Manasseh, Gaddi, son of Susi;

<sup>12</sup>from the tribe of Dan, Ammiel, son of Gemalli;

<sup>13</sup>from the tribe of Asher, Sethur, son of

<sup>14</sup>from the tribe of Naphtali, Nahbi, son of Vophsi;

<sup>16</sup>These are the names of the men whom Moses sent to reconnoiter the land. But Hoshea, son of Nun, Moses called Joshua.*

<sup>17</sup>In sending them to reconnoiter the land of Canaan, Moses said to them, “Go up there in the Negeb, up into the highlands, <sup>18</sup>and see what kind of land it is and whether the people living there are strong or weak, few or many. <sup>19</sup>Is the country in which they live good or bad? Are the towns in which they dwelt open or fortified? <sup>20</sup>Is the soil fertile or barren, wooded or clear? And do your best to get some of the fruit of the land.” It was then the season for early grapes.

<sup>21</sup>So they went up and reconnoitered the land from the wilderness of Zin* as far as where Rehob adjoins Lebo-hamath. <sup>22w</sup> Going up by way of the Negeb, they reached Hebron, where Ahiman, Sheshai and Talmai, descendants of the Anakim,* were. (Now Hebron had been built seven years before Zoan in Egypt.) <sup>23</sup>They also reached the Wadi Eshcol,* where they cut down a branch with a single cluster of grapes on it, which two of them carried on a pole, as well as some pomegranates and figs. <sup>24</sup>It was because of the cluster the Israelites cut there that they called the place Wadi Eshcol.<sup>x</sup>

Their Report. <sup>25</sup>They returned from reconnoitering the land forty days later. <sup>26y</sup> Proceeding directly to Moses and Aaron and the whole community of the Israelites in the wilderness of Paran at Kadesh, they made a report to them and to the whole community, showing them the fruit of the land. <sup>27</sup>They told Moses: “We came to the land to which you sent us. It does indeed flow with milk and honey, and here is its fruit. <sup>28</sup>However, the people who are living in the land are powerful, and the towns are fortified and very large.<sup>z</sup> Besides, we saw descendants of the Anakim there. <sup>29</sup>Amalekites live in the region of the Negeb; Hittites, Jebusites and Amorites dwell in the highlands, and Canaanites along the sea and the banks of the Jordan.”

<sup>30</sup>Caleb, however, quieted the people before Moses and said, “We ought to go up and seize the land, for we can certainly prevail over it.” <sup>31</sup>But the men who had gone up with him said, “We cannot attack these people; they are too strong for us.” <sup>32</sup>They spread discouraging reports<sup>a</sup> among the Israelites about the land they had reconnoitered, saying, “The land that we went through and reconnoitered is a land that consumes its inhabitants. And all the people we saw there are huge. <sup>33b</sup> There we saw the Nephilim* (the Anakim are from the Nephilim); in our own eyes we seemed like mere grasshoppers, and so we must have seemed to them.”

CHAPTER 14

See RG 161–64

Threats of Revolt.<sup>1</sup> At this, the whole community broke out with loud cries, and the people wept into the night. <sup>2c</sup> All the Israelites grumbled against Moses and Aaron, the whole community saying to them, “If only we had died in the land of Egypt,” or “If only we would die here in the wilderness! <sup>3</sup>Why is the LORD bringing us into this land only to have us fall by the sword? Our wives and little ones will be taken as spoil. Would it not be better for us to return to Egypt?” <sup>4</sup>So they said to one another, “Let us appoint a leader and go back to Egypt.”

<sup>5</sup>But Moses and Aaron fell prostrate before the whole assembled community of the Israelites; <sup>6</sup>while Joshua, son of Nun, and Caleb, son of Jephunneh, who had been among those that reconnoitered the land, tore their garments <sup>7</sup>and said to the whole community of the Israelites,<sup>d</sup> “The land which we went through and reconnoitered is an exceedingly good land. <sup>8</sup>If the LORD is pleased with us, he will bring us in to this land and give it to us, a land which flows with milk and honey. <sup>9e</sup> Only do not rebel against the LORD! You need not be afraid of the people of the land, for they are but food for us!

* Their protection has left them, but the LORD is with us. Do not fear them.”

The Lord’s Sentence. <sup>10</sup>The whole community threatened to stone them. But the glory of the LORD appeared at the tent of meeting to all the Israelites. <sup>11</sup>And the LORD said to Moses: How long will this people spurn me? How long will they not trust me, despite all the signs I have performed among them?<sup>f</sup> <sup>12</sup>I will strike them with pestilence and disown them. Then I will make of you a nation greater and mightier than they.<sup>g</sup>

<sup>13h</sup> But Moses said to the LORD: “The Egyptians will hear of this, for by your power you brought out this people from among them. <sup>14</sup>They will tell the inhabitants of this land, who have heard that you, LORD, are in the midst of this people; you, LORD, who directly revealed yourself! Your cloud stands over them, and you go before them by day in a column of cloud and by night in a column of fire.<sup>i</sup> <sup>15</sup>If now you slay this people all at once, the nations who have heard such reports of you will say, <sup>16</sup>‘The LORD was not able to bring this people into the land he swore to give them; that is why he slaughtered them in the wilderness.’<sup>j</sup> <sup>17</sup>Now then, may my Lord’s forbearance be great, even as you have said, <sup>18k</sup> ‘The LORD is slow to anger and abounding in kindness, forgiving iniquity and rebellion; yet certainly not declaring the guilty guiltless, but punishing children to the third and fourth generation for their parents’ iniquity.’ <sup>19</sup>Pardon, then, the iniquity of this people in keeping with your great kindness, even as you have forgiven them from Egypt until now.”<sup>l</sup>

<sup>20</sup>The LORD answered: I pardon them as you have asked. <sup>21</sup>Yet, by my life and the LORD’s glory that fills the whole earth, <sup>22</sup>of all the people who have seen my glory and the signs I did in Egypt and in the wilderness,<sup>m</sup> and who nevertheless have put me to the test ten times already and have not obeyed me, <sup>23</sup>not one shall see the land which I promised on oath to their ancestors. None of those who have spurned me shall see it. <sup>24</sup>But as for my servant Caleb, because he has a different spirit and follows me unreservedly,<sup>n</sup> I will bring him into the land which he entered, and his descendants shall possess it. <sup>25</sup>But now, since the Amalekites and Canaanites are living in the valleys,* turn away tomorrow and set out into the wilderness by way of the Red Sea road.

<sup>26</sup>The LORD also said to Moses and Aaron: <sup>27</sup>How long will this wicked community grumble against me?<sup>o</sup> I have heard the grumblings of the Israelites against me. <sup>28</sup>Tell them:* “By my life”—oracle of the LORD— “I will do to you just what I have heard you say. <sup>29</sup>Here in the wilderness<sup>p</sup> your dead bodies shall fall. Of all your men of twenty years or more, enrolled in your registration, who grumbled against me, <sup>30</sup>not one of you shall enter the land where I solemnly swore to settle you, except Caleb, son of Jephunneh, and Joshua, son of Nun. <sup>31</sup>Your little ones, however, who you said would be taken as spoil, I will bring in, and they shall know the land you rejected<sup>q</sup> <sup>32</sup>But as for you, your bodies shall fall here in the wilderness, <sup>33</sup>while your children will wander for forty years, suffering for your infidelity, till the last of you lies dead in the wilderness.”<sup>r</sup> <sup>34</sup>Corresponding to the number of days you spent reconnoitering the land—forty days—you shall bear your punishment one year for each day: forty years. Thus you will realize what it means to oppose me. <sup>35</sup>I, the LORD, have spoken; and I will surely do this to this entire wicked community that conspired against me: here in the wilderness they shall come to their end and there they will die.”

<sup>36</sup>And the men whom Moses had sent to reconnoiter the land<sup>s</sup> and who on returning had set the whole community grumbling against him by spreading discouraging reports about the land— <sup>37</sup>these men who had spread discouraging reports about the land were struck down by the LORD and died. <sup>38</sup>Only Joshua, son of Nun, and Caleb, son of Jephunneh, survived of all the men who had gone to reconnoiter the land.<sup>t</sup>

Unsuccessful Invasion.<sup>39</sup>When Moses repeated these words to all the Israelites, the people mourned greatly. <sup>40</sup>Early the next morning they started up high into the hill country, saying, “Here we are, ready to go up to the place that the LORD spoke of:<sup>u</sup> for we did wrong.” <sup>41</sup>But Moses said, “Why are you now transgressing the LORD’s order? This cannot succeed. <sup>42</sup>Do not go up, because the LORD is not in your midst; do not allow yourself to be struck down by your enemies.<sup>v</sup> <sup>43</sup>For there the Amalekites and Canaanites will face you, and you will fall by the sword. You have turned back from following the LORD; therefore the LORD will not be with you.”

<sup>44</sup>Yet they dared to go up high into the hill country,<sup>w</sup> even though neither the ark of the covenant of the LORD nor Moses left the camp. <sup>45</sup>And the Amalekites and Canaanites who dwelt in that hill country came down and defeated them, beating them back as far as Hormah.*

Secondary Offerings. <sup>1</sup>The LORD spoke to Moses: <sup>2*</sup> Speak to the Israelites and say to them: When you enter the land that I am giving you for your settlements, <sup>3</sup>if you make to the LORD an oblation from the herd or from the flock—either a burnt offering or a sacrifice, to fulfill a vow, or as a voluntary offering, or for one of your festivals—to produce a pleasing aroma for the LORD, <sup>4</sup>the one presenting the offering shall also present to the LORD a grain offering, a tenth of a measure* of bran flour mixed with a fourth of a hin of oil, <sup>5</sup>as well as wine for a libation, a fourth of a hin. You will do this with the burnt offering or the sacrifice, for each lamb. <sup>6</sup>Alternatively for a ram you shall make a grain offering of two tenths of a measure of bran flour mixed with a third of a hin of oil, <sup>7</sup>and for a libation, a third of a hin of wine, thereby presenting a pleasing aroma to the LORD. <sup>8</sup>If you make an offering from the herd—either a burnt offering, or a sacrifice, to fulfill a vow, or as a communion offering to the LORD, <sup>9</sup>with it a grain offering of three tenths of a measure of bran flour mixed with half a hin of oil will be presented; <sup>10</sup>and you will present for a libation, half a hin of wine—a sweet-smelling oblation to the LORD. <sup>11</sup>The same is to be done for each ox, ram, lamb or goat. <sup>12</sup>Whatever the number you offer, do the same for each of them.

<sup>13</sup>All the native-born shall make these offerings in this way, whenever they present a sweet-smelling oblation to the LORD. <sup>14</sup>Likewise, in any future generation, any alien residing with you or anyone else in your midst, who presents an oblation of pleasing aroma to the LORD, must do as you do. <sup>15</sup>There is but one statute for you and for the resident alien, a perpetual statute throughout your generations. You and the resident alien will be alike before the LORD; <sup>16</sup>you and the alien residing with you will have the same rule and the same application of it.

<sup>17</sup>The LORD spoke to Moses: <sup>18</sup>Speak to the Israelites and say to them: When you enter the land into which I am bringing you <sup>19</sup>and eat of the bread of the land, you shall offer the LORD a contribution. <sup>20</sup>A round loaf from your first batch of dough* you shall offer as a contribution. Just like a contribution from the threshing floor you shall offer it.<sup>x</sup> <sup>21</sup> Throughout your generations you shall give a contribution to the LORD from your first batch of dough.

Purification Offerings. <sup>*22</sup>If through inadvertence you fail to do any of these commandments which the LORD has given to Moses—<sup>y</sup> <sup>23</sup>anything the LORD commanded you through Moses from the time the LORD first gave the command down through your generations— <sup>24</sup>if it was done inadvertently without the community's knowledge, the whole community shall sacrifice one bull from the herd as a burnt offering of pleasing aroma to the LORD, along with its prescribed grain offering and libation, as well as one he-goat as a purification offering. <sup>25z</sup> Then the priest shall make atonement for the whole Israelite community; and they will be forgiven, since it was inadvertence, and for their inadvertence they have brought their offering: an oblation to the LORD as well as their purification offering before the LORD. <sup>26</sup>Not only the whole Israelite community but also the aliens residing among you shall be forgiven, since the inadvertent fault affects all the people.

<sup>27</sup>If it is an individual who sins inadvertently,<sup>a</sup> this person shall bring a yearling shegoat as a purification offering. <sup>28</sup>And the priest shall make atonement before the LORD for the one who erred, since the sin was inadvertent, making atonement for the person to secure forgiveness. <sup>29</sup>You shall have but one rule for the person who sins inadvertently, whether a native-born Israelite or an alien residing among you.

<sup>30</sup>But anyone who acts defiantly,<sup>b</sup> whether a native or an alien, reviles the LORD, and shall be cut off from among the people. <sup>31c</sup> For having despised the word of the LORD and broken his commandment, he must be cut off entirely and bear the punishment.

The Sabbath-breaker. <sup>32</sup>While the Israelites were in the wilderness, a man was discovered gathering wood on the sabbath day. <sup>33</sup>Those who caught him at it brought him to Moses and Aaron and the whole community. <sup>34</sup>But they put him in custody, for there was no clear decision* as to what should be done with him.<sup>d</sup> <sup>35</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: This man shall be put to death; let the whole community stone him outside the camp. <sup>36</sup>So the whole community led him outside the camp and stoned him to death, as the LORD had commanded Moses.

yourself going after the desires of your hearts and your eyes. <sup>40</sup>Thus you will remember to do all my commandments and you will be holy to your God. <sup>41</sup>I, the LORD, am your God who brought you out of the land of Egypt to be your God: I, the LORD your God.<sup>f</sup>

CHAPTER 16

Rebellion of Korah. <sup>1*</sup> Korah, son of Izhar, son of Kohath, son of Levi, and the Reubenites Dathan and Abiram, sons of Eliab, and On, son of Peleth, * son of Reuben took <sup>2</sup> two hundred and fifty Israelites who were leaders in the community, members of the council and men of note, and confronted Moses. <sup>3</sup>Holding an assembly against Moses and Aaron, they said,<sup>9</sup> “You go too far! The whole community, all of them, are holy; the LORD is in their midst. Why then should you set yourselves over the LORD’s assembly?”

<sup>4</sup>When Moses heard this, he fell prostrate. <sup>5</sup>Then he said to Korah and to all his faction, “May the LORD make known tomorrow morning who belongs to him and who is the holy one and whom he will have draw near to him! The one whom he chooses, he will have draw near to him. <sup>6</sup>Do this: take your censers, Korah and all his faction, <sup>7</sup>and put fire in them and place incense in them before the LORD tomorrow. He whom the LORD then chooses is the holy one. You Levites go too far!”

<sup>8</sup>Moses also said to Korah, “Hear, now, you Levites! <sup>9h</sup> Are you not satisfied that the God of Israel has singled you out from the community of Israel, to have you draw near him to maintain the LORD’s tabernacle, and to attend upon the community and to serve them? <sup>10</sup>He has allowed you and your Levite kinsmen with you to approach him, and yet you seek the priesthood too. <sup>11</sup>It is therefore against the LORD that you and all your faction are conspiring. As for Aaron, what has he done that you should grumble against him?”

Rebellion of Dathan and Abiram.<sup>12</sup>Moses summoned Dathan and Abiram, sons of Eliab, but they answered, “We will not go.” * <sup>13</sup>Are you not satisfied that you have brought us here from a land flowing with milk and honey to have us perish in the wilderness, that now you must also lord it over us? <sup>14</sup>Far from bringing us to a land flowing with milk and honey, or giving us fields and vineyards for our inheritance, will you gouge out our eyes?* No, we will not go.”

<sup>15</sup>Then Moses became very angry and said to the LORD, “Pay no attention to their offering. I have never taken a single donkey from them, nor have I wronged any one of them.”<sup>i</sup>

Korah. <sup>16</sup>Moses said to Korah, “You and all your faction shall appear before the LORD tomorrow—you and they and Aaron too. <sup>17</sup>Then each of you take his own censer, put incense in it, and present it before the LORD, two hundred and fifty censers; and you and Aaron, each with his own censer, do the same.” <sup>18</sup>So each of them took their censers, and laying incense on the fire they had put in them, they took their stand by the entrance of the tent of meeting along with Moses and Aaron. <sup>19</sup>Then, when Korah had assembled all the community against them at the entrance of the tent of meeting, the glory of the LORD appeared to the entire community, <sup>20</sup>and the LORD said to Moses and Aaron: <sup>21</sup>Stand apart from this community, that I may consume them at once. <sup>22</sup>But they fell prostrate and exclaimed, “O God, God of the spirits of all living creatures, if one man sins will you be angry with the whole community?” <sup>23</sup>The LORD answered Moses: <sup>24</sup>Speak to the community and tell them: Withdraw from the area around the tent* of Korah, Dathan and Abiram.

Punishment of Dathan and Abiram. <sup>25</sup>Moses, followed by the elders of Israel, arose and went to Dathan and Abiram.*<sup>26</sup>Then he spoke to the community, “Move away from the tents of these wicked men and do not touch anything that is theirs: otherwise you too will be swept away because of all their sins.” <sup>27</sup>So they withdrew from the area around the tents of Korah, Dathan and Abiram. When Dathan and Abiram had come out and were standing at the entrance of their tents with their wives, their children, and their little ones, <sup>28</sup>Moses said, “This is how you shall know that the LORD sent me to do all I have done, and that it was not of my own devising: <sup>29</sup>if these die an ordinary death, merely suffering the fate common to all humanity, the LORD has not sent me. <sup>30</sup>But if the LORD makes a chasm, and the ground opens its mouth and swallows them with all belonging to them, and they go down alive to Sheol,* then you will know that these men have spurned the LORD.” <sup>31j</sup> No sooner had he finished saying all this than the ground beneath them split open, <sup>32</sup>and the earth opened its mouth and swallowed them and their families and all of Korah’s people* with all their possessions. <sup>33</sup>They went down alive to Sheol with all belonging to them; the earth closed over them, and they disappeared from the assembly. <sup>34</sup>But all the Israelites near them fled at their shrieks, saying, “The earth might swallow us too!”

Punishment of Korah. <sup>35</sup>And fire from the LORD came forth which consumed the two hundred and fifty men who were offering the incense.

CHAPTER 17

See RG 161–64

<sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Tell Eleazar, son of Aaron the priest, to remove the censers from the embers; and scatter the fire some distance away, for they have become holy— <sup>3*</sup> the censers of those who sinned at the cost of their lives. Have them hammered into plates to cover the altar, because in being presented before the LORD they have become holy. In this way they shall serve as a sign to the Israelites. <sup>4</sup>So taking the bronze censers which had been presented by those who were burned, Eleazar the priest had them hammered into a covering for the altar, <sup>5</sup>just as the LORD had directed him through Moses. This was to be a reminder to the Israelites that no unauthorized person, no one who was not a descendant of Aaron, should draw near to offer incense before the LORD, lest he meet the fate of Korah and his faction.

<sup>6</sup>The next day the whole Israelite community grumbled against Moses and Aaron, saying, “You have killed the people of the LORD.” <sup>7</sup>But while the community was assembling against them, Moses and Aaron turned toward the tent of meeting, and the cloud now covered it and the glory of the LORD appeared. <sup>8</sup>Then Moses and Aaron came to the front of the tent of meeting, <sup>9</sup>and the LORD said to Moses: <sup>10</sup>Remove yourselves from this community, that I may consume them at once. But they fell prostrate.

<sup>11</sup>Then Moses said to Aaron, “Take your censer, put fire from the altar in it, lay incense on it, and bring it quickly to the community to make atonement for them; for wrath has come forth from the LORD and the plague has begun.”<sup>k</sup> <sup>12</sup>Aaron took his censer just as Moses directed and ran in among the assembly, where the plague had already begun among the people. Then he offered the incense and made atonement for the people, <sup>13</sup>while standing there between the living and the dead. And so the scourge was checked. <sup>14</sup>There were fourteen thousand seven hundred dead from the scourge, in addition to those who died because of Korah. <sup>15</sup>When the scourge had been checked, Aaron returned to Moses at the entrance of the tent of meeting.

Aaron’s Staff. <sup>16</sup>The LORD now said to Moses: <sup>17</sup>Speak to the Israelites and get from them a staff* for each ancestral house, twelve staffs in all, from all the leaders of their ancestral houses. Write each man’s name on his staff;

<sup>21</sup>So Moses spoke to the Israelites, and all their leaders gave him staffs, twelve in all, one from each leader of their ancestral houses; and Aaron's staff was among them. <sup>22</sup>Then Moses deposited the staffs before the LORD in the tent of the covenant. <sup>23</sup>The next day, when Moses entered the tent of the covenant, Aaron's staff, representing the house of Levi, had sprouted. It had put forth sprouts, produced blossoms, and borne ripe almonds! <sup>24</sup>So Moses brought out all the staffs from the LORD's presence to all the Israelites, and each one identified his own staff and took it. <sup>25</sup>Then the LORD said to Moses: Put back Aaron's staff in front of the covenant, for safe keeping as a sign to the rebellious, so that their grumbling against me may cease and they might not die. <sup>26</sup>Moses did this. Just as the LORD had commanded him, so he did.

Charge of the Sacred Things. <sup>27*</sup> Then the Israelites exclaimed to Moses, "We will perish; we are lost, we are all lost! <sup>28</sup>Anyone who approaches the tabernacle of the LORD will die! Will there be no end to our perishing?"

CHAPTER 18

<sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Aaron: * You and your sons as well as your ancestral house with you * shall be responsible for any sin with respect to the sanctuary; but only you and your sons with you shall be responsible for any sin with respect to your priesthood. <sup>2</sup>You shall also present with you your kinsmen of the tribe of Levi, your ancestral tribe, that they may be joined to you * and assist you, while you and your sons with you are in front of the tent of the covenant. <sup>3</sup>They shall discharge your obligations and those with respect to the whole tent; however, they shall not come near the utensils of the sanctuary or the altar, or else both they and you will die. <sup>4</sup>They will be joined to you to perform the duties associated with the tent of meeting, all the labor pertaining to the tent. But no unauthorized person * shall come near you. <sup>5</sup>You shall perform the duties of the sanctuary and of the altar, that wrath may not fall again upon the Israelites.

<sup>6</sup>I hereby take your kinsmen, the Levites, from among the Israelites; they are a gift to you, <sup>l</sup> dedicated to the LORD for the labor they perform for the tent of meeting. <sup>7m</sup> But you and your sons with you must take care to exercise your priesthood in whatever concerns the altar and the area within the veil. * I give you your priesthood as a gift. Any unauthorized person who comes near shall be put to death.

The Priests' Share of the Sacrifices. <sup>8</sup>The LORD said to Aaron: * I hereby give to you charge of the contributions made to me, including the various holy offerings of the Israelites; <sup>n</sup> I assign them to you and to your sons as a perquisite, a perpetual due. <sup>9</sup>This is what you shall have from the oblations that are most holy: every offering of theirs—namely, all their grain offerings, purification offerings, and reparation offerings which they must return to me—shall be most holy for you and for your sons. <sup>10</sup>You shall eat them in a most holy place; * every male may partake of them. As holy, they belong to you.

<sup>11</sup>This also you shall have: the contributions that are their gifts, including the elevated offering * of the Israelites; I assign them to you and to your sons and daughters with you as a perpetual due. <sup>o</sup> All in your household who are clean may eat them. <sup>12</sup>I also assign to you all the best <sup>p</sup> of the new oil and of the new wine and grain that they give to the LORD as their first produce that has been processed. <sup>13</sup>The first-ripened fruits of whatever is in their land, which they bring to the LORD, shall be yours; all of your household who are clean may eat them. <sup>14</sup>Whatever is under the ban* in Israel shall be yours. <sup>15</sup>Every living thing that opens the womb, human being and beast alike, such as are to be offered to the LORD, shall be yours;<sup>q</sup> but you must redeem the firstborn of human beings, as well as redeem the firstborn of unclean animals. <sup>16</sup>For the redemption price of a son, when he is a month old, you shall pay the equivalent of five silver shekels according to the sanctuary shekel, that is, twenty gerahs. <sup>17</sup>But the firstborn of cattle, or the firstborn of sheep or the firstborn of goats you shall not redeem; they are holy. Their blood you must splash on the altar and their fat you must burn as an oblation of pleasing aroma to the LORD. <sup>18r</sup> Their meat, however, shall be yours, just as the brisket of the elevated offering and the right thigh belong to you. <sup>19</sup>As a perpetual due I assign to you and to your sons and daughters with you all the contributions of holy things which the Israelites set aside for the LORD; this is a covenant of salt* to last forever before the LORD, for you and for your descendants with you. <sup>20s</sup> Then the LORD said to Aaron:* You shall not have any heritage in their land nor hold any portion among them; I will be your portion and your heritage among the Israelites.

Tithes Due the Levites. <sup>21</sup>To the Levites, however, I hereby assign all tithes in Israel as their heritage in recompense for the labor they perform, the labor pertaining to the tent of meeting.<sup>t</sup> <sup>22</sup>The Israelites may no longer approach the tent of meeting, thereby incurring the penalty of death. <sup>23</sup>Only the Levites are to perform the labor pertaining to the tent of meeting, and they shall incur the penalty for the Israelites' sin;* this is a permanent statute for all your generations. But they shall not have any heritage among the Israelites, <sup>24</sup>for I have assigned to the Levites as their heritage the tithes which the Israelites put aside as a contribution to the LORD. That is why I have said, they will not have any heritage among the Israelites.

Tithes Paid by the Levites. <sup>25</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>26</sup>Speak to the Levites and say to them: When you take from the Israelites the tithes I have assigned you from them as your heritage, you are to make a contribution from them to the LORD, a tithe of the tithe; <sup>27</sup>and your contribution will be credited to you as if it were grain from the threshing floor or new wine from the vat. <sup>28</sup>Thus you too shall make a contribution to the LORD from all the tithes you take from the Israelites, handing over to Aaron the priest the contribution to the LORD. <sup>29</sup>From all the gifts to you, you shall make every contribution due to the LORD—from their best parts, that is the part to be consecrated from them.

<sup>30</sup>Say to them also: Once you have made your contribution from the best part, the rest of the tithe will be credited to the Levites as if it were produce of the threshing floor or the produce of the vat. <sup>31</sup>You and your households may eat it anywhere, since it is your recompense in exchange for labor in the tent of meeting. <sup>32</sup>You will incur no punishment when you contribute the best part of it. But do not profane the holy offerings of the Israelites or else you shall die.

CHAPTER 19

See RG 161–64

Ashes of the Red Heifer. <sup>1</sup>The LORD spoke to Moses and Aaron: <sup>2</sup>This is the statute for the ritual which the LORD has commanded. Tell the Israelites to procure for you a red heifer without defect and free from every blemish and on which no yoke has ever been laid. <sup>3</sup>You will give it to Eleazar the priest, and it will be led outside the camp* and slaughtered in his presence. <sup>4</sup>Eleazar the priest will take some of its blood on his finger and sprinkle it seven times toward the front of the tent of meeting.* <sup>5</sup>Then the heifer will be burned in his sight; it will be burned with its hide and flesh, its blood and dung; <sup>6</sup>and the priest will take cedar wood, hyssop and scarlet yarn and throw them into the fire in which the heifer is being burned. <sup>7</sup>The priest shall then wash his garments and bathe his body in water, afterward he may enter the camp. The priest remains unclean until the evening. <sup>8</sup>Likewise, the one who burned the heifer shall wash his garments in water, bathe his body in water, and be unclean until evening. <sup>9</sup>Then somebody who is clean shall gather up the ashes of the heifer and deposit them in a clean place outside the camp. There they are to be kept to prepare purification water for the Israelite community. This is a purification offering. <sup>10</sup>The one who has gathered up the ashes of the heifer shall also wash his garments and be unclean until evening. This is a permanent statute, both for the Israelites and for the alien residing among them.

Use of the Ashes. <sup>11</sup>Those who touch the corpse of any human being will be unclean for seven days; <sup>12</sup>they shall purify themselves with the water on the third and on the seventh day, and then be clean. But if they fail to purify themselves on the third and on the seventh day, they will not become clean. <sup>13u</sup> Those who touch the corpse of a human being who dies and who fail to purify themselves defile the tabernacle of the LORD and these persons shall be cut off from Israel. Since the purification water has not been splashed over them, they remain unclean: their uncleanness is still on them.

<sup>14</sup>This is the ritual: When someone dies in a tent, everyone who enters the tent, as well as everyone already in it, will be unclean for seven days; <sup>15</sup>and every open vessel with its lid unfastened will be unclean. <sup>16</sup>Moreover, everyone who in the open country touches a person who has been slain by the sword or who has died naturally, or who touches a human bone or a grave, will be unclean for seven days. <sup>17</sup>For anyone who is thus unclean, ashes shall be taken from the burnt purification offering, and spring water will be poured on them from a vessel.<sup>v</sup> <sup>18</sup>Then someone who is clean will take hyssop, dip it in this water, and sprinkle it on the tent and on all the vessels and persons that were in it, or on the one who touched the bone, the slain person or the other corpse, or the grave. <sup>19</sup>The clean will sprinkle the unclean on the third and on the seventh day, and thus purify them on the seventh day. Then they will wash their garments and bathe in water, and in the evening be clean. <sup>20*</sup> Those who become unclean and fail to purify themselves—those people will be cut off from the assembly, because they defile the sanctuary of the LORD. The purification water has not been splashed over them; they remain unclean. <sup>21</sup>This will be a permanent statute for you.

Those who sprinkle the purification water will wash their garments, and those who come in contact with the purification water will be unclean until evening. <sup>22</sup>Moreover, anything that the unclean person touches becomes unclean itself, and the one who touches such a person becomes unclean until evening.

CHAPTER 20*

See RG 161–64

Death of Miriam. <sup>1</sup>The Israelites, the whole community, arrived in the wilderness of Zin* in the first month, and the people stayed at Kadesh. It was here that Miriam died, and here that she was buried.

Need for Water at Kadesh. <sup>2</sup>Since the community had no water, they held an assembly against Moses and Aaron. <sup>3</sup>The people quarreled with Moses, exclaiming, “Would that we had perished when our kindred perished before the LORD! <sup>4</sup>Why have you brought the LORD’s assembly into this wilderness for us and our livestock to die here? <sup>5</sup>Why have you brought us up out of Egypt, only to bring us to this wretched place? It is not a place for grain nor figs nor vines nor pomegranates! And there is no water to drink!” <sup>6</sup>But Moses and Aaron went away from the assembly to the entrance of the tent of meeting, where they fell prostrate.

Sin of Moses and Aaron. Then the glory of the LORD appeared to them, <sup>7</sup>and the LORD said to Moses: <sup>8</sup>Take the staff and assemble the community, you and Aaron your brother, and in their presence command the rock to yield its waters. Thereby you will bring forth water from the rock for them, and supply the community and their livestock with water. <sup>9</sup>So Moses took the staff from its place before the LORD, as he was ordered. <sup>10</sup>Then Moses and Aaron gathered the assembly in front of the rock, where he said to them,<sup>w</sup> “Just listen, you rebels! Are we to produce water for you out of this rock?” <sup>11x</sup> Then, raising his hand, Moses struck the rock twice* with his staff, and water came out in abundance, and the community and their livestock drank. <sup>12*</sup> But the LORD said to Moses and Aaron: Because you did not have confidence in me, to acknowledge my holiness before the Israelites, therefore you shall not lead this assembly into the land I have given them.

<sup>13</sup>These are the waters of Meribah,<sup>y</sup> where the Israelites quarreled with the LORD, and through which he displayed his holiness.

Edom’s Refusal. <sup>14</sup>From Kadesh Moses sent messengers to the king of Edom: “Thus says your brother Israel: * You know of all the hardships that have befallen us, <sup>15</sup>how our ancestors went down to Egypt, and we stayed in Egypt a long time, and the Egyptians treated us and our ancestors harshly. <sup>16</sup>When we cried to the LORD,<sup>z</sup> he heard our cry and sent an angel who led us out of Egypt. Now here we are at Kadesh, a town at the edge of your territory. <sup>17</sup>Please let us pass through your land. We will not cross any fields or vineyards, nor drink any well water, but we will go straight along the King's Highway* without turning to the right or to the left, until we have passed through your territory."

<sup>18</sup>But Edom answered him, "You shall not pass through here; if you do, I will advance against you with the sword." <sup>19</sup>The Israelites said to him, "We will go up along the highway. If we or our livestock drink any of your water, we will pay for it. It is nothing—just let us pass through on foot." <sup>20</sup>But Edom replied, "You shall not pass through,"<sup>a</sup> and advanced against them with a large and heavily armed force. <sup>21</sup>Therefore, since Edom refused to let Israel pass through their territory, Israel turned away from them.

Death of Aaron.<sup>22b</sup> Setting out from Kadesh, the Israelites, the whole community, came to Mount Hor.*<sup>23</sup> There at Mount Hor, on the border of the land of Edom, the LORD said to Moses and Aaron: <sup>24</sup>Let Aaron be gathered to his people, for he shall not enter the land I have given to the Israelites, because you both rebelled against my directions at the waters of Meribah. <sup>25</sup>Take Aaron and Eleazar his son and bring them up on Mount Hor.<sup>c</sup> <sup>26</sup>Then strip Aaron of his garments and put them on Eleazar, his son; but there Aaron shall be gathered up in death.

<sup>27</sup>Moses did as the LORD commanded. When they had climbed Mount Hor in view of the whole community, <sup>28</sup>Moses stripped Aaron of his garments and put them on Eleazar his son. Then Aaron died there on top of the mountain.<sup>d</sup> When Moses and Eleazar came down from the mountain, <sup>29</sup>all the community understood that Aaron had breathed his last; and for thirty days the whole house of Israel mourned Aaron.

CHAPTER 21

See RG 161–64

Victory over Arad. <sup>1</sup>When the Canaanite, the king of Arad,* who ruled over the Negeb,<sup>e</sup> heard that the Israelites were coming along the way of Atharim, he engaged Israel in battle and took some of them captive. <sup>2</sup>Israel then made this vow to the LORD: “If you deliver this people into my hand, I will put their cities under the ban.”<sup>f</sup> <sup>3</sup>The LORD paid attention to Israel and delivered up the Canaanites,<sup>g</sup> and they put them and their cities under the ban. Hence that place was named Hormah.*

The Bronze Serpent. <sup>4</sup>From Mount Hor they set out by way of the Red Sea, to bypass the land of Edom, but the people’s patience was worn out by the journey; <sup>5</sup>so the people complained<sup>h</sup> against God and Moses, “Why have you brought us up from Egypt to die in the wilderness, where there is no food or water? We are disgusted with this wretched food!”*

<sup>6</sup>So the LORD sent among the people seraph* serpents, which bit<sup>i</sup> the people so that many of the Israelites died. <sup>7</sup>Then the people came to Moses and said, “We have sinned in complaining against the LORD and you. Pray to the LORD to take the serpents from us.” So Moses prayed for the people, <sup>8</sup>and the LORD said to Moses: Make a seraph and mount it on a pole, and everyone who has been bitten will look at it and recover.* <sup>9</sup>Accordingly Moses made a bronze serpent* and mounted it on a pole, and whenever the serpent bit someone, the person looked at the bronze serpent and recovered.<sup>j</sup>

<sup>15</sup>Arnon and the wadi gorges

That reach back toward the site of Ar* and lean against the border of Moab.”

<sup>16</sup>From there they went to Beer,* which is the well of which the LORD said to Moses, Gather the people together so that I may give them water. <sup>17</sup>Then Israel sang this song:

Spring up, O well!—so sing to it—

<sup>18</sup>The well that the princes sank, that the nobles of the people dug,
With their scepters and their staffs—from the wilderness, a gift.

Victory over Sihon. <sup>21</sup>Now Israel sent messengers to Sihon, king of the Amorites, with the message, <sup>22</sup>“Let us pass through your land. We will not turn aside into any field or vineyard, nor will we drink any well water, but we will go straight along the King’s Highway until we have passed through your territory.” <sup>23</sup>Sihon,<sup>l</sup> however, would not permit Israel to pass through his territory, but mustered all his forces and advanced against Israel into the wilderness. When he reached Jahaz, he engaged Israel in battle. <sup>24</sup>But Israel put him to the sword, and took possession of his land from the Arnon to the Jabbok and as far as Jazer of the Ammonites, for Jazer is the boundary of the Ammonites. <sup>25m</sup> Israel seized all the towns here, and Israel settled in all the towns of the Amorites, in Heshbon and all its dependencies. <sup>26</sup>For Heshbon was the city of Sihon, king of the Amorites, who had fought against the former king of Moab and had taken all his land from him as far as the Arnon. <sup>27</sup>That is why the poets say:

“Come to Heshbon, let it be rebuilt, let Sihon’s city be firmly constructed.

<sup>28</sup>For fire went forth from Heshbon and a blaze from the city of Sihon;
It consumed Ar of Moab and swallowed up the high places of the Arnon.

<sup>29</sup>Woe to you, Moab!

You are no more, people of Chemosh!*
He let his sons become fugitives and his daughters be taken captive by the Amorite king Sihon.

<sup>30</sup>From Heshbon to Dibon their dominion is no more;
Ar is laid waste; fires blaze as far as Medeba.”

<sup>31</sup>So Israel settled in the land of the Amorites. <sup>32</sup>Moses sent spies to Jazer; and the Israelites captured it with its dependencies and dispossessed the Amorites who were there.

Victory over Og. <sup>33n</sup> Then they turned and went up along the road to Bashan. But Og, king of Bashan, advanced against them with all his forces to give battle at Edrei. <sup>34</sup>The LORD, however, said to Moses: Do not fear him; for into your hand I deliver him with all his forces and his land. You will do to him as you did to Sihon, king of the Amorites, who reigned in Heshbon.<sup>o</sup> <sup>35</sup>So they struck him down with his sons and all his forces, until not a survivor was left to him, and they took possession of his land.

CHAPTER 22

<sup>1</sup>Then the Israelites moved on and encamped in the plains of Moab* on the other side of the Jordan opposite Jericho.

Balaam Summoned. <sup>2</sup>Now Balak, son of Zippor, saw all that Israel did to the Amorites, <sup>3</sup>and Moab feared the Israelites greatly because they were numerous. Moab was in dread of the Israelites. <sup>4</sup>So Moab said to the elders of Midian, “Now this horde will devour everything around us as an ox devours the grass of the field.” At that time Balak, son of Zippor, was king of Moab; <sup>5</sup>and he sent messengers to Balaam, son of Beor, at Pethor on the river, in the land of the Ammonites,* to summon him with these words, “A people has come out of Egypt! They have covered up the earth and are settling down opposite me! <sup>6</sup>Now come, curse this people for me,* since they are stronger than I am. Perhaps I may be able to defeat them and drive them out of the land. For I know that whoever you bless is blessed and whoever you curse is cursed.” <sup>7</sup>So the elders of Moab and the elders of Midian, themselves experts in divination,* left and went to Balaam, to whom they gave Balak’s message. <sup>8</sup>He said to them, “Stay here overnight, and I will give you whatever answer the LORD gives me.” So the princes of Moab lodged with Balaam.

<sup>9</sup>Then God came to Balaam and said: Who are these men with you? <sup>10</sup>Balaam answered God, “Balak, son of Zippor, king of Moab, sent me the message: <sup>11</sup>‘This people that has come out of Egypt has covered up the earth. Now come, lay a curse on them for me; perhaps I may be able to fight them and drive them out.’ ” <sup>12</sup>But God said to Balaam: Do not go with them and do not curse this people, for they are blessed. <sup>13</sup>The next morning Balaam arose and told the princes of Balak, “Go back to your own country, for the LORD has refused to let me go with you.” <sup>14</sup>So the princes of Moab went back to Balak with the report, “Balaam refused to come with us.”

Second Appeal to Balaam. <sup>15</sup>Balak yet again sent princes, who were more numerous and more distinguished than the others. <sup>16</sup>On coming to Balaam they told him, “Thus says Balak, son of Zippor: Please do not refuse to come to me. <sup>17</sup>I will reward you very handsomely and will do anything you ask of me. Come, lay a curse on this people for me.” <sup>18p</sup> But Balaam replied to Balak's servants, "Even if Balak gave me his house full of silver and gold, I could not do anything, small or great, contrary to the command of the LORD, my God. <sup>19</sup>But, you too stay here overnight, so that I may learn what else the LORD may say to me." <sup>20</sup>That night God came to Balaam and said to him: If these men have come to summon you, go back with them; yet only on the condition that you do exactly as I tell you. <sup>21</sup>So the next morning when Balaam arose, he saddled his donkey,* and went off with the princes of Moab.

The Talking Donkey. <sup>22</sup>But now God's anger flared up* at him for going, and the angel of the LORD took up a position on the road as his adversary. As Balaam was riding along on his donkey, accompanied by two of his servants, <sup>23</sup>the donkey saw the angel of the LORD standing in the road with sword drawn. The donkey turned off the road and went into the field, and Balaam beat the donkey to bring her back on the road. <sup>24</sup>Then the angel of the LORD stood in a narrow lane between vineyards with a stone wall on each side. <sup>25</sup>When the donkey saw the angel of the LORD there, she pressed against the wall; and since she squeezed Balaam's leg against the wall, he beat her again. <sup>26</sup>Then the angel of the LORD again went ahead, and stood next in a passage so narrow that there was no room to move either to the right or to the left. <sup>27</sup>When the donkey saw the angel of the LORD there, she lay down under Balaam. Balaam's anger flared up and he beat the donkey with his stick.

<sup>28q</sup> Then the LORD opened the mouth of the donkey, and she asked Balaam, "What have I done to you that you beat me these three times?" <sup>29</sup>"You have acted so willfully against me," said Balaam to the donkey, "that if I only had a sword at hand, I would kill you here and now." <sup>30</sup>But the donkey said to Balaam, "Am I not your donkey, on which you have always ridden until now? Have I been in the habit of treating you this way before?" "No," he replied.

<sup>31</sup>Then the LORD opened Balaam's eyes, so that he saw the angel of the LORD standing on the road with sword drawn; and he knelt and bowed down to the ground. <sup>32</sup>But the angel of the LORD said to him: "Why have you beaten your donkey these three times? I have come as an adversary because this rash journey of yours is against my will. <sup>33</sup>When the donkey saw me, she turned away from me these three times. If she had not turned away from me, you are the one I would have killed, though I would have spared her." <sup>34</sup>Then Balaam said to the angel of the LORD, "I have sinned. Yet I did not know that you took up a position to oppose my journey. Since it has displeased you, I will go back home.” <sup>35</sup>But the angel of the LORD said to Balaam: “Go with the men; but you may say only what I tell you.” So Balaam went on with the princes of Balak.

<sup>36</sup>When Balak heard that Balaam was coming, he went out to meet him at Ar-Moab on the border formed by the Arnon, at its most distant point. <sup>37</sup>And Balak said to Balaam, “Did I not send an urgent summons to you? Why did you not come to me? Did you think I could not reward you?” <sup>38</sup>Balaam answered Balak, “Well, I have come to you after all. But what power have I to say anything? I can speak only what God puts in my mouth.” <sup>39</sup>Then Balaam went with Balak, and they came to Kiriath-huzoth. <sup>40</sup>Here Balak sacrificed oxen and sheep, and sent portions to Balaam and to the princes who were with him.

The First Oracle. <sup>41</sup>The next morning Balak took Balaam up on Bamoth-baal, and from there he could see some of the people.

CHAPTER 23

See RG 161–67

<sup>1</sup>Then Balaam said to Balak, “Build me seven altars here, and here prepare seven bulls and seven rams for me.” <sup>2</sup>So Balak did as Balaam had ordered, and Balak and Balaam offered a bull and a ram on each altar. <sup>3</sup>Balaam said to Balak, “Stand here by your burnt offering while I go over there. Perhaps the LORD will meet me, and then I will tell you whatever he lets me see.” And so he went out on the barren height. <sup>4</sup>Then God met Balaam, and Balak said to him: “I have erected the seven altars, and have offered a bull and a ram on each altar.” <sup>5</sup>The LORD put an utterance in Balaam’s mouth, and said: Go back to Balak, and speak accordingly. <sup>6</sup>So he went back to Balak, who was still standing by his burnt offering together with all the princes of Moab. <sup>7</sup>Then Balaam recited his poem:

From Aram* Balak has led me here,
Moab’s king, from the mountains of Qodem:<sup>r</sup>

“Come, curse for me Jacob, come, denounce Israel.”

<sup>8</sup>How can I lay a curse on the one whom God has not cursed?
How denounce the one whom the LORD has not denounced?

<sup>9</sup>For from the top of the crags I see him, from the heights I behold him.

Here is a people that lives apart* and does not reckon itself among the nations.

<sup>10</sup>Who has ever counted the dust of Jacob, who numbered Israel’s dust-cloud?*
May I die the death of the just, may my end be like theirs!

<sup>11</sup>“What have you done to me?” cried Balak to Balaam. “It was to lay a curse on my foes that I brought you here; but instead, you have blessed them!”

<sup>12</sup>Balaam replied, “Is it not what the LORD puts in my mouth that I take care to repeat?”

The Second Oracle. <sup>13</sup>Then Balak said to him, “Please come with me to another place* from which you can see them; but you will see only some, not all of them, and from there lay a curse on them for me.” <sup>14</sup>So he brought him to a lookout post on the top of Pisgah, where he built seven altars and offered a bull and a ram on each of them. <sup>15</sup>Balaam then said to Balak, “Stand here by your burnt offering, while I seek a meeting over there.” <sup>16</sup>Then the Lord met Balaam, and, having put an utterance in his mouth, said to him: Return to Balak, and speak accordingly. <sup>17</sup>So he went to Balak, who was still standing by his burnt offering together with the princes of Moab. When Balak asked him, “What did the Lord say?” <sup>18</sup>Balaam recited his poem:

Rise, Balak, and listen;

give ear to my testimony, son of Zippor!

<sup>19</sup>God is not a human being who speaks falsely,

nor a mortal, who feels regret.

Is God one to speak and not act, to decree and not bring it to pass?

<sup>20</sup>I was summoned to bless;

I will bless; I cannot revoke it!

<sup>21</sup>Misfortune I do not see in Jacob, nor do I see misery* in Israel.

The Lord, their God, is with them;

among them is the war-cry of their King.

<sup>22</sup>They have the like of a wild ox's horns:*

God who brought them out of Egypt.<sup>s</sup>

<sup>23</sup>No, there is no augury against Jacob, nor divination against Israel.

Now it is said of Jacob, of Israel, “Look what God has done!”

<sup>24</sup>Here is a people that rises up like a lioness,

and gets up like a lion;

It does not rest till it has devoured its prey

and has drunk the blood of the slain.<sup>t</sup>

<sup>25</sup>“Neither lay a curse on them nor bless them,” said Balak to Balaam. <sup>26</sup>But Balaam answered Balak, “Did I not tell you, ‘Everything the Lord tells me I must do’?”

The Third Oracle. <sup>27</sup>Then Balak said to Balaam, “Come, let me bring you to another place; perhaps God will approve of your laying a curse on them for me from there.” <sup>28</sup>So he took Balaam to the top of Peor, that overlooks Jeshimon. <sup>29</sup>Balaam then said to Balak, “Build me seven altars here; and here prepare for me seven bulls and seven rams.” <sup>30</sup>And Balak did as Balaam had ordered, offering a bull and a ram on each altar.

CHAPTER 24

See RG 161–67

<sup>1</sup>Balaam, however, perceiving that the Lord was pleased to bless Israel, did not go aside as before to seek omens, but turned his gaze toward the wilderness. <sup>2</sup>When Balaam looked up and saw Israel encamped, tribe by tribe, the spirit of God came upon him, <sup>3</sup>and he recited his poem:

The oracle of Balaam, son of Beor, the oracle of the man whose eye is true,

<sup>4</sup>The oracle of one who hears what God says,
and knows what the Most High knows,
Of one who sees what the Almighty sees,
in rapture* and with eyes unveiled:

<sup>5</sup>How pleasant are your tents, Jacob;
your encampments, Israel!

<sup>6</sup>Like palm trees spread out, like gardens beside a river,
Like aloes the Lord planted,
like cedars beside water;

<sup>7</sup>Water will drip from their buckets, their seed will have plentiful water;
Their king will rise higher than Agag*
and their dominion will be exalted.

<sup>8</sup>They have the like of a wild ox's horns:
God who brought them out of Egypt.
They will devour hostile nations, break their bones, and crush their loins.<sup>u</sup>

<sup>9</sup>Crouching, they lie like a lion, or like a lioness; who will arouse them?

Blessed are those who bless you, and cursed are those who curse you!<sup>v</sup>

<sup>10</sup>In a blaze of anger at Balaam, Balak clapped his hands* and said to him, “It was to lay a curse on my foes that I summoned you here; yet three times now you have actually blessed them!”<sup>w</sup> <sup>11</sup>Now flee to your home. I promised to reward you richly, but the Lord has withheld the reward from you!”

<sup>12</sup>Balaam replied to Balak, “Did I not even tell the messengers whom you sent to me, <sup>13</sup>‘Even if Balak gave me his house full of silver and gold, I could not of my own accord do anything, good or evil, contrary to the command of the Lord’? Whatever the Lord says I must say.”<sup>x</sup>

The Fourth Oracle. <sup>14</sup>“But now that I am about to go to my own people, let me warn you what this people will do to your people in the days to come.”

<sup>15</sup>Then he recited his poem:

The oracle of Balaam, son of Beor,
the oracle of the man whose eye is true,

<sup>16</sup>The oracle of one who hears what God
says,
and knows what the Most High knows,
Of one who sees what the Almighty sees,
in rapture and with eyes unveiled.

<sup>17</sup>I see him, though not now;
I observe him, though not near:
A star shall advance from Jacob, and a scepter* shall rise from Israel,

That will crush the brows of Moab,<sup>y</sup>
and the skull of all the Sethites,

<sup>18</sup>Edom will be dispossessed, and no survivor is left in Seir.

Israel will act boldly,

<sup>19</sup>and Jacob will rule his foes.

<sup>20</sup>Upon seeing Amalek, Balaam recited his poem:

First* of the nations is Amalek, but their end is to perish forever.<sup>z</sup>

<sup>21</sup>Upon seeing the Kenites,* he recited his poem:

Though your dwelling is safe, and your nest is set on a cliff;

<sup>22</sup>Yet Kain will be destroyed when Asshur* takes you captive.

<sup>23</sup>Upon seeing* [the Ishmaelites?] he recited his poem:

Alas, who shall survive of Ishmael,

<sup>24</sup>to deliver them from the hands of the Kittim?

When they have conquered Asshur and conquered Eber,

They too shall perish forever.

<sup>25</sup>Then Balaam set out on his journey home; and Balak also went his way.

CHAPTER 25

See RG 161–67

Worship of Baal of Peor. <sup>1</sup>While Israel was living at Shittim,* the people profaned themselves by prostituting themselves with the Moabite women.<sup>a</sup> <sup>2</sup>These then invited the people to the sacrifices of their god, and the people ate of the sacrifices<sup>b</sup> and bowed down to their god. <sup>3</sup>Israel thereby attached itself to the Baal of Peor,<sup>c</sup> and the Lord's anger flared up against Israel. <sup>4d</sup> The Lord said to Moses: Gather all the leaders of the people, and publicly execute them* before the Lord, that the blazing wrath of the Lord may turn away from Israel. <sup>5</sup>So Moses told the Israelite judges, "Each of you kill those of his men who have attached themselves to the Baal of Peor."*

Zeal of Phinehas. <sup>6</sup>At this a certain Israelite came and brought in a Midianite woman* to his kindred in the view of Moses and of the whole Israelite community, while they were weeping at the entrance of the tent of meeting. <sup>7e</sup> When Phinehas, son of Eleazar, son of Aaron the priest, saw this, he rose up from the assembly, and taking a spear in his hand, <sup>8</sup>followed the Israelite into the tent where he pierced the two of them, the Israelite and the woman. Thus the plague upon the Israelites was checked; <sup>9</sup>but the dead from the plague were twenty-four thousand.

<sup>10</sup>Then the Lord said to Moses: <sup>11</sup>Phinehas, son of Eleazar, son of Aaron the priest, has turned my anger from the Israelites by his being as jealous among them as I am; that is why I did not put an end to the Israelites in my jealousy.* <sup>12f</sup> Announce, therefore, that I hereby give him my covenant of peace,* <sup>13</sup>which shall be for him and for his descendants after him the covenant of an everlasting priesthood, because he was jealous on behalf of his God and thus made expiation for the Israelites.

<sup>14*</sup> The name of the slain Israelite, the one slain with the Midianite woman, was Zimri, son of Salu, prince of a Simeonite ancestral house. <sup>15</sup>The name of the slain Midianite woman was Cozbi, daughter of Zur, who was head of a clan, an ancestral house, in Midian.

Vengeance on the Midianites. <sup>16*</sup> The Lord then said to Moses: <sup>17g</sup> Treat the Midianites as enemies and strike them, <sup>18f</sup>for they have been your enemies by the deceitful dealings they had with you regarding Peor and their kinswoman Cozbi, the daughter of a Midianite prince, who was slain at the time of the plague because of Peor.

III. Second Census of a New Generation and Preparation to Enter the Promised Land

CHAPTER 26

See RG 161–67

The Second Census. <sup>19</sup>After the plague <sup>1</sup>the Lord said to Moses and Eleazar, son of Aaron the priest: <sup>2</sup>Take a census, by ancestral houses, throughout the community of the Israelites of all those of twenty years or more who are eligible for military service in Israel.<sup>h</sup> <sup>3</sup>So on the plains of Moab along the Jordan at Jericho, Moses and Eleazar the priest enrolled them, <sup>4</sup>those of twenty years or more, as the Lord had commanded Moses.

The Israelites who came out of the land of Egypt were as follows:*

the clan of the Shelahites; through Perez, the clan of the Perezites; through Zerah, the clan of the Zerahites. <sup>21</sup>The descendants of Perez were: through Hezron, the clan of the Hezronites; through Hamul, the clan of the Hamulites. <sup>22</sup>These were the clans of Judah, of whom there were enrolled seventysix thousand five hundred.

<sup>26</sup>The descendants of Zebulun by their clans were: through Sered, the clan of the Seredites; through Elon, the clan of the Elonites; through Jahleel, the clan of the Jahleelites. <sup>27</sup>These were the clans of the Zebulunites, of whom there were enrolled sixty thousand five hundred.

These were the descendants of Joseph by their clans.

<sup>38</sup>The descendants of Benjamin by their clans were: through Bela, the clan of the Belaite; through Ashbel, the clan of the Ashbelites; through Ahiram, the clan of the Ahiramites; <sup>39</sup>through Shupham, the clan of the Shuphamites; through Hupham, the clan of the Huphamites. <sup>40</sup>The sons of Bela were Ard and Naaman: through Ard, the clan of the Ardites; through Naaman, the clan of the Naamites. <sup>41</sup>These were the descendants of Benjamin by their clans, of whom there were enrolled forty-five thousand six hundred.

<sup>48</sup>The descendants of Naphtali by their clans were: through Jahzeel, the clan of the Jahzeelites; through Guni, the clan of the Gunites; <sup>49</sup>through Jezer, the clan of the Jezerites; through Shillem, the clan of the Shillemites. <sup>50</sup>These were the clans of Naphtali, of whom there were enrolled forty-five thousand four hundred.

<sup>51</sup>These were the Israelites who were enrolled: six hundred and one thousand seven hundred and thirty.

Allotment of the Land. * <sup>52</sup>The Lord said to Moses: <sup>53m</sup> Among these the land shall be divided as their heritage in keeping with the number of people named. <sup>54n</sup> To a large tribe you shall assign a large heritage, to a small tribe a small heritage, each receiving its heritage in proportion to the number enrolled in it. <sup>55</sup>But the land shall be divided by lot, all inheriting according to the lists of their ancestral tribes. <sup>56</sup>As the lot falls the heritage of each tribe, large or small, will be assigned.

Census of the Levites. <sup>57</sup>These were the Levites enrolled by clans: through Gershon, the clan of the Gershonites; through Kohath, the clan of the Kohathites; through Merari, the clan of the Merarites. <sup>58</sup>These were clans of Levi: the clan of the Libnites, the clan of the Hebronites, the clan of the Mahlites, the clan of the Mushites, the clan of the Korahites.*

Now Kohath begot Amram, <sup>59</sup>whose wife was named Jochebed. She was the daughter of Levi, born to Levi in Egypt. To Amram she bore Aaron and

Moses and Miriam their sister. <sup>60</sup>To Aaron were born Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar. <sup>61</sup>But Nadab and Abihu died when they offered unauthorized fire before the Lord. <sup>62</sup>The Levites enrolled were twenty-three thousand, every male one month or more of age.<sup>o</sup> They were not enrolled with the other Israelites, however, for no heritage was given them among the Israelites.

<sup>63</sup>These, then, were those enrolled by Moses and Eleazar the priest, when they enrolled the Israelites on the plains of Moab along the Jordan at Jericho. <sup>64</sup>Among them there was not one of those who had been enrolled by Moses and Aaron the priest, when they enrolled the Israelites in the wilderness of Sinai. <sup>65p</sup> For the Lord had told them that they would surely die in the wilderness, and not one of them was left except Caleb, son of Jephunneh, and Joshua, son of Nun.

Zelophehad's Daughters. <sup>1</sup>The daughters of Zelophehad, son of Hephher, son of Gilead, son of Machir, son of Manasseh, came forward. (Zelophehad belonged to the clans of Manasseh, son of Joseph.) The names of his daughters were Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah and Tirzah.<sup>q</sup> <sup>2</sup>Standing before Moses, Eleazar the priest, the princes, and the whole community at the entrance of the tent of meeting, they said: <sup>3</sup>“Our father died in the wilderness. Although he did not join the faction of those who conspired against the Lord,* Korah's faction, he died for his own sin without leaving any sons. <sup>4</sup>But why should our father's name be cut off from his clan merely because he had no son? Give us land among our father's kindred.”

This will be the statutory procedure for the Israelites, as the Lord commanded Moses.<sup>r</sup>

Joshua to Succeed Moses. <sup>12</sup>The Lord said to Moses: Go up into this mountain of the Abarim range* and view the land that I have given to the Israelites.<sup>s</sup> <sup>13</sup>When you have viewed it, you will be gathered to your people, as was Aaron your brother.<sup>t</sup> <sup>14</sup>For in the rebellion of the community in the wilderness of Zin you both rebelled against my order to acknowledge my holiness before them by means of the water.<sup>u</sup> (These were the waters of Meribah of Kadesh in the wilderness of Zin.)

<sup>15</sup>Then Moses said to the Lord, <sup>16</sup>“May the Lord, the God of the spirits of all humanity,* set over the community someone <sup>17</sup>who will be their leader in battle and who will lead them out and bring them in, that the Lord's community may not be like sheep without a shepherd.” <sup>18</sup>And the Lord replied to Moses: Take Joshua, son of Nun,<sup>v</sup> a man of spirit,* and lay your hand upon him. <sup>19</sup>Have him stand before Eleazar the priest and the whole community, and commission him in their sight. <sup>20</sup>Invest him with some of your own power, that the whole Israelite community may obey him. <sup>21</sup>He shall present himself to Eleazar the priest, who will seek for him the decision of the Urim* in the Lord's presence; and as it directs, Joshua, all the Israelites with him, and the whole community will go out for battle; and as it directs, they will come in.

<sup>22</sup>Moses did as the Lord had commanded him. Taking Joshua and having him stand before Eleazar the priest and the whole community, <sup>23</sup>he laid his hands on him and commissioned him, as the Lord had directed through Moses.

General Sacrifices. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Give the Israelites this commandment: At their prescribed times, you will be careful to present to me the food offerings that are due me, oblations of pleasing aroma to me.

Each Morning and Evening. <sup>3w</sup> You will tell them therefore: This is the oblation which you will offer to the LORD: two unblemished yearling lambs each day as the regular burnt offering, * <sup>4</sup>offering one lamb in the morning and the other during the evening twilight, <sup>5</sup>each with a grain offering of one tenth of an ephah of bran flour mixed with a fourth of a hin of oil of crushed olives. * <sup>6</sup>This is the regular burnt offering that was made at Mount Sinai for a pleasing aroma, an oblation to the LORD. <sup>7</sup>And as the libation for the first lamb, you will make a libation to the LORD in the sanctuary * of a fourth of a hin of strong drink. <sup>8</sup>The other lamb you will offer during the evening twilight, making the same grain offering and the same libation as in the morning, as an oblation of pleasing aroma to the LORD.

On the Sabbath. <sup>9n</sup> the sabbath day: two unblemished yearling lambs, with a grain offering of two tenths of an ephah of bran flour mixed with oil, and its libation. <sup>10</sup>This is the sabbath burnt offering each sabbath, in addition to the regular burnt offering and its libation.

At the New Moon Feast. <sup>11</sup>On your new moons * you will offer as a burnt offering to the LORD two bulls of the herd, one ram, and seven unblemished yearling lambs, <sup>12</sup>with three tenths of an ephah of bran flour mixed with oil as the grain offering for each bull, two tenths of an ephah of bran flour mixed with oil as the grain offering for the ram, <sup>13</sup>and one tenth of an ephah of bran flour mixed with oil as the grain offering for each lamb, a burnt offering with a pleasing aroma, an oblation to the LORD. <sup>14</sup>Their libations will consist of a half a hin of wine for each bull, a third of a hin for the ram, and a fourth of a hin for each lamb. This is the burnt offering for the new moon, for every new moon through the months of the year. <sup>15</sup>Moreover, there will be one goat for a purification offering to the LORD; it will be offered in addition to the regular burnt offering and its libation.

At the Passover. <sup>16</sup>The fourteenth day * of the first month is the Passover of the LORD, <sup>x</sup> <sup>17</sup>and the fifteenth day of this month is the pilgrimage feast.

For seven days unleavened bread is to be eaten. <sup>18</sup>On the first day you will declare a holy day, and you shall do no heavy work.<sup>*y</sup> <sup>19</sup>You will offer an oblation, a burnt offering to the LORD: two bulls of the herd, one ram, and seven yearling lambs that you are sure are unblemished. <sup>20</sup>Their grain offerings will be of bran flour mixed with oil; you will offer three tenths of an ephah for each bull and two tenths for the ram. <sup>21</sup>You will offer one tenth for each of the seven lambs; <sup>22</sup>and one goat as a purification offering to make atonement for yourselves. <sup>23</sup>These offerings you will make in addition to the morning burnt offering which is part of the regular burnt offering. <sup>24</sup>You will make exactly the same offerings each day for seven days as food offerings, oblations of pleasing aroma to the LORD; they will be offered in addition to the regular burnt offering with its libation. <sup>25</sup>On the seventh day you will declare a holy day: you shall do no heavy work.<sup>z</sup>

At Pentecost. <sup>26</sup>On the day of first fruits,* on your feast of Weeks,<sup>a</sup> when you present to the LORD an offering of new grain, you will declare a holy day: you shall do no heavy work. <sup>27</sup>You will offer burnt offering for a pleasing aroma to the LORD: two bulls of the herd, one ram, and seven yearling lambs that you are sure are unblemished. <sup>28</sup>Their grain offerings will be of bran flour mixed with oil: three tenths of an ephah for each bull, two tenths for the ram, <sup>29</sup>and one tenth for each of the seven lambs. <sup>30</sup>One goat will be for a purification offering to make atonement for yourselves. <sup>31</sup>You will make these offerings, together with their libations, in addition to the regular burnt offering with its grain offering.

CHAPTER 29

On New Year's Day. <sup>1</sup>In the seventh month on the first day* you will declare a holy day, and do no heavy work; it shall be a day on which you sound the trumpet.<sup>b</sup> <sup>2</sup>You will offer a burnt offering for a pleasing aroma to the LORD: one bull of the herd, one ram, and seven unblemished yearling lambs. <sup>3</sup>Their grain offerings will be of bran flour mixed with oil: three tenths of an ephah for the bull, two tenths for the ram, <sup>4</sup>and one tenth for each of the seven lambs. <sup>5</sup>One goat will be a purification offering to make atonement for yourselves. <sup>6</sup>These are in addition to the burnt offering for the new moon with its grain offering, and in addition to the regular burnt offering with its grain offering, together with the libations prescribed for them, for a pleasing aroma, an oblation to the LORD.

On the Day of Atonement. <sup>7</sup>On the tenth day of this seventh month* you will declare a holy day, humble yourselves, and do no sort of work.<sup>c</sup> <sup>8</sup>You will offer a burnt offering to the LORD, a pleasing aroma: one bull of the herd, one ram, and seven yearling lambs that you are sure are unblemished. <sup>9</sup>Their grain offerings of bran flour mixed with oil: three tenths of an ephah for the bull, two tenths for the one ram, <sup>10</sup>and one tenth for each of the seven lambs. <sup>11</sup>One goat will be a purification offering. These are in addition to the purification offering for purging,* the regular burnt offering with its grain offering, and their libations.

On the Feast of Booths. <sup>12*</sup> On the fifteenth day of the seventh month you will declare a holy day:<sup>d</sup> you shall do no heavy work. For the following seven days you will celebrate a pilgrimage feast to the LORD. <sup>13</sup>You will offer a burnt offering, an oblation of pleasing aroma to the LORD: thirteen bulls* of the herd, two rams, and fourteen yearling lambs that are unblemished. <sup>14</sup>Their grain offerings will be of bran flour mixed with oil: three tenths of an ephah for each of the thirteen bulls, two tenths for each of the two rams, <sup>15</sup>and one tenth for each of the fourteen lambs. <sup>16</sup>One goat will be a purification offering. These are in addition to the regular burnt offering with its grain offering and libation.

<sup>17</sup>On the second day: twelve bulls of the herd, two rams, and fourteen unblemished yearling lambs, <sup>18</sup>with the grain offerings and libations for the bulls, rams and lambs in their prescribed number, <sup>19</sup>as well as one goat as a purification offering, besides the regular burnt offering with its grain offering and libation.

<sup>29</sup>On the sixth day: eight bulls, two rams, and fourteen unblemished yearling lambs, <sup>30</sup>with the grain offerings and libations for the bulls, rams and lambs in their prescribed number, <sup>31</sup>as well as one goat as a purification offering, besides the regular burnt offering, its grain offering and libation.

<sup>39</sup>These are the offerings you will make to the LORD on your festivals, besides your votive or voluntary offerings of burnt offerings, grain offerings, libations, and communion offerings.

CHAPTER 30

<sup>1</sup>So Moses instructed the Israelites exactly as the LORD had commanded him.

Validity and Annulment of Vows. <sup>2</sup>Moses said to the heads of the Israelite tribes, “This is what the LORD has commanded: <sup>3</sup>When a man makes a vow to the LORD or binds himself under oath to a pledge,* he shall not violate his word, but must fulfill exactly the promise he has uttered.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>4</sup>“When a woman makes a vow to the LORD, or binds herself to a pledge, while still in her father’s house in her youth, <sup>5</sup>and her father learns of her vow or the pledge to which she bound herself and says nothing to her about it, then any vow or any pledge to which she bound herself remains valid. <sup>6</sup>But if on the day he learns of it her father opposes her, then any vow or any pledge to which she bound herself becomes invalid; and the LORD will release her from it, since her father opposed her.

<sup>7</sup>“If she marries while under a vow or under a rash pledge to which she bound herself, <sup>8</sup>and her husband learns of it, yet says nothing to her on the day he learns it, then the vows or the pledges to which she bound herself remain valid. <sup>9</sup>But if on the day her husband learns of it he opposes her, he thereby annuls the vow she had made or the rash pledge to which she had bound herself, and the LORD will release her from it. <sup>10</sup>(The vow of a widow or of a divorced woman, however, any pledge to which such a woman binds herself, is valid.)

<sup>11</sup>“If it is in her husband’s house* that she makes a vow or binds herself under oath to a pledge, <sup>12</sup>and her husband learns of it yet says nothing to her to oppose her, then all her vows remain valid or any pledge to which she has bound herself. <sup>13</sup>But if on the day he learns of them her husband annuls them, then whatever she has expressly promised in her vows or in her pledge becomes invalid; since her husband has annulled them, the LORD will release her from them.

<sup>14</sup>“Any vow or any pledge that she makes under oath to humble herself, her husband may either confirm or annul. <sup>15</sup>But if her husband, day after day, says nothing at all to her, he thereby confirms all her vows or all the pledges incumbent upon her; he has confirmed them, because on the day he learned of them he said nothing to her. <sup>16</sup>If, however, he annuls them* some time after he first learned of them, he will be responsible for her guilt.”

<sup>17</sup>These are the statutes which the LORD commanded Moses concerning a husband and his wife, as well as a father and his daughter while she is still in her youth in her father’s house.

CHAPTER 31

See RG 161–67

Campaign Against the Midianites. <sup>1</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>2</sup>*Avenge the Israelites on the Midianites, and then you will be gathered to your people. <sup>3</sup>So Moses told the people, “Arm some men among you for the campaign, to attack Midian and to execute the LORD’s vengeance on Midian. <sup>4</sup>From each of the tribes of Israel you will send a thousand men to the campaign.” <sup>5</sup>From the contingents of Israel, therefore, a thousand men of each tribe were levied, so that there were twelve thousand men armed for war. <sup>6</sup>Moses sent them out on the campaign, a thousand from each tribe, with Phinehas, son of Eleazar, the priest for the campaign, who had with him the sacred vessels and the trumpets for sounding the alarm. <sup>7</sup>They waged war against the Midianites, as the LORD had commanded Moses, and killed every male. <sup>8</sup>Besides those slain in battle, they killed the kings of Midian: Evi, Rekem, Zur, Hur and Reba, the five kings of Midian; <sup>9</sup>* and they also killed Balaam, son of Beor, with the sword. <sup>9</sup>But the Israelites took captive the women of the Midianites with their children, and all their herds and flocks and wealth as loot, <sup>10</sup>while they set on fire all the towns where they had settled and all their encampments. <sup>11</sup>Then they took all the plunder, with the people and animals they had captured, and brought the captives, together with the spoils and plunder, <sup>12</sup>to Moses and Eleazar the priest and to the Israelite community at their camp on the plains of Moab by the Jordan opposite Jericho.

Treatment of the Captives. <sup>13</sup>When Moses and Eleazar the priest, with all the leaders of the community, went outside the camp to meet them, <sup>14</sup>Moses became angry with the officers of the army, the commanders of thousands and the commanders of hundreds, who were returning from the military campaign. <sup>15</sup>“So you have spared all the women!” he exclaimed. <sup>16</sup>“These are the very ones who on Balaam’s advice were behind the Israelites’ unfaithfulness to the LORD in the affair at Peor,<sup>h</sup> so that plague struck the LORD’s community. <sup>17</sup>* Now kill, therefore, every male among the children and kill every woman who has had sexual relations with a man. <sup>18</sup>But you may spare for yourselves all the girls who have not had sexual relations.

Purification After Combat. <sup>19</sup>“Moreover, remain outside the camp for seven days; every one of you who has killed anyone or touched someone killed will purify yourselves on the third and on the seventh day—both you and your captives. <sup>20</sup>You will also purify every garment, every article of leather, everything made of goats' hair, and every article of wood."

<sup>21</sup>Eleazar the priest told the soldiers who had taken part in the battle: "This is the prescribed ritual which the LORD has commanded Moses: <sup>22</sup>gold, silver, bronze, iron, tin and lead— <sup>23</sup>whatever can stand fire—you shall put into the fire, that it may become clean; however, it must also be purified with water of purification.* But whatever cannot stand fire you must put into the water. <sup>24</sup>On the seventh day you will wash your garments, and then you will again be clean. After that you may enter the camp."

Division of the Spoils. <sup>25</sup>The LORD said to Moses: <sup>26</sup>With the help of Eleazar the priest and of the heads of the ancestral houses of the community, inventory all the spoils captured, human being and beast alike; <sup>27</sup>then divide the spoils* between the warriors who went on the campaign and the whole community. <sup>28</sup>You will levy a tax for the LORD on the soldiers who went on the campaign: one out of every five hundred persons, oxen, donkeys, and sheep. <sup>29</sup>From their half you will take it and give it to Eleazar the priest as a contribution to the LORD. <sup>30</sup>From the Israelites' half you will take one captive from every fifty human beings, oxen, donkeys, and sheep—all the animals—and give them to the Levites, who perform the duties of the LORD's tabernacle. <sup>31</sup>So Moses and Eleazar the priest did this, as the LORD had commanded Moses.

Amount of the Plunder. <sup>32</sup>This plunder, what was left of the loot which the troops had taken, amounted to six hundred and seventy-five thousand sheep, <sup>33</sup>seventy-two thousand oxen, <sup>34</sup>sixty-one thousand donkeys, <sup>35</sup>and thirty-two thousand women who had not had sexual relations.

<sup>36</sup>The half-share that fell to those who had gone out on the campaign was in number: three hundred and thirty-seven thousand five hundred sheep, <sup>37</sup>of which six hundred and seventy-five fell as tax to the LORD; <sup>38</sup>thirty-six thousand oxen, of which seventy-two fell as tax to the LORD; <sup>39</sup>thirty thousand five hundred donkeys, of which sixty-one fell as tax to the LORD; <sup>40</sup>and sixteen thousand persons, of whom thirty-two persons fell as tax to the LORD. <sup>41</sup>Moses gave the taxes contributed to the LORD to Eleazar the priest, exactly as the LORD had commanded Moses.

thousand five hundred sheep, <sup>44</sup>thirty-six thousand oxen, <sup>45</sup>thirty thousand five hundred donkeys, <sup>46</sup>and sixteen thousand persons. <sup>47</sup>From the Israelites' half, Moses took one captive from every fifty, from human being and beast alike, and gave them to the Levites, who performed the duties of the LORD's tabernacle, exactly as the LORD had commanded Moses.

Gifts of the Officers. <sup>48</sup>Then those who were officers over the contingents of the army, commanders of thousands and commanders of hundreds, came up to Moses <sup>49</sup>and said to him, "Your servants have counted the soldiers under our command, and not one of us is missing. <sup>50*</sup> So, we have brought as an offering to the LORD articles of gold that each of us has picked up—anklets, bracelets, rings, earrings, or pendants—to make atonement for ourselves before the LORD." <sup>51</sup>Moses and Eleazar the priest accepted the gold from them, all fashioned pieces. <sup>52</sup>The gold that was given as a contribution to the LORD—from the commanders of thousands and the commanders of hundreds—amounted in all to sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty shekels. <sup>53</sup>What the common soldiers had looted each one kept for himself. <sup>54</sup>So Moses and Eleazar the priest accepted the gold from the commanders of thousands and of hundreds, and put it in the tent of meeting as a reminder on behalf of the Israelites before the LORD.

CHAPTER 32

See RG 161–67

Request of Gad and Reuben. <sup>1</sup>Now the Reubenites and Gadites had a very large number of livestock. Noticing that the land of Jazer and of Gilead* was a place suited to livestock, <sup>2</sup>the Gadites and Reubenites came to Moses and Eleazar the priest and to the leaders of the community and said, <sup>3*</sup> “The region of Ataroth, Dibon, Jazer, Nimrah, Heshbon, Elealeh, Sebam, Nebo and Baalmeon— <sup>4</sup>the land which the LORD has laid low before the community of Israel, is a land for livestock, and your servants have livestock.” <sup>5</sup>They continued, “If we find favor with you, let this land be given to your servants as their possession. Do not make us cross the Jordan.”

Moses’ Rebuke. <sup>6</sup>But Moses answered the Gadites and Reubenites: “Are your kindred, then, to go to war, while you remain here? <sup>7</sup>Why do you wish to discourage the Israelites from crossing to the land the LORD has given them? <sup>8</sup>That is just what your ancestors did when I sent them from Kadesh-barnea to reconnoiter the land.<sup>i</sup> <sup>9</sup>They went up to the Wadi Eshcol and reconnoitered the land, then so discouraged the Israelites that they would not enter the land the LORD had given them. <sup>10j</sup> At that time the anger of the LORD flared up, and he swore: <sup>11</sup>None of the men twenty years old or more who have come up from Egypt will see the land I promised under oath to Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, because they have not followed me unreservedly— <sup>12k</sup> except the Kenizzite* Caleb, son of Jephunneh, the Kenizzite, and Joshua, son of Nun, since they have followed the LORD unreservedly. <sup>13</sup>So the anger of the LORD flared up against the Israelites and he made them wander in the wilderness forty years, until the whole generation that had done evil in the sight of the LORD had disappeared. <sup>14</sup>And now here you are, offspring of sinful stock, rising up in your ancestors’ place to add still more to the LORD’s blazing anger against the Israelites. <sup>15</sup>If you turn away from following him, he will again abandon them in the wilderness, and you will bring about the ruin of this entire people.”

Counter Proposal. <sup>16</sup>But they approached him and said: “We will only build sheepfolds here for our flocks and towns for our families; <sup>17</sup>but we ourselves will march as troops in the vanguard before the Israelites,<sup>l</sup> until we have led them to their destination. Meanwhile our families will remain in the fortified towns because of the land's inhabitants. <sup>18</sup>We will not return to our homes until all the Israelites have taken possession of their heritage. <sup>19m</sup> But we will not claim any heritage with them across the Jordan and beyond, because we have received a heritage for ourselves on the eastern side of the Jordan."

Agreement Reached. <sup>20*</sup> Moses said to them in reply: "If you do this—if you march as troops before the LORD into battle <sup>21</sup>and cross the Jordan in full force before the LORD until he has driven his enemies out of his way <sup>22</sup>and the land is subdued before the LORD, then you may return here, free from every obligation to the LORD and to Israel, and this land will be your possession before the LORD.<sup>n</sup> <sup>23</sup>But if you do not do this, you will have sinned against the LORD, and you can be sure that the consequences of your sin will overtake you. <sup>24</sup>Build the towns, then, for your families, and the folds for your flocks, but fulfill what you have promised."

<sup>25</sup>The Gadites and Reubenites answered Moses, "Your servants will do as my lord commands. <sup>26o</sup> While our wives and children, our livestock and other animals remain there in the towns of Gilead, <sup>27</sup>all your servants will go across as armed troops before the LORD to battle, just as my lord says."

<sup>28</sup>So Moses gave this command in their regard to Eleazar the priest, to Joshua, son of Nun, and to the heads of the ancestral houses of the Israelite tribes: <sup>29</sup>He said to them, "If all the Gadites and Reubenites cross the Jordan with you in full force before the LORD into battle, the land will be subdued before you, and you will give them Gilead as a possession. <sup>30</sup>But if they will not go across in force with you before the LORD, you will bring their wives and children and livestock across before you into Canaan, and they will possess a holding among you in the land of Canaan."

<sup>31</sup>To this the Gadites and Reubenites replied, "We will do what the LORD has ordered your servants. <sup>32</sup>We ourselves will go across in force before the LORD into the land of Canaan, but we will retain our hereditary property on this side of the Jordan."* <sup>33</sup>So Moses gave them—the Gadites and Reubenites, as well as half the tribe of Manasseh, son of Joseph—the kingdom of Sihon, king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og, king of Bashan, the land with its towns, and the districts of the surrounding towns.<sup>p</sup>

and sheepfolds. <sup>37</sup>The Reubenites rebuilt Heshbon, Elealeh, Kiriathaim, <sup>38</sup>Nebo, Baal-meon (names to be changed!),* and Sibmah. These towns, which they rebuilt, they called by their old names.

Other Conquests. <sup>39</sup>The descendants of Machir, son of Manasseh, went to Gilead and captured it, dispossessing the Amorites who were there. <sup>40</sup>(Moses gave Gilead to Machir,<sup>q</sup> son of Manasseh, and he settled there.) <sup>41</sup>Jair,<sup>r</sup> a descendant of Manasseh, went and captured their tent villages, and called them Havvoth-jair.* <sup>42</sup>Nobah went and captured Kenath with its dependencies and called it Nobah after his own name.

See RG 161–67

Stages of the Journey.<sup>1</sup>The following are the stages by which the Israelites went out by companies from the land of Egypt under the guidance of Moses and Aaron.<sup>*2</sup> Moses recorded the starting points of the various stages at the direction of the LORD. These are the stages according to their starting points:<sup>3</sup>They set out from Rameses in the first month, on the fifteenth day of the first month. On the day after the Passover the Israelites went forth in triumph, in view of all Egypt,<sup>4</sup>while the Egyptians buried those whom the LORD had struck down, every firstborn; on their gods, too, the LORD executed judgments.<sup>5</sup>

From Egypt to Sinai.<sup>5</sup>Setting out from Rameses, the Israelites camped at Succoth.<sup>6</sup>Setting out from Succoth, they camped at Etham near the edge of the wilderness.<sup>7</sup>Setting out from Etham, they turned back to Pihahiroth, which is opposite Baal-zephon, and they camped opposite Migdol.<sup>t 8</sup>Setting out from Pi-hahiroth, they crossed over through the sea into the wilderness,<sup>u</sup> and after they traveled a three days' journey in the wilderness of Etham, they camped at Marah.<sup>9</sup>Setting out from Marah, they came to Elim; at Elim there were twelve springs of water and seventy palm trees, and they camped there.<sup>v 10</sup>Setting out from Elim, they camped beside the Red Sea.<sup>11</sup>Setting out from the Red Sea, they camped in the wilderness of Sin.<sup>12</sup>Setting out from the wilderness of Sin, they camped at Dophkah.<sup>13</sup>Setting out from Dophkah, they camped at Alush.<sup>14</sup>Setting out from Alush, they camped at Rephidim, where there was no water for the people to drink.<sup>w 15</sup>Setting out from Rephidim, they camped in the wilderness of Sinai.<sup>x</sup>

<sup>40*</sup> When the Canaanite, the king of Arad, who ruled over the Negeb in the land of Canaan, heard that the Israelites were coming ....

Journey from the Wilderness to Canaan

Conquest and Division of Canaan. <sup>50</sup>The Lord spoke to Moses on the plains of Moab by the Jordan opposite Jericho: <sup>51</sup>Speak to the Israelites and say to them: When you go across the Jordan into the land of Canaan, <sup>52</sup>dispossess all the inhabitants of the land before you; destroy all their stone figures, destroy all their molten images, and demolish all their high places.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>53</sup>You will take possession of the land and settle in it, for I have given you the land to possess. <sup>54</sup>You will apportion the land among yourselves by lot, clan by clan, assigning a large heritage to a large clan and a small heritage to a small clan.<sup>c</sup> Wherever anyone's lot falls, there will his possession be; you will apportion these shares within your ancestral tribe.

<sup>55</sup>But if you do not dispossess the inhabitants of the land before you, those whom you allow to remain will become barbs in your eyes and thorns in your sides, and they will harass you in the land where you live,<sup>d</sup> <sup>56</sup>and I will treat you as I had intended to treat them.

CHAPTER 34

The Boundaries.<sup>1</sup>The LORD spoke to Moses: <sup>2</sup>Give the Israelites this order: When you enter the land of Canaan, this is the territory that shall fall to you as your heritage—the land of Canaan with its boundaries:

<sup>3</sup>Your southern boundary will be at the wilderness of Zin along the border of Edom;<sup>e</sup> on the east your southern boundary will begin at the end of the Salt Sea. <sup>4</sup>Then your boundary will turn south of the Akrabbim Pass and cross Zin. Terminating south of Kadesh-barnea, it extends to Hazar-addar and crosses to Azmon.<sup>f</sup> <sup>5</sup>Then the boundary will turn from Azmon to the Wadi of Egypt and terminate at the Sea.<sup>g</sup>

<sup>6</sup>For your western boundary you will have the Great Sea* with its coast; this will be your western boundary.

<sup>7</sup>This will be your boundary on the north: from the Great Sea you will draw a line to Mount Hor,* <sup>8</sup>and draw it from Mount Hor to Lebo-hamath, with the boundary terminating at Zedad. <sup>9</sup>Then the boundary extends to Ziphron and terminates at Hazar-enan. This will be your northern boundary.

<sup>10</sup>For your eastern boundary you will draw a line from Hazar-enan to Shepham. <sup>11</sup>From Shepham the boundary will go down to Riblah, east of Ain, and descending further, the boundary will strike the ridge on the east side of the Sea of Chinnereth;* <sup>12</sup>then the boundary will descend along the Jordan and terminate with the Salt Sea.

This will be your land, with the boundaries that surround it.

<sup>13</sup>Moses also gave this order to the Israelites: “This is the land, to be apportioned among you by lot, which the LORD has commanded to be given to the nine and a half tribes. <sup>14</sup>For the tribe of the Reubenites according to their ancestral houses, and the tribe of the Gadites according to their ancestral houses, as well as half of the tribe of Manasseh, have already received their heritage; <sup>15</sup>these two and a half tribes have received their heritage across the Jordan opposite Jericho, in the east, toward the sunrise.”

Supervisors of the Allotment. <sup>16</sup>The LORD spoke to Moses: <sup>17</sup>These are the names of the men who shall apportion the land among you: Eleazar the priest, and Joshua, son of Nun; <sup>18h</sup> and you will designate one leader from each of the tribes to apportion the land. <sup>19</sup>These are the names of the men:

from the tribe of Judah: Caleb, son of Jephunneh,

<sup>20</sup>from the tribe of the Simeonites: Samuel,
son of Ammihud;

<sup>21</sup>from the tribe of Benjamin: Elidad, son of Chislon;

<sup>22</sup>from the tribe of the Danites: a leader,
Bukki, son of Jogli;

<sup>23</sup>for the descendants of Joseph: from the tribe of the Manassites: a leader, Hanniel, son of Ephod; and

<sup>24</sup>from the tribe of the Ephraimites: a leader, Kemuel, son of Shiphtan;

<sup>25</sup>from the tribe of the Zebulunites: a leader, Elizaphan, son of Parnach;

<sup>26</sup>from the tribe of the Issacharites: a leader, Paltiel, son of Azzan;

<sup>27</sup>from the tribe of the Asherites: a leader,
Ahihud, son of Shelomi;

<sup>28</sup>from the tribe of the Naphtalites: a leader, Pedahel, son of Ammihud.

<sup>29</sup>These are the ones whom the LORD commanded to apportion to the Israelites their heritage in the land of Canaan.

CHAPTER 35

See RG 161–67

Cities for the Levites. <sup>1</sup>The LORD spoke to Moses on the plains of Moab by the Jordan opposite Jericho: <sup>2i</sup> Command the Israelites out of the heritage they possess to give the Levites cities to dwell in; you will also give the Levites the pasture lands around the cities. <sup>3</sup>The cities will be for them to dwell in, and the pasture lands will be for their cattle, their flocks, and all their other animals. <sup>4</sup>The pasture lands of the cities to be assigned the Levites shall extend a thousand cubits out from the city walls in every direction. <sup>5</sup>You will measure out two thousand cubits outside the city along the east side, two thousand cubits along the south side, two thousand cubits along the west side, and two thousand cubits along the north side, with the city lying in the center. These will be the pasture lands of their cities.

<sup>6j</sup> Now these are the cities you will give to the Levites: the six cities of asylum which you must establish for the homicide to run to, and in addition forty-two other cities— <sup>7</sup>a total of forty-eight cities with their pasture lands which you will assign to the Levites. <sup>8*</sup> In assigning the cities from what the Israelites possess, take more from a larger group and fewer from a smaller one, so that each will cede cities to the Levites in proportion to the heritage which it receives.

Cities of Asylum. <sup>9k</sup> The LORD spoke to Moses: <sup>10</sup>Speak to the Israelites and say to them: When you go across the Jordan into the land of Canaan, <sup>11</sup>select for yourselves cities to serve as cities of asylum, where a homicide who has killed someone inadvertently may flee. <sup>12</sup>These cities will serve you as places of asylum from the avenger of blood,* so that a homicide will not be put to death until tried before the community. <sup>13</sup>As for the cities you assign, you will have six cities of asylum: <sup>14</sup>you will designate three cities beyond the Jordan, and you will designate three cities in the land of Canaan. These will be cities of asylum. <sup>15</sup>These six cities will serve as places of asylum for the Israelites, and for the resident or transient aliens among them, so that anyone who has killed a person inadvertently may flee there.

Murder and Manslaughter. <sup>16*</sup> If someone strikes another with an iron instrument and causes death, that person is a murderer, and the murderer must be put to death. <sup>17</sup><sup>l</sup> If someone strikes another with a death-dealing stone in the hand and death results, that person is a murderer, and the murderer must be put to death. <sup>18</sup>Or if someone strikes another with a death-dealing club in the hand and death results, that person is a murderer, and the murderer must be put to death. <sup>19</sup>The avenger of blood is the one who will kill the murderer, putting the individual to death on sight.

<sup>20</sup>If someone pushes another out of hatred, or throws something from an ambush, and death results,<sup>m</sup> <sup>21</sup>or strikes another with the hand out of enmity and death results, the assailant must be put to death as a murderer. The avenger of blood will kill the murderer on sight.

<sup>22n</sup> However, if someone pushes another without malice aforethought, or without lying in ambush throws some object at another, <sup>23</sup>or without seeing drops upon another some death-dealing stone and death results, although there was neither enmity nor malice— <sup>24</sup>then the community will judge between the assailant and the avenger of blood in accordance with these norms. <sup>25</sup>The community will deliver the homicide from the avenger of blood and the community will return the homicide to the city of asylum where the latter had fled;<sup>o</sup> and the individual will stay there until the death of the high priest who has been anointed with sacred oil. <sup>26</sup>If the homicide leaves at all the bounds of the city of asylum to which flight had been made, <sup>27</sup>and is found by the avenger of blood beyond the bounds of the city of asylum, and the avenger of blood kills the homicide, the avenger incurs no bloodguilt; <sup>28</sup>for the homicide was required to stay in the city of asylum until the death of the high priest. Only after the death of the high priest may the homicide return to the land of the homicide's possession.

<sup>29</sup>This is the statute for you throughout all your generations, wherever you live, for rendering judgment.

Judgment. <sup>30</sup>Whenever someone kills another, the evidence of witnesses is required to kill the murderer.<sup>p</sup> A single witness does not suffice for putting a person to death.

No Indemnity. <sup>31</sup>You will not accept compensation in place of the life of a murderer who deserves to die, but that person must be put to death. <sup>32</sup>Nor will you accept compensation to allow one who has fled to a city of asylum to return to live in the land before the death of the high priest. <sup>33</sup>You will not pollute the land where you live. For bloodshed pollutes the land, and the land can have no expiation for the blood shed on it except through the blood of the one who shed it. <sup>34</sup>Do not defile the land in which you live and in the midst of which I dwell;<sup>q</sup> for I the LORD dwell in the midst of the Israelites.

CHAPTER 36

See RG 161–67

Inheritance of Daughters.<sup>1</sup>The heads of the ancestral houses in a clan of the descendants of Gilead, son of Machir, son of Manasseh—one of the Josephite clans—came up and spoke before Moses and Eleazar the priest and before the leaders who were the heads of the ancestral houses of the Israelites. <sup>2</sup>They said: “The LORD commanded my lord to apportion the land by lot for a heritage among the Israelites;<sup>r</sup> and my lord was commanded by the LORD to give the heritage of Zelophehad our kinsman to his daughters. <sup>3</sup>But if they marry into one of the other Israelite tribes, their heritage will be withdrawn from our ancestral heritage and will be added to that of the tribe into which they marry; thus the heritage that fell to us by lot will be diminished. <sup>4</sup>When the Israelites celebrate the jubilee year,* the heritage of these women will be added to that of the tribe into which they marry and their heritage will be withdrawn from that of our ancestral tribe.”

Conclusion. <sup>13</sup>These are the commandments and decisions which the LORD commanded the Israelites through Moses, on the plains of Moab beside the Jordan opposite Jericho.

1:2 All Israel was divided into tribes, each tribe into clans, and each clan into ancestral houses.

1:47 The Levites were not enrolled in this census, which was principally for military purposes, but a separate census was made of them. Cf. 3:15–16, 39.

1:51 Comes near: here and in 3:10, 38; 17:5; 18:4, 7 the Hebrew word rendered “comes near” is very nearly a technical term for someone who intrudes upon or violates a space set apart as holy and for which they have not been qualified by priesthood.

2:3–31 A similar arrangement of the tribes around the central sanctuary in the ideal Israel is given in Ez 48.

3:25–26 The Gershonites had two wagons for transporting these things; cf. 7:7. For a description of the tabernacle, see Ex 26:1–6; the tent, Ex 26:7–13; its covering, Ex 26:14; the curtain at the entrance, Ex 26:36; the hangings of the court, Ex 27:9–15; the curtain at the entrance of the court, Ex 27:16; the ropes of the tabernacle, Ex 35:18.

3:31 The Kohathites had to carry these sacred objects on their shoulders; cf. 7:9. For a description of the ark, see Ex 25:10–22; the table, Ex 25:23–30; the menorah, Ex 25:31–40; the altars, Ex 27:1–8; 30:1–10.

3:36–37 The Merarites had four wagons for transporting this heavy material; cf. 7:8. For a description of the boards, bars, etc., of the tabernacle, see Ex 26:15–30; the columns, pedestals, etc., of the court, Ex 27:9–19.

4:3 Thirty: according to other passages the Levites began to serve when they were twenty-five (8:24) or even only twenty years old (1 Chr 23:24, 27; 2 Chr 31:17; Ezr 3:8; but cf. 1 Chr 23:3).

4:5 The screening curtain: the veil between the inner and the outer rooms of the sanctuary. Cf. Ex 26:31–33.

4:11 The golden altar: the altar of incense. Cf. Ex 300:1–6.

4:13 The altar: the bronze altar for animal sacrifices. Cf. Ex 27:1–8.

4:14 Forks: used in turning over the sacrificed animal on the fire of the altar. Basins: to receive the sacrificial blood; cf. Zec 9:15.

5:2 For the laws regarding victims of skin disease, see Lv 13–14; those suffering from a discharge, Lv 15; those unclean by contact with a corpse, Nm 19:11–22; Lv 21:1–4.

5:5–10 The basic law on unjust possession is given in Lv 5:14–26. The new item here concerns the case where the injured party has died and left no heirs, in which case the restitution must be made to the priest.

5:8 Next of kin: Hebrew go'el (“redeemer”), a technical term denoting the nearest relative, upon whom devolved the obligation of “redeeming” the family property, in order to keep it within the family. Cf. Lv 25:25; Ru 4:1–6.

5:15 Ephah: see note on Is 5:10.

5:17 Holy water: water from the basin that stood in the court of the tabernacle.

5:21 Curse and malediction: the woman’s name would be used in curses and oaths to invoke a similar misfortune on another person or on oneself. Cf. Is 65:15; Jer 29:22.

5:22 Amen: a Hebrew word meaning “certainly, truly,” used to give assent to a statement, a curse, a blessing, a prayer, or the like, in the sense of “so be it.”

5:31 Free from punishment: the point is that a husband will not suffer a harmful consequence if his accusation is not borne out by the ordeal; if he’s right, his wife’s punishment vindicates him. For her part, the woman (if guilty) must bear her punishment.

6:2–21 Nazirite: from the Hebrew word nazir, meaning “set apart as sacred, dedicated, vowed.” The nazirite vow could be either for a limited period or for life. Those bound by this vow had to abstain from all the products of the grapevine, from cutting or shaving their hair, and from contact with a corpse. They were regarded as men and women of God like the prophets; cf. Am 2:11–12. Examples of lifelong nazirites were Samson (Jgs 13:4–5, 7; 16:17), Samuel (1 Sm 1:11), and John the Baptist (Lk 1:15). At the time of Jesus the practice of taking the nazirite vow for a limited period seems to have been quite common, even among the early Christians; cf. Acts 18:18; 21:23–24, 26.

6:26 Peace: the Hebrew word Shalom includes the idea of happiness, good health, prosperity, friendship, and general well-being. To use this term as a greeting was to pray for all these things upon the one greeted.

7:12–88 The repetitious account of the same offerings brought by each of the twelve tribal leaders and the summary of them are characteristic of an official registration.

8:2 Menorah: a seven-branched lampstand; see Ex 25:31–40; 37:17–24.

8:4 Bowls: lit., “blossom,” a designation for the blossomshaped cups holding the lamps of the menorah.

8:6 Cleanse them: in the language of the Pentateuch only the priests were “consecrated,” that is, made sacred or set aside for the Lord, in an elaborate ceremony described in Ex 29 and in this chapter. The Levites were “cleansed,” that is, made ritually clean for their special work.

8:21 Purified themselves: by having the “water of purification” sprinkled on them as prescribed in v. 7.

9:14 An alien: compare this passage with the Passover legislation in Ex 12:48, where circumcision is required of the alien who would celebrate the feast.

9:15 The cloud: already mentioned at the departure from Egypt; cf. Ex 13:21–22.

10:10 When you rejoice: cf. Dt 16:14. Festivals: the great annual feasts of the Passover, Pentecost and Booths described in Lv 23; Nm 28–29.

10:29–32 Hobab: one of three names for the father-in-law of Moses (see Ex 2:18; 4:18; 18:6; Jgs 4:11). Here perhaps Hobab’s initial refusal indicates he wished to be coaxed before granting the favor. From Jgs 1:16 it seems probable that he did accede to Moses’ request. However, Ex 18:27 suggests Moses’ father-in-law returned to his own land. Indeed, to the extent Nm 10:29–32 appears to repeat Ex 18:27, it may indicate a resumption of the narrative of Israel’s march through the wilderness after the “digression” formed by the Israelite sojourn at Sinai, Ex 19:1–Nm 10:28.

10:33 The mountain of the LORD: Sinai (Horeb), elsewhere always called “the mountain of God.”

11:3 Taberah: means “the burning.”

11:7 Coriander seed: see note on Ex 16:31. Bdellium: a transparent, amber-colored gum resin, which is also mentioned in Gn 2:12.

11:25 They prophesied: in the sense, not of foretelling the future, but of speaking in enraptured enthusiasm. Such manifestations are mentioned in the early days of Hebrew prophecy (1 Sm 10:10–12; 19:20–21; Jl 3:1) and in the first years of the Church (Acts 2:6–11, 17; 19:6; 1 Cor 12–14).

11:31 The heaps of quail lying upon the ground all around the Israelites’ camp suggest the ambiguity of God’s response to the people’s lament for meat in v. 4 and foreshadow the plague which God will now bring upon Israel (v. 33). Their request had been nothing less than a rejection of what God has done for them (v. 20).

11:32 Homers: see note on Is 5:10. They spread them out: to cure by drying.

11:34 Kibroth-hattaavah: means “graves of greed.”

12:1 Cushite woman: apparently Zipporah, the Midianite, is meant; cf. Ex 2:21.

12:2 The apparent reason for Miriam’s and Aaron’s quarrel with their brother Moses was jealousy of his authority; his Cushite wife served only as an occasion for the dispute.

12:7 Worthy of trust: the text is open to a variety of interpretations. Thus, the word of Moses may be relied upon by Israel because God speaks to him directly; or, Moses alone is worthy of God’s trust in God’s household (heavenly or earthly). An alternative translation, however, is: “with all my house he is entrusted.”

12:10 Stricken with a scaly infection, white as snow: see note on Lv 13:1–14:47. The point of the simile lies either in the flakiness or the whiteness of snow.

13:16 Joshua: in Hebrew, “Jehoshua,” which was later modified to “Jeshua,” the Hebrew name for “Jesus.” Hoshea and Joshua are variants of one original name meaning “the LORD saves.” Cf. Mt 1:21.

13:21 The wilderness of Zin: north of Paran and southwest of the Dead Sea. It is quite distinct from “the wilderness of Sin” near the border of Egypt (Ex 16:1; 17:1; Nm 33:11). Lebo-hamath: a town near Riblah (Jer 39:5–6) at the southern border of Hamath, an independent kingdom in southern Syria. David’s conquests extended as far as Hamath (2 Sm 8:9–11), and Lebo-hamath thus formed the northern border of the ideal extent of Israel’s possessions (Nm 34:7–9; Ez 47:15; 48:1). This may suggest that this verse was inserted precisely to extend the scope of the reconnaissance; cf. Dt 1:24.

13:22, 28 Anakim: an aboriginal race in southern Palestine, largely absorbed by the Canaanites. Either because of their tall stature or because of the massive stone structures left by them, the Israelites regarded them as giants.

13:23 Eshcol: means “cluster.”

13:33 Nephilim: i.e., “fallen ones” (in the Septuagint, “giants”), a reference to fallen heroes of old. Cf. Gn 6:4.

14:9 They are but food for us: lit., “for they are our bread.” “Bread” (Heb. lechem) is here used in the sense of “prey, spoils” to be consumed by an invader. This is the answer to the pessimistic report that this land “consumes its inhabitants” (13:32).

14:25 The valleys: the low-lying plains in the Negeb and along the seacoast and in the Jordan depression, as well as the higher valleys in the mountains farther north: cf. v. 45.

14:28–29 God punished the grumblers by giving them their wish; cf. v. 2. Their lack of trust in God is cited in 1 Cor 10:10 and Heb 3:12–18 as a warning for Christians.

14:45 Hormah: one of the Canaanite royal cities in southern Judah, according to the tradition attested in Jos 12:14, although Nm 21:1–3 gives it as the new name for the city of Arad when it was destroyed by Israel. According to the list of conquered cities preserved in Jgs 1, the earlier name for the city of Hormah was Zephath. The precise location is unknown.

15:2–16 These laws on sacrifice are complementary to those of Lv 1–3. Since the food of the Israelites consisted not only of meat but also of bread, oil and wine, they offered flour, wine and oil in sacrifice to the Lord besides the animal oblations.

15:4 Measure: the word, supplied from the context, does not appear in the Hebrew (as also in vv. 6, 9; 28:9, 12, 20, 28; 29:3, 9, 14). Probably the ephah (which is named in 5:15; 28:5) is intended. Hin: see note on Ez 45:24.

15:20 Dough: the meaning of the Hebrew term is uncertain; some render, “baking utensils.” This word is used elsewhere only in Ez 44:30 and Neh 10:33; a related Hebrew word is used in Lv 2:14.

15:22–31 See note on Lv 4:2. Although Lv 4–5 and Nm 15:22–31 both concern inadvertent sins, the emphasis here, as opposed to Lv 4–5, is on the failure of the community to perform “positive commands” rather than on doing what is prohibited.

15:34 No clear decision: either it was not clear that gathering wood constituted “work” and as such a willful violation of the sabbath and a capital offense; or they did not yet know how the death penalty was to be inflicted.

15:38 Tassels: at the time of Jesus these tassels were worn by all pious Jews, including Jesus (Mt 9:20–21; Mk 6:56); some Pharisees wore very large ones in a display of their zeal for the law (Mt 23:5).

16:1–3 The evidence seems to show that accounts of two, if not more, distinct rebellions have been combined in this chapter. The most obvious are the rebellions of Korah and his faction (Nm 27:3) and of Dathan and Abiram (Dt 11:6); cf. Ps 106. The present account combines both events into one narrative; but even here it is rather easy to separate the two. The rebellion of the Reubenites, Dathan and Abiram, was more political in character, against Moses alone as the civil leader (cf. v. 13); these rebels were punished by being swallowed alive in an earthquake. The rebellion of Korah was more religious in character, directed primarily against the religious leadership of Aaron (though in vv. 19–22 it is Korah and the whole community against both Moses and Aaron). About two hundred and fifty malcontents joined Korah's faction, and they are punished by fire. The parts of the present section which refer to the rebellion of Dathan and Abiram are vv. 12–15 and vv. 25–34 of chap. 16; the rest of chap. 16 and all of chap. 17 chiefly concern the rebellion of Korah.

16:1 The Reubenites ... son of Peleth: some suggest on the basis of 26:5, 8 and Gn 46:9 reading instead of the traditional Hebrew text: "son of Levi, and Dathan and Abiram, sons of Eliab, son of Pallu, son of Reuben."

16:12 We will not go: to appear before Moses' "tribunal."

16:14 Gouge out our eyes: blind us to the real state of affairs.

16:24 Withdraw from the area around the tent: the word for "tent," mishkan, here and in v. 27, is otherwise used in the singular only for the tent of meeting, suggesting possibly the erection of a rival sanctuary by the rebels. Note further, as an indication of the fact that various accounts of rebellion have been fused here, that in v. 19 the entire community had been assembled by Korah at the tent of meeting.

16:25 Since Dathan and Abiram had refused to go to Moses (vv. 12–14), he, with the elders as witnesses, was obliged to go to their tents.

16:30 Sheol: see note on Ps 6:6.

16:32 And all of Korah's people: the implication of this secondary addition to the text is, on the one hand, that Korah met his death elsewhere, presumably with the two hundred and fifty offering incense (vv. 16–17, 35); or, on the other hand, he died along with Dathan and Abiram in the splitting of the earth.

17:3 Whatever was brought into intimate contact with something holy shared in its holiness. See note on 19:20.

17:17 The staff was not merely an article of practical use, but also a symbol of authority; cf. Gn 49:10; Nm 24:17; Jer 48:17. Therefore, the staff of a leader of a tribe was considered the emblem of the tribe; in fact, certain Hebrew words such as matteh, the word for "staff" here, also mean "tribe." Perhaps for this reason, to avoid confusion, the author here uses the term bet'ab, "ancestral house," for "tribe" instead of one of the ordinary words for "tribe."

17:18 Levi's staff: it is not clear whether this is considered as one of the twelve mentioned in the preceding verse, or as a thirteenth staff. Sometimes Levi is reckoned as one of the twelve tribes (e.g., Dt 27:12–13), but more often the number twelve is arrived at by counting the two sub-tribes of Joseph, i.e., Ephraim and Manasseh, as distinct tribes. In this passage also it seems probable that the tribe of Levi is considered apart from the other twelve tribes.

17:27–28 The people's distress here echoes their panic in 16:34, and may be heightened further by the death of the two hundred and fifty leaders offering incense in 16:35.

18:1–3 This law, which kept unqualified persons from contact with holy things, is in response to the Israelites' cry in 17:28. It is followed by other laws concerning priests and Levites.

18:1 With you: not only in the present but also those of his house in the future.

18:2 Be joined to you: in Hebrew a pun on the popular etymology of the name "Levi." Cf. Gn 29:34.

18:4 Unauthorized person: here, "one who is not a Levite"; in v. 7, "one who is not a priest."

18:7 Veil: the outer veil, or "curtain," is probably meant.

18:8–10 Two classes of offerings are here distinguished: the most holy offering, which only the male members of the priestly families could eat (vv. 8–10), and the other offerings, which the women of the priestly families could eat (vv. 11–19).

18:10 In a most holy place: in the court of the tabernacle, according to Lv 6:9, 19.

18:11 Elevated offering: this included the brisket and right thigh (v. 18), the shoulder of the peace offering (Lv 7:30–34), and portions of the nazirite sacrifice (Nm 6:19–20). With you: see note on v. 1. Aaron had no daughters; see also v. 19.

18:14 Under the ban: in Hebrew, herem, which means here “set aside from profane use and made sacred to the Lord.” Cf. Lv 27:21, 28.

18:19 A covenant of salt: cf. 2 Chr 13:5. The reference may perhaps be to the preservative power of salt (cf. Mt 5:13); but more likely the phrase refers to the custom of eating salt together to render a contract unbreakable. See note on Lv 2:13.

18:20 The priests and Levites were forbidden to own hereditary land such as the other Israelites possessed; therefore in the allotment of the land (chap. 34) they did not receive any portion of it. Certain cities, however, were assigned to them for their residence; cf. 35:1–8.

18:23 Incur the penalty for the Israelites’ sin: the Levites are responsible for protecting the sanctuary from illegitimate encroachment and in this sense pay the penalty for the Israelites’ iniquity. This responds further to the fears of the people expressed in 17:27–28.

19:3 Outside the camp: several early Christian writers saw in this a prefiguring of the sacrificial death of Jesus outside the walls of Jerusalem; cf. Jn 19:20; Heb 13:12; in the purifying water, into which the ashes of the red heifer were put, they saw a type of the water of Baptism.

19:4 Toward the front of the tent of meeting: since the tabernacle faced the east (Ex 26:15–30), the killing of the heifer would take place east of the camp; in later times it was done on the Mount of Olives, east of the Temple.

19:20 Ritual uncleanness is, as it were, contagious; so also sacredness; see note on 17:3.

20:1–29 In this chapter the deaths of the three wilderness leaders are either intimated or explicitly reported: Miriam, v. 1; Moses, v. 12; Aaron, vv. 12, 22–29.

20:1 The wilderness of Zin: a barren region with a few good oases, southwest of the Dead Sea. See note on 13:21. The first month: we would expect the mention also of the day and of the year (after the exodus) when this took place; cf. similar dates in Ex 1:1; 10:11; 33:38; Dt 1:3. Here the full date is left unspecified. According to one chronology, the Israelites arrived in Kadesh in the third year after the exodus (cf. Dt 1:46). But the itinerary in chap. 33 would suggest the fortieth year, the year in which Aaron died (33:38).

20:11 Twice: perhaps because he did not have sufficient faith to work the wonder with the first blow. Cf. v. 12.

20:12–13 What lay behind Moses and Aaron’s lack of confidence is not made explicit in the text. Holiness: an allusion to the name of the place, Kadesh, which means “holy, sanctified, sacred.” Meribah means “contention.” Cf. Ex 17:7.

20:14 Your brother Israel: according to biblical tradition, the Edomites were descended from Esau, the brother of Jacob. Their country, to the southeast of the Dead Sea, was also known as Seir; cf. Gn 25:24–26; 36:1, 8–9.

20:17 The King’s Highway: an important highway, running north and south along the plateau east of the Dead Sea. In ancient times it was much used by caravans and armies; later it was improved by the Romans, and large stretches of it are still clearly recognizable.

20:22 Mount Hor: not definitively identified, but probably to be sought in the vicinity of Kadesh. According to Dt 10:6, Aaron died at Moserah (cf. “Moseroth” in Nm 33:30–31), which is apparently the name of the region in which Mount Hor is situated.

21:1–3 The account of this episode seems to be a later insertion here, since logically v. 4 belongs immediately after 20:29. Perhaps this is the same event as that mentioned in Jgs 1:16–17.

21:3 Hormah: related to the Hebrew word herem, meaning “put under the ban.” See notes on 14:45; 18:14.

21:5 This wretched food: apparently the manna is meant.

21:6 Seraph: the Hebrew name for a certain species of venomous snake; etymologically the word might signify “the fiery one.” Compare the winged throne guardians in Is 6:2, 6; see also Is 14:29; 30:6.

21:8 Everyone who has been bitten will look at it and recover: in the Gospel of John this scene is regarded as a type for the crucifixion of Jesus (Jn 3:14–15).

21:9 King Hezekiah, in his efforts to reform Israelite worship, “smashed the bronze serpent Moses had made” (2 Kgs 18:4).

21:11 Iye-abarim: probably means “the ruins in the Abarim (Mountains).” See note on 27:12.

21:14 The “Book of the Wars of the Lord”: an ancient collection of Israelite songs, now lost. Waheb in Suphah: since neither place is mentioned elsewhere, it is uncertain whether these Hebrew words are to be considered as place names; some Hebrew words, now lost, must have preceded this phrase.

21:15 Ar: a city or district in Moab, located on the Arnon; see v. 28; Dt 2:18.

21:16 Beer: “a well,” here used as a place name.

21:20 Jeshimon: “the wasteland”; in 1 Sm 23:19, 24 and 26:1, 3, this is the wilderness of Judah on the western side of the Dead Sea, but here and in Nm 23:28, it seems to refer to the southern end of the Jordan valley where Beth-jeshimoth was situated.

21:29 Chemosh: the chief god of the Moabites, mentioned in the famous inscription of Mesha, king of Moab, who ruled at the same time as the Omrides in Israel. Cf. 1 Kgs 11:7, 33; 2 Kgs 23:13; Jer 48:7, 13.

22:1 The plains of Moab: the lowlands to the northeast of the Dead Sea, between the Jordan and the foothills below Mount Nebo. Here the Israelites remained until they crossed the Jordan, according to Jos 1–4. Jericho lay to the west of the Jordan.

22:5 In the land of the Ammonites: the translation rests on a slight emendation of the traditional Hebrew text in accordance with the tradition represented by the Vulgate. While Pethor remains unidentified, this verse supports an identification of Balaam’s homeland in the Transjordan (cf. the Deir ‘Alla Inscriptions), over against other traditions in the text which connect Balaam with Syria (23:7; Dt 23:5).

22:6 Curse this people for me: Balak believed that Balaam, known in the tradition as a diviner (cf. Jos 13:22), could utter a curse upon Israel which would come to pass.

22:7 Experts in divination: lit., “divination was in their hand,” i.e., “in their possession”; cf. Ezr 7:25.

22:21 Donkey: technically a she-donkey; Heb. aton.

22:22 God’s anger flared up: God’s apparent change of mind became a source of much speculation in the tradition. So, for example, God was angry, not merely because Balaam was going to Balak, for he had God’s permission for the journey (v. 20), but perhaps because he was tempted by greed to curse Israel against God’s command (cf. 2 Pt 2:15; Jude 11; compare Nm 22:32). Adversary: Heb. satan; see also v. 32; cf. 1 Sm 29:4; 2 Sm 19:22; 1 Kgs 11; Jb 1–2; Ps 109:6; Zec 3:1–2; 1 Chr 21:1.

23:7 Aram: the ancient name of the region later known as Syria. The mountains of Qedem: Qedem is the name for a region in northern Syria. Qedem also means “eastern.” Perhaps this designates the low ranges in the Syrian desert. The “mountains of old” is also a possible translation.

23:9 A people that lives apart: that is, “securely”; cf. Dt 33:28.

23:10 The dust of Jacob ... Israel’s dust-cloud: the Israelites will be as numerous as the dust kicked up by Israel in its march through the wilderness.

23:13 To another place: Balak thought that if Balaam would view Israel from a different site, he could deliver a different kind of omen.

23:21 Misfortune ... misery: Balaam states that he is unable to see any evils for Israel.

23:22 A wild ox’s horns: Israel possesses the strength of a wild ox because of God’s presence among them. Compare the claim by the psalmist, the Lord is “my rock . . . my saving horn” (Ps 18:3).

24:4 In rapture: lit., “falling,” therefore possibly “in a trance.” However, this interpretation is uncertain.

24:7 Agag: during Saul's reign, king of Amalek (1 Sm 15:8), fierce enemy of Israel during the wilderness period; see v. 20 (Ex 17:8–16).

24:10 Balak clapped his hands: a gesture suggesting contempt or derision, apparently made in anger (cf. Jb 27:23; Lam 2:15).

24:17 A star ... a scepter: some early Christian writers, as well as rabbinic interpreters, understood this prophecy in messianic terms. So, for example, Rabbi Akiba designates Bar Kosiba the messiah in the early second century a.d. by calling him Bar Kokhba, i.e., son of the star, alluding to this passage. Although this text is not referred to anywhere in the New Testament, in a Christian messianic interpretation the star would refer to Jesus, as also the scepter from Israel; cf. Is 11:1. But it is doubtful whether this passage is to be connected with the “star of the Magi” in Mt 2:1–12. The brows of Moab, and the skull of all the Sethites: under the figure of a human being, Moab is specified as the object of conquest by a future leader of Israel. The personification of peoples or toponyms is common enough in the Old Testament; see, e.g., Hos 11:1; Ps 98:8. In Jer 48:45, which paraphrases the latter part of our verse, Moab is depicted as someone whose boasting warrants its ruin. In view of the use of Heb. pe'ah (here “brows”) in Nm 34:3 to indicate a boundary, some see in the “brows” of Moab and the “skull” of the Sethites a representation of features of Moab's topography, i.e., the borderlands and the interior plateau. The Sethites: cf. Gn 4:25; here probably a general designation for nomadic/tribal groups on the borders of Palestine, unless they are to be identified with the Shutu mentioned in Execration texts of the early second millennium b.c. and the fourteenth century Amarna tablets from Egypt; however, the Shutu are not attested in Moab. On the basis of Gn 4:25 and Gn 25, one might also think of a reference to humanity in general.

24:20 First: lit., “the beginning.” In the Bible, Amalek is a people indigenous to Palestine and therefore considered as of great antiquity. There is a deliberate contrast here between the words “first” and “end.”

24:21 The Kenites lived in high strongholds in the mountains of southern Palestine and the Sinai Peninsula, and were skilled in working the various metals found in their territory. Their name is connected, at least by popular etymology, with the Hebrew word for “smith”; of similar sound to qayin, i.e., “Kain” or “smith,” is the Hebrew word for “nest,” qen—hence the play on words in the present passage.

24:22 Asshur: the mention of Asshur, i.e., Assyria, is not likely before the ninth or eighth centuries b.c.

24:23–24 Upon seeing: this phrase, lacking the Hebrew text, is found in the Septuagint, but without “the Ishmaelites” designated as the subject of the oracle. The Hebrew text of the oracle itself shows considerable disarray; the translation therefore relies on reconstruction of the putative original and is quite uncertain.

25:1 Shittim: the full name was Abel-shittim, a locality at the foot of the mountains in the northeastern corner of the plains of Moab (33:49). Prostituting themselves: the application to men of such traditional language for apostasy clearly suggests apostasy was taken to be an inevitable consequence of intermarriage with the Midianite women.

25:4 Publicly execute them: the same phrase occurs in 2 Sm 21:6–14, where the context shows that at least a part of the penalty consisted in being denied honorable burial. In both passages, dismemberment or impalement (perhaps subsequent to the actual execution) as a punishment for the breaking of covenant pledges, is a possible interpretation of the Hebrew phrase.

25:5 Thereby Moses apparently alters the Lord's command to execute all the leaders.

25:6 Midianite woman: according to 22:4, 7, the Midianites were allied with the Moabites in opposing Israel, while 31:16 claims that Balaam had induced the Midianite women to lure the Israelites away from the Lord. They were weeping: on account of the plague that had struck them; cf. v. 8.

25:11 My jealousy: God's desire to maintain an exclusive hold on the allegiance of the Israelites.

25:12 Covenant of peace: by means of this covenant between God and Phinehas, Phinehas can expect God's protection, especially from any threat of reprisal for his action; cf. Is 54:10; Ez 34:25;

37:26.

25:14–15 The noble lineage of the slain couple is mentioned in order to stress the courage of Phinehas in punishing them. The zeal of Phinehas became proverbial; cf. Ps 106:30; Sir 45:23; 1 Mc 2:26, 54.

25:16–18 The account of the execution of this command is given in 31:1–18.

26:4 This introduction to the census seems to contradict vv. 64–65 by including those who came out of Egypt.

26:12 Nemuel: so also in 1 Chr 4:24. In Gn 46:10 and Ex 6:15, a son of Simeon with the same position in the genealogy bears the name “Jemuel”; it is uncertain which form is correct. See above, v. 9, where the name “Nemuel” occurs for a person descended from Pallu. Some speculate this name was inserted from v. 12 to provide a continuing line for Pallu.

26:52–56 The division of Canaan among the various tribes and clans and families was determined not only by the size of each group but also by lot. Perhaps the lots determined the respective locality of each tribal land and the section reserved for each clan, while the relative size of the allotted locality and section depended on the numerical strength of each group. The Israelites considered the outcome of the drawing of lots as an expression of God’s will; cf. Lv 16:8–10; Jos 14:2; 15:1; etc.; Acts 1:23–26.

26:58 Compare 3:18–20 for a different listing.

27:3 He did not join . . . against the Lord: had he done so, he and his heirs could have been deprived of a portion in the promised land.

27:5–11 The purpose of this law, as also that of the related laws in 36:2–10 (marriage within the same tribe), Dt 25:5–10 (levirate marriage), and Lv 25:10 (return of property in the jubilee year), was to keep the landed property within the proper domain of each tribe.

27:12 The Abarim range: the mountains on the eastern side of the Dead Sea. The peak of this chain is Mount Nebo where Moses views the promised land before he dies (Dt 32:49).

27:16 The God of the spirits of all humanity: the sense is that God knows the character and abilities of all people and therefore knows best whom to appoint (cf. Jgs 6:34; 11:29; 1 Sm 16:13); see the same phrase in Nm 16:22, where “spirit” evidently means the life principle.

27:18 A man of spirit: lit., “a man in whom there is spirit,” that is, probably one who is endowed with a courageous spirit (Jos 2:11); compare Gn 41:38; Dt 34:9.

27:21 The Urim: certain sacred objects which Israelite priests employed to discern the divine will, probably by obtaining a positive or negative answer to a given question. The full expression was “the Urim and Thummim”; cf. Ex 28:30; Lv 8:8; Dt 33:8; Ezr 2:63; Neh 7:65. Joshua ordinarily did not receive direct revelations from God as Moses had received them.

28:3 The regular burnt offering: “the tamid burnt offering,” the technical term for the daily sacrifice. The lambs—as well as the goats for the purification offering (vv. 15, 22, 30)—are all specified as males.

28:5 Oil of crushed olives: this oil, probably made in a mortar, was purer and more expensive than oil extracted in the olive press.

28:7 In the sanctuary: i.e., the tent of meeting. But according to Sir 50:15, the libation was poured at the base of the outer altar.

28:11 On your new moons: beginning on the evening when the crescent of the new moon first appeared. The beginning of the month is reckoned according to the new moon.

28:16 The fourteenth day: toward evening at the end of this day; cf. Ex 12:6, 18.

28:18 Heavy work: apparently, some sorts of activity are permitted on a day such as this, whereas “any work” is prohibited by 29:7 on the Day of Atonement. See note on Lv 23:3.

28:26 The day of first fruits: a unique term for this feast, which is usually called “the feast of Weeks”; it was celebrated as a thanksgiving for the wheat harvest seven weeks after the barley harvest

(Passover). In the time of Jesus it was commonly known by the Greek word “Pentecost,” that is, “fiftieth” (day after the Passover); see note on Lv 23:16–21.

29:1 In the seventh month on the first day: (about September-October) now the Jewish New Year’s Day. In the older calendar the year began with the first of Nisan (March-April), which is still known as the first month; cf. Ex 12:2.

29:7 The tenth day of this seventh month: the Day of Atonement. Humble yourselves: that is, with fasting.

29:11 The purification offering for purging: the bull prescribed in Lv 16:11–12 for the purging of the tent sanctuary.

29:12 This feast of Booths (Tabernacles or Sukkot) celebrating the vintage harvest was the most popular of all and therefore had the most elaborate ritual. See note on Lv 23:34.

29:13 Thirteen bulls: the number of bulls sacrificed before the octave day was seventy, arranged on a descending scale so that the number on the seventh day was the sacred number seven.

29:35 A public assembly: the Hebrew word is the technical term for the closing celebration of the three major feasts of the Passover, Pentecost and Booths, or of other special feasts that lasted for a week. Cf. Lv 23:36; Dt 16:8; 2 Chr 7:9; Neh 8:18.

30:3 A vow ... a pledge: here the former signifies the promise to dedicate either a person, an animal, or a thing or their equivalent to the sanctuary upon the fulfillment of some specified conditions (Lv 27:1–13); the latter signifies the assumption of either a positive or a negative obligation—that is, the promise either to do something or to abstain from something; cf. v. 14.

30:11 In her husband’s house: after her marriage. This contrasts with the case given in vv. 7–9.

30:16 He annuls them: he prevents their fulfillment. Since he has first allowed the vows to remain valid, he can no longer annul them.

31:1–3 The narrative of Israel’s campaign against Midian, which was interrupted after 25:18, is now resumed.

31:8 The five kings of Midian: they are called Midianite princes, Sihon’s vassals, in Jos 13:21.

31:17 There are later references to Midian in Jgs 6–8; 1 Kgs 11:18; Is 60:6. The present raid was only against those Midianites who were dwelling at this time near the encampment of the Israelites.

31:23 Water of purification: water mixed with the ashes of the red heifer as prescribed in 19:9.

31:27 Divide the spoils: for a similar division of the plunder into two equal parts, between those who engaged in the battle and those who stayed with the baggage, cf. 1 Sm 30:24. But note that here the tax on the plunder of the non-combatants is ten times as much as that on the soldiers’ plunder.

31:50 The precise nature and use of some of these articles of gold is not certain.

31:53 Apparently because of the commanders’ generosity the common troops were under no sort of obligation to make their own offerings and could keep their loot.

32:1 Gilead: the name of the western part of the plateau east of the Jordan, sometimes signifying the whole region from the Yarmuk to the Jordan, sometimes only the northern part of this region, and sometimes, as here, only its southern part. Jazer lay to the east of southern Gilead.

32:3 The places named in this verse, as well as the additional ones given in vv. 34–38, were all in the former kingdom of Sihon, that is, in the region between the Jabbok and the Arnon. Cf. 21:23–24; Jos 13:19–21, 24–27.

32:12 Kenizzite: a member of the clan of Kenaz, which, according to Gn 36:11, 15, 42, was Edomite; but, according to Nm 13:6; 34:19, Caleb belonged to the tribe of Judah; cf. also Jos 14:6, 14.

32:20–22 Since the ark of the Lord was carried into battle with the Israelite army, the vanguard was said to march before the Lord (see Jos 6:6–9).

32:32 This side of the Jordan: lit., “beyond the Jordan”; the perspective in Hebrew is from the west bank looking toward the east bank where the Reubenites and Gadites finally settled.

32:33 The preceding is concerned solely with the two tribes of Gad and Reuben and with the land of the former kingdom of Sihon; it seems probable that the sudden reference here to the half-tribe of Manasseh and to their territory in Bashan, the former kingdom of Og, is a later addition to the text.

32:38 The phrase in parentheses is probably a gloss, warning the reader perhaps to substitute some other word for Nebo and Baal, the names of foreign deities mentioned in the last two city names. They called by their old names: lit., “they called by their names”; however, some understand the current Hebrew text to mean, “they called by new names,” or “their own names.”

32:41 Havvoth-jair: that is, “villages of Jair.”

33:1–3 According to v. 2, this list of camping sites was drawn up by Moses as an itinerary recording Israel’s trek through the wilderness. Comparison with the more detailed accounts of the journey as given elsewhere suggests that the list is not necessarily comprehensive. It records just forty camping sites, not counting the starting place, Rameses, and the terminus, the plains of Moab. This number, which corresponds exactly to the forty years of wandering in the wilderness, is probably a schematic device. Moreover, it seems that in its present form the order of some of the names here has been disturbed. Several names listed here are not recorded elsewhere.

33:30–36 Moseroth is mentioned in Dt 10:6 (in the form of “Moserah”) as the place where Aaron died, apparently a variant of the tradition here in v. 38 regarding the place of Aaron’s death; so also Nm 20:22–24 and Dt 32:50. Perhaps Moseroth was close to Mount Hor.

33:35 Ezion-geber: Solomon conducted sea trade with Ophir from this port (1 Kgs 9:26), today probably identified on the northern coast of the Gulf of Elath between the Jordanian city of Aqabah and the Israeli city of Elath.

33:40 The verse repeats almost verbatim the same introduction to the account of the victory over Arad as is given in 21:1–3, where it also follows the account of Aaron’s death. Perhaps the isolated verse here is intended by the editor(s) of Numbers to point the reader to the fuller account given there.

33:41b–49 It seems that this section stood originally immediately after v. 36a.

34:6 The Great Sea: the Mediterranean.

34:7–8 Mount Hor: different from the one where Aaron died; cf. 20:22; 33:37–38.

34:11 Sea of Chinnereth: in the New Testament known as the Sea of Galilee; today called Lake Kinneret.

35:8 This provision was hardly observed in the actual assignment of the levitical cities as narrated in Jos 21.

35:12 The avenger of blood: Hebrew, go’el, often translated as “redeemer,” one who, as next of kin to the slain (2 Sm 14:7), and here, as executor of public justice, had the right and duty to take the life of the murderer; cf. Dt 19:6, 12; Jos 20:3, 5, 9.

35:16–25 Here, as also in Dt 19:1–13, there is a casuistic development of the original law as stated in Ex 21:12–14.

36:4 Before the jubilee year various circumstances, such as divorce, could make such property revert to its original tribal owners; but in the jubilee year it became irrevocably attached to its new owners.

36:5–9 This is a supplement to the law given in 27:5–11.

The title of Deuteronomy in Hebrew is Debarim, “words,” from its opening phrase. The English title comes from the Septuagint of 17:18, deuteronomion, “copy of the law”; this title is appropriate because the book replicates much of the legal content of the previous books, serving as a “second law.” It brings to a close the five books of the Torah or Pentateuch with a retrospective account of Israel’s past—the exodus, the Sinai covenant, and the wilderness wanderings—and a look into Israel’s future as they stand poised to enter the land of Canaan and begin their life as a people there.

The book consists of three long addresses by Moses. Each of these contains narrative, law, and exhortation, in varying proportions. In an expansion of the first commandment of the decalogue (Ex 20:5–6; Dt 5:9–10), Moses tells the Israelites how to make a success of their life as a people once they are settled in the land. The choice presented to Israel is to love the Lord and keep his commandments, or to serve “other gods.” That choice will determine what kind of life they will make for themselves in the land. Whichever choice they make as a people carries consequences, which Deuteronomy terms “blessing” and “curse.” Thus the book can be seen as a kind of survival manual for Israel in their life as a people: how to live and what to avoid. This gives the book its hortatory style and tone of life-or-death urgency.

One defining concern of the book is centralization of worship. As Israel’s God is one (6:4–5), so its worship must be focused in one place, which the Lord “will choose from among your tribes”; there the Lord will “make his name dwell” (see note on 12:5). Thus the privileged status of the Jerusalem Temple is asserted; all other places and all other modes of worship of the God of Israel (the local shrines, the “high places,” “under every green tree”) are proscribed.

The book was probably composed over the course of three centuries, from the eighth century to the exile and beyond. It bears some relation to “the Book of the Law” discovered in the Jerusalem Temple around 622 B.C. during the reign of King Josiah (2 Kgs 22:8–13). It gives evidence of later editing: cf. the references to exile in 4:1–40; 28:63–68; 29:21–28; 30:1–10.

Over the book looms the disaster of 722/721, the fall of the Northern Kingdom, Israel. The detailed description of siege (28:49–57) especially echoes the fate the North suffered at the hands of the Assyrian invader. The book draws the minds of its intended readers back to a time before disastrous mistakes were made and their disastrous effects felt, and serves to explain the political and theological dynamics that led to the destruction of the North as well as to warn the surviving Southern Kingdom, Judah, to reform by keeping faith with Israel’s covenant Lord.

The characteristic and highly recognizable language and theology of Deuteronomy are seen in editorial comments structuring the works that follow it in the Hebrew canon, the Books of Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings. Together with Deuteronomy, these present a history of Israel from Moses to the time of the Babylonian exile. Conventionally this great multivolume work is termed the Deuteronomistic History. The Book of Deuteronomy itself was also incorporated into the Torah as its fifth volume.

The book presents three discourses by Moses, as follows:

I. First Address (1:1–4:43)

II. Second Address (4:44–28:69,)

A. The Lord’s Covenant with Israel (4:44–11:32)

B. The Deuteronomic Code (12:1–28:69)

III. Third Address (29:1–33:29)

IV. The Death of Moses (34:1–12)

I. First Address

CHAPTER 1

See RG 171–73

Introduction. <sup>1*</sup> These are the words that Moses spoke to all Israel beyond the Jordan in the wilderness, in the Arabah, opposite Suph, between Paran and Tophel, Laban, Hazeroth, and Dizahab. <sup>2</sup>It is a journey of eleven days from Horeb * to Kadesh-barnea by way of the highlands of Seir.

<sup>3</sup>In the fortieth year, * on the first day of the eleventh month, Moses spoke to the Israelites according to all that the Lord had commanded him to speak to them, <sup>4</sup>after he had defeated Sihon, king of the Amorites, who reigned in Heshbon, <sup>a</sup> and Og, king of Bashan, who reigned in Ashtaroth and in Edrei. <sup>5</sup>Beyond the Jordan, in the land of Moab, Moses undertook to explain this law:

Departure from Horeb. <sup>6*</sup> <sup>b</sup> The LORD, our God, said to us at Horeb: * You have stayed long enough at this mountain. <sup>7</sup>Leave here and go to the hill country of the Amorites * and to all the surrounding regions, the Arabah, the mountains, the Shephelah, the Negeb and the seacoast—the land of the Canaanites and the Lebanon as far as the Great River, the Euphrates. <sup>8</sup>See, I have given that land over to you. <sup>c</sup> Go now and possess the land that the LORD swore to your ancestors, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to give to them and to their descendants after them.

Appointment of Elders. <sup>9d</sup> At that time I said to you, “I am unable to carry you by myself. <sup>e</sup> <sup>10</sup>The LORD, your God, has made you numerous, and now you are as numerous as the stars of the heavens. <sup>f</sup> <sup>11</sup>May the LORD, the God of your ancestors, increase you a thousand times over, and bless you as he promised! <sup>12</sup>But how can I, by myself, bear the weight, the contentiousness of you? <sup>13</sup>Provide wise, discerning, and reputable persons for each of your tribes, that I may appoint them as your leaders.” <sup>14</sup>You answered me, “What you have proposed is good.” <sup>15</sup>So I took the leaders of your tribes, wise and reputable, and set them as leaders over you, commanders over thousands, over hundreds, over fifties and over tens, and other tribal officers. <sup>16g</sup> I charged your judges at that time, “Listen to complaints among your relatives, and administer true justice to both parties even if one of them is a resident alien. <sup>17</sup>In rendering judgment, do not consider who a person is; give ear to the lowly and to the great alike, fearing no one, for the judgment is God's. Any case that is too difficult for you bring to me and I will hear it." <sup>18</sup>Thus I charged you, at that time, with all the things you were to do.

The Twelve Scouts. <sup>19h</sup> Then we set out from Horeb and journeyed through that whole vast and fearful wilderness that you have seen, in the direction of the hill country of the Amorites, as the LORD, our God, had commanded; and we came to Kadesh-barnea. <sup>i</sup> <sup>20</sup>I said to you, "You have come to the hill country of the Amorites, which the LORD, our God, is giving us. <sup>21</sup>See, the LORD, your God, has given this land over to you. Go up and take possession of it, as the LORD, the God of your ancestors, has promised you. Do not fear or be dismayed." <sup>22</sup>Then all of you approached me and said, "Let us send men ahead to spy out the land for us and report to us on the road we should follow and the cities we will come upon." <sup>23</sup>Agreeing with the proposal, I took twelve men from your number, one from each tribe. <sup>24</sup>They set out into the hill country as far as the Wadi Eshcol, and explored it. <sup>25</sup>Then, taking along some of the fruit of the land, they brought it down to us and reported, "The land the LORD, our God, is giving us is good."

Threats of Revolt. <sup>26j</sup> But you refused to go up; <sup>k</sup> you defied the command of the LORD, your God. <sup>27</sup>You set to murmuring in your tents, "Out of hatred for us the LORD has brought us out of the land of Egypt, <sup>l</sup> to deliver us into the power of the Amorites and destroy us. <sup>28</sup>What shall we meet with up there? Our men have made our hearts melt by saying, 'The people are bigger and taller than we, and their cities are large and fortified to the sky; besides, we saw the Anakim * there.' " <sup>m</sup>

<sup>29</sup>But I said to you, "Have no dread or fear of them. <sup>30n</sup> The LORD, your God, who goes before you, is the one who will fight for you, just as he acted with you before your very eyes in Egypt, <sup>31</sup>as well as in the wilderness, where you saw how the LORD, your God, carried you, as one carries his own child, all along your journey until you arrived at this place." <sup>32</sup>Despite this, you would not trust the LORD, your God, <sup>33</sup>who journeys before you to find you a place to camp—by night in the fire, and by day in the cloud, to show you the way to go. <sup>o</sup> <sup>34</sup>When the LORD heard your words, he was angry, and took an oath: <sup>35</sup>Not a single one of this evil generation shall look upon the good land I swore to give to your ancestors, <sup>36</sup>except

Caleb,* son of Jephunneh. He shall see it, for to him and to his descendants I will give the land he trod upon,<sup>p</sup> because he has fully followed the LORD.

<sup>37</sup>The LORD was angered against me also on your account, and said, You shall not enter there either.<sup>q</sup> <sup>38</sup>but Joshua,<sup>r</sup> son of Nun, your attendant, shall enter. Encourage him, for he is the one who is to give Israel its possession. <sup>39</sup>Your little ones, who you said would become plunder, and your children, who as yet do not know good from evil—they shall enter there; to them I will give it, and they shall take possession of it. <sup>40</sup>But as for yourselves: turn back and proceed into the wilderness on the Red Sea road.

Unsuccessful Invasion. <sup>41s</sup> In reply you said to me, “We have sinned against the LORD. We will go up ourselves and fight, just as the LORD, our God, commanded us.” And each of you girded on his weapons, making light of going up into the hill country. <sup>42</sup>But the LORD said to me, Warn them: Do not go up and fight—for I will not be in your midst—lest you be beaten down before your enemies. <sup>43</sup>I gave you this warning but you would not listen. You defied the LORD’S command and arrogantly went off into the hill country. <sup>44</sup>Then the Amorites living in that hill country came out against you and put you to flight the way bees do, cutting you down in Seir as far as Hormah. <sup>45</sup>On your return you wept before the LORD, but the LORD did not listen to your voice or give ear to you. <sup>46</sup>That is why you had to stay as long as you did at Kadesh.

CHAPTER 2

Northward Along Edom. <sup>1t</sup> Then we turned and proceeded into the wilderness on the Red Sea road,<sup>u</sup> as the LORD had told me, and circled around the highlands of Seir for a long time. <sup>2</sup>Finally the LORD said to me, <sup>3</sup>You have wandered round these highlands long enough; turn and go north. <sup>4</sup>Command the people: You are now about to pass through the territory of your relatives, the descendants of Esau, who live in Seir. Though they are afraid of you, be very careful <sup>5</sup>not to come in conflict with them, for I will not give you so much as a foot of their land, since I have already given Esau possession of the highlands of Seir.<sup>v</sup> <sup>6</sup>You shall purchase from them with money the food you eat; even the water you drink you shall buy from them with money. <sup>7</sup>Surely, the LORD, your God, has blessed you in all your undertakings; he has been concerned* about your journey through this vast wilderness. It is now forty years that the LORD, your God, has been with you, and you have lacked nothing.<sup>w</sup> <sup>8</sup>So we passed by our relatives, the descendants of Esau who live in Seir, leaving behind us the Arabah route, Elath, and Ezion-geber.

Along Moab. Then we turned and passed on toward the wilderness of Moab. <sup>9x</sup> And the LORD said to me, Do not show hostility to the Moabites or engage them in battle, for I will not give you possession of any of their land, since I have given Ar to the descendants of Lot as their possession.<sup>y</sup> <sup>10</sup>(Formerly the Emim lived there, a people great and numerous and as tall as the Anakim;<sup>z</sup> <sup>11</sup>like the Anakim they are considered Rephaim, though the Moabites call them Emim.<sup>a</sup> <sup>12</sup>In Seir, however, the former inhabitants were the Horites;<sup>b</sup> the descendants of Esau dispossessed them, clearing them out of the way and dwelling in their place, just as Israel has done in the land of its possession which the LORD gave it.) <sup>13</sup>Now get ready to cross the Wadi Zered.

So we crossed the Wadi Zered. <sup>14c</sup> Now thirty-eight years had elapsed between our departure from Kadesh-barnea and the crossing of the Wadi Zered; in the meantime the whole generation of soldiers had perished from the camp, as the LORD had sworn they should. <sup>15</sup>Indeed the LORD's own hand was against them, to rout them from the camp completely.

Along Ammon. <sup>16d</sup> When at length death had put an end to all the soldiers among the people, <sup>17</sup>the LORD said to me, <sup>18</sup>You are now about to leave Ar and the territory of Moab behind. <sup>19</sup>As you come opposite the Ammonites,<sup>e</sup> do not show hostility or come in conflict with them, for I will not give you possession of any land of the Ammonites, since I have given it to the descendants of Lot as their possession. <sup>20</sup>(This also is considered a country of the Rephaim; formerly the Rephaim dwelt there. The Ammonites call them Zamzummim,<sup>f</sup> <sup>21</sup>a people great and numerous and as tall as the Anakim. But these, too, the LORD cleared out of the way for the Ammonites, so that they dispossessed them and dwelt in their place.<sup>g</sup> <sup>22</sup>He did the same for the descendants of Esau, who live in Seir, by clearing the Horites out of their way, so that they dispossessed them and dwelt in their place down to the present.<sup>h</sup> <sup>23</sup>As for the Avvim, who once lived in villages in the vicinity of Gaza,* the Caphtorim, migrating from Caphtor, cleared them away and dwelt in their place.)<sup>i</sup>

Defeat of Sihon. <sup>24j</sup> Advance now across the Wadi Arnon. I now deliver into your power Sihon, the Amorite king of Heshbon, and his land. Begin to take possession; engage him in battle.<sup>k</sup> <sup>25</sup>This day I will begin to put a fear and dread of you into the peoples everywhere under heaven, so that at the mention of your name they will quake and tremble before you.

<sup>26</sup>So I sent messengers from the wilderness of Kedemoth to Sihon, king of Heshbon, with this offer of peace: <sup>27</sup>“Let me pass through your country. I will travel only on the road. I will not turn aside either to the right or to the left. <sup>28</sup>The food I eat you will sell me for money, and the water I drink, you will give me for money. Only let me march through, <sup>29</sup>as the descendants of Esau who dwell in Seir and the Moabites who dwell in Ar have done, until I cross the Jordan into the land the LORD, our God, is about to give us.”<sup>l</sup> <sup>30</sup>But Sihon, king of Heshbon, refused to let us pass through his land, because the LORD, your God, made him stubborn in mind and obstinate in heart that he might deliver him into your power, as indeed he has now done.

<sup>31</sup>Then the LORD said to me, Now that I have already begun to give over to you Sihon and his land, begin to take possession. <sup>32</sup>So Sihon and all his people advanced against us to join battle at Jahaz; <sup>33</sup>but since the LORD, our God, had given him over to us, we defeated him and his sons and all his people. <sup>34m</sup> At that time we captured all his cities and put every city under the ban,* men, women and children; we left no survivor.<sup>35</sup> Our only plunder was the livestock and the spoils of the captured cities.<sup>36</sup> From Aroer on the edge of the Wadi Arnon and from the town in the wadi itself, as far as Gilead,<sup>n</sup> no city was too well fortified for us. All of them the LORD, our God, gave over to us.<sup>37</sup> However, just as the LORD, our God, commanded us, you did not encroach upon any of the Ammonite land, neither the region bordering on the Wadi Jabbok, nor the cities of the highlands.<sup>o</sup>

Defeat of Og. <sup>1</sup>Then we turned and proceeded up the road to Bashan. But Og, king of Bashan,<sup>p</sup> came out against us with all his people to give battle at Edrei. <sup>2</sup>The LORD said to me, Do not be afraid of him, for I have delivered him into your power with all his people and his land. Do to him as you did to Sihon, king of the Amorites, who reigned in Heshbon. <sup>3</sup>And thus the LORD, our God, delivered into our power also Og, king of Bashan, with all his people. We defeated him so completely that we left him no survivor. <sup>4</sup>At that time we captured all his cities; there was no town we did not take: sixty cities in all, the whole region of Argob, the kingdom of Og in Bashan — <sup>5</sup>all these cities were fortified with high walls and gates and bars— besides a great number of unwalled towns. <sup>6q</sup> As we had done to Sihon, king of Heshbon, so also here we put all the towns under the ban, men, women and children; <sup>7</sup>but all the livestock and the spoils of each city we took as plunder for ourselves.

<sup>8</sup>And so at that time we took from the two kings of the Amorites beyond the Jordan the territory from the Wadi Arnon to Mount Hermon <sup>9</sup>(the Sidonians call Hermon Sirion and the Amorites call it Senir), <sup>10</sup>all the towns of the plateau, all of Gilead, and all of Bashan as far as Salecah and Edrei, towns of the kingdom of Og in Bashan. <sup>11</sup>(Og, king of Bashan, was the last remaining survivor of the Rephaim. He had a bed of iron,* nine regular cubits long and four wide, which is still preserved in Rabbah of the Ammonites.)<sup>r</sup>

Allotment of the Conquered Lands.<sup>12s</sup> As for the land we took possession of at that time, I gave Reuben and Gad the territory from Aroer, on the edge of the Wadi Arnon, halfway up into the highlands of Gilead, with its cities. <sup>13</sup>The rest of Gilead and all of Bashan, the kingdom of Og, I gave to the half-tribe of Manasseh. (The whole Argob region, all that part of Bashan, was once called a land of the Rephaim.<sup>t</sup> <sup>14</sup>Jair, a Manassite,<sup>u</sup> took all the region of Argob as far as the border of the Geshurites and Maacathites, and named them—Bashan, that is—after himself, Havvoth-jair, the name it bears today.) <sup>15</sup>To Machir* I gave Gilead, <sup>16</sup>and to Reuben and Gad the territory from Gilead to the Wadi Arnon—the middle of the wadi being its boundary—and to the Wadi Jabbok, which is the border of the Ammonites, <sup>17</sup>as well as the Arabah with the Jordan and its banks from Chinnereth* to the Salt Sea of the Arabah, under the slopes of Pisgah on the east.

<sup>18v</sup> At that time I charged you: The LORD, your God, has given you this land as your possession. But all your troops equipped for battle must cross over in the vanguard of your fellow Israelites. <sup>19</sup>But your wives and children, as well as your livestock, of which I know you have a large number, shall remain behind in the towns I have given you, <sup>20</sup>until the LORD has settled your relatives as well, and they too possess the land which the LORD, your God, will give them on the other side of the Jordan. Then you may all return to the possessions I have given you.

<sup>21</sup>And I charged Joshua as well, “Your own eyes have seen all that the LORD, your God, has done to both these kings; so, too, will the LORD do to all the kingdoms into which you will cross over. <sup>22</sup>Do not fear them, for it is the LORD, your God, who will fight for you.”<sup>w</sup>

Moses Excluded from the Promised Land. <sup>23x</sup> It was then that I entreated the LORD, <sup>24</sup>“Lord GOD, you have begun to show to your servant your greatness and your mighty hand. What god in heaven or on earth can perform deeds and powerful acts like yours? <sup>25</sup>Ah, let me cross over and see the good land beyond the Jordan, that fine hill country, and the Lebanon!” <sup>26</sup>But the LORD was angry with me on your account* and would not hear me.<sup>y</sup> The LORD said to me, Enough! Speak to me no more of this. <sup>27</sup>Go up to the top of Pisgah and look out to the west, and to the north, and to the south, and to the east. Look well, for you shall not cross this Jordan.<sup>z</sup> <sup>28</sup>Commission Joshua,<sup>a</sup> and encourage and strengthen him, for it is he who will cross at the head of this people and he who will give them possession of the land you are to see.

<sup>29</sup>So we remained in the valley opposite Beth-peor.

CHAPTER 4

See RG 171–76

Advantages of Fidelity. <sup>1</sup>Now therefore, Israel, hear the statutes and ordinances I am teaching you to observe, that you may live, and may enter in and take possession of the land which the LORD, the God of your ancestors, is giving you.<sup>b</sup> <sup>2</sup>In your observance of the commandments of the LORD, your God,<sup>c</sup> which I am commanding you, you shall not add to what I command you nor subtract from it. <sup>3</sup>You have seen with your own eyes what the LORD did at Baalpeor:<sup>d</sup> the LORD, your God, destroyed from your midst everyone who followed the Baal of Peor; <sup>4</sup>but you, who held fast to the LORD, your God, are all alive today. <sup>5</sup>See, I am teaching you the statutes and ordinances as the LORD, my God, has commanded me, that you may observe them in the land you are entering to possess. <sup>6</sup>Observe them carefully, for this is your wisdom and discernment in the sight of the peoples, who will hear of all these statutes and say, “This great nation is truly a wise and discerning people.”<sup>e</sup> <sup>7f</sup> For what great nation is there that has gods so close to it as the LORD, our God, is to us whenever we call upon him? <sup>8</sup>Or what great nation has statutes and ordinances that are as just as this whole law which I am setting before you today?<sup>g</sup>

Revelation at Horeb. <sup>9</sup>However, be on your guard and be very careful not to forget the things your own eyes have seen, nor let them slip from your heart as long as you live, but make them known to your children<sup>h</sup> and to your children’s children, <sup>10</sup>that day you stood before the LORD, your God, at Horeb, when the LORD said to me: Assemble the people for me, that I may let them hear my words, that they may learn to fear* me as long as they live in the land and may so teach their children. <sup>11i</sup> You came near and stood at the foot of the mountain, while the mountain blazed to the heart of the heavens with fire and was enveloped in a dense black cloud. <sup>12</sup>Then the LORD spoke to you from the midst of the fire.<sup>j</sup> You heard the sound of the words, but saw no form; there was only a voice. <sup>13</sup>He proclaimed to you his covenant, which he commanded you to keep: the ten words,* which he wrote on two stone tablets.<sup>k</sup> <sup>14</sup>At that time the LORD charged me to teach you the statutes and ordinances for you to observe in the land you are about to cross into and possess.

Danger of Idolatry. <sup>15</sup>Because you saw no form at all on the day the LORD spoke to you at Horeb from the midst of the fire, be strictly on your guard <sup>16</sup>not to act corruptly by fashioning an idol for yourselves to represent any figure, whether it be the form of a man or of a woman, <sup>17</sup>the form of any animal on the earth, the form of any bird that flies in the sky, <sup>18</sup>the form of anything that crawls on the ground, or the form of any fish in the waters under the earth. <sup>19</sup>And when you look up to the heavens and behold the sun or the moon or the stars, the whole heavenly host, do not be led astray into bowing down to them and serving them. <sup>m</sup> These the LORD, your God, has apportioned to all the other nations under the heavens; <sup>20</sup>but you the LORD has taken and led out of that iron foundry, Egypt, that you might be his people, his heritage, as you are today. <sup>n</sup> <sup>21</sup>But the LORD was angry with me on your account <sup>o</sup> and swore that I should not cross the Jordan nor enter the good land which the LORD, your God, is giving you as a heritage. <sup>22</sup>I myself shall die in this country; I shall not cross the Jordan; but you are going to cross over and take possession of that good land. <sup>p</sup> <sup>23</sup>Be careful, therefore, lest you forget the covenant which the LORD, your God, has made with you, and fashion for yourselves against his command an idol in any form whatsoever. <sup>q</sup> <sup>24</sup> For the LORD, your God, is a consuming fire, a jealous God. <sup>*r</sup>

God's Fidelity and Love. <sup>25s</sup> When you have children and children's children, and have grown old in the land, should you then act corruptly by fashioning an idol in the form of anything, and by this evil done in his sight provoke the LORD, your God, <sup>26</sup>I call heaven and earth this day to witness against you, that you shall all quickly perish from the land which you are crossing the Jordan to possess. You shall not live in it for any length of time but shall be utterly wiped out. <sup>t</sup> <sup>27</sup>The LORD will scatter you among the peoples, and there shall remain but a handful of you among the nations to which the LORD will drive you. <sup>28</sup>There you shall serve gods that are works of human hands, of wood and stone, gods which can neither see nor hear, neither eat nor smell. <sup>u</sup> <sup>29</sup>Yet when you seek the LORD, your God, from there, you shall indeed find him if you search after him with all your heart and soul. <sup>v</sup> <sup>30</sup>In your distress, when all these things shall have come upon you, you shall finally return to the LORD, your God, and listen to his voice. <sup>31</sup>Since the LORD, your God, is a merciful God, he will not abandon or destroy you, nor forget the covenant with your ancestors that he swore to them.<sup>w</sup>

<sup>32</sup>Ask now of the days of old, before your time, ever since God created humankind upon the earth; ask from one end of the sky to the other: Did anything so great ever happen before? Was it ever heard of? <sup>33</sup>Did a people ever hear the voice of God speaking from the midst of fire, as you did, and live?<sup>x</sup> <sup>34</sup>Or did any god venture to go and take a nation for himself from the midst of another nation, by testings, by signs and wonders,<sup>y</sup> by war, with strong hand and outstretched arm, and by great terrors, all of which the LORD, your God, did for you in Egypt before your very eyes? <sup>35</sup>All this you were allowed to see that you might know that the LORD is God; there is no other.<sup>z</sup> <sup>36</sup>Out of the heavens he let you hear his voice to discipline you; on earth he let you see his great fire, and you heard him speaking out of the fire. <sup>37</sup>For love of your ancestors he chose their descendants after them and by his presence and great power led you out of Egypt, <sup>38</sup>dispossessing before you nations greater and mightier than you, so as to bring you in and to give their land to you as a heritage, as it is today. <sup>39</sup>This is why you must now acknowledge, and fix in your heart, that the LORD is God in the heavens above and on earth below, and that there is no other.<sup>a</sup> <sup>40</sup>And you must keep his statutes and commandments which I command you today, that you and your children after you may prosper, and that you may have long life on the land which the LORD, your God, is giving you forever.<sup>b</sup>

Cities of Refuge. <sup>41c</sup> Then Moses set apart three cities in the region east of the Jordan, <sup>42</sup>to which a homicide might flee who killed a neighbor unintentionally, where there had been no hatred previously, so that the killer might flee to one of these cities and live: <sup>43</sup>Bezer in the wilderness, in the region of the plateau, for the Reubenites; Ramoth in Gilead for the Gadites; and Golan in Bashan for the Manassites.

II. Second Address

A. The Lord's Covenant with Israel

Introduction. <sup>44</sup>This is the law* which Moses set before the Israelites.<sup>d</sup>
proclaimed to the Israelites after they came out of Egypt,<sup>e</sup> <sup>46f</sup>beyond the Jordan in the valley opposite Beth-peor, in the land of Sihon, king of the Amorites, who reigned in Heshbon, whom Moses and the Israelites defeated after they came out of Egypt.<sup>g</sup> <sup>47</sup>They took possession of his land and the land of Og, king of Bashan, as well—the land of these two kings of the Amorites in the region beyond the Jordan to the east: <sup>48</sup>from Aroer on the edge of the Wadi Arnon to Mount Sion* (that is, Hermon) <sup>49</sup>and all the Arabah beyond the Jordan to the east, as far as the Arabah Sea* under the slopes of Pisgah.

CHAPTER 5

See RG 172–76

The Covenant at Horeb. <sup>1</sup>Moses summoned all Israel and said to them, Hear, O Israel, the statutes and ordinances which I proclaim in your hearing this day, that you may learn them and take care to observe them.<sup>h</sup> <sup>2</sup>The LORD, our God, made a covenant with us at Horeb; <sup>3</sup>not with our ancestors* did the LORD make this covenant, but with us, all of us who are alive here this day. <sup>4i</sup> Face to face, the LORD spoke with you on the mountain from the midst of the fire,<sup>j</sup> <sup>5</sup>while I was standing between the LORD and you at that time, to announce to you these words of the LORD, since you were afraid of the fire and would not go up the mountain:

The Decalogue. <sup>6k</sup> I am the LORD your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt,<sup>l</sup> out of the house of slavery. <sup>7m</sup> You shall not have other gods beside me. <sup>8</sup>You shall not make for yourself an idol or a likeness of anything in the heavens above or on the earth below or in the waters beneath the earth; <sup>9*</sup> you shall not bow down before them or serve them. For I, the LORD, your God, am a jealous* God, bringing punishment for their parents' wickedness on the children of those who hate me, down to the third and fourth generation, <sup>10</sup>but showing love down to the thousandth generation of those who love me and keep my commandments.

<sup>11</sup>You shall not invoke the name of the LORD, your God, in vain.<sup>n</sup> For the LORD will not leave unpunished anyone who invokes his name in vain.

<sup>12o</sup> Observe the sabbath day—keep it holy, as the LORD, your God, commanded you. <sup>13</sup>Six days you may labor and do all your work, <sup>14</sup>but the seventh day is a sabbath of the LORD your God. You shall not do any work, either you, your son or your daughter, your male or female slave, your ox or donkey or any work animal, or the resident alien within your gates, so that your male and female slave may rest as you do. <sup>15</sup>Remember that you too were once slaves in the land of Egypt, and the LORD, your God, brought you out from there with a strong hand and outstretched arm. That is why the LORD, your God, has commanded you to observe the sabbath day.

<sup>16p</sup> Honor your father and your mother, as the LORD, your God, has commanded you, that you may have a long life and that you may prosper in the land the LORD your God is giving you.

17<sup>q</sup> You shall not kill.*

18<sup>r</sup> You shall not commit adultery.

19<sup>s</sup> You shall not steal.

20<sup>t</sup> You shall not bear dishonest witness against your neighbor.

21<sup>u</sup> You shall not covet your neighbor's wife.

You shall not desire your neighbor's house or field, his male or female slave, his ox or donkey, or anything that belongs to your neighbor.

Moses as Mediator. <sup>22</sup>These words the LORD spoke with a loud voice to your entire assembly on the mountain from the midst of the fire and the dense black cloud, and added no more. He inscribed them on two stone tablets and gave them to me.<sup>v</sup> <sup>23</sup>But when you heard the voice from the midst of the darkness, while the mountain was ablaze with fire, you came near to me, all your tribal heads and elders, <sup>24</sup>and said, "The LORD, our God, has indeed let us see his glory and his greatness, and we have heard his voice from the midst of the fire."<sup>w</sup> Today we have found out that God may speak to a mortal and that person may still live. <sup>25</sup>Now, why should we die? For this great fire will consume us. If we hear the voice of the LORD, our God, any more, we shall die.<sup>x</sup> <sup>26</sup>For what mortal has heard the voice of the living God speaking from the midst of fire, as we have, and lived? <sup>27</sup>You go closer and listen to all that the LORD, our God, will say, and then tell us what the LORD, our God, tells you; we will listen and obey."<sup>y</sup>

<sup>28</sup>The LORD heard your words as you were speaking to me and said to me, I have heard the words these people have spoken to you, which are all well said.<sup>z</sup> <sup>29</sup>Would that they might always be of such a mind, to fear me and to keep all my commandments! Then they and their descendants would prosper forever. <sup>30</sup>Go, tell them: Return to your tents. <sup>31</sup>Then you stand here near me and I will give you all the commandments, the statutes and the ordinances; you must teach them, that they may observe them in the land I am giving them to possess.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>32</sup>Be careful, therefore, to do as the LORD, your God, has commanded you, not turning aside to the right or to the left, <sup>33</sup>but following exactly the way that the LORD, your God, commanded you that you may live and prosper, and may have long life in the land which you are to possess.<sup>b</sup>

See RG 172–76

<sup>1</sup>This then is the commandment, the statutes and the ordinances,<sup>c</sup> which the LORD, your God, has commanded that you be taught to observe in the land you are about to cross into to possess, <sup>2</sup>so that you, that is, you, your child, and your grandchild, may fear the LORD, your God, by keeping, as long as you live, all his statutes and commandments<sup>d</sup> which I enjoin on you, and thus have long life. <sup>3</sup>Hear then, Israel, and be careful to observe them, that it may go well with you and that you may increase greatly; for the LORD, the God of your ancestors, promised you a land flowing with milk and honey.<sup>e</sup>

“Hear. O Israel”

THIS STATEMENT OF belief (6:4–9) is the most important one for Israel, and is also partly quoted in the New Testament by Jesus (Mark 12:29–30). It is known as the Shema, from its first word in Hebrew, the command “Hear!”

The Great Commandment. * <sup>4f</sup> Hear, O Israel! * The LORD is our God, the LORD alone! <sup>5</sup>Therefore, you shall love the LORD, your God, with your whole heart, and with your whole being, and with your whole strength.<sup>g</sup> <sup>6h</sup> Take to heart these words which I command you today.<sup>i</sup> <sup>7</sup>Keep repeating them to your children. Recite them when you are at home and when you are away, when you lie down and when you get up.<sup>j</sup> <sup>8</sup>Bind them on your arm as a sign* and let them be as a pendant on your forehead.<sup>k</sup> <sup>9</sup>Write them on the doorposts of your houses and on your gates.<sup>l</sup>

Fidelity in Prosperity. <sup>10m</sup> When the LORD, your God, brings you into the land which he swore to your ancestors, to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that he would give you, a land with fine, large cities that you did not build,<sup>n</sup> <sup>11</sup>with houses full of goods of all sorts that you did not garner, with cisterns that you did not dig, with vineyards and olive groves that you did not plant; and when, therefore, you eat and are satisfied,<sup>o</sup> <sup>12p</sup> be careful not to forget the LORD, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, that house of slavery. <sup>13q</sup> The LORD, your God, shall you fear; him shall you serve,* and by his name shall you swear. <sup>14r</sup> You shall not go after other gods, any of the gods of the surrounding peoples— <sup>15</sup>for the LORD, your God who is in your midst, is a passionate God—lest the anger of the LORD, your God, flare up against you and he destroy you from upon the land.

<sup>16</sup>You shall not put the LORD, your God, to the test, as you did at Massah.<sup>s</sup> <sup>17</sup>But keep the commandments of the LORD, your God, and the decrees and the statutes he has commanded you. <sup>18</sup>Do what is right and good in the sight of the LORD, that it may go well with you, and you may enter in and possess the good land which the LORD promised on oath to your ancestors, <sup>19</sup>driving all your enemies out of your way, as the LORD has promised.<sup>t</sup>

Instruction to Children.<sup>20u</sup> Later on, when your son asks you, “What do these decrees and statutes and ordinances mean?”<sup>v</sup> which the LORD, our God, has enjoined on you, <sup>21w</sup> you shall say to your son, “We were once slaves of Pharaoh in Egypt, but the LORD brought us out of Egypt with a strong hand<sup>x</sup> <sup>22</sup>and wrought before our eyes signs and wonders, great and dire, against Egypt and against Pharaoh and his whole house. <sup>23</sup>He brought us from there to bring us in and give us the land he had promised on oath to our ancestors.<sup>y</sup> <sup>24z</sup> The LORD commanded us to observe all these statutes in fear of the LORD, our God, that we may always have as good a life as we have today. <sup>25</sup>This is our justice before the LORD, our God: to observe carefully this whole commandment he has enjoined on us.”

CHAPTER 7

See RG 172–76

Destruction of the Nations in the Land. <sup>1a</sup> When the LORD, your God, brings you into the land which you are about to enter to possess, and removes many nations before you—the Hittites, Girgashites, Amorites, Canaanites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites,<sup>b</sup> seven nations more numerous and powerful than you—<sup>2</sup>and when the LORD, your God, gives them over to you and you defeat them, you shall put them under the ban. Make no covenant with them<sup>c</sup> and do not be gracious to them. <sup>3d</sup> You shall not intermarry with them, neither giving your daughters to their sons nor taking their daughters for your sons. <sup>4</sup>For they would turn your sons from following me to serving other gods, and then the anger of the LORD would flare up against you and he would quickly destroy you.

<sup>5</sup>But this is how you must deal with them:<sup>e</sup> Tear down their altars, smash their sacred pillars, chop down their asherahs,* and destroy their idols by fire. <sup>6</sup>For you are a people holy to the LORD, your God; the LORD, your God, has chosen you from all the peoples on the face of the earth to be a people specially his own.<sup>f</sup> <sup>7</sup>It was not because you are more numerous than all the peoples that the LORD set his heart on you and chose you; for you are really the smallest of all peoples.<sup>g</sup> <sup>8</sup>It was because the LORD loved you and because of his fidelity to the oath he had sworn to your ancestors, that the LORD brought you out with a strong hand and redeemed you from the house of slavery, from the hand of Pharaoh, king of Egypt.<sup>h</sup> <sup>9i</sup> Know, then, that the LORD, your God, is God: the faithful God who keeps covenant mercy to the thousandth generation toward those who love him and keep his commandments,<sup>j</sup> <sup>10</sup>but who repays with destruction those who hate him; he does not delay with those who hate him, but makes them pay for it. <sup>11</sup>Therefore carefully observe the commandment, the statutes and the ordinances which I command you today.

Blessings of Obedience. <sup>12k</sup> As your reward for heeding these ordinances and keeping them carefully, the LORD, your God, will keep with you the covenant mercy he promised on oath to your ancestors. <sup>13</sup>He will love and bless and multiply you; he will bless the fruit of your womb and the produce of your soil, your grain and wine and oil, the young of your herds and the offspring of your flocks, in the land which he swore to your ancestors he would give you. <sup>14</sup>You will be blessed above all peoples; no man or woman among you shall be childless nor shall your livestock be barren. <sup>15</sup>The LORD will remove all sickness from you; he will not afflict you with any of the malignant diseases that you know from Egypt, but will leave them with all those who hate you.

<sup>16</sup>You shall consume all the peoples which the LORD, your God, is giving over to you. You are not to look on them with pity, nor serve their gods, for that would be a snare to you. <sup>l 17m</sup> If you say to yourselves, "These nations are more numerous than we. How can we dispossess them?" <sup>18</sup>do not be afraid of them. Rather, remember clearly what the LORD, your God, did to Pharaoh and to all Egypt: <sup>19</sup>the great testings which your own eyes have seen, the signs and wonders, the strong hand and outstretched arm with which the LORD, your God, brought you out. The same also will he do to all the peoples of whom you are now afraid. <sup>20</sup>Moreover, the LORD, your God, will send hornets among them, until those who are left and those who are hiding from you are destroyed. <sup>n 21</sup>Therefore, do not be terrified by them, for the LORD, your God, who is in your midst, is a great and awesome God. <sup>22</sup>He will remove these nations before you little by little. You cannot finish with them quickly, lest the wild beasts become too numerous for you. <sup>o</sup> <sup>23</sup>The LORD, your God, will give them over to you and throw them into utter panic until they are destroyed. <sup>p</sup> <sup>24</sup>He will deliver their kings into your power, that you may make their names perish from under the heavens. No one will be able to stand up against you, <sup>q</sup> till you have destroyed them. <sup>25r</sup> The images of their gods you shall destroy by fire. Do not covet the silver or gold on them, nor take it for yourselves, lest you be ensnared by it; for it is an abomination to the LORD, your God. <sup>s</sup> <sup>26</sup>You shall not bring any abominable thing into your house, so as to be, like it, under the ban; loathe and abhor it utterly for it is under the ban. *

CHAPTER 8

See RG 172–76

God's Care. <sup>1</sup>Be careful to observe this whole commandment<sup>t</sup> that I enjoin on you today, that you may live and increase, and may enter in and possess the land which the LORD promised on oath to your ancestors. <sup>2</sup>Remember how for these forty years the LORD, your God, has directed all your journeying in the wilderness,<sup>u</sup> so as to test you by affliction, to know what was in your heart: to keep his commandments, or not. <sup>3</sup>He therefore let you be afflicted with hunger, and then fed you with manna,<sup>v</sup> a food unknown to you and your ancestors, so you might know that it is not by bread alone* that people live, but by all that comes forth from the mouth of the LORD. <sup>4</sup>The clothing did not fall from you in tatters, nor did your feet swell these forty years.<sup>w</sup> <sup>5</sup>So you must know in your heart that, even as a man disciplines his son, so the LORD, your God, disciplines you.<sup>x</sup> <sup>6</sup>Therefore, keep the commandments of the LORD, your God, by walking in his ways and fearing him.

Cautions About Prosperity. <sup>7y</sup> For the LORD, your God, is bringing you into a good country, a land with streams of water, with springs and fountains welling up in the hills and valleys, <sup>8</sup>a land of wheat and barley, of vines and fig trees and pomegranates, of olive trees and of honey, <sup>9</sup>a land where you will always have bread and where you will lack nothing, a land whose stones contain iron and in whose hills you can mine copper. <sup>10</sup>But when you have eaten and are satisfied, you must bless the LORD, your God, for the good land he has given you. <sup>11z</sup> Be careful not to forget the LORD, your God, by failing to keep his commandments and ordinances and statutes which I enjoin on you today: <sup>12</sup>lest, when you have eaten and are satisfied, and have built fine houses and lived in them, <sup>13</sup>and your herds and flocks have increased, your silver and gold has increased, and all your property has increased, <sup>14</sup>you then become haughty of heart and forget the LORD, your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, that house of slavery; <sup>15</sup>he guided you through the vast and terrible wilderness with its saraph* serpents and scorpions, its parched and waterless ground; he brought forth water for you from the flinty rock<sup>a</sup> <sup>16</sup>and fed you in the wilderness with manna, a food unknown to your ancestors, that he might afflict you and test you, but also make you prosperous in the end.

<sup>17</sup>Otherwise, you might say in your heart,<sup>b</sup>“It is my own power and the strength of my own hand that has got me this wealth.” <sup>18</sup>Remember then the LORD, your God, for he is the one who gives you the power to get wealth, by fulfilling, as he has now done, the covenant he swore to your ancestors.
<sup>19</sup>But if you do forget the LORD, your God, and go after other gods, serving and bowing down to them,<sup>c</sup> I bear witness to you this day that you will perish utterly. <sup>20</sup>Like the nations which the LORD destroys before you, so shall you too perish for not listening to the voice of the LORD, your God.

CHAPTER 9

See RG 172–76

Unmerited Success. <sup>1</sup>Hear, O Israel! You are now about to cross the Jordan to enter in and dispossess nations greater and stronger than yourselves, having large cities fortified to the heavens,<sup>d</sup> <sup>2</sup>the Anakim, a people great and tall.<sup>e</sup> You yourselves know of them and have heard it said of them, “Who can stand up against the Anakim?” <sup>3</sup>Know, then, today that it is the LORD, your God, who will cross over before you as a consuming fire; he it is who will destroy them and subdue them before you, so that you can dispossess and remove them quickly, as the LORD promised you.<sup>f</sup> <sup>4</sup>After the LORD, your God, has driven them out of your way, do not say in your heart, “It is because of my justice the LORD has brought me in to possess this land,<sup>g</sup> and because of the wickedness of these nations the LORD is dispossessing them before me.”* <sup>5</sup>No, it is not because of your justice or the integrity of your heart that you are going in to take possession of their land; but it is because of their wickedness that the LORD, your God, is dispossessing these nations before you and in order to fulfill the promise he made on oath to your ancestors, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.<sup>h</sup> <sup>6</sup>Know this, therefore: it is not because of your justice that the LORD, your God, is giving you this good land to possess, for you are a stiff-necked people.<sup>i</sup>

The Golden Calf. <sup>7</sup>Remember and do not forget how you angered the LORD, your God, in the wilderness. From the day you left the land of Egypt until you came to this place, you have been rebellious toward the LORD.<sup>j</sup> <sup>8k</sup>At Horeb you so provoked the LORD that he was angry enough to destroy you,<sup>l</sup> <sup>9</sup>when I had gone up the mountain to receive the stone tablets of the covenant which the LORD made with you.<sup>m</sup> Meanwhile I stayed on the mountain forty days and forty nights; I ate no food and drank no water. <sup>10</sup>The LORD gave me the two stone tablets inscribed, by God’s own finger,<sup>n</sup> with a copy of all the words that the LORD spoke to you on the mountain from the midst of the fire on the day of the assembly. <sup>11</sup>Then, at the end of the forty days and forty nights, when the LORD had given me the two stone tablets, the tablets of the covenant, <sup>12o</sup> the LORD said to me, Go down from here now, quickly, for your people whom you have brought out of Egypt are acting corruptly; they have already turned aside from the way I commanded them and have made for themselves a molten idol. <sup>13</sup>I have seen now how stiffnecked this people is, the LORD said to me. <sup>14</sup>Let me be, that I may destroy them and blot out their name from under the heavens. I will then make of you a nation mightier and greater than they.

<sup>15</sup>When I had come down again from the blazing, fiery mountain, with the two tablets of the covenant in both my hands,<sup>p</sup> <sup>16</sup>I saw how you had sinned against the LORD, your God, by making for yourselves a molten calf. You had already turned aside from the way which the LORD had commanded you.<sup>q</sup> <sup>17</sup>I took hold of the two tablets and with both hands cast them from me and broke them before your eyes.<sup>r</sup> <sup>18</sup>Then, as before, I lay prostrate before the LORD for forty days and forty nights; I ate no food, I drank no water, because of all the sin you had committed in the sight of the LORD, doing wrong and provoking him.<sup>s</sup> <sup>19</sup>For I dreaded the fierce anger of the LORD against you: his wrath would destroy you.<sup>t</sup> Yet once again the LORD listened to me. <sup>20</sup>With Aaron, too, the LORD was deeply angry, and would have destroyed him; but I prayed for Aaron also at that time.<sup>u</sup> <sup>21</sup>Then, taking the calf, the sinful object you had made, I burnt it and ground it down to powder as fine as dust, which I threw into the wadi that went down the mountainside.<sup>v</sup>

<sup>22</sup>At Taberah, at Massah, and at Kibrothhattaavah likewise, you enraged the LORD.<sup>w</sup> <sup>23</sup>And when the LORD sent you up from Kadesh-barnea saying, Go up and take possession of the land I have given you, you rebelled against this command of the LORD, your God, and would not believe him or listen to his voice.<sup>x</sup> <sup>24</sup>You have been rebels against the LORD from the day I first knew you.

<sup>25y</sup> Those forty days, then, and forty nights, I lay prostrate before the LORD, because he had threatened to destroy you. <sup>26</sup>And I prayed to the Lord and said: O Lord GOD, do not destroy your people, the heritage you redeemed in your greatness and have brought out of Egypt with your strong hand.<sup>z</sup> <sup>27</sup>Remember your servants, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Do not look upon the stubbornness of this people nor upon their wickedness and sin,<sup>a</sup> <sup>28</sup>lest the land from which you have brought us say, "The LORD was not able to bring them into the land he promised them, and out of hatred for them, he brought them out to let them die in the wilderness."<sup>b</sup> <sup>29</sup>They are your people and your heritage, whom you have brought out by your great power and with your outstretched arm.<sup>c</sup>

CHAPTER 10

See RG 172–76

<sup>1d</sup> At that time the LORD said to me, Cut two stone tablets like the first ones<sup>e</sup> and come up the mountain to me. Also make an ark out of wood. <sup>2</sup>I will write upon the tablets the words that were on the tablets that you broke, and you shall place them in the ark. <sup>3</sup>So I made an ark of acacia wood, and cut two stone tablets like the first ones, and went up the mountain with the two tablets in my hand.<sup>f</sup> <sup>4g</sup> The LORD then wrote on the tablets, as he had written before, the ten words* that the LORD had spoken to you on the mountain from the midst of the fire on the day of the assembly; and the LORD gave them to me. <sup>5</sup>Then I turned and came down from the mountain, and placed the tablets in the ark I had made.<sup>h</sup> There they have remained, as the LORD commanded me.

<sup>6i</sup> The Israelites set out from Beeroth Bene-jaakan for Moserah; Aaron died there and was buried. His son Eleazar succeeded him as priest.<sup>j</sup> <sup>7</sup>From there they set out for Gudgodah, and from Gudgodah for Jotbathah, a region where there is water in the wadies. <sup>8</sup>At that time the LORD set apart the tribe of Levi to carry the ark of the covenant of the LORD,<sup>k</sup> to stand before the LORD to minister to him, and to bless in his name, as they have done to this day. <sup>9</sup>For this reason, Levi has no hereditary portion with his relatives;<sup>l</sup> the LORD himself is his portion, as the LORD, your God, promised him.

<sup>10</sup>Meanwhile I stayed on the mountain as I did before, forty days and forty nights, and once again the LORD listened to me. The LORD was unwilling to destroy you. <sup>11</sup>The LORD said to me, Go now and set out at the head of the people,<sup>m</sup> that they may enter in and possess the land that I swore to their ancestors I would give them.

The Lord's Majesty and Compassion. <sup>12n</sup> Now, therefore, Israel, what does the LORD, your God, ask of you but to fear the LORD, your God, to follow in all his ways, to love and serve the LORD, your God, with your whole heart and with your whole being,<sup>o</sup> <sup>13</sup>to keep the commandments and statutes of the LORD that I am commanding you today for your own well-being?<sup>p</sup> <sup>14</sup>Look, the heavens, even the highest heavens, belong to the LORD, your God, as well as the earth and everything on it.<sup>q</sup> <sup>15</sup>Yet only on your ancestors did the LORD set his heart to love them. He chose you, their descendants, from all the peoples, as it is today.<sup>r</sup> <sup>16</sup>Circumcise therefore the foreskins of your hearts,* and be stiff-necked no longer. <sup>17</sup>For the LORD, your God, is the God of gods, the Lord of lords, the great God, mighty and awesome, who has no favorites, accepts no bribes,<sup>s</sup> <sup>18</sup>who executes justice for the orphan and the widow, and loves the resident alien, giving them food and clothing.<sup>t</sup> <sup>19</sup>So you too should love the resident alien, for that is what you were in the land of Egypt.<sup>u</sup> <sup>20</sup>The LORD, your God, shall you fear, and him shall you serve; to him hold fast and by his name shall you swear.<sup>v</sup> <sup>21</sup>He is your praise; he is your God, who has done for you those great and awesome things that your own eyes have seen.<sup>w</sup> <sup>22</sup>Seventy strong your ancestors went down to Egypt,<sup>x</sup> and now the LORD, your God, has made you as numerous as the stars of heaven.

CHAPTER 11

Recalling the Wonders of the Lord. <sup>1</sup>Love the LORD, your God, therefore, and keep his charge, statutes, ordinances, and commandments always.<sup>y</sup> <sup>2</sup>Recall today that it was not your children, who have neither known nor seen the discipline of the LORD, your God—his greatness, his strong hand and outstretched arm;<sup>z</sup> <sup>3</sup>the signs and deeds he wrought in the midst of Egypt, on Pharaoh, king of Egypt, and on all his land;<sup>a</sup> <sup>4</sup>what he did to the Egyptian army and to their horses and chariots, engulfing them in the waters of the Red Sea* as they pursued you,<sup>b</sup> so that the LORD destroyed them even to this day; <sup>5</sup>what he did for you in the wilderness until you came to this place; <sup>6</sup>and what he did to the Reubenites Dathan and Abiram, sons of Eliab, when the earth opened its mouth and swallowed them up out of the midst of Israel, with their families and tents and every living thing that belonged to them—<sup>c</sup> <sup>7</sup>but it was you who saw with your own eyes all these great deeds that the LORD has done.

The Gift of Rain. <sup>8d</sup> So keep all the commandments I give you today, that you may be strong enough to enter in and take possession of the land that you are crossing over to possess, <sup>9</sup>and that you may have long life on the land which the LORD swore to your ancestors he would give to them and their descendants, a land flowing with milk and honey. <sup>10</sup>The land you are to enter and possess is not like the land of Egypt from which you have come, where you would sow your seed and then water it by hand,* as in a vegetable garden. <sup>11e</sup> No, the land into which you are crossing to take possession is a land of mountains and valleys that drinks in rain from the heavens, <sup>12</sup>a land which the LORD, your God, looks after; the eyes of the LORD, your God, are upon it continually through the year, from beginning to end.

<sup>13*f</sup> If, then, you truly listen to my commandments which I give you today, loving and serving the LORD, your God, with your whole heart and your whole being, <sup>14</sup>I will give the seasonal rain to your land, the early rain* and the late rain, that you may have your grain, wine and oil to gather in; <sup>15</sup>and I will bring forth grass in your fields for your animals. Thus you may eat and be satisfied. <sup>16g</sup> But be careful lest your heart be so lured away that you serve other gods and bow down to them.<sup>h 17</sup> For then the anger of the LORD will flare up against you and he will close up the heavens, so that no rain will fall, and the soil will not yield its crops, and you will soon perish from the good land the LORD is giving you.

Need for Fidelity. <sup>18i</sup> Therefore, take these words of mine into your heart and soul. Bind them on your arm as a sign, and let them be as a pendant on your forehead. <sup>19</sup> Teach them to your children, speaking of them when you are at home and when you are away, when you lie down and when you get up, <sup>20</sup> and write them on the doorposts of your houses and on your gates, <sup>21</sup> so that, as long as the heavens are above the earth, you and your children may live on in the land which the LORD swore to your ancestors he would give them.

<sup>22j</sup> For if you are careful to observe this entire commandment I am giving you, loving the LORD, your God, following his ways exactly, and holding fast to him, <sup>23</sup> the LORD will dispossess all these nations before you, and you will dispossess nations greater and mightier than yourselves. <sup>24k</sup> Every place where you set foot shall be yours: from the wilderness and the Lebanon, from the Euphrates River to the Western Sea,* shall be your territory. <sup>25</sup> None shall stand up against you; the LORD, your God, will spread the fear and dread of you through any land where you set foot, as he promised you.<sup>l</sup>

Blessing and Curse. <sup>26m</sup> See, I set before you this day a blessing and a curse: <sup>27</sup> a blessing for obeying the commandments of the LORD, your God, which I give you today; <sup>28</sup> a curse if you do not obey the commandments of the LORD, your God, but turn aside from the way I command you today, to go after other gods, whom you do not know.<sup>n 29</sup> When the LORD, your God, brings you into the land which you are to enter and possess, then on Mount Gerizim you shall pronounce the blessing,<sup>o</sup> on Mount Ebal, the curse.* <sup>30</sup> (These are beyond the Jordan, on the other side of the western road in the land of the Canaanites who live in the Arabah, opposite Gilgal beside the oak of Moreh.)<sup>p 31</sup> Now you are about to cross the Jordan to enter and possess the land which the LORD, your God, is giving you. When, therefore, you take possession of it and settle there, <sup>32</sup> be careful to observe all the statutes and ordinances that I set before you today.

B. The Deuteronomic Code

CHAPTER 12

See RG 172–76

One Center of Worship. <sup>1</sup>These are the statutes and ordinances which you must be careful to observe in the land which the LORD, the God of your ancestors, has given you to possess, throughout the time you live on its soil.<sup>q</sup> <sup>2r</sup> Destroy entirely all the places where the nations you are to dispossess serve their gods, on the high mountains, on the hills, and under every green tree.<sup>s</sup> <sup>3</sup>Tear down their altars, smash their sacred pillars, burn up their asherahs, and chop down the idols of their gods, that you may destroy the very name of them from that place.

<sup>4</sup>That is not how you are to act toward the LORD, your God. <sup>5</sup>Instead,<sup>t</sup> you shall seek out the place which the LORD, your God, chooses out of all your tribes and designates as his dwelling to put his name there.<sup>* u</sup> There you shall go, <sup>6</sup>bringing your burnt offerings and sacrifices, your tithes and personal contributions, your votive and voluntary offerings, and the firstlings of your herds and flocks.<sup>v</sup> <sup>7</sup>There, too, in the presence of the LORD, your God, you and your families shall eat and rejoice in all your undertakings, in which the LORD, your God, has blessed you.<sup>w</sup>

<sup>8</sup>You shall not do as we are doing here today, everyone doing what is right in their own sight,<sup>x</sup> <sup>9</sup>since you have not yet reached your resting place, the heritage which the LORD, your God, is giving you. <sup>10</sup>But after you have crossed the Jordan and dwell in the land which the LORD, your God, is giving you as a heritage, when he has given you rest from all your enemies round about and you live there in security,<sup>y</sup> <sup>11*</sup> <sup>z</sup> then to the place which the LORD, your God, chooses as the dwelling place for his name you shall bring all that I command you: your burnt offerings and sacrifices, your tithes and personal contributions, and every special offering you have vowed to the LORD. <sup>12</sup>You shall rejoice in the presence of the LORD, your God, with your sons and daughters, your male and female slaves, as well as with the Levite within your gates, who has no hereditary portion with you.

<sup>13a</sup> Be careful not to sacrifice your burnt offerings in any place you like, <sup>14</sup>but offer them in the place which the LORD chooses in one of your tribal territories; there you shall do what I command you.

Profane and Sacred Slaughter. <sup>15*</sup> However, in any of your communities you may slaughter and eat meat freely, according to the blessing that the LORD, your God, has given you; the unclean as well as the clean may eat it, as they do the gazelle or the deer.<sup>b</sup> <sup>16*</sup> Only, you shall not eat of the blood, but must pour it out on the ground like water.<sup>c</sup> <sup>17</sup> Moreover, you may not, in your own communities, partake of your tithe of grain or wine or oil, of the firstborn of your herd or flock, of any offering you have vowed, of your voluntary offerings, or of your personal contributions. <sup>18</sup> These you must eat in the presence of the LORD, your God, in the place that the LORD, your God, chooses, along with your son and daughter, your male and female slave, and the Levite within your gates; and there, in the presence of the LORD, you shall rejoice in all your undertakings. <sup>19</sup> Be careful, also, that you do not neglect the Levite as long as you live in your land.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>20e</sup> After the LORD, your God, has enlarged your territory, as he promised you,<sup>f</sup> and you think, “I will eat meat,” as it is your desire to eat meat, you may eat it freely; <sup>21</sup> and if the place where the LORD, your God, chooses to put his name is too far, you may slaughter in the manner I have commanded you any of your herd or flock that the LORD has given you, and eat it freely in your own community. <sup>22</sup> You may eat it as you would the gazelle or the deer: the unclean and the clean eating it together. <sup>23g</sup> But make sure that you do not eat of the blood; for blood is life; you shall not eat that life with the flesh. <sup>24</sup> Do not eat of the blood, therefore, but pour it out on the ground like water. <sup>25</sup> Do not eat of it, that you and your children after you may prosper for doing what is right in the sight of the LORD. <sup>26</sup> However, any sacred gifts or votive offerings that you may have, you shall bring with you to the place which the LORD chooses, <sup>27</sup> and there you must sacrifice your burnt offerings, both the flesh and the blood, on the altar of the LORD, your God; of your other sacrifices the blood indeed must be poured out against the altar of the LORD, your God,<sup>h</sup> but their flesh you may eat.

<sup>28</sup> Be careful to heed all these words I command you today, that you and your descendants after you may forever prosper for doing what is good and right in the sight of the LORD, your God.<sup>i</sup>

Warning Against Abominable Practices. <sup>29j</sup> When the LORD, your God, cuts down from before you the nations you are going in to dispossess, and you have dispossessed them and are settled in their land, <sup>30</sup>be careful that you not be trapped into following them after they have been destroyed before you. Do not inquire regarding their gods, “How did these nations serve their gods, so I might do the same.” <sup>31</sup>You shall not worship the LORD, your God, that way, because they offered to their gods every abomination that the LORD detests, even burning their sons and daughters to their gods.<sup>k</sup>

CHAPTER 13

Penalties for Enticing to Idolatry.<sup>1</sup>Every word that I command you, you shall be careful to observe, neither adding to it nor subtracting from it.

<sup>2l</sup> If there arises in your midst a prophet or a dreamer* who promises you a sign or wonder, <sup>3</sup>saying, “Let us go after other gods,” whom you have not known, “and let us serve them,” and the sign or wonder foretold to you comes to pass, <sup>4</sup>do not listen to the words of that prophet or that dreamer; for the LORD, your God, is testing you to know whether you really love the LORD, your God, with all your heart and soul.<sup>m</sup> <sup>5</sup>The LORD, your God, shall you follow, and him shall you fear; his commandments shall you observe, and to his voice shall you listen; him you shall serve, and to him you shall hold fast.<sup>n</sup> <sup>6</sup>But that prophet or that dreamer shall be put to death, because, in order to lead you astray from the way which the LORD, your God, has commanded you to take, the prophet or dreamer has spoken apostasy against the LORD, your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt and redeemed you from the house of slavery. Thus shall you purge the evil from your midst.<sup>o</sup>

<sup>7</sup>If your brother, your father’s child or your mother’s child, your son or daughter, your beloved spouse, or your intimate friend entices you secretly, saying, “Come, let us serve other gods,” whom you and your ancestors have not known, <sup>8</sup>any of the gods of the surrounding peoples, near to you or far away, from one end of the earth to the other: <sup>9</sup>do not yield or listen to any such person; show no pity or compassion and do not shield such a one,<sup>p</sup> <sup>10q</sup>but kill that person. Your hand shall be the first raised to put such a one to death; the hand of all the people shall follow. <sup>11</sup>You shall stone that person to death, for seeking to lead you astray from the LORD, your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of slavery. <sup>12</sup>And all Israel shall hear of it and fear, and never again do such evil as this in your midst.<sup>r</sup>

<sup>13</sup>If you hear it said concerning one of the cities which the LORD, your God, gives you to dwell in, <sup>14</sup>that certain scoundrels have sprung up in your midst and have led astray the inhabitants of their city, saying, “Come, let us serve other gods,” whom you have not known, <sup>15</sup>you must inquire carefully into the matter and investigate it thoroughly. If you find that it is true and an established fact that this abomination has been committed in your midst,<sup>s 16t</sup> you shall put the inhabitants of that city to the sword, placing the city and all that is in it, even its livestock, under the ban.<sup>17</sup> Having heaped up all its spoils in the middle of its square, you shall burn the city with all its spoils as a whole burnt offering to the LORD, your God. Let it be a heap of ruins forever, never to be rebuilt.<sup>18</sup> You shall not hold on to anything that is under the ban; then the LORD will turn from his burning anger and show you mercy, and in showing you mercy multiply you as he swore to your ancestors,<sup>19</sup> because you have listened to the voice of the LORD, your God, keeping all his commandments, which I give you today, doing what is right in the sight of the LORD, your God.

CHAPTER 14

See RG 172–76

Improper Mourning Rites. <sup>1</sup>You are children of the LORD, your God. You shall not gash yourselves nor shave the hair above your foreheads for the dead.<sup>u</sup> <sup>2</sup>For you are a people holy to the LORD, your God; the LORD, your God, has chosen you from all the peoples on the face of the earth to be a people specially his own.<sup>v</sup>

Clean and Unclean Animals. <sup>3</sup>You shall not eat any abominable thing.<sup>w</sup> <sup>4x</sup> These are the animals you may eat: the ox, the sheep, the goat, <sup>5</sup>the deer, the gazelle, the roebuck, the wild goat, the ibex, the antelope, and the mountain sheep. <sup>6</sup>Any among the animals that has divided hooves, with the foot cloven in two, and that chews the cud you may eat. <sup>7</sup>But you shall not eat any of the following that chew the cud or have cloven hooves: the camel, the hare, and the rock badger, which indeed chew the cud, but do not have divided hooves; they are unclean for you. <sup>8</sup>And the pig, which indeed has divided hooves, with cloven foot, but does not chew the cud, is unclean for you. Their flesh you shall not eat, and their dead bodies you shall not touch.

<sup>9</sup>These you may eat, of all that live in the water: whatever has both fins and scales you may eat, <sup>10</sup>but all those that lack either fins or scales you shall not eat; they are unclean for you.

<sup>21</sup>You shall not eat the carcass of any animal that has died of itself; but you may give it to a resident alien within your gates to eat, or you may sell it to a foreigner. For you are a people holy to the LORD, your God.<sup>y</sup>

You shall not boil a young goat in its mother's milk.*

Tithes. <sup>22</sup>Each year you shall tithe all the produce of your seed that grows in the field;<sup>z</sup> <sup>23</sup>then in the place which the LORD, your God, chooses as the dwelling place of his name<sup>a</sup> you shall eat in his presence the tithe of your grain, wine and oil, as well as the firstlings of your herd and flock, that you may learn always to fear the LORD, your God. <sup>24b</sup> But if, when the LORD, your God, blesses you, the journey is too much for you and you are not able to bring your tithe, because the place which the LORD, your God, chooses to put his name is too far for you, <sup>25</sup>you may exchange the tithe for money, and with the money securely in hand, go to the place which the LORD, your God, chooses. <sup>26</sup>You may then exchange the money for whatever you desire, oxen or sheep, wine or beer, or anything else you want, and there in the presence of the LORD, your God, you shall consume it and rejoice, you and your household together.<sup>c</sup> <sup>27</sup>But do not neglect the Levite within your gates, for he has no hereditary portion with you.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>28e</sup> At the end of every third year you shall bring out all the tithes of your produce for that year and deposit them within your own communities, <sup>29</sup>that the Levite who has no hereditary portion with you, and also the resident alien, the orphan and the widow within your gates, may come and eat and be satisfied; so that the LORD, your God, may bless you in all that you undertake.

CHAPTER 15

Debts and the Poor. <sup>1</sup>At the end of every seven-year period* you shall have a remission of debts,<sup>f</sup> <sup>2</sup>and this is the manner of the remission. Creditors shall remit all claims on loans made to a neighbor, not pressing the neighbor, one who is kin, because the LORD's remission has been proclaimed. <sup>3</sup>You may press a foreigner, but you shall remit the claim on what your kin owes to you.<sup>g</sup> <sup>4h</sup> However, since the LORD, your God, will bless you abundantly in the land the LORD, your God, will give you to possess as a heritage, there shall be no one of you in need <sup>5</sup>if you but listen to the voice of the LORD, your God, and carefully observe this entire commandment which I enjoin on you today. <sup>6</sup>Since the LORD, your God, will bless you as he promised, you will lend to many nations, and borrow from none;<sup>i</sup> you will rule over many nations, and none will rule over you.

<sup>7j</sup> If one of your kindred is in need in any community in the land which the LORD, your God, is giving you, you shall not harden your heart nor close your hand against your kin who is in need. <sup>8</sup>Instead, you shall freely open your hand and generously lend what suffices to meet that need.<sup>k</sup> <sup>9</sup>Be careful not to entertain the mean thought, "The seventh year, the year of remission, is near," so that you would begrudge your kin who is in need and give nothing, and your kin would cry to the LORD against you and you would be held guilty.<sup>l</sup> <sup>10</sup>When you give, give generously and not with a stingy heart; for that, the LORD, your God, will bless you in all your works and undertakings. <sup>11</sup>The land will never lack for needy persons; that is why I command you: "Open your hand freely to your poor and to your needy kin in your land."<sup>m</sup>

Hebrew Slaves. <sup>12n</sup> If your kin, a Hebrew man or woman, sells himself or herself to you, he or she is to serve you for six years, but in the seventh year you shall release him or her as a free person. <sup>13o</sup> When you release a male from your service, as a free person, you shall not send him away empty-handed, <sup>14</sup>but shall weigh him down with gifts from your flock and threshing floor and wine press; as the LORD, your God, has blessed you, so you shall give to him. <sup>15</sup>For remember that you too were slaves in the land of Egypt, and the LORD, your God, redeemed you. That is why I am giving you this command today.<sup>p 16q</sup> But if he says to you, “I do not wish to leave you,” because he loves you and your household, since he is well off with you,<sup>17</sup> you shall take an awl and put it through his ear* into the door, and he shall be your slave forever. Your female slave, also, you shall treat in the same way.<sup>18</sup> Do not be reluctant when you let them go free, since the service they have given you for six years was worth twice a hired laborer’s salary; and the LORD, your God, will bless you in everything you do.

Firstlings. <sup>19r</sup> You shall consecrate to the LORD, your God, every male firstling born in your herd and in your flock. You shall not work the firstlings of your cattle, nor shear the firstlings of your flock.<sup>20</sup> In the presence of the LORD, your God, you shall eat them year after year, you and your household, in the place that the LORD will choose.<sup>s 21t</sup> But if a firstling has any defect, lameness or blindness, any such serious defect, you shall not sacrifice it to the LORD, your God,<sup>22</sup> but in your own communities you may eat it, the unclean and the clean eating it together, as you would a gazelle or a deer.<sup>23</sup> Only, you must not eat of its blood; you shall pour it out on the ground like water.

CHAPTER 16

See RG 172–76

Feast of the Passover. <sup>1</sup>Observe the month of Abib* by keeping the Passover of the LORD, your God,<sup>u</sup> since it was in the month of Abib that the LORD, your God, brought you out of Egypt by night. <sup>2</sup>You shall offer the Passover sacrifice from your flock and your herd to the LORD, your God, in the place the LORD will choose as the dwelling place of his name.<sup>v</sup> <sup>3w</sup> You shall not eat leavened bread with it. For seven days you shall eat with it only unleavened bread, the bread of affliction, so that you may remember as long as you live the day you left the land of Egypt; for in hurried flight you left the land of Egypt. <sup>4</sup>No leaven is to be found with you in all your territory for seven days, and none of the meat which you sacrificed on the evening of the first day shall be kept overnight for the next day.

<sup>5</sup>You may not sacrifice the Passover in any of the communities which the LORD, your God, gives you; <sup>6</sup>only at the place which the LORD, your God, will choose as the dwelling place of his name, and in the evening at sunset, at the very time when you left Egypt, shall you sacrifice the Passover.<sup>x</sup> <sup>7</sup>You shall cook and eat it at the place the LORD, your God, will choose; then in the morning you may return to your tents. <sup>8</sup>For six days you shall eat unleavened bread, and on the seventh day there shall be a solemn assembly for the LORD, your God; on that day you shall do no work.<sup>y</sup>

Feast of Weeks. <sup>9z</sup> You shall count off seven weeks; begin to count the seven weeks from the day when the sickle is first put to the standing grain. <sup>10</sup>You shall then keep the feast of Weeks* for the LORD, your God, and the measure of your own voluntary offering which you will give shall be in proportion to the blessing the LORD, your God, has given you. <sup>11</sup>You shall rejoice in the presence of the LORD, your God, together with your son and daughter, your male and female slave, and the Levite within your gates, as well as the resident alien, the orphan, and the widow among you, in the place which the LORD, your God, will choose as the dwelling place of his name.<sup>a</sup> <sup>12</sup>Remember that you too were slaves in Egypt, so carry out these statutes carefully.

Feast of Booths. <sup>13b</sup> You shall celebrate the feast of Booths* for seven days, when you have gathered in the produce from your threshing floor and wine press. <sup>14</sup>You shall rejoice at your feast,<sup>c</sup> together with your son and daughter, your male and female slave, and also the Levite, the resident alien, the orphan and the widow within your gates. <sup>15</sup>For seven days you shall celebrate this feast for the LORD, your God, in the place which the LORD will choose; since the LORD, your God, has blessed you in all your crops and in all your undertakings, you will be full of joy.

<sup>16</sup>Three times a year,<sup>d</sup> then, all your males shall appear before the LORD, your God, in the place which he will choose: at the feast of Unleavened Bread, at the feast of Weeks, and at the feast of Booths. They shall not appear before the LORD empty-handed, <sup>17</sup>but each with his own gift, in proportion to the blessing which the LORD, your God, has given to you.

Justice. <sup>18e</sup> In all the communities which the LORD, your God, is giving you, you shall appoint judges and officials throughout your tribes to administer true justice for the people. <sup>19</sup>You must not distort justice: you shall not show partiality;<sup>f</sup> you shall not take a bribe, for a bribe blinds the eyes even of the wise and twists the words even of the just. <sup>20</sup>Justice, justice alone shall you pursue, so that you may live and possess the land the LORD, your God, is giving you.

Illicit Worship. <sup>21g</sup> You shall not plant an asherah* of any kind of wood next to the altar of the LORD, your God, which you will build;<sup>h</sup> <sup>22</sup>nor shall you erect a sacred pillar, such as the LORD, your God, hates.

CHAPTER 17

<sup>1</sup>You shall not sacrifice to the LORD, your God, an ox or a sheep with any serious defect;<sup>i</sup> that would be an abomination to the LORD, your God.

<sup>2j</sup> If there is found in your midst, in any one of the communities which the LORD, your God, gives you, a man or a woman who does evil in the sight of the LORD, your God, and transgresses his covenant,<sup>k</sup> <sup>3</sup>by going to serve other gods, by bowing down to them, to the sun or the moon or any of the host of heaven, contrary to my command;<sup>l</sup> <sup>4</sup>and if you are told or hear of it, you must investigate it thoroughly. If the truth of the matter is established that this abomination has been committed in Israel, <sup>5</sup>you shall bring the man or the woman who has done this evil deed out to your gates* and stone the man or the woman to death. <sup>6</sup>Only on the testimony of two or three witnesses shall a person be put to death;<sup>m</sup> no one shall be put to death on the testimony of only one witness. <sup>7</sup>The hands of the witnesses shall be the first raised to put the person to death, and afterward the hands of all the people.<sup>n</sup> Thus shall you purge the evil from your midst.

Judges. <sup>8o</sup> If there is a case for judgment which proves too baffling for you to decide, in a matter of bloodshed or of law or of injury, matters of dispute within your gates, you shall then go up to the place which the LORD, your God, will choose, <sup>9</sup>to the levitical priests or to the judge who is in office at that time. They shall investigate the case and then announce to you the decision.<sup>p</sup> <sup>10</sup>You shall act according to the decision they announce to you in the place which the LORD will choose, carefully observing everything as they instruct you. <sup>11</sup>You shall carry out the instruction they give you and the judgment they pronounce, without turning aside either to the right or left from the decision they announce to you. <sup>12</sup>Anyone who acts presumptuously and does not obey the priest* who officiates there in the ministry of the LORD, your God, or the judge, shall die. Thus shall you purge the evil from Israel. <sup>13</sup>And all the people, on hearing of it, shall fear, and will never again act presumptuously.<sup>q</sup>

The King. <sup>14r</sup> When you have come into the land which the LORD, your God, is giving you, and have taken possession of it and settled in it, should you then decide, “I will set a king over me, like all the surrounding nations,”<sup>s 15</sup> you may indeed set over you a king whom the LORD, your God, will choose.<sup>t</sup> Someone from among your own kindred you may set over you as king; you may not set over you a foreigner, who is no kin of yours. <sup>16*</sup> But he shall not have a great number of horses; nor shall he make his people go back again to Egypt to acquire many horses, for the LORD said to you, Do not go back that way again.<sup>u 17</sup> Neither shall he have a great number of wives, lest his heart turn away,<sup>v</sup> nor shall he accumulate a vast amount of silver and gold. <sup>18</sup> When he is sitting upon his royal throne, he shall write a copy of this law* upon a scroll from the one that is in the custody of the levitical priests.<sup>w 19*x</sup> It shall remain with him and he shall read it as long as he lives, so that he may learn to fear the LORD, his God, and to observe carefully all the words of this law and these statutes, <sup>20</sup> so that he does not exalt himself over his kindred or turn aside from this commandment to the right or to the left, and so that he and his descendants may reign long in Israel.

CHAPTER 18

See RG 172–76

Priests. <sup>1</sup>The levitical priests, the whole tribe of Levi, shall have no hereditary portion with Israel; they shall eat the fire offerings of the LORD and the portions due to him.<sup>y</sup> <sup>2</sup>They shall have no heritage among their kindred; the LORD himself is their heritage, as he has told them.<sup>z</sup> <sup>3</sup>This shall be the due of the priests from the people: those who are offering a sacrifice, whether an ox or a sheep, shall give the priest the shoulder, the jowls and the stomach. <sup>4</sup>The first fruits of your grain, your wine, and your oil,<sup>a</sup> as well as the first shearing of your flock, you shall also give him. <sup>5</sup>For the LORD, your God, has chosen him out of all your tribes to be in attendance to minister in the name of the LORD, him and his descendants for all time.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>6</sup>When a Levite goes from one of your communities anywhere in Israel in which he has been residing, to visit, as his heart may desire, the place which the LORD will choose, <sup>7</sup>and ministers there in the name of the LORD, his God, like all his fellow Levites who stand before the LORD there, <sup>8</sup>he shall receive the same portions to eat, along with his stipends and patrimony.*

Prophets. <sup>9</sup>When you come into the land which the LORD, your God, is giving you, you shall not learn to imitate the abominations of the nations there.<sup>c</sup> <sup>10d</sup> Let there not be found among you anyone who causes their son or daughter to pass through the fire,* or practices divination, or is a soothsayer, augur, or sorcerer, <sup>11</sup>or who casts spells, consults ghosts and spirits, or seeks oracles from the dead. <sup>12</sup>Anyone who does such things is an abomination to the LORD, and because of such abominations the LORD, your God, is dispossessing them before you.<sup>e</sup> <sup>13</sup>You must be altogether sincere with the LORD, your God. <sup>14</sup>Although these nations whom you are about to dispossess listen to their soothsayers and diviners, the LORD, your God, will not permit you to do so.

<sup>15</sup>A prophet like me* will the LORD, your God, raise up for you from among your own kindred; that is the one to whom you shall listen.<sup>f</sup> <sup>16</sup>This is exactly what you requested of the LORD, your God, at Horeb on the day of the assembly, when you said, “Let me not again hear the voice of the LORD, my God, nor see this great fire any more, or I will die.”<sup>g</sup> <sup>17</sup>And the LORD said to me, What they have said is good. <sup>18</sup>I will raise up for them a prophet like you from among their kindred, and will put my words into the mouth of the prophet; the prophet shall tell them all that I command. <sup>h</sup> <sup>19</sup>Anyone who will not listen to my words which the prophet speaks in my name, I myself will hold accountable for it. <sup>i</sup> <sup>20</sup>But if a prophet presumes to speak a word in my name <sup>j</sup> that I have not commanded, or speaks in the name of other gods, that prophet shall die.

<sup>21</sup>Should you say to yourselves, “How can we recognize that a word is one the LORD has not spoken?”, <sup>22</sup>if a prophet speaks in the name of the LORD but the word does not come true, it is a word the LORD did not speak. The prophet has spoken it presumptuously; do not fear him.

CHAPTER 19

See RG 172–76

Cities of Refuge. <sup>1k</sup> When the LORD, your God, cuts down the nations whose land the LORD, your God, is giving you, and you have dispossessed them and settled in their cities and houses, <sup>l</sup> <sup>2</sup> you shall set apart three cities* in the land the LORD, your God, is giving you to possess. <sup>3</sup> You shall measure the distances and divide into three regions the land of which the LORD, your God, is giving you possession, so that every homicide will be able to find a refuge.

<sup>4</sup> This is the case of a homicide who may take refuge there and live: when someone strikes down a neighbor unintentionally and not out of previous hatred. <sup>5</sup> For example, if someone goes with a neighbor to a forest to cut wood, wielding an ax to cut down a tree, and its head flies off the handle and hits the neighbor a mortal blow, such a person may take refuge in one of these cities and live. <sup>6</sup> Should the distance be too great, the avenger of blood* might in hot anger pursue, overtake, and strike the killer dead, even though that one does not deserve the death penalty since there had been no previous hatred; <sup>7</sup> for this reason I command you: Set apart three cities.

<sup>8m</sup> But if the LORD, your God, enlarges your territory, as he swore to your ancestors, and gives you all the land he promised your ancestors he would give, <sup>9</sup> because you carefully observe this whole commandment which I give you today, loving the LORD, your God, and ever walking in his ways, then add three more cities to these three. <sup>10</sup> Thus, in the land which the LORD, your God, is giving you as a heritage, innocent blood will not be shed and you will not become guilty of bloodshed.<sup>n</sup>

<sup>11</sup> However, if someone, hating a neighbor, lies in wait, attacks, and strikes the neighbor dead, and then flees to one of these cities, <sup>12</sup> the elders of the killer's own city shall send and have the killer taken from there, to be handed over to the avenger of blood and slain. <sup>13</sup> Do not show pity, but purge from Israel the innocent blood, so that it may go well with you.<sup>o</sup>

Removal of Landmarks. <sup>14</sup> You shall not move your neighbor's boundary markers* erected by your forebears in the heritage that will be allotted to you in the land the LORD, your God, is giving you to possess.<sup>p</sup>

False Witnesses. <sup>15q</sup> One witness alone shall not stand against someone in regard to any crime or any offense that may have been committed; a charge shall stand only on the testimony of two or three witnesses.<sup>r</sup>

<sup>16</sup>If a hostile witness rises against someone to accuse that person of wrongdoing, <sup>17</sup>the two parties in the dispute shall appear in the presence of the LORD, in the presence of the priests and judges in office at that time,<sup>s</sup> <sup>18t</sup> and the judges must investigate it thoroughly. If the witness is a false witness and has falsely accused the other,<sup>u</sup> <sup>19</sup>you shall do to the false witness just as that false witness planned to do to the other. Thus shall you purge the evil from your midst. <sup>20</sup>The rest shall hear and be afraid, and never again do such an evil thing as this in your midst.<sup>v</sup> <sup>21</sup>Do not show pity. Life for life,* eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, and foot for foot!<sup>w</sup>

CHAPTER 20

Courage in War. <sup>1</sup>When you go out to war against your enemies and you see horses and chariots and an army greater than your own, you shall not be afraid of them, for the LORD, your God, who brought you up from the land of Egypt, will be with you.

<sup>2</sup>When you are drawing near to battle, the priest shall come forward and speak to the army, <sup>3</sup>and say to them, “Hear, O Israel! Today you are drawing near for battle against your enemies. Do not be weakhearted or afraid, alarmed or frightened by them. <sup>4</sup>For it is the LORD, your God, who goes with you to fight for you against your enemies and give you victory.”<sup>x</sup>

<sup>5</sup>Then the officials shall speak to the army:<sup>y</sup> “Is there anyone who has built a new house and not yet dedicated it? Let him return home, lest he die in battle and another dedicate it. <sup>6</sup>Is there anyone who has planted a vineyard and not yet plucked its fruit? Let him return home, lest he die in battle and another pluck its fruit. <sup>7</sup>Is there anyone who has betrothed a woman and not yet married her? Let him return home, lest he die in battle and another marry her.”<sup>z</sup> <sup>8</sup>The officials shall continue to speak to the army: “Is there anyone who is afraid and weakhearted?<sup>a</sup> Let him return home, or else he might make the hearts of his fellows melt as his does.”

<sup>9</sup>When the officials have finished speaking to the army, military commanders shall be appointed over them.

Cities of the Enemy. <sup>10b</sup> When you draw near a city to attack it, offer it terms of peace. <sup>11</sup>If it agrees to your terms of peace and lets you in, all the people to be found in it shall serve you in forced labor. <sup>12c</sup> But if it refuses to make peace with you and instead joins battle with you, lay siege to it, <sup>13</sup>and when the LORD, your God, delivers it into your power, put every male in it to the sword; <sup>14</sup>but the women and children and livestock and anything else in the city—all its spoil—you may take as plunder for yourselves, and you may enjoy this spoil of your enemies, which the LORD, your God, has given you.

<sup>15*</sup> That is how you shall deal with any city at a considerable distance from you, which does not belong to these nations here. <sup>16d</sup> But in the cities of these peoples that the LORD, your God, is giving you as a heritage, you shall not leave a single soul alive. <sup>17</sup>You must put them all under the ban—the Hittites, Amorites, Canaanites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites—just as the LORD, your God, has commanded you, <sup>18</sup>so that they do not teach you to do all the abominations that they do for their gods, and you thus sin against the LORD, your God.

Trees of a Besieged City. <sup>19e</sup> When you are at war with a city and have to lay siege to it for a long time before you capture it, you shall not destroy its trees by putting an ax to them. You may eat of them, but you must not cut them down. Are the trees of the field human beings, that they should be included in your siege? <sup>20</sup>However, those trees which you know are not fruit trees you may destroy. You may cut them down to build siegeworks against the city that is waging war with you, until it falls.

CHAPTER 21

See RG 172–76

Absolution of Untraced Murder. * <sup>1</sup>If the corpse of someone who has been slain is found lying in the open, in the land the LORD, your God, is giving you to possess, and it is not known who killed the person, <sup>2</sup>your elders and judges shall go out and measure the distances to the cities that are in the neighborhood of the corpse. <sup>3f</sup> When it is established which city is nearest the corpse, the elders of that city shall take a heifer that has never been put to work or worn a yoke; <sup>4</sup>the elders of that city shall bring the heifer down to a wadi with an everflowing stream at a place that has not been plowed or sown, and shall break the heifer's neck there in the wadi. <sup>5</sup>The priests, the descendants of Levi, shall come forward, for the LORD, your God, has chosen them to minister to him and to bless in the name of the LORD, and every case of dispute or assault shall be for them to decide. <sup>6</sup>Then all the elders of that city nearest the corpse shall wash their hands* over the heifer whose neck was broken in the wadi, <sup>7</sup>and shall declare, "Our hands did not shed this blood,* and our eyes did not see the deed. <sup>8</sup>Absolve, O LORD, your people Israel, whom you have redeemed, and do not let the guilt of shedding innocent blood remain in the midst of your people Israel." Thus they shall be absolved from the guilt of bloodshed, <sup>9</sup>and you shall purge the innocent blood from your midst, and do what is right in the eyes of the LORD.<sup>g</sup>

Marriage with a Female Captive. <sup>10h</sup> When you go out to war against your enemies and the LORD, your God, delivers them into your power, so that you take captives, <sup>11</sup>if you see a beautiful woman among the captives and become so enamored of her that you wish to have her as a wife, <sup>12</sup>and so you take her home to your house, she must shave her head,* cut her nails, <sup>13</sup>lay aside her captive's garb, and stay in your house, mourning her father and mother for a full month. After that, you may come to her, and you shall be her husband and she shall be your wife. <sup>14</sup>If later on you lose your liking for her, you shall give her her freedom, if she wishes it; you must not sell her for money. Do not enslave her, since you have violated her.<sup>i</sup>

Rights of the Firstborn. <sup>15j</sup> If a man has two wives, one loved and the other unloved, and if both the loved and the unloved bear him sons, but the firstborn is the son of the unloved wife: <sup>16</sup>when he comes to bequeath his property to his sons he may not consider as his firstborn the son of the wife he loves, in preference to the son of the wife he does not love, the firstborn. <sup>17</sup>On the contrary, he shall recognize as his firstborn the son of the unloved wife, giving him a double share of whatever he happens to own, since he is the first fruits of his manhood, and to him belong the rights of the firstborn.<sup>k</sup>

The Stubborn and Rebellious Son. <sup>18l</sup> If someone has a stubborn and rebellious son who will not listen to his father or mother, and will not listen to them even though they discipline him,<sup>m</sup> <sup>19</sup>his father and mother shall take hold of him and bring him out to the elders at the gate* of his home city, <sup>20</sup>where they shall say to the elders of the city, “This son of ours is a stubborn and rebellious fellow who will not listen to us; he is a glutton and a drunkard.”<sup>n</sup> <sup>21</sup>Then all his fellow citizens shall stone him to death. Thus shall you purge the evil from your midst, and all Israel will hear and be afraid.<sup>o</sup>

Corpse of a Criminal. <sup>22p</sup> If a man guilty of a capital offense is put to death and you hang him on a tree, <sup>23</sup>his corpse shall not remain on the tree overnight.<sup>q</sup> You must bury it the same day; anyone who is hanged is a curse of God.* You shall not defile the land which the LORD, your God, is giving you as a heritage.

CHAPTER 22

See RG 172–76

Concern for the Neighbor.<sup>1r</sup> You shall not see your neighbor's ox or sheep going astray and ignore it; you must bring it back. <sup>2</sup>If this neighbor does not live near you, or you do not know who the owner may be, take it to your own house and keep it with you until your neighbor claims it; then return it. <sup>3</sup>You shall do the same with a donkey; you shall do the same with a garment; and you shall do the same with anything else which your neighbor loses and you happen to find. You may not ignore them.

<sup>4</sup>You shall not see your neighbor's donkey or ox fallen on the road and ignore it; you must help in lifting it up.

Various Precepts. <sup>5</sup>A woman shall not wear a man's garment, nor shall a man put on a woman's clothing; for anyone who does such things is an abomination to the LORD, your God.<sup>s</sup>

<sup>6t</sup> If, while walking along, you come across a bird's nest with young birds or eggs in it, in any tree or on the ground, and the mother bird is sitting on them, you shall not take away the mother bird along with her brood. <sup>7</sup>You must let the mother go, taking only her brood, in order that you shall prosper and have a long life.

<sup>8</sup>When you build a new house, put a parapet around the roof, so that you do not bring bloodguilt upon your house if someone falls off.<sup>u</sup>

<sup>9* v</sup> You shall not sow your vineyard with two different kinds of seed, or else its produce shall become forfeit, both the crop you have sown and the yield of the vineyard. <sup>10</sup>You shall not plow with an ox and a donkey harnessed together. <sup>11</sup>You shall not wear cloth made from wool and linen woven together.

<sup>12</sup>You shall put tassels on the four corners of the cloak that you wrap around yourself.<sup>w</sup>

Marriage Legislation. <sup>13</sup>If a man, after marrying a woman and having relations with her, comes to dislike her,<sup>x</sup> <sup>14</sup>and accuses her of misconduct and slanders her by saying, "I married this woman, but when I approached her I did not find evidence of her virginity," <sup>15</sup>the father and mother of the young woman shall take the evidence of her virginity* and bring it to the elders at the city gate. <sup>16</sup>There the father of the young woman shall say to the elders, "I gave my daughter to this man in marriage, but he has come to dislike her, <sup>17</sup>and now accuses her of misconduct, saying: 'I did not find evidence of your daughter's virginity.' But here is the evidence of my daughter's virginity!" And they shall spread out the cloth before the elders of the city. <sup>18</sup>Then these city elders shall take the man and discipline him, *<sup>19</sup>and fine him one hundred silver shekels, which they shall give to the young woman's father, because the man slandered a virgin in Israel. She shall remain his wife, and he may not divorce her as long as he lives. <sup>20</sup>But if this charge is true, and evidence of the young woman's virginity is not found, <sup>21</sup>they shall bring the young woman to the entrance of her father's house and there the men of her town shall stone her to death, because she committed a shameful crime in Israel by prostituting herself in her father's house. Thus shall you purge the evil from your midst.<sup>y</sup>

<sup>22</sup>If a man is discovered lying with a woman who is married to another, they both shall die, the man who was lying with the woman as well as the woman.<sup>z</sup> Thus shall you purge the evil from Israel.

<sup>23</sup>If there is a young woman, a virgin who is betrothed,* and a man comes upon her in the city and lies with her, <sup>24</sup>you shall bring them both out to the gate of the city and there stone them to death: the young woman because she did not cry out though she was in the city, and the man because he violated his neighbor's wife. Thus shall you purge the evil from your midst. <sup>25</sup>But if it is in the open fields that a man comes upon the betrothed young woman, seizes her and lies with her, only the man who lay with her shall die. <sup>26</sup>You shall do nothing to the young woman, since the young woman is not guilty of a capital offense. As when a man rises up against his neighbor and murders him, so in this case: * <sup>a</sup> <sup>27</sup>it was in the open fields that he came upon her, and though the betrothed young woman may have cried out, there was no one to save her.

<sup>28b</sup> If a man comes upon a young woman, a virgin who is not betrothed, seizes her and lies with her, and they are discovered, <sup>29</sup>the man who lay with her shall give the young woman's father fifty silver shekels and she will be his wife, because he has violated her. He may not divorce her as long as he lives.

CHAPTER 23

Membership in the Assembly. <sup>2*</sup> No one whose testicles have been crushed or whose penis has been cut off may come into the assembly of the LORD.<sup>d</sup> <sup>3</sup>No one born of an illicit union may come into the assembly of the LORD, nor any descendant of such even to the tenth generation may come into the assembly of the LORD.<sup>e</sup> <sup>4f</sup> No Ammonite or Moabite may ever come into the assembly of the LORD, nor may any of their descendants even to the tenth generation come into the assembly of the LORD,<sup>5</sup> because they would not come to meet you with food and water on your journey after you left Egypt, and because they hired Balaam, son of Beor, from Pethor in Aram Naharaim, to curse you. <sup>6</sup>The LORD, your God, would not listen to Balaam but turned his curse into a blessing for you, because the LORD, your God, loves you. <sup>7</sup>Never seek their welfare or prosperity as long as you live.<sup>g</sup> <sup>8h</sup> Do not abhor the Edomite: he is your brother. Do not abhor the Egyptian: you were a resident alien in his country. <sup>9</sup>Children born to them may come into the assembly of the LORD in the third generation.

Cleanliness in Camp. <sup>10</sup>When in camp during an expedition against your enemies, you shall keep yourselves from anything bad. <sup>11i</sup> If one of you becomes unclean because of a nocturnal emission, he shall go outside the camp; he shall not come back into the camp. <sup>12</sup>Toward evening, he shall bathe in water; then, when the sun has set, he may come back into the camp. <sup>13</sup>Outside the camp you shall have a place set aside where you shall go. <sup>14</sup>You shall keep a trowel in your equipment and, when you go outside to relieve yourself, you shall dig a hole with it and then cover up your excrement. <sup>15</sup>Since the LORD, your God, journeys along in the midst of your camp to deliver you and to give your enemies over to you, your camp must be holy, so that he does not see anything indecent in your midst and turn away from you.<sup>j</sup>

Various Precepts. <sup>16k</sup> You shall not hand over to their master any slaves who have taken refuge with you from their master. <sup>17</sup>Let them live among you in any place they choose, in any one of your communities* that seems good to them. Do not oppress them.

<sup>18</sup>There shall be no temple prostitute* among the Israelite women, nor a temple prostitute among the Israelite men.<sup>l</sup> <sup>19</sup>You shall not offer a prostitute's fee or a dog's pay* as any kind of votive offering in the house of the LORD, your God; both these things are an abomination to the LORD, your God.<sup>m</sup>

<sup>20n</sup> You shall not demand interest from your kindred on a loan of money or of food or of anything else which is loaned. <sup>21</sup>From a foreigner you may demand interest, but you may not demand interest from your kindred, so that the LORD, your God, may bless you in all your undertakings on the land you are to enter and possess.

<sup>22o</sup> When you make a vow to the LORD, your God, you shall not delay in fulfilling it; for the LORD, your God, will surely require it of you and you will be held guilty. <sup>23</sup>Should you refrain from making a vow, you will not be held guilty. <sup>24</sup>But whatever your tongue utters you must be careful to do, just as you freely vowed to the LORD, your God, with your own mouth.

<sup>25</sup>When you go through your neighbor's vineyard, you may eat as many grapes as you wish, until you are satisfied, but do not put them in your basket. <sup>26</sup>When you go through your neighbor's grainfield, you may pluck some of the ears with your hand, but do not put a sickle to your neighbor's grain.

CHAPTER 24

See RG 172–76

Marriage Legislation. <sup>*1p</sup> When a man, after marrying a woman, is later displeased with her because he finds in her something indecent, and he writes out a bill of divorce and hands it to her, thus dismissing her from his house, <sup>2</sup>if on leaving his house she goes and becomes the wife of another man, <sup>3</sup> and the second husband, too, comes to dislike her and he writes out a bill of divorce and hands it to her, thus dismissing her from his house, or if this second man who has married her dies, <sup>4</sup>then her former husband, who dismissed her, may not again take her as his wife after she has become defiled. That would be an abomination before the LORD, and you shall not bring such guilt upon the land the LORD, your God, is giving you as a heritage.<sup>q</sup>

<sup>5r</sup> When a man is newly wed, he shall not go out on a military expedition, nor shall any duty be imposed on him. He shall be exempt for one year for the sake of his family, to bring joy to the wife he has married.

Pledges and Kidnappings. <sup>6*</sup> No one shall take a hand mill or even its upper stone as a pledge for debt, for that would be taking as a pledge the debtor's life.

<sup>7</sup>If anyone is caught kidnapping a fellow Israelite, enslaving or selling the victim, that kidnapper shall be put to death.<sup>s</sup> Thus shall you purge the evil from your midst.

Skin Diseases. <sup>8t</sup> In an attack of scaly infection* you shall be careful to observe exactly and to carry out all the instructions the levitical priests give you, as I have commanded them: observe them carefully. <sup>9u</sup> Remember what the LORD, your God, did to Miriam on the journey after you left Egypt.

Loans and Wages. <sup>10</sup>When you make a loan of any kind to your neighbor, you shall not enter the neighbor's house to receive the pledge, <sup>11</sup>but shall wait outside until the person to whom you are making the loan brings the pledge outside to you. <sup>12</sup>If the person is poor, you shall not sleep in the pledged garment, <sup>13</sup>but shall definitely return it at sunset, so that your neighbor may sleep in the garment<sup>v</sup> and bless you. That will be your justice before the LORD, your God.

Individual Responsibility. <sup>16</sup>Parents shall not be put to death for their children, nor shall children be put to death for their parents; only for one's own crime shall a person be put to death.<sup>z</sup>

Rights of the Unprotected. <sup>17a</sup> You shall not deprive the resident alien or the orphan of justice, nor take the clothing of a widow as pledge. <sup>18</sup>For, remember, you were slaves in Egypt, and the LORD, your God, redeemed you from there; that is why I command you to do this.

<sup>19b</sup> When you reap the harvest in your field and overlook a sheaf in the field, you shall not go back to get it; let it be for the resident alien, the orphan, and the widow, so that the LORD, your God, may bless you in all your undertakings. <sup>20</sup>When you knock down the fruit of your olive trees, you shall not go over the branches a second time; let what remains be for the resident alien, the orphan, and the widow. <sup>21</sup>When you pick your grapes, you shall not go over the vineyard a second time; let what remains be for the resident alien, the orphan, and the widow. <sup>22</sup>For remember that you were slaves in the land of Egypt; that is why I command you to do this.

CHAPTER 25

See RG 172–76

Limits on Punishments. <sup>1</sup>When there is a dispute and the parties draw near for judgment, and a decision is given, declaring one party in the right and the other in the wrong, <sup>2</sup>if the one in the wrong deserves whipping, the judge shall have him lie down and in the presence of the judge receive the number of lashes the crime warrants. <sup>3</sup>Forty lashes* may be given, but no more;<sup>c</sup> or else, if more lashes are added to these many blows, your brother will be degraded in your sight.

Treatment of Oxen.* <sup>4</sup>You shall not muzzle an ox when it treads out grain.<sup>d</sup>

Levirate Marriage. <sup>5e</sup> When brothers live together* and one of them dies without a son, the widow of the deceased shall not marry anyone outside the family; but her husband's brother shall come to her, marrying her and performing the duty of a brother-in-law.<sup>f</sup> <sup>6</sup>The firstborn son she bears shall continue the name of the deceased brother, that his name may not be blotted out from Israel. <sup>7</sup>But if a man does not want to marry his brother's wife, she shall go up to the elders at the gate and say, "My brother-in-law refuses to perpetuate his brother's name in Israel and does not intend to perform his duty toward me." <sup>8</sup>Thereupon the elders of his city shall summon him and speak to him. If he persists in saying, "I do not want to marry her," <sup>9*</sup> his sister-in-law, in the presence of the elders, shall go up to him and strip his sandal from his foot and spit in his face, declaring, "This is how one should be treated who will not build up his brother's family!" <sup>10</sup>And his name shall be called in Israel, "the house of the man stripped of his sandal."

Various Precepts. <sup>11</sup>When two men are fighting and the wife of one intervenes to save her husband from the blows of his opponent, if she stretches out her hand and seizes the latter by his genitals, <sup>12</sup>you shall chop off her hand; show no pity.

<sup>13g</sup> You shall not keep two differing weights in your bag, one heavy and the other light; <sup>14</sup>nor shall you keep two different ephahs* in your house, one large and the other small. <sup>15</sup>But use a full and just weight, a full and just ephah, so that you may have a long life on the land the LORD, your God, is giving you. <sup>16</sup>For everyone who does these things, everyone who does what is dishonest, is an abomination to the LORD, your God.<sup>h</sup>

<sup>17*</sup><sup>i</sup> Bear in mind what Amalek did to you on the journey after you left Egypt, <sup>18</sup>how he surprised you along the way, weak and weary as you were, and struck down at the rear all those who lagged behind; he did not fear God. <sup>19</sup>Therefore, when the LORD, your God, gives you rest from all your enemies round about in the land which the LORD, your God, is giving you to possess as a heritage, you shall blot out the memory of Amalek from under the heavens. Do not forget!

CHAPTER 26

See RG 172–76

Thanksgiving for the Harvest.<sup>1j</sup> When you have come into the land which the LORD, your God, is giving you as a heritage, and have taken possession and settled in it, <sup>2</sup>you shall take some first fruits<sup>k</sup> of the various products of the soil which you harvest from the land the LORD, your God, is giving you; put them in a basket and go to the place which the LORD, your God, will choose as the dwelling place for his name. <sup>3</sup>There you shall go to the priest in office at that time and say to him, “Today I acknowledge to the LORD, my God, that I have indeed come into the land which the LORD swore to our ancestors to give us.”<sup>l</sup> <sup>4</sup>The priest shall then take the basket from your hands and set it in front of the altar of the LORD, your God. <sup>5</sup>Then you shall declare in the presence of the LORD, your God, “My father was a refugee Aramean* who went down to Egypt with a small household and lived there as a resident alien.<sup>m</sup> But there he became a nation great, strong and numerous. <sup>6n</sup> When the Egyptians maltreated and oppressed us, imposing harsh servitude upon us, <sup>7</sup>we cried to the LORD, the God of our ancestors, and the LORD heard our cry and saw our affliction, our toil and our oppression. <sup>8</sup>Then the LORD brought us out of Egypt with a strong hand and outstretched arm, with terrifying power, with signs and wonders,<sup>o</sup> <sup>9</sup>and brought us to this place, and gave us this land, a land flowing with milk and honey.<sup>p</sup> <sup>10</sup>Now, therefore, I have brought the first fruits of the products of the soil which you, LORD, have given me.” You shall set them before the LORD, your God, and you shall bow down before the LORD, your God. <sup>11</sup>Then you and your household, together with the Levite and the resident aliens who live among you, shall celebrate with all these good things which the LORD, your God, has given you.<sup>q</sup>

Declaration Concerning Tithes. <sup>12</sup>When you have finished setting aside all the tithes of your produce in the third year,<sup>r</sup> the year of the tithes, and have given them to the Levite, the resident alien, the orphan and the widow, that they may eat and be satisfied in your own communities, <sup>13</sup>you shall declare before the LORD, your God, “I have purged my house of the sacred portion and I have given it to the Levite, the resident alien, the orphan and the widow, just as you have commanded me. I have not transgressed any of your commandments, nor forgotten any. <sup>14*</sup> I have not eaten any of the tithe while in mourning; I have not brought any of it while unclean; I have not offered any of it to the dead. I have thus obeyed the voice of the LORD, my God, and done just as you have commanded me.<sup>s</sup> <sup>15</sup>Look down, then, from heaven, your holy abode, and bless your people Israel and the fields you have given us, as you promised on oath to our ancestors, a land flowing with milk and honey.”<sup>t</sup>

The Covenant. <sup>16u</sup> This day the LORD, your God, is commanding you to observe these statutes and ordinances. Be careful, then, to observe them with your whole heart and with your whole being. <sup>17</sup>Today you have accepted the LORD’s agreement: he will be your God, and you will walk in his ways, observe his statutes, commandments, and ordinances, and obey his voice. <sup>18</sup>And today the LORD has accepted your agreement: you will be a people specially his own, as he promised you, you will keep all his commandments, <sup>19</sup>and he will set you high in praise and renown and glory above all nations he has made, and you will be a people holy to the LORD, your God, as he promised.

CHAPTER 27

See RG 172–76

The Altar on Mount Ebal. <sup>1</sup>Then Moses, with the elders of Israel, commanded the people, saying: Keep this whole commandment which I give you today. <sup>2</sup>On the day you cross the Jordan into the land which the LORD, your God, is giving you, set up some large stones and coat them with plaster. <sup>3</sup>Write on them,<sup>v</sup> at the time you cross, all the words of this law, so that you may enter the land which the LORD, your God, is giving you, a land flowing with milk and honey, just as the LORD, the God of your ancestors, promised you. <sup>4</sup>When you cross the Jordan, on Mount Ebal you shall set up these stones concerning which I command you today, and coat them with plaster,<sup>5w</sup> and you shall build there an altar to the LORD, your God, an altar made of stones that no iron tool has touched. <sup>6</sup>You shall build this altar of the LORD, your God, with unhewn stones, and shall offer on it burnt offerings to the LORD, your God. <sup>7</sup>You shall also offer communion sacrifices* and eat them there, rejoicing in the presence of the LORD, your God. <sup>8</sup>On the stones you shall inscribe all the words of this law very clearly.

<sup>9</sup>Moses, with the levitical priests, then said to all Israel: Be silent, Israel, and listen! This day you have become the people of the LORD, your God.<sup>x</sup> <sup>10</sup>You shall obey the voice of the LORD, your God, and keep his commandments and statutes which I am giving you today.

Preparation for Blessings and Curses. <sup>11</sup>That same day Moses commanded the people, saying: <sup>12y</sup> When you cross the Jordan, these shall stand on Mount Gerizim to bless the people: Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar, Joseph and Benjamin. <sup>13</sup>And these shall stand on Mount Ebal for the curse: Reuben, Gad, Asher, Zebulun, Dan and Naphtali.

The Twelve Curses. <sup>14</sup>The Levites shall proclaim in a loud voice to all the Israelites:

<sup>15*</sup> “Cursed be anyone who makes a carved or molten idol,<sup>z</sup> an abomination to the LORD, the work of a craftsman’s hands, and sets it up in secret!” And all the people shall answer, “Amen!”

<sup>16</sup>“Cursed be anyone who dishonors father or mother!”<sup>a</sup> And all the people shall answer, “Amen!”

<sup>17</sup>“Cursed be anyone who moves a neighbor’s boundary markers!”<sup>b</sup> And all the people shall answer, “Amen!”

<sup>18</sup>“Cursed be anyone who misleads the blind on their way!”<sup>c</sup> And all the people shall answer, “Amen!”

<sup>21</sup>“Cursed be anyone who has relations with any animal!”<sup>f</sup> And all the people shall answer, “Amen!”

<sup>23</sup>“Cursed be anyone who has relations with his mother-in-law!”<sup>h</sup> And all the people shall answer, “Amen!”

<sup>24</sup>“Cursed be anyone who strikes down a neighbor in secret!”<sup>i</sup> And all the people shall answer, “Amen!”

<sup>25</sup>“Cursed be anyone who accepts payment to kill an innocent person!”<sup>j</sup> And all the people shall answer, “Amen!”

<sup>26</sup>“Cursed be anyone whose actions do not uphold the words of this law!”<sup>k</sup> And all the people shall answer, “Amen!”

CHAPTER 28

See RG 172–76

Blessings for Obedience. <sup>1</sup>Now,<sup>l m</sup> if you diligently obey the voice of the LORD, your God, carefully observing all his commandments which I give you today, the LORD, your God, will set you high above all the nations of the earth.<sup>n</sup> <sup>2</sup>All these blessings will come upon you and overwhelm you when you obey the voice of the LORD, your God:

<sup>3o</sup> May you be blessed in the city, and blessed in the country!

<sup>4</sup>Blessed be the fruit of your womb, the produce of your soil and the offspring of your livestock, the issue of your herds and the young of your flocks! <sup>p</sup>

<sup>5</sup>Blessed be your grain basket and your kneading bowl!

<sup>6</sup>May you be blessed in your coming in, and blessed in your going out! <sup>*q</sup>

Victory and Prosperity. <sup>7</sup>The LORD will beat down before you the enemies that rise up against you; they will come out against you from one direction, and flee before you in seven. <sup>*r</sup><sup>8</sup>The LORD will affirm the blessing upon you, on your barns and on all your undertakings; he will bless you in the land that the LORD, your God, is giving you. <sup>9</sup>The LORD will establish you as a holy people, as he swore to you,<sup>s</sup> if you keep the commandments of the LORD, your God, and walk in his ways. <sup>10</sup>All the peoples of the earth will see that the name of the LORD is proclaimed over you,* and they will be afraid of you. <sup>t</sup><sup>11</sup>The LORD will generously increase the fruit of your womb, the offspring of your livestock, and the produce of your soil, upon the land which the LORD swore to your ancestors he would give you. <sup>u</sup><sup>12</sup>The LORD will open up for you his rich storehouse, the heavens, to give your land rain in due season and to bless all the works of your hands. You will lend to many nations but borrow from none. <sup>v</sup><sup>13</sup>The LORD will make you the head not the tail, the top not the bottom, if you obey the commandments of the LORD, your God, which I am giving you today, observing them carefully, <sup>14</sup>not turning aside, either to the right or to the left, from any of the words which I am giving you today, following other gods and serving them.<sup>w</sup>

Curses for Disobedience. <sup>15</sup>But if you do not obey the voice of the LORD, your God,<sup>x</sup> carefully observing all his commandments and statutes which I give you today, all these curses shall come upon you and overwhelm you:

<sup>16y</sup> May you be cursed in the city, and cursed in the country! <sup>17</sup>Cursed be your grain basket and your kneading bowl! <sup>18</sup>Cursed be the fruit of your womb, the produce of your soil and the offspring of your livestock, the issue of your herds and the young of your flocks! <sup>19</sup>May you be cursed in your coming in, and cursed in your going out!

Sickness and Defeat. <sup>20</sup>The LORD will send on you a curse, panic, and frustration in everything you set your hand to, until you are speedily destroyed and perish for the evil you have done in forsaking me. <sup>21z</sup> The LORD will make disease cling to you until he has made an end of you from the land you are entering to possess. <sup>22</sup>The LORD will strike you with consumption, fever, and inflammation, with fiery heat and drought, with blight and mildew, that will pursue you until you perish. <sup>23</sup>The heavens over your heads will be like bronze and the earth under your feet like iron.<sup>a</sup> <sup>24</sup>For rain the LORD will give your land powdery dust, which will come down upon you from the heavens until you are destroyed. <sup>25</sup>The LORD will let you be beaten down before your enemies; though you advance against them from one direction, you will flee before them in seven,* so that you will become an object of horror to all the kingdoms of the earth.<sup>b</sup> <sup>26</sup>Your corpses will become food for all the birds of the air and for the beasts of the field, with no one to frighten them off.<sup>c</sup> <sup>27</sup>The LORD will strike you with Egyptian boils<sup>d</sup> and with tumors, skin diseases and the itch, from none of which you can be cured. <sup>28e</sup> And the LORD will strike you with madness, blindness and panic, <sup>29</sup>so that even at midday you will grope in the dark as though blind, unable to find your way.

Despoilment. You will be oppressed and robbed continually, with no one to come to your aid. <sup>30</sup>Though you betroth a wife, another will have her. Though you build a house, you will not live in it. Though you plant a vineyard, you will not pluck its fruits.<sup>f</sup> <sup>31g</sup> Your ox will be slaughtered before your eyes, but you will not eat its flesh. Your donkey will be stolen in your presence, but you will never get it back. Your flocks will be given to your enemies, with no one to come to your aid. <sup>32</sup>Your sons and daughters will be given to another people while you strain your eyes looking for them every day, having no power to do anything. <sup>33</sup>A people you do not know will consume the fruit of your soil and of all your labor, and you will be thoroughly oppressed and continually crushed, <sup>34</sup>until you are driven mad by what your eyes must look upon. <sup>35</sup>The LORD will strike you with malignant boils of which you cannot be cured, on your knees and legs, and from the soles of your feet to the crown of your head.

Exile. <sup>36h</sup> The LORD will bring you, and your king whom you have set over you, to a nation which you and your ancestors have not known, and there you will serve other gods, of wood and stone, <sup>37</sup>and you will be a horror, a byword, a taunt among all the peoples to which the LORD will drive you.

Fruitless Labors. <sup>38i</sup> Though you take out seed to your field, you will harvest but little, for the locusts will devour it. <sup>39</sup>Though you plant and cultivate vineyards, you will not drink or store up the wine, for the worms will eat them. <sup>40</sup>Though you have olive trees throughout your country, you will have no oil for ointment, for your olives will drop off. <sup>41</sup>Though you beget sons and daughters, they will not remain with you, for they will go into captivity. <sup>42</sup>Buzzing insects will take possession of all your trees and the crops of your soil. <sup>43j</sup> The resident aliens among you will rise above you higher and higher, while you sink lower and lower. <sup>44</sup>They will lend to you, not you to them. They will become the head, you the tail.

<sup>45</sup>All these curses will come upon you, pursuing you and overwhelming you, until you are destroyed, because you would not obey the voice of the LORD, your God, by keeping his commandments and statutes which he gave you. <sup>k</sup> <sup>46</sup>They will be a sign and a wonder* for you and your descendants for all time. <sup>47</sup>Since you would not serve the LORD, your God, with heartfelt joy for abundance of every kind, <sup>48</sup>in hunger and thirst, in nakedness and utter want, you will serve the enemies whom the LORD will send against you. He will put an iron yoke on your neck, until he destroys you. <sup>l</sup>

Invasion and Siege. <sup>49m</sup> The LORD will raise up against you a nation from afar, from the end of the earth, that swoops down like an eagle, a nation whose language you do not understand, <sup>50</sup>a nation of fierce appearance, that shows neither respect for the aged nor mercy for the young. <sup>51</sup>They will consume the offspring of your livestock and the produce of your soil, until you are destroyed; they will leave you no grain or wine or oil, no issue of herd, no young of flock, until they have brought about your ruin. <sup>52</sup>They will besiege you in each of your communities, until the great, fortified walls, in which you trust, come tumbling down all over your land. They will besiege you in every community throughout the land which the LORD, your God, has given you, <sup>53n</sup> and because of the siege and the distress to which your enemy subjects you, you will eat the fruit of your womb, the flesh of your own sons and daughters whom the LORD, your God, has given you. <sup>54</sup>The most refined and fastidious man among you will begrudge his brother and his beloved wife and his surviving children, <sup>55</sup>any share in the flesh of his children that he himself is using for food because nothing else is left him—such the siege and distress to which your enemy will subject you in all your communities. <sup>56</sup>The most fastidious woman among you, who would not venture to set the sole of her foot on the ground, so refined and fastidious is she, will begrudge her beloved husband and her son and daughter <sup>57</sup>the afterbirth that issues from her womb and the infants she brings forth because she secretly eats them for want of anything else—such the siege and distress to which your enemy will subject you in your communities.

Plagues. <sup>58</sup>If you are not careful to observe all the words of this law which is written in this book, and to fear this glorious and awesome name, the LORD, your God,<sup>o</sup> <sup>59p</sup> the LORD will bring upon you and your descendants wondrous calamities, severe and constant calamities, and malignant and constant sicknesses. <sup>60</sup>He will bring back upon you all the diseases of Egypt* which you dread, and they will cling to you. <sup>61</sup>Even any sickness or calamity not written in this book of the law, that too the LORD will bring upon you until you are destroyed. <sup>62</sup>You who were numerous as the stars of the heavens<sup>q</sup> will be left few in number, because you would not obey the voice of the LORD, your God.

Exile. <sup>63r</sup> Just as the LORD once took delight in making you prosper and grow, so will the LORD now take delight in ruining and destroying you, and you will be plucked out of the land you are now entering to possess. <sup>64</sup>The LORD will scatter you among all the peoples from one end of the earth to the other, and there you will serve other gods, of wood and stone, which you and your ancestors have not known. <sup>65</sup>Among these nations you will find no rest, not even a resting place for the sole of your foot, for there the LORD will give you an anguished heart and wearied eyes* and a trembling spirit. <sup>66</sup>Your life will hang in suspense and you will stand in dread both day and night, never sure of your life. <sup>67</sup>In the morning you will say, "Would that it were evening!" and in the evening you will say, "Would that it were morning!" because of the dread that your heart must feel and the sight that your eyes must see. <sup>68</sup>The LORD will send you back in ships to Egypt, by a route which I told you that you would never see again;<sup>s</sup> and there you will offer yourselves for sale to your enemies as male and female slaves, but there will be no buyer.

<sup>69</sup>These are the words of the covenant which the LORD commanded Moses to make with the Israelites in the land of Moab, in addition to the covenant he made with them at Horeb.

III. Third Address

CHAPTER 29

See RG 176

Past Favors Recalled. <sup>1</sup>Moses summoned all Israel and said to them, You have seen with your own eyes all that the LORD did in the land of Egypt to Pharaoh and all his servants and to all his land, <sup>2</sup>the great testings your own eyes have seen, and those great signs and wonders<sup>t</sup> <sup>3</sup>But the LORD has not given you a heart to understand, or eyes to see, or ears to hear until this day.<sup>u</sup> <sup>4v</sup> I led you for forty years in the wilderness. Your clothes did not fall from you in tatters nor your sandals from your feet; <sup>5</sup>it was not bread that you ate, nor wine or beer that you drank—so that you might know that I, the LORD, am your God. <sup>6w</sup> When you came to this place, Sihon, king of Heshbon, and Og, king of Bashan, came out to engage us in battle, but we defeated them <sup>7</sup>and took their land, and gave it as a heritage to the Reubenites, Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh.<sup>x</sup> <sup>8</sup>Observe carefully the words of this covenant, therefore, in order that you may succeed in whatever you do.<sup>y</sup>

All Israel Bound by Covenant. <sup>9</sup>You are standing today, all of you, in the presence of the LORD, your God—your tribal heads, elders, and officials, all of the men of Israel, <sup>10</sup>your children, your wives, and the resident alien who lives in your camp, from those who cut wood to those who draw water for you— <sup>11</sup>to enter into the covenant of the LORD, your God, which the LORD, your God, is making with you today, with its curse, <sup>12</sup>so that he may establish you today as his people and he may be your God, as he promised you and as he swore to your ancestors, to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. <sup>13z</sup> But it is not with you alone that I am making this covenant, with its curse, <sup>14</sup>but with those who are standing here with us today in the presence of the LORD, our God, and with those who are not here with us* today.

Warning Against Idolatry. <sup>15</sup>You know that we lived in the land of Egypt and that we passed through the nations, that you too passed through <sup>16</sup>and saw the loathsome things and idols of wood and stone, of gold and silver, that they possess. <sup>17</sup>There may be among you a man or woman, or a clan or tribe, whose heart is now turning away from the LORD, our God, to go and serve the gods of these nations; there may be among you a root bearing poison and wormwood; <sup>18</sup>if any such persons, after hearing the words of this curse, should congratulate themselves, saying in their hearts, “I am safe, even though I walk in stubbornness of heart,” thereby sweeping away moist and dry alike,* <sup>a</sup> <sup>19</sup>the LORD will never consent to pardon them. Instead, the LORD’s burning wrath will flare up against them; every curse written in this book will pounce on them, and the LORD will blot out their names from under the heavens.<sup>b</sup> <sup>20</sup>The LORD will single them out from all the tribes of Israel for doom, in keeping with all the curses of the covenant written in this book of the law.

Punishment for Idolatry.<sup>21c</sup> Future generations, your descendants who will rise up after you, as well as the foreigners who will come here from distant lands, when they see the calamities of this land and the ills the LORD has inflicted upon it— <sup>22</sup>all its soil burned out by sulphur and salt, unsown and unfruitful, without a blade of grass, like the catastrophe of Sodom and Gomorrah,<sup>d</sup> Admah and Zeboiim,* which the LORD overthrew in his furious wrath— <sup>23e</sup> they and all the nations will ask, “Why has the LORD dealt thus with this land? Why this great outburst of wrath?” <sup>24</sup>And they will say, “Because they abandoned the covenant of the LORD, the God of their ancestors, which he had made with them when he brought them out of the land of Egypt, <sup>25</sup>and they went and served other gods and bowed down to them, gods whom they did not know and whom he had not apportioned to them<sup>f</sup> <sup>26g</sup> So the anger of the LORD flared up against this land and brought on it every curse written in this book. <sup>27</sup>The LORD uprooted them from their soil in anger, fury, and great wrath, and cast them out into another land, as they are today.” <sup>28</sup>The hidden things* belong to the LORD our God, but the revealed things are for us and for our children forever, to observe all the words of this law.

CHAPTER 30

Compassion for the Repentant. <sup>1*</sup> <sup>h</sup> When all these things, the blessing and the curse which I have set before you, come upon you, <sup>i</sup> and you take them to heart in any of the nations where the LORD, your God, has dispersed you, <sup>2j</sup> and return to the LORD, your God, obeying his voice, according to all that I am commanding you today, you and your children, with your whole heart and your whole being, <sup>3</sup> the LORD, your God, will restore your fortunes and will have compassion on you; he will again gather you from all the peoples where the LORD, your God, has scattered you. <sup>4</sup> Though you may have been dispersed to the farthest corner of the heavens, even from there will the LORD, your God, gather you; even from there will he bring you back. <sup>k</sup> <sup>5</sup> The LORD, your God, will then bring you into the land your ancestors once possessed, that you may possess it; and he will make you more prosperous and numerous than your ancestors. <sup>l</sup> <sup>6</sup> The LORD, your God, will circumcise your hearts* and the hearts of your descendants, <sup>m</sup> so that you will love the LORD, your God, with your whole heart and your whole being, in order that you may live. <sup>7</sup> The LORD, your God, will put all those curses on your enemies and the foes who pursued you. <sup>n</sup> <sup>8</sup> You, however, shall again obey the voice of the LORD and observe all his commandments which I am giving you today. <sup>9</sup> Then the LORD, your God, will generously increase your undertakings, the fruit of your womb, the offspring of your livestock, and the produce of your soil; <sup>o</sup> for the LORD, your God, will again take delight in your prosperity, just as he took delight in your ancestors', <sup>10</sup> because you will obey the voice of the LORD, your God, keeping the commandments and statutes that are written in this book of the law, when you return to the LORD, your God, with your whole heart and your whole being.

<sup>11p</sup> For this command which I am giving you today is not too wondrous or remote for you. <sup>12</sup> It is not in the heavens, that you should say, "Who will go up to the heavens to get it for us and tell us of it, that we may do it?" <sup>13</sup> Nor is it across the sea, that you should say, "Who will cross the sea to get it for us and tell us of it, that we may do it?" <sup>14</sup> No, it is something very near to you, in your mouth* and in your heart, to do it.

The Choice Before Israel. <sup>15</sup>See, I have today set before you life and good, death and evil.<sup>q</sup> <sup>16</sup>If you obey the commandments of the LORD, your God, which I am giving you today, loving the LORD, your God, and walking in his ways, and keeping his commandments, statutes and ordinances, you will live and grow numerous, and the LORD, your God, will bless you in the land you are entering to possess.<sup>r</sup> <sup>17s</sup> If, however, your heart turns away and you do not obey, but are led astray and bow down to other gods and serve them, <sup>18</sup>I tell you today that you will certainly perish; you will not have a long life on the land which you are crossing the Jordan to enter and possess. <sup>19</sup>I call heaven and earth today to witness against you:<sup>t</sup> I have set before you life and death, the blessing and the curse. Choose life, then, that you and your descendants may live, <sup>20</sup>by loving the LORD, your God, obeying his voice, and holding fast to him. For that will mean life for you, a long life for you to live on the land which the LORD swore to your ancestors, to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to give to them.<sup>u</sup>

See RG 176–77

The Lord's Leadership. <sup>1</sup>When Moses had finished speaking these words to all Israel, <sup>2</sup>he said to them, I am now one hundred and twenty years old<sup>v</sup> and am no longer able to go out and come in; besides, the LORD has said to me, Do not cross this Jordan. <sup>3</sup>It is the LORD, your God, who will cross before you; he will destroy these nations before you, that you may dispossess them.<sup>w</sup> (It is Joshua who will cross before you, as the LORD promised.) <sup>4x</sup> The LORD will deal with them just as he dealt with Sihon and Og, the kings of the Amorites, and with their country, when he destroyed them. <sup>5</sup>When, therefore, the LORD delivers them up to you, you shall deal with them according to the whole commandment which I have given you.<sup>y</sup> <sup>6</sup>Be strong and steadfast; have no fear or dread of them, for it is the LORD, your God, who marches with you; he will never fail you or forsake you.<sup>z</sup>

Call of Joshua. <sup>7</sup>Then Moses summoned Joshua and in the presence of all Israel said to him,<sup>a</sup> “Be strong and steadfast, for you shall bring this people into the land which the LORD swore to their ancestors he would give them; it is you who will give them possession of it. <sup>8</sup>It is the LORD who goes before you; he will be with you and will never fail you or forsake you. So do not fear or be dismayed.”<sup>b</sup>

The Reading of the Law. <sup>9c</sup> When Moses had written down this law, he gave it to the levitical priests who carry the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and to all the elders of Israel.<sup>d</sup> <sup>10</sup>Moses commanded them, saying, On the feast of Booths,<sup>e</sup> at the prescribed time in the year for remission* which comes at the end of every seven-year period, <sup>11</sup>when all Israel goes to appear before the LORD, your God, in the place which he will choose, you shall read this law aloud in the presence of all Israel. <sup>12</sup>Assemble the people—men, women and children, as well as the resident aliens who live in your communities—that they may hear and so learn to fear the LORD, your God, and to observe carefully all the words of this law. <sup>13</sup>Their children also, who do not know it yet, shall hear and learn to fear the LORD, your God, as long as you live on the land which you are about to cross the Jordan to possess.

Commission to Joshua.<sup>14f</sup> The LORD said to Moses, The time is now approaching for you to die. Summon Joshua, and present yourselves at the tent of meeting that I may commission him. So Moses and Joshua went and presented themselves at the tent of meeting. <sup>15</sup>And the LORD appeared at the tent in a column of cloud; the column of cloud stood at the entrance of the tent.

A Command to Moses. <sup>16</sup>The LORD said to Moses, Soon you will be at rest with your ancestors, and then this people will prostitute themselves* by following the foreign gods among whom they will live in the land they are about to enter.<sup>9</sup> They will forsake me and break the covenant which I have made with them. <sup>17h</sup> At that time my anger will flare up against them; I will forsake them and hide my face from them; they will become a prey to be devoured, and much evil and distress will befall them. At that time they will indeed say, “Is it not because our God is not in our midst that these evils have befallen us?” <sup>18</sup>Yet I will surely hide my face at that time because of all the evil they have done in turning to other gods. <sup>19</sup>Now, write out this song<sup>i</sup> for yourselves. Teach it to the Israelites and have them recite it, so that this song may be a witness for me against the Israelites. <sup>20</sup>For when I have brought them into the land flowing with milk and honey which I promised on oath to their ancestors, and they have eaten and are satisfied and have grown fat, if they turn to other gods and serve them, despising me and breaking my covenant, <sup>21</sup>then, when great evil and distress befall them, this song will speak to them as a witness, for it will not be forgotten if their descendants recite it. For I know what they are inclined to do even at the present time, before I have brought them into the land which I promised on oath. <sup>22</sup>So Moses wrote this song that same day, and he taught it to the Israelites.

Commission of Joshua. <sup>23</sup>Then he commissioned Joshua, son of Nun, and said to him, Be strong and steadfast, for it is you who will bring the Israelites into the land which I promised them on oath.<sup>j</sup> I myself will be with you.

The Law Placed in the Ark. <sup>24</sup>When Moses had finished writing out on a scroll the words of this law in their entirety, <sup>25</sup>Moses gave the Levites<sup>k</sup> who carry the ark of the covenant of the LORD this order: <sup>26</sup>Take this book of the law and put it beside the ark of the covenant of the LORD, your God, that there it may be a witness against you.<sup>l</sup> <sup>27</sup>For I already know how rebellious and stiffnecked you will be. Why, even now, while I am alive among you, you have been rebels against the LORD! How much more, then, after I am dead!<sup>m 28n</sup> Assemble all your tribal elders and your officials before me, that I may speak these words for them to hear and so may call heaven and earth to witness against them.<sup>29o</sup> For I know that after my death you are sure to act corruptly and to turn aside from the way along which I commanded you, so that evil will befall you in time to come because you have done what is evil in the LORD's sight, and provoked him by your deeds.

The Song of Moses. <sup>30</sup>Then Moses recited the words of this song in their entirety, for the whole assembly of Israel to hear:

CHAPTER 32

<sup>1*</sup> Give ear, O heavens, and let me speak;
let the earth hear the words of my mouth!<sup>p</sup>

<sup>2</sup> May my teaching soak in like the rain, and my utterance drench like the dew,
Like a downpour upon the grass,
like a shower upon the crops.

<sup>3</sup> For I will proclaim the name of the LORD,
praise the greatness of our God!

<sup>4</sup> The Rock—how faultless are his deeds, how right all his ways!
A faithful God, without deceit, just and upright is he!<sup>q</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Yet his degenerate children have treated him basely,
a twisted and crooked generation!<sup>r</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Is this how you repay the LORD, so foolish and unwise a people?
Is he not your father who begot you,
the one who made and established you?<sup>s</sup>

<sup>7</sup> Remember the days of old, consider the years of generations past.
Ask your father, he will inform you, your elders, they will tell you:<sup>t</sup>

<sup>8</sup> When the Most High allotted each nation its heritage,
when he separated out human beings,<sup>u</sup>
He set up the boundaries of the peoples after the number of the divine beings;*

<sup>9</sup> But the LORD's portion was his people; his allotted share was Jacob.<sup>v</sup>

10 He found them in a wilderness, a wasteland of howling desert.
He shielded them, cared for them, guarded them as the apple of his eye.<sup>w</sup>

11 As an eagle incites its nestlings, hovering over its young,
So he spread his wings, took them, bore them upon his pinions.<sup>x</sup>

12 The LORD alone guided them, no foreign god was with them.<sup>y</sup>

13<sup>z</sup> He had them mount the summits of the land,* fed them the produce of its fields;
He suckled them with honey from the crag and olive oil from the flinty rock;

14 Butter from cows and milk from sheep,
with the best of lambs;
Bashan* bulls and goats,
with the cream of finest wheat;
and the foaming blood of grapes you drank.

15 So Jacob ate and was satisfied,
Jeshurun* grew fat and kicked;
you became fat and gross and gorged.
They forsook the God who made them and scorned the Rock of their salvation.<sup>a</sup>

16 With strange gods they incited him, with abominations provoked him to anger.<sup>b</sup>

17 They sacrificed to demons, to “no-gods,” to gods they had never known,
Newcomers from afar,
before whom your ancestors had never trembled.

18 You were unmindful of the Rock that begot you,
you forgot the God who gave you birth.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>19</sup>The LORD saw and was filled with loathing,

provoked by his sons and daughters.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>20</sup>He said, I will hide my face from them, and see what becomes of them.

For they are a fickle generation, children with no loyalty in them!<sup>e</sup>

<sup>21</sup>Since they have incited me with a “no-god,” and provoked me with their empty idols,

I will incite them with a “no-people”;* with a foolish nation I will provoke them.<sup>f</sup>

<sup>22</sup>For by my wrath a fire is kindled that has raged to the depths of Sheol,
It has consumed the earth with its yield, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains.<sup>g</sup>

<sup>23</sup>I will heap evils upon them and exhaust all my arrows against them:<sup>h</sup>

<sup>24</sup>Emaciating hunger and consuming fever and bitter pestilence,
And the teeth of wild beasts I will send among them, with the venom of reptiles gliding in the dust.<sup>i</sup>

<sup>25</sup>Out in the street the sword shall bereave, and at home the terror
For the young man and the young woman alike,
the nursing babe as well as the gray
beard.<sup>j</sup>

<sup>26</sup>I said: I will make an end of them and blot out their name from human memory,

27 Had I not feared the provocation by the enemy,
that their foes might misunderstand,
And say, "Our own hand won the victory;
the LORD had nothing to do with any of it."<sup>k</sup>

28 For they are a nation devoid of reason,* having no understanding.

29 If they had insight they would realize this,
they would understand their end:

30 "How could one rout a thousand,
or two put ten thousand to flight,
Unless it was because their Rock sold
them,
the LORD delivered them up?"

31 Indeed, their "rock" is not like our Rock;
our enemies are fools.

32 For their vine is from the vine of Sodom, from the vineyards of Gomorrah.
Their grapes are grapes of poison, and their clusters are bitter.<sup>l</sup>

33 Their wine is the venom of serpents, the cruel poison of vipers.

34 Is not this stored up with me, sealed up in my storehouses?

35 Vengeance is mine and recompense, for the time they lose their footing;
Because the day of their disaster is at hand and their doom is rushing upon them!<sup>m</sup>

36 Surely, the LORD will do justice for his people;
on his servants he will have pity.
When he sees their strength is gone, and neither bond nor free* is left,<sup>n</sup>

37 He will say, Where are their gods,<sup>o</sup>
the rock in whom they took refuge,

38 Who ate the fat of their sacrifices and drank the wine of their libations?

Let them rise up now and help you!
Let them be your protection!

<sup>39</sup>See now that I, I alone, am he,
and there is no god besides me.
It is I who bring both death and life,
I who inflict wounds and heal them, and from my hand no one can deliver.<sup>p</sup>

<sup>40</sup>For I raise my hand to the heavens and will say: As surely as I live forever,

<sup>41</sup>When I sharpen my flashing sword, and my hand lays hold of judgment,
With vengeance I will repay my foes and requite those who hate me.<sup>q</sup>

<sup>42</sup>I will make my arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall devour flesh—
With the blood of the slain and the captured, from the long-haired heads of the enemy.

<sup>43</sup>Exult with him, you heavens, bow to him, all you divine beings!
For he will avenge the blood of his servants,
take vengeance on his foes;
He will requite those who hate him, and purge his people's land.<sup>r</sup>

<sup>44</sup>So Moses, together with Hoshea, * son of Nun, went and spoke all the words of this song in the hearing of the people.<sup>s</sup>

Final Appeal. <sup>45</sup>When Moses had finished speaking all these words to all Israel, <sup>46</sup>he said to them, <sup>t</sup> Take to heart all the words that I am giving in witness against you today, words you should command your children, that they may observe carefully every word of this law. <sup>47</sup>For this is no trivial matter for you, but rather your very life; by this word you will enjoy a long life on the land you are crossing the Jordan to possess.<sup>u</sup>

Moses Looks upon Canaan. <sup>48</sup>On that very day the Lord said to Moses, <sup>49</sup>Ascend this mountain of the Abarim, * Mount Nebo in the land of Moab facing Jericho, and view the land of Canaan, which I am giving to the Israelites as a possession.<sup>v 50</sup> Then you shall die on the mountain you are about to ascend, and shall be gathered to your people, just as your brother Aaron died on Mount Hor* and there was gathered to his people,<sup>w 51</sup> because both of you broke faith with me among the Israelites at the waters of Meribath-kadesh in the wilderness of Zin: you did not manifest my holiness among the Israelites.<sup>*x 52</sup> You may indeed see the land from a distance, but you shall not enter that land which I am giving to the Israelites.<sup>y</sup>

CHAPTER 33

Blessing upon the Tribes.* <sup>1</sup>This is the blessing with which Moses, the man of God, blessed the Israelites before he died.<sup>z</sup>

<sup>2a</sup> He said:

The LORD came from Sinai and dawned on his people from Seir;
he shone forth from Mount Paran.
With him were myriads of holy ones;
at his right hand advanced the gods.*

<sup>3</sup>Indeed, lover of the peoples,
all the holy ones are at your side;
They follow at your heels, carry out your decisions.

<sup>4</sup>Moses charged us with the law, as a possession for the assembly of Jacob.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>5</sup>A king arose* in Jeshurun
when the chiefs of the people assembled, and the tribes of Israel united.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>6</sup>May Reuben live and not die out,<sup>d</sup> but let his numbers be few.

<sup>7</sup>Of Judah he said this:

Hear, LORD, the voice of Judah, and bring him to his people.*
His own hands defend his cause;
be a help against his foes.<sup>e</sup>

<sup>8</sup>Of Levi he said:<sup>f</sup>

Give to Levi your Thummim, your Urim* to your faithful one;
Him you tested at Massah, contended against him at the waters of Meribah.<sup>g</sup>

9* He said of his father and mother,
“I have no regard for them”;
His brothers he would not acknowledge, and his own children he did not recognize.

For they kept your words, and your covenant they upheld.<sup>h</sup>

10i They teach your ordinances to Jacob, your law to Israel.

They bring incense to your nostrils, and burnt offerings to your altar.

11 Bless, LORD, his strength, be pleased with the work of his hands.
Crush the loins of his adversaries and of his foes, that they may not rise.

12 Of Benjamin he said:

The beloved of the LORD,
he abides in safety beside him;
He shelters him all day long;
the beloved abides at his breast.<sup>*j</sup>

13 Of Joseph he said.<sup>k</sup>

Blessed by the LORD is his land with the best of heaven above and of the abyss crouching beneath;

14 With the best of the produce of the sun, and the choicest yield of the months;

15 With the finest gifts of the ancient mountains
and the best from the everlasting hills;

16 With the best of the earth and its fullness, and the favor of the one who dwells on Sinai.

Let these come upon the head of Joseph and upon the brow of the prince among his brothers.<sup>l</sup>

17 His firstborn bull, majesty is his!
His horns are the horns of a wild ox;
With them he gores the peoples, attacks the ends of the earth.

These are the myriads of Ephraim, and these the thousands of Manasseh.

<sup>18</sup>Of Zebulun he said:<sup>m</sup>

Rejoice, Zebulun, in your expeditions, exult, Issachar, in your tents!

<sup>19</sup>They invite peoples to the mountain where they offer right sacrifices, Because they suck up the abundance of the seas* and the hidden treasures of the sand.

<sup>20</sup>Of Gad he said:<sup>n</sup>

Blessed be the one who has made Gad so vast!

He lies there like a lion;
he tears the arm, the head as well.

<sup>21</sup>He saw that the best should be his,
for there the commander's portion was assigned;
he came at the head of the people.
He carried out the justice of the LORD and his ordinances for Israel.<sup>o</sup>

<sup>22</sup>Of Dan he said:

Dan is a lion's cub,<sup>p</sup> that springs away from a viper!

<sup>23</sup>Of Naphtali he said:

Naphtali, abounding with favor, filled with the blessing of the LORD,
take possession of the west and south.<sup>q</sup>

<sup>24</sup>Of Asher he said:<sup>r</sup>

Most blessed* of sons be Asher!
May he be the favorite among his brothers,
and may he dip his foot in oil!

<sup>25</sup>May the bolts of your gates be iron and bronze;
may your strength endure through all your days!

<sup>26</sup>There is none like the God of Jeshurun, who rides the heavens in his power, who rides the clouds in his majesty;<sup>s</sup>

<sup>27</sup>The God of old is a refuge;
a support are the arms of the Everlasting.

He drove the enemy out of your way and he said, "Destroy!"<sup>t</sup>

<sup>28</sup>Israel abides securely,
Jacob dwells apart,
In a land of grain and wine,
where the heavens drip with dew.<sup>u</sup>

<sup>29</sup>Happy are you, Israel! Who is like you, a people delivered by the LORD,
Your help and shield,
and the sword of your glory.
Your enemies cringe before you;
you stride upon their backs.<sup>v</sup>

IV. The Death of Moses

CHAPTER 34

See RG 177

<sup>1</sup>Then Moses went up from the plains of Moab to Mount Nebo,<sup>w</sup> the peak of Pisgah which faces Jericho, and the LORD showed him all the land—Gilead, and as far as Dan, <sup>2</sup>all Naphtali, the land of Ephraim and Manasseh, all the land of Judah as far as the Western Sea,<sup>x</sup> <sup>3</sup>the Negeb, the plain (the valley of Jericho, the City of Palms), and as far as Zoar. <sup>4</sup>The LORD then said to him, This is the land<sup>y</sup> about which I promised on oath to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, “I will give it to your descendants.” I have let you see it with your own eyes, but you shall not cross over. <sup>5</sup>So there, in the land of Moab, Moses, the servant of the LORD, died<sup>z</sup> as the LORD had said; <sup>6</sup>and he was buried in a valley in the land of Moab, opposite Beth-peor; to this day no one knows the place of his burial.<sup>a</sup> <sup>7</sup>Moses was one hundred and twenty years old<sup>b</sup> when he died, yet his eyes were undimmed and his vigor unabated. <sup>8</sup>The Israelites wept for Moses in the plains of Moab for thirty days, till they had completed the period of grief and mourning for Moses.

<sup>9</sup>Now Joshua, son of Nun,<sup>c</sup> was filled with the spirit of wisdom, since Moses had laid his hands upon him; and so the Israelites gave him their obedience, just as the LORD had commanded Moses.

<sup>10d</sup> Since then no prophet has arisen in Israel like Moses, whom the LORD knew face to face, <sup>11e</sup> in all the signs and wonders the LORD sent him to perform in the land of Egypt against Pharaoh and all his servants and against all his land, <sup>12</sup>and all the great might and the awesome power that Moses displayed in the sight of all Israel.

1:1 The entire book of Deuteronomy is set “beyond the Jordan,” in the land of Moab (cf. v. 5; Nm 36:13), on the eve of the Israelites’ crossing of the Jordan (Jos 3). The Arabah: the valley of the Jordan and the depression south of the Dead Sea.

1:2 Horeb: an alternative name for Mount Sinai, the wilderness mountain where the Israelites received revelation from God (cf. Ex 3; 19). Kadesh-barnea: the southern gateway to the land of Canaan, from which Moses sent spies to reconnoiter the land (cf. Nm 13:26; 32:8). Seir: Edom, the land just south of Moab.

1:3 Fortieth year: counting from the exodus from Egypt (cf. Ex 12:2; 13:20–22).

1:6–3:29 Throughout this section Moses is reviewing the events following the departure from Horeb, as a basis for the exhortation beginning in 4:1. Most of these events are narrated with some variation in the Book of Numbers.

1:6 Horeb: the name given to the mountain of revelation in the Elohist and Deuteronomic traditions; this mountain is called Sinai in the Yahwist and Priestly traditions.

1:7 The hill country of the Amorites: the central mountain range of Palestine. The Negeb: the arid land in southern Palestine. The Lebanon: the mountain range of Phoenicia, north of Palestine. This is an idealized presentation of the land the Israelites were to occupy; Israel never held power as far as the “Great River” (the Euphrates). The Amorites and the Canaanites were only two of several different peoples occupying the land (cf. 7:1).

1:28 Anakim: a people proverbially notable for height, mentioned in pre-Israelite Egyptian texts, and in the biblical tradition associated with the region of Hebron and the hill country of Judah (Nm 13:22, 28, 33; Jos 11:21; 14:12, 15).

1:36 Except Caleb: and Joshua (v. 38).

2:7 Concerned: lit., “known”; cf. Ex 2:25.

2:23 Gaza: later a stronghold of the Philistines (cf. Jos 13:3). Caphtor: the island of Crete.

2:34 Under the ban: in Hebrew, herem, which means to devote to the Lord (cf. 7:1–5; 20:10–18). The biblical text often presents herem as the total extermination of a population as a manifestation of the will of the Lord. It is historically doubtful that Israel ever literally carried out this theological program.

3:11 Bed of iron: some translate, “a sarcophagus of basalt”; its dimensions would be approximately thirteen and a half feet by six feet.

3:15 Machir: a clan of the tribe of Manasseh (cf. Gn 50:23).

3:17 Chinnereth: later known as the Lake of Gennesaret and the Sea of Galilee. The Salt Sea: the Dead Sea. Pisgah: a mountain range to the northeast of the Salt Sea; Mount Nebo, from which Moses viewed the promised land, is in this range (cf. v. 27; 34:1).

3:26 On your account: that Moses saw but never entered the promised land is attested by every Pentateuchal tradition, but different reasons are given in different places. Nm 20:12 and Dt 32:51 present Moses as being at fault. Here, as in 1:37 and 4:21, the fault lies in the people but affects Moses.

4:10 Fear: not in the sense of “be terrified,” but rather “manifest reverence or awe.”

4:13 Ten words: the ten commandments, or decalogue (cf. 5:22; Ex 34:28).

4:24 A jealous God: Hebrew ’el qanna. The root of the adjective qanna expresses the idea of intense feeling focused on solicitude for someone or something; see, e.g., Ps 69:10; Sg 8:6; Is 9:6; 37:32; Ez 39:25. The Septuagint translated the adjective as zelotes, and the Vulgate followed suit; hence the traditional English rendering “jealous” (and sometimes “zealous”) found in the Douai-Rheims and King James versions. In modern usage, however, “jealous” denotes unreasonable, petty possessiveness, a meaning, even as nuance, wanting in the Hebrew. In the first commandment (5:6–10; Ex 20:2–6) and passages derived from it (like 4:24; 6:15; Ex 34:14; Jos 24:19; Na 1:2), Israel’s God is represented as totally committed to his purpose, and Israel is put on notice to take him and his directives for their life as a people with equal seriousness.

4:44 Law: Hebrew torah, meaning “instruction,” “law,” “teaching”; the standard translation “law” comes from the influence of the Septuagint’s nomos, “law,” and the extensive legislation in Ex 20–Nm 10.

4:45 Statutes and ordinances: terms referring to the legal corpus in 12:1–26:19.

4:48 Sion: another name for Mount Hermon, besides those mentioned in 3:9 (to be distinguished from the Mount Zion of Jerusalem).

4:49 The Arabah Sea: the Dead Sea, cf. 3:17.

5:3 Not with our ancestors: in fact, the covenant was made with the ancestors, but these had died out during the “forty” years. The covenant is considered to be ongoing—for Israel in Moab and beyond.

5:9–10 Israel is confronted with a choice, to “love” or to “hate” the Lord, and with the consequences of each choice. “Wickedness” works destruction not only on those who do it but also down the generations, in a sort of ripple effect. Yet, if Israel keeps the commandments, they will experience the Lord’s hesed (“love”) down to the thousandth generation. Thus the Lord’s merciful love is disproportionate to the evil results of iniquity (“down to the third and fourth generation”). To the thousandth generation: lit., “to thousands”; cf. 7:9.

5:9 Jealous: see note on 4:24.

5:17 Kill: see note on Ex 20:13.

6:4–5 This passage, an expansion of the first commandment (5:6–10), contains the basic principle of the whole Mosaic law, the keynote of the Book of Deuteronomy: since the Lord alone is God, Israel must love him with an undivided heart. Jesus cited these words as “the greatest and the first commandment,” embracing in itself the whole law of God (Mt 22:37–38; Mk 12:29–30; Lk 10:27).

6:4 Hear, O Israel!: in Hebrew, shema yisra’el; hence this passage (vv. 4–9), containing the Great Commandment, is called the Shema. In later Jewish tradition, 11:13–21 and Nm 15:37–41 were added to form a prayer recited every evening and morning. The Lord is our God, the Lord alone: other possible translations are “the Lord our God is one Lord”; “the Lord our God, the Lord is one”; “the Lord is our God, the Lord is one.”

6:8 Bind them ... as a sign: these injunctions were probably meant merely in a figurative sense; cf. Ex 13:9, 16. In the late postexilic period, they were taken quite literally, and devout Jews tied on their arms and foreheads “phylacteries,” boxes containing strips of parchment on which these words were inscribed; cf. Mt 23:5.

6:13 Him shall you serve: the verb could be translated as either “serve” or “worship” (cf. 5:9).

7:5 Sacred pillars ... asherahs: cut or uncut stones and wooden poles or trees (cf. 16:21) that had some cultic function. Fairly common religious artifacts, their association with the non-Israelite cults of Canaan and perhaps with Canaanite gods and goddesses, specifically the goddess Asherah, led to their condemnation in the Deuteronomic reform and possibly earlier.

7:26 Under the ban: and therefore doomed to destruction; see note on 2:34.

8:3 Not by bread alone: Deuteronomic theology puts the good things promised faithful Israel into the context of the Lord’s gratuitous love. As in 6:10–12, the goods of life must be seen as gift. Israel is to seek what really matters; all else will be added (cf. Mt 6:33).

8:15 Saraph: see note on Nm 21:6.

9:4 Before me: Hebrew reads “before you.”

10:4 Ten words: the ten commandments (cf. 4:13).

10:16 Circumcise therefore the foreskins of your hearts: cf. 30:6; Jer 4:4; Rom 2:29. The “uncircumcised heart” (Lv 26:41; Jer 9:25; Ez 44:7, 9) is closed and unreceptive to God, just as “uncircumcised ears” (Jer 6:10) are closed to the word of the Lord, and “uncircumcised lips” (Ex 6:12, 30) are a hindrance to speaking on behalf of the Lord.

11:4 The Red Sea: Hebrew yam suph, that is, “sea of reeds” or “reedy sea.”

11:10 By hand: lit., “by foot,” probably referring to a kind of mechanism for irrigation from the Nile.

11:13–15 Here as elsewhere Moses shifts between speaking of the Lord in the third person and speaking for the Lord in the first person.

11:14 The early rain: the rains which begin in October or November and continue intermittently throughout the winter. The late rain: the heavy showers of March and April. In Palestine crops are sown in autumn and harvested in spring and summer.

11:24 The Western Sea: the Mediterranean.

11:29 For the full ceremony of blessing and curse, see chaps. 27–28. Gerizim and Ebal are mountains in Samaria, separated by a deep ravine.

12:5 The place ... to put his name there: Moses thus designates Jerusalem (Mt. Zion), in accordance with the Deuteronomic doctrine that the Lord “chooses” Zion, as the place where eventually the Temple will be built, as he chooses the house of David to reign over Israel; see 2 Sm 7; 1 Kgs 8; Ps 132. But the Lord’s presence in Jerusalem consists in putting his “name” there (12:11, 21; 14:23–24; 16:2, 6, 11; 26:2; 1 Kgs 8:44, 49; 9:3; 11:36; 14:21; 2 Kgs 17:34; 21:4, 7; 23:27). The Lord himself “cannot be contained” in an earthly dwelling (1 Kgs 8:27), but because he says of the Jerusalem Temple that “my name will be there” (1 Kgs 8:16, 29; 2 Kgs 23:27), he is present. This theology allows God in a way to dwell with Israel and at the same time preserves divine transcendence. See note on 1 Kgs 8:12–13.

12:11 Sacrifice is to be confined to the single place that the Lord has chosen; eventually this was Jerusalem.

12:15 At this point a distinction is being made between cultic sacrifice and slaughter of animals for food. In any of your communities: lit., “within your gates.”

12:16 The blood was understood to be the source or vehicle of life and so was not to be consumed. Cf. Gn 9:4.

13:2, Dt 4, 6 Dreamer: a false prophet who pretended to have received revelations from God in a dream; cf. Jer 23:25–32; 27:9; Zec 10:2. But dreams could also be a means of true prophecy (Nm 12:6; Jl 3:1) and of genuine revelations (Gn 20:3, 6; 31:11, 24; 37:5, 9; Mt 1:20; 2:12, 13, 19; etc.).

14:12–18 The identification of several of the birds in these verses is uncertain.

14:19–20 Lv 11:20–23 suggests that the unclean winged insects are those that walk on the ground; the clean winged creatures are those that leap on the ground, such as certain species of locusts.

14:21 Boil a young goat in its mother’s milk: the meaning of this regulation is obscure but it may have a humane concern similar to the prohibitions against slaughtering an animal and its young on the same day (Lv 22:27–28) and capturing a mother bird along with her fledgling or eggs (Dt 22:6–7). See note on Ex 23:19.

15:1 At the end of every seven-year period: in every seventh, or sabbatical, year. Cf. 15:9; 31:10; and compare Jer 34:14 with Dt 15:12. A remission of debts: it is debated whether a full cancellation of debts is meant, or merely a suspension of payment on them or on their interest, but the former is more likely. Cf. Ex 23:11 where the same Hebrew root is used of a field that is “let lie fallow” in the sabbatical year.

15:17 His ear: cf. Ex 21:6 and note there.

16:1 Abib: “ear of grain, ripe grain,” the name of the month in which the barley harvest fell, corresponding to our March and April; at a later period this month received the Babylonian name of “Nisan.”

16:10 Feast of Weeks: a celebration of the grain harvest, later known as “Pentecost”; cf. Acts 2:1.

16:13 Feast of Booths: also called Tabernacles; a harvest festival at the end of the agricultural year. In later times, during the seven days of the feast the Israelites camped in booths made of branches erected on the roofs of their houses or in the streets in commemoration of their wanderings in the wilderness, where they dwelt in such temporary shelters.

16:21–22 Asherah ... sacred pillar: see note on 7:5; Ex 34:13.

17:5 Out to your gates: outside the gates, so as not to defile the city; cf. Lv 24:14; Nm 15:36; Acts 7:58; Heb 13:12.

17:12 The priest: the high priest; the judge: a layman. The court system here, involving lay and priestly officials, resembles the one whose establishment is attributed to King Jehoshaphat in 2 Chr 19:8–11 (cf. Ex 18:17–23 and Dt 1:17).

17:16–17 This restriction on royal acquisitions may have in mind the excesses of Solomon’s reign mentioned in 1 Kgs 10:1–11:6. Horses: chariotry for war. Egypt engaged in horse trading, and the danger envisioned here is that some king might make Israel a vassal of Egypt for military aid.

17:18 A copy of this law: the source of the name Deuteronomy, which in Hebrew is literally “double” or “copy”; in the Septuagint translated as deuteronomion, literally “a second law.” In Jerome’s Latin Vulgate as deuteronomium.

17:19 The only positive requirement imposed upon the king is strict adherence to the Mosaic or Deuteronomic law. In that respect, the king’s primary task was to be a model Israelite.

18:8 His stipends and patrimony: meaning of the Hebrew is uncertain.

18:10–11 Causes their son or daughter to pass through the fire: to Molech. See note on Lv 18:21. Such human sacrifices are classed here with various occult and magical practices because they were believed to possess powers for averting a calamity; cf. 2 Kgs 3:27. Three other categories of magic are listed here: divination of the future (by a soothsayer or augur); black magic (by a sorcerer or one who casts spells); and necromancy (by one who consults ghosts and spirits, or seeks oracles from the dead to divine the future).

18:15 A prophet like me: from the context (opposition to the practices described in vv. 10–11) it seems that Moses is referring in general to all the true prophets who were to succeed him. This passage came to be understood in a quasi-Messianic sense in the New Testament (Mt 17:5; Jn 6:14; 7:40; Acts 3:22; 7:37).

19:2 Set apart three cities: the Israelites were to have at least six cities of refuge, three in the land east of the Jordan and three in the land of Canaan west of the Jordan (Nm 35:9–34); but since the three cities east of the Jordan had now been appointed (Dt 4:41–43), reference is made here only to the three west of the Jordan. The execution of this command is narrated in Jos 20.

19:6 The avenger of blood: see note on Nm 35:12.

19:14 Move your neighbor’s boundary markers: a prohibition against furtively extending one’s property by moving a neighbor’s boundary stone.

19:21 Life for life ...: this phrasing of the lex talionis may seem exaggerated, but the law itself is meant to ensure equity and proportional punishment; cf. note on Ex 21:22–25.

20:15 Deuteronomy makes a distinction between treatment of nations far away and those close at hand whose abhorrent religious practices might, or did, influence Israel’s worship. This harsh policy was to make sure the nations nearby did not pass their practices on to Israel (cf. chap. 7).

21:1–9 This law has to do with absolving the community of bloodguilt that accrues to it and to the land when a homicide occurs and the murderer cannot be identified and punished.

21:6 Wash their hands: a symbolic gesture in protestation of one’s own innocence when human blood is unjustly shed; cf. Mt 27:24.

21:7 This blood: the blood of the slain, or the bloodguilt effected by the killing.

21:12–13 Shave her head ...: these symbolic actions probably signified the transition or change of status of the woman or perhaps the end of her period of mourning for her previous husband or family.

21:19 The gate: in the city walls. This open space served as the forum for the administration of justice. Cf. 22:15; 25:7; Ru 4:1, 2, 11; Is 29:21; Am 5:10, 12, 15.

21:22 You hang him on a tree: some understand, “impaled on a stake.” In any case the hanging or impaling was not the means used to execute the criminal; he was first put to death by the ordinary means, stoning, and his corpse was then exposed on high as a warning for others. Cf. Jos 8:29; 10:26; 1 Sm 31:10; 2 Sm 21:9.

21:23 Gal 3:13 applies these words to the crucifixion of Jesus, who “redeemed us from the curse of the law, becoming a curse for us.”

22:9–11 Some understand these laws as serving to preserve distinctions set by God in the creation. Become forfeit: to the sanctuary; lit., “be holy”; cf. Lv 19:19; Jos 6:19.

22:15 The evidence of her virginity: the bridal garment or sheet stained with blood from the first nuptial relations.

22:18 Discipline him: whip him, as prescribed in 25:1–3.

22:23 A young woman, a virgin who is betrothed: a girl who is married but not yet brought to her husband's home and whose marriage is therefore still unconsummated.

22:26 So in this case: in the absence of witnesses ("in the open field"), the presumption must be that the woman is the victim, and so guiltless.

23:1 Father's wife: stepmother.

23:2 Exclusion of an emasculated male may have had to do with association of emasculation with the practices of other peoples, or it may have been rejection of someone with a significant blemish who was thus not suitable for participation in the sacral assembly.

23:17 In any one of your communities: from this it would seem that the slave in question is a fugitive from a foreign country.

23:18–19 Temple prostitute: Heb. qedesha, lit., "holy one," a title of the goddess of fertility. The role or function of the qedesha is debated; some see this as simply a term for a prostitute (Heb. zona). Others see it as designating a cultic role but not necessarily one involving sexual activity. The evidence is insufficient to give a final answer.

23:19 Dog's pay: "dog" is a derogatory term for a male temple prostitute.

24:1–4 This law is directly concerned only with forbidding a divorced man from remarrying his former wife, and indirectly with checking hasty divorces, by demanding sufficient cause and certain legal formalities. Divorce itself is taken for granted and tolerated as an existing custom whose potential evils this law seeks to lessen. Cf. 22:19, 29; Mal 2:14–16. Something indecent: a rather indefinite phrase, meaning perhaps "immodest conduct," but possibly including any kind of objectionable conduct. By New Testament times Jewish opinion differed concerning what was sufficient ground for divorce; cf. Mt 19:3.

24:6 Since the Israelites ground their grain into flour only in sufficient quantity for their current need, to deprive a debtor of his hand mill was equivalent to condemning him to starvation.

24:8 Scaly infection: the Hebrew word seems to have to do with one or more skin diseases that produce scales, such as psoriasis. Its precise meaning is uncertain. See note on Lv 13:1–14:57.

25:3 Forty lashes: while the punishment is severe, the law seeks to limit it from being overly harsh and inhumane. Later Jewish practice limited the number to thirty-nine; cf. 2 Cor 11:24.

25:4 This is comparable in spirit to 22:6–7; Israelites are not to be grasping and calculating. St. Paul argues from this verse that laborers have the right to live on the fruits of their labor; cf. 1 Cor 9:9; 1 Tm 5:18.

25:5 When brothers live together: when relatives of the same clan, though married, hold their property in common. It was only in this case that the present law was to be observed, since one of its purposes was to keep the property of the deceased within the same clan. Such a marriage of a widow with her brother-in-law is known as a "levirate" marriage from the Latin word levir, meaning "a husband's brother."

25:9–10 The penalty decreed for a man who refuses to comply with this law of family loyalty is public disgrace; the widow is to spit in his face. Some commentators connect this symbolic act with the ceremony mentioned in Ru 4:7, 8.

25:14 Ephahs: see note on Is 5:10.

25:17–19 This attack on Israel by Amalek is not mentioned elsewhere in the Old Testament, although it probably was connected with the battle mentioned in Ex 17:8. A campaign against Amalek was carried out by Saul; cf. 1 Sm 15.

26:5 Aramean: probably in reference to the origin of the patriarchs from Aram Naharaim (cf. Gn 24:10; 25:20; 28:5; 31:20, 24).

26:14 These are allusions to foreign religious practices. To the dead: to feed the spirits of the dead, or perhaps to worship Baal.

27:7 Communion sacrifices: The principal feature of this ritual (see Lv 3:1–17) is the sharing of the sacrifice with God, the priest and the person offering the sacrifice, who eat it as a holy thing (cf. Ex 24:5).

27:15–26 The ceremony described here reflects the structure of covenant. The people assent to the directives their covenant Lord sets forth; their “Amen” ratifies the proscription of idolatry, injustice, incest, murder, and infidelity in general. Thus the “love” of the Lord which is at the heart of Israel’s existence as his covenant people (6:4–5) is spelled out in terms of particular actions. The “Amen” is an acceptance of the curses or sanctions entailed by breaking faith with the Lord. Cf. 30:15–20, a concise statement of covenant theology.

28:6 In your coming in ... in your going out: at the beginning and end of every action, or in all actions in general. The rhetorical figure is called merismus. See also 6:7.

28:7 From one direction ... in seven: in one disciplined body, contrasted with many scattered groups.

28:10 The name of the LORD is proclaimed over you: an expression signifying ownership and protection. Cf. 2 Sm 12:28; 1 Kgs 8:43; Is 4:1; 63:19; Jer 7:10–11; 14:9; 15:16; 25:29; Am 9:12.

28:25 From one direction ... in seven: see note on v. 7.

28:46 A sign and a wonder: an ominous example, attracting attention; cf. 29:21–28.

28:60 He will bring back upon you all the diseases of Egypt: such as the Lord had promised to remove from the people (7:15); cf. v. 27.

28:65 Wearied eyes: cf. v. 32.

29:14 Not here with us: this includes future generations. This attitude appears also in 5:3.

29:18 Sweeping away moist and dry alike: possibly a proverbial expression: because of Israel’s infidelity the Lord will punish the just with the wicked (cf. Gn 18:25), rooting out good plants in irrigated soil, together with worthless plants growing in dry ground.

29:22 Admah and Zeboiim: neighboring cities of Sodom and Gomorrah in the Jordan Plain and identified in the tradition as destroyed with them. Cf. Hos 11:8; Jer 50:40.

29:28 The hidden things: probably the events of the future. The revealed things: the covenant and its provisions, including the sanctions of blessing and curse. This aphorism may mean: leave “hidden things” to God; what matters is to keep the law.

30:1–5 Text such as this suggests a postexilic perspective; cf. also chaps. 31–32.

30:6 Circumcise your hearts: see note on 10:16.

30:14 In your mouth: that is, memorized and recited; cf. 6:7; 11:19. And in your heart: internalized and appropriated; cf. 6:6; 11:18.

31:10 The year for remission: cf. 15:1–3 and note there.

31:16 Prostitute themselves: lit., “whore after,” a play on the phrase “go after,” viz. after other gods.

32:1–43 The whole song is a poetic sermon, having for its theme the Lord’s benefits to Israel (vv. 1–14) and Israel’s ingratitude and idolatry in turning to the gods of the nations; these sins will be punished by the nations themselves (vv. 15–29); in turn, the foolish pride of the nations will be punished, and the Lord’s honor will be vindicated (vv. 30–43).

32:8 Divine beings: lit., “sons of God” (see also v. 43); members of the divine assembly; cf. 1 Kgs 22:19; Jb 1:6; 2:1; 38:7; Ps 82; 89:6–7. The nations are portrayed as having their respective tutelary deities.

32:13 The land: Canaan.

32:14 Bashan: a fertile grazing land east of the Jordan, famous for its sleek, strong cattle. Cf. Ps 22:13; Ez 39:18; Am 4:1.

32:15 Jeshurun: a term for Israel from yashar, meaning “upright”; its use here is possibly ironic.

32:21 “No-god” ... “no-people”: worship of the gods of the nations brings destruction at the hands of a foreign invader. A false god cannot sustain or protect (cf. Jer 14:22); and though the nations seem “foolish” (see their characterization in such passages as Ps 114:1; Is 28:11; 33:19), they will prove to be anything but nonentities when the Lord stirs them up against Israel (Is 9:10–12). For the “no-” or “not-” construction, see Hos 1:6, 9; 2:1, 25.

32:28–35 The reference is to the nations, not to Israel.

32:36 Neither bond nor free: an all-inclusive expression; cf. 1 Kgs 14:10; 2 Kgs 9:8.

32:44 Hoshea: a variant of “Joshua.” Cf. note on Nm 13:16.

32:49 Abarim: probably the mountain range to the east of the Dead Sea.

32:50 Mount Hor: on the western border of Seir or Edom; cf. Nm 20:23–28; 33:37–38. Dt 10:6 locates elsewhere the place of Aaron’s death.

32:51 Cf. note on 3:26.

33:1–29 This poem, called the Blessing of Moses, consists of a series of poetic characterizations of each of the tribes of Israel (vv. 6–25), introduced (vv. 2–3) and concluded (vv. 26–27) by a theophany; vv. 4–5 lead into the blessing proper; and the poem ends with a blessing on Israel as a whole (vv. 28–29). This catalog of the tribal units of the people Israel resembles the Blessing of Jacob (Gn 49) and the Song of Deborah (Jgs 5, especially vv. 14–18); all three poems seem to date from the early premonarchic period.

33:2 Gods: the divine beings who constitute the armies of the Lord, the heavenly hosts (Sabaoth); see note on 32:8. These “holy ones” (v. 3) are the retinue of the Lord, the warrior God, in his march from the southern mountains (Sinai, Seir, Paran).

33:5 A king arose: it is unclear whether this refers to divine kingship or the beginning of the monarchy in Israel. Jeshurun: see note on 32:15.

33:7 Bring him to his people: this probably refers to the isolated position of the tribe of Judah (cf. Jgs 1:17–19); according to some commentators the reference is to the divided kingdom.

33:8 Thummim ... Urim: devices priests used for divination (cf. note on Ex 28:30).

33:9 The reference is probably to the Levites’ slaughter of other Israelites after the incident of the golden calf; cf. Ex 32:27–29.

33:12 Abides at his breast: an image of security under divine protection.

33:19 The abundance of the seas: perhaps the wealth that comes from sea trade or from fishing. The hidden treasures of the sand: possibly an allusion to the valuable purple dye extracted from certain marine shells found on the coast of northern Palestine.

33:24 Most blessed: Hebrew baruk; but the name Asher may suggest a play on the Hebrew ‘ashre, “happy”; cf., e.g., v. 29; Ps 1:1. Oil: the land of the tribe of Asher was covered with olive groves.

a: Dt 2:24–3:11; Nm 21:21–35.

b: Ex 32:34–33:3.

c: Dt 6:10, 23; 9:5, 27; 29:13; 30:20; 34:4; Gn 12:7; 13:14–15; 15:18–21; 17:8; 26:3–5; 28:13–14.

THE HISTORICAL BOOKS

See RG 179–270

Where the Hebrew Bible comprises three sections—Torah or Pentateuch; Prophetic Books, both the Former and the Latter Prophets; and the Writings, including everything else in the Hebrew Canon—the Christian Old Testament has traditionally been arranged along different lines. After the Pentateuch comes a series of books that continue, in roughly chronological order, the history of Israel. The Book of Joshua depicts Israel taking possession of the land of Canaan. Judges collects stories about the leaders of early Israel in the two hundred years before the emergence of the monarchy. After the tale of Ruth, a sort of interlude in the narrative sweep of these books, 1 and 2 Samuel tell of the rise and fall of Saul, Israel's first king, and the succession and successes of David. The Books of Kings take us from the death of David and the enthronement of Solomon, through the division of the people into the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah, to the destruction of the Northern Kingdom, Israel, at the hands of the Assyrian invader (722/721 B.C.), and the fall of Judah, the Southern Kingdom, to the Babylonians (587 B.C.) and its ensuing exile, the Babylonian captivity.

Except for Ruth, these writings bear the marks of a specific theological outlook, that of the Book of Deuteronomy, and together with that book as its introductory volume constitute what is called the Deuteronomistic History. In this theology, what has characterized Israel's history, in the six hundred years from Moses to the Babylonian exile, has been a dynamic of fidelity or infidelity to Israel's covenant Lord, and the consequent destiny Israel forges for itself of covenant blessing or covenant curse. This dynamic of choice and consequences serves to explain the disasters Israel incurs throughout its history, from the so-called conquest and the days of the Judges to the fall of the North. In its preexilic edition, the Deuteronomistic History would have stood also as warning and wake-up call to the surviving Southern Kingdom.

The Books of Chronicles recycle much of the material found in the previous works, but the author (“the Chronicler”) treats it selectively, with a characteristic theological point of view; its focus is the Jerusalem Temple and its cultic arrangements, which by way of legitimation are attributed to David, the ideal king. The Chronicler’s interests carry through the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah, which recount the restoration of Jewish worship and life in the period of Persian rule following release from exile in Babylon.

The Books of Maccabees give us two overlapping but somewhat differing accounts of Jewish resistance to Seleucid persecution in the early second century B.C., and the assumption of power by the leaders of the resistance, the Maccabees or Hasmoneans.

The traditional designation of these books as “historical” describes their scope and contents, and is not meant to assert factual verifiability; while they contain much valuable historical information, in the narrow sense, their purpose is theological rather than historiographic.

The Books of Tobit, Judith, and Esther are sometimes reckoned among the historical books, but they differ from the writings sketched above, and call for special treatment; see the introduction to those books.

The Book of Joshua presents a narrative of the way Israel took possession of the land of Canaan, making it the land of Israel. This process is swift and inexorable, and is followed by an orderly division and disposition of the land among the twelve tribes, with a concluding ceremony of covenant renewal.

The theological message of the book is unmistakable. God has been faithful to the promise of the land. If Israel relies totally on the Lord for victory; if Israel is united as a people; if the law of herem is kept and no one grows rich from victory in war—then and only then will Israel possess the land.

The Israelites are led by Joshua, the successor of Moses, and the book is at pains to show not only how Joshua carries on the work of Moses but how the “conquest” of Canaan is continuous with the exodus from Egypt. This is seen in the repeated insistence that, as the Lord was with Moses, so he is with Joshua; and, especially, in the crossing of the Jordan River, which is patterned after the crossing of the Red Sea.

The book preserves older traditions of Israel’s settlement in the land, especially in the division of the land among the tribes. As with Deuteronomy and the whole Deuteronomistic History (see introduction to Deuteronomy), the fall of the Northern Kingdom in 722/721 B.C. shows its influence throughout. As addressed to the needs of a late preexilic audience, then, the book should be read not so much as imparting information about how Israel took over the land of Canaan, many centuries before the composition of the book, as teaching a lesson about how Israel is to avoid losing the land.

Modern readers may be put off by the description of battles and their aftermath, the destruction of everyone and everything in the cities taken under the “ban” (herem). The ban was practiced in the ancient Near East, in Israel and elsewhere, but in Joshua the wholesale destruction of the Canaanites is an idealization of the deuteronomic idea that pagans are to be wiped out so they will not be an occasion for apostasy from the Lord (cf. Dt 7:1–6); note in particular the artificial, formalized description of destruction of towns in Jos 10:28–39. It should be remembered that by the time the book was written, the Canaanites were long gone. Progressive revelation throughout Israel’s history produced far more lofty ideals, as when the prophets see all the nations embracing faith in Yahweh, being joined to Israel, and living in peace with one another (Is 2:2–4; 19:23–25; 45:22–25; Zec 8:22–23), and the New Testament teaches us to love even our enemies (Mt 5:43–45).

A comparison of Joshua with the account of Israel’s early history found in the first chapter of the Book of Judges shows that Israel’s emergence as the dominant presence in the land was a slow and piecemeal affair, not achieved at one stroke and with great ease: the Book of Joshua, with its highly idealized depiction of the “conquest,” is a theologically programmatic cautionary tale about what the people are to do and not do in order to avoid the fate of the Northern Kingdom in losing the land.

The Book of Joshua may be divided as follows:

- I. Conquest of Canaan (1:1–12:24)
- II. Division of the Land (13:1–21:45)
- III. Return of the Transjordan Tribes and Joshua’s Farewell (22:1–24:33)

Divine Promise of Assistance. <sup>1</sup> After Moses, the servant of the LORD, had died, the LORD said to Moses' aide Joshua, son of Nun: <sup>2*</sup> Moses my servant is dead. So now, you and the whole people with you, prepare to cross the Jordan to the land that I will give the Israelites. <sup>3a</sup> Every place where you set foot I have given you, as I promised Moses. <sup>4*</sup> All the land of the Hittites, from the wilderness and the Lebanon east to the great river Euphrates and west to the Great Sea, will be your territory. <sup>b</sup> <sup>5</sup> No one can withstand you as long as you live. As I was with Moses, I will be with you: <sup>c</sup> I will not leave you nor forsake you. <sup>6</sup> Be strong and steadfast, so that you may give this people possession of the land I swore to their ancestors that I would give them. <sup>7d</sup> Only be strong and steadfast, being careful to observe the entire law which Moses my servant enjoined on you. Do not swerve from it either to the right or to the left, that you may succeed wherever you go. <sup>8</sup> Do not let this book of the law depart from your lips. Recite it by day and by night, <sup>e</sup> that you may carefully observe all that is written in it; then you will attain your goal; then you will succeed. <sup>9</sup> I command you: be strong and steadfast! Do not fear nor be dismayed, for the LORD, your God, is with you wherever you go.

<sup>10f</sup> So Joshua commanded the officers of the people: <sup>11</sup> "Go through the camp and command the people, 'Prepare your provisions, for three days from now you shall cross the Jordan here, to march in and possess the land the LORD, your God, is giving as your possession.' "

The Transjordan Tribes. <sup>12g</sup> Joshua addressed the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh: <sup>13</sup> "Remember what Moses, the servant of the LORD, commanded you when he said, 'The LORD, your God, is about to give you rest; he will give you this land.'<sup>14</sup> Your wives, your children, and your livestock may remain in the land Moses gave you here beyond the Jordan. But all the warriors among you must cross over armed, ahead of your kindred, and you must help them <sup>15</sup> until the LORD has settled your kindred, and they like you possess the land the LORD, your God, is giving them. Afterward you may return and possess your own land, which Moses, the servant of the LORD, has given you east of the Jordan."<sup>h16</sup> They answered Joshua, “We will do all you have commanded us, and we will go wherever you send us. <sup>17</sup> As completely as we obeyed Moses, we will obey you. Only, may the LORD, your God, be with you as God was with Moses. <sup>18</sup> Anyone who rebels against your orders and does not obey all your commands shall be put to death. Only be strong and steadfast.”

Spies Saved by Rahab. <sup>1</sup>Then Joshua, son of Nun, secretly sent out two spies from Shittim, saying, “Go, reconnoiter the land and Jericho.” When the two reached Jericho, they went into the house of a prostitute named Rahab,<sup>i</sup> where they lodged. <sup>2</sup>But a report was brought to the king of Jericho: “Some men came here last night, Israelites, to spy out the land.” <sup>3</sup>So the king of Jericho sent Rahab the order, “Bring out the men who have come to you and entered your house, for they have come to spy out the entire land.” <sup>4</sup>The woman<sup>j</sup> had taken the two men and hidden them, so she said, “True, the men you speak of came to me, but I did not know where they came from. <sup>5</sup>At dark, when it was time to close the gate, they left, and I do not know where they went. You will have to pursue them quickly to overtake them.” <sup>6</sup>Now, she had led them to the roof, and hidden them among her stalks of flax spread out* there. <sup>7</sup>But the pursuers set out along the way to the fords of the Jordan. As soon as they had left to pursue them, the gate was shut.

<sup>8</sup>Before the spies lay down, Rahab went up to them on the roof <sup>9</sup>and said: * “I know that the LORD has given you the land, that a dread of you has come upon us, and that all the inhabitants of the land tremble with fear because of you.<sup>k</sup> <sup>10</sup>For we have heard how the LORD dried up the waters of the Red Sea before you when you came out of Egypt,<sup>l</sup> and what you did to Sihon and Og, the two kings of the Amorites beyond the Jordan, whom you destroyed under the ban. <sup>11</sup>We heard, and our hearts melted within us; everyone is utterly dispirited because of you, since the LORD, your God, is God in heaven above and on earth below.<sup>m</sup> <sup>12n</sup> Now then, swear to me by the LORD that, since I am showing kindness to you, you in turn will show kindness to my family.<sup>o</sup> Give me a reliable sign <sup>13</sup>that you will allow my father and mother, brothers and sisters, and my whole family to live, and that you will deliver us from death.” <sup>14</sup>“We pledge our lives for yours,” they answered her. “If you do not betray our mission, we will be faithful in showing kindness to you when the LORD gives us the land.”

<sup>15</sup>Then she let them down through the window with a rope; for she lived in a house built into the city wall. * <sup>16</sup>“Go up into the hill country,” she said,

“that your pursuers may not come upon you. Hide there for three days, until they return; then you may go on your way.” <sup>17</sup>They answered her, “We are free of this oath that you made us take, unless, <sup>18</sup>when we come into the land, you tie this scarlet cord in the window through which you are letting us down. Gather your father and mother, your brothers, and all your family into your house. <sup>19</sup>Should any of them pass outside the doors of your house, their blood will be on their own heads, and we will be guiltless. But if anyone in your house is harmed, their blood will be on our heads. <sup>20</sup>If, however, you betray our mission, we will be free of the oath you have made us take.” <sup>21</sup>“Let it be as you say,” she replied, and sent them away. When they were gone, she tied the scarlet cord in the window.

<sup>22</sup>They went up into the hill country, where they stayed three days until their pursuers, who had sought them all along the road without finding them, returned. <sup>23</sup>Then the two came back down from the hills, crossed the Jordan to Joshua, son of Nun, and told him all that had happened to them. <sup>24</sup>They assured Joshua, “The LORD has given all this land into our power; indeed, all the inhabitants of the land tremble with fear because of us.”

Preparations for Crossing the Jordan. <sup>1</sup>Early the next morning, Joshua and all the Israelites moved from Shittim and came to the Jordan, where they stayed before crossing over. <sup>2p</sup> Three days later the officers went through the camp <sup>3q</sup> and issued these commands to the people: “When you see the ark of the covenant of the LORD, your God, which the levitical priests will carry, you must break camp and follow it, <sup>4</sup>that you may know the way to take, for you have not gone over this road before. But let there be a space of two thousand cubits between you and the ark: do not come nearer to it.” <sup>5</sup>Joshua also said to the people, “Sanctify yourselves, for tomorrow the LORD will perform wonders among you.” <sup>6</sup>And he told the priests, “Take up the ark of the covenant and cross ahead of the people”; so they took up the ark of the covenant and went before the people.

<sup>7r</sup> Then the LORD said to Joshua: Today I will begin to exalt you in the sight of all Israel, that they may know that, as I was with Moses, so I will be with you. <sup>s</sup> <sup>8</sup>Now command the priests carrying the ark of the covenant, “When you come to the edge of the waters of the Jordan, there take your stand.”

<sup>9</sup>So Joshua said to the Israelites, “Come here and listen to the words of the LORD, your God.” <sup>10</sup>He continued: “By this you will know that there is a living God in your midst: he will certainly dispossess before you the Canaanites, Hittites, Hivites, Perizzites, Girgashites, Amorites, and Jebusites. <sup>t</sup> <sup>11</sup>The ark of the covenant of the Lord of the whole earth will cross the Jordan before you. <sup>12</sup>Now choose twelve men, <sup>u</sup> one from each of the tribes of Israel. <sup>13</sup>When the soles of the feet of the priests carrying the ark of the LORD, the Lord of the whole earth, touch the waters of the Jordan, it will cease to flow; the water flowing down from upstream will halt in a single heap.”*

The Crossing Begun. <sup>14</sup>The people set out from their tents to cross the Jordan, with the priests carrying the ark of the covenant ahead of them. <sup>15</sup>When those bearing the ark came to the Jordan and the feet of the priests bearing the ark were immersed in the waters of the Jordan—which overflows all its banks during the entire season of the harvest—* <sup>16</sup>the waters flowing from upstream halted, standing up in a single heap<sup>v</sup> for a very great distance indeed, from Adam, a city in the direction of Zarethan; those flowing downstream toward the Salt Sea of the Arabah disappeared entirely.*Thus the people crossed over opposite Jericho. <sup>17</sup>The priests carrying the ark of the covenant of the LORD stood on dry ground in the Jordan riverbed<sup>w</sup> while all Israel crossed on dry ground, until the whole nation had completed the crossing of the Jordan.

Memorial Stones. <sup>1</sup>After the entire nation had completed the crossing of the Jordan, <sup>2</sup>the LORD said to Joshua: Choose twelve men<sup>x</sup> from the people, one from each tribe, <sup>3</sup>and command them, “Take up twelve stones from this spot in the Jordan riverbed where the priests have been standing.<sup>y</sup> Carry them over with you, and place them where you are to stay tonight.”

<sup>4</sup>Summoning the twelve men he had selected from among the Israelites, one from each tribe, <sup>5</sup>Joshua said to them: “Go to the Jordan riverbed in front of the ark of the LORD, your God; lift to your shoulders one stone apiece, so that they will equal in number the tribes of the Israelites. <sup>6</sup>In the future, these are to be a sign among you. When your children ask you, ‘What do these stones mean to you?’<sup>z</sup> <sup>7</sup>you shall answer them, ‘The waters of the Jordan ceased to flow before the ark of the covenant of the LORD when it crossed the Jordan.’<sup>a</sup> Thus these stones are to serve as a perpetual memorial to the Israelites.” <sup>8</sup>The twelve Israelites did as Joshua had commanded: they took up twelve stones from the Jordan riverbed as the LORD had said to Joshua, one for each of the tribes of the Israelites. They carried them along to the camp site, and there they placed them. <sup>9</sup>Joshua set up the twelve stones that had been in the Jordan riverbed on the spot where the priests stood who were carrying the ark of the covenant. They are there to this day.

<sup>10*</sup> The priests carrying the ark stood in the Jordan riverbed until everything had been done that the LORD had commanded Joshua to tell the people, just as Moses had commanded Joshua. The people crossed over quickly, <sup>11</sup>and when all the people had completed the crossing, the ark of the LORD also crossed; and the priests were now in front of them. <sup>12</sup>The Reubenites, Gadites, and half-tribe of Manasseh, armed, marched in the vanguard of the Israelites, as Moses had ordered. <sup>13</sup>About forty thousand troops, equipped for battle, crossed over before the LORD to the plains of Jericho for war.

<sup>19</sup>The people came up from the Jordan on the tenth day of the first month, and camped in Gilgal on the eastern limits of Jericho.<sup>c</sup> <sup>20</sup>At Gilgal Joshua set up the twelve stones that had been taken from the Jordan, <sup>21</sup>saying to the Israelites, “In the future, when your children ask their parents, ‘What do these stones mean?’ <sup>22</sup>you shall inform them, ‘Israel crossed the Jordan here on dry ground.’ <sup>23</sup>For the LORD, your God, dried up the waters of the Jordan in front of you until you crossed over, just as the LORD, your God, had done at the Red Sea, drying it up in front of us until we crossed over,<sup>d</sup> <sup>24</sup>in order that all the peoples of the earth may know that the hand of the LORD is mighty, and that you may fear the LORD, your God, forever.”<sup>e</sup>

CHAPTER 5

Rites at Gilgal. <sup>1</sup>When all the kings of the Amorites to the west of the Jordan and all the kings of the Canaanites by the sea heard that the LORD had dried up the waters of the Jordan before the Israelites until they crossed over, their hearts melted and they were utterly dispirited because of the Israelites.

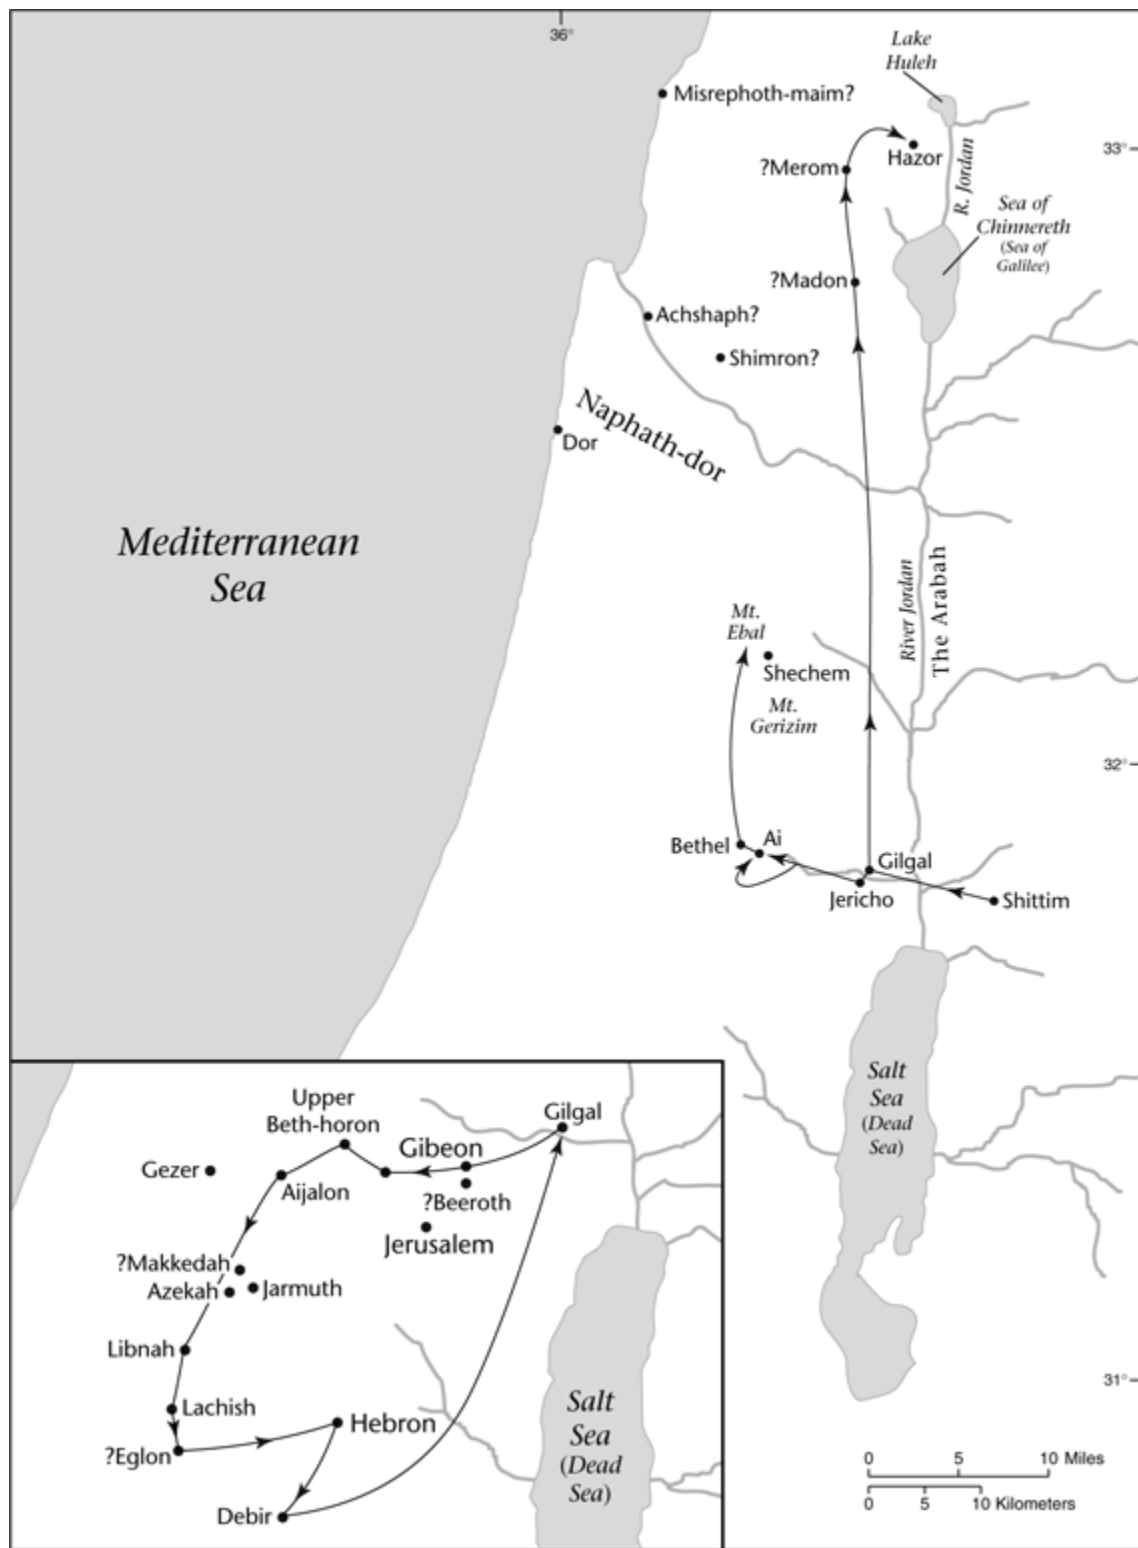

<sup>2f</sup> On this occasion the LORD said to Joshua: Make flint knives and circumcise Israel for the second time. <sup>3</sup>So Joshua made flint knives and circumcised the Israelites at Gibeath-haaraloth.* <sup>4</sup>This was the reason for the circumcision: Of all the people who had come out of Egypt, every male of military age had died in the wilderness<sup>g</sup> during the journey after they came out of Egypt. <sup>5</sup>Though all the men who came out were circumcised, none of those born in the wilderness during the journey after the departure from Egypt were circumcised. <sup>6</sup>Now the Israelites wandered forty years in the wilderness, until all the warriors among the people that came forth from Egypt died off because they had not listened to the voice of the LORD. For the LORD swore<sup>h</sup> that he would not let them see the land he had sworn to their ancestors to give us, a land flowing with milk and honey. <sup>7i</sup> It was the children God raised up in their stead whom Joshua circumcised, for these were yet with foreskins, not having been circumcised on the journey. <sup>8</sup>When the circumcision of the entire nation was complete, they remained in camp where they were, until they recovered. <sup>9</sup>Then the LORD said to Joshua: Today I have removed the reproach of Egypt from you.<sup>j</sup> Therefore the place is called Gilgal* to the present day.

<sup>10k</sup> While the Israelites were encamped at Gilgal on the plains of Jericho, they celebrated the Passover on the evening of the fourteenth day of the month.* <sup>11</sup>On the day after the Passover they ate of the produce of the land in the form of unleavened cakes and parched grain. On that same day <sup>12</sup>after they ate of the produce of the land, the manna ceased. No longer was there manna for the Israelites, who that year ate of the yield of the land of Canaan.<sup>l</sup>

Siege at Jericho. <sup>13*</sup>While Joshua was near Jericho, he raised his eyes and saw one who stood facing him, drawn sword in hand.<sup>m</sup> Joshua went up to him and asked, “Are you one of us or one of our enemies?” <sup>14</sup>He replied, “Neither. I am the commander* of the army of the LORD: now I have come.” Then Joshua fell down to the ground in worship, and said to him, “What has my lord to say to his servant?” <sup>15</sup>The commander of the army of the LORD replied to Joshua, “Remove your sandals from your feet, for the place on which you are standing is holy.”<sup>n</sup> And Joshua did so.

See RG 180–82

<sup>1</sup>Now Jericho was in a state of siege because of the presence of the Israelites. No one left or entered. <sup>2</sup>And to Joshua the LORD said: I have delivered Jericho, its king, and its warriors into your power. <sup>3o</sup> Have all the soldiers circle the city, marching once around it. Do this for six days, <sup>4</sup>with seven priests carrying ram's horns ahead of the ark. On the seventh day march around the city seven times, and have the priests blow the horns. <sup>5</sup>When they give a long blast on the ram's horns and you hear the sound of the horn, all the people shall shout aloud. The wall of the city will collapse, and the people shall attack straight ahead.

<sup>6</sup>Summoning the priests, Joshua, son of Nun, said to them, "Take up the ark of the covenant with seven of the priests carrying ram's horns in front of the ark of the LORD." <sup>7</sup>And he ordered the people, "Proceed and surround the city, with the picked troops marching ahead of the ark of the LORD." <sup>8</sup>When Joshua spoke to the people, the seven priests who carried the ram's horns before the LORD marched and blew their horns, and the ark of the covenant of the LORD followed them. <sup>9</sup>In front of the priests with the horns marched the picked troops; the rear guard followed the ark, and the blowing of horns was kept up continually as they marched. <sup>10</sup>But Joshua had commanded the people, "Do not shout or make any noise or outcry until I tell you, 'Shout!' Then you must shout." <sup>11</sup>So he had the ark of the LORD circle the city, going once around it, after which they returned to camp for the night.

<sup>12</sup>Early the next morning, Joshua had the priests take up the ark of the LORD. <sup>13</sup>The seven priests bearing the ram's horns marched in front of the ark of the LORD, blowing their horns. Ahead of these marched the picked troops, while the rear guard followed the ark of the LORD, and the blowing of horns was kept up continually. <sup>14</sup>On this second day they again marched around the city once before returning to camp; and for six days in all they did the same.

<sup>15</sup>On the seventh day, beginning at daybreak, they marched around the city seven times in the same manner; on that day only did they march around the city seven times. <sup>16</sup>The seventh time around, the priests blew the horns and Joshua said to the people, “Now shout, for the LORD has given you the city. <sup>17p</sup> The city and everything in it is under the ban. Only Rahab the prostitute and all who are in the house with her are to live, because she hid the messengers we sent. <sup>18q</sup> But be careful not to covet or take anything that is under the ban; * otherwise you will bring upon the camp of Israel this ban and the misery of it. <sup>19</sup> All silver and gold, and the articles of bronze or iron, are holy to the LORD. They shall be put in the treasury of the LORD.”

The Fall of Jericho. <sup>20</sup> As the horns blew, the people began to shout. When they heard the sound of the horn, they raised a tremendous shout. The wall collapsed, * and the people attacked the city straight ahead and took it. <sup>r</sup> <sup>21</sup> They observed the ban by putting to the sword all living creatures <sup>s</sup> in the city: men and women, young and old, as well as oxen, sheep and donkeys.

<sup>22t</sup> To the two men who had spied out the land, Joshua said, “Go into the prostitute’s house and bring out the woman with all her family, as you swore to her you would do.” <sup>23</sup> The spies entered and brought out Rahab, with her father, mother, brothers, and all her family; her entire family they led forth and placed outside the camp of Israel. <sup>24</sup> The city itself they burned with all that was in it; <sup>u</sup> but the silver, gold, and articles of bronze and iron they placed in the treasury of the house of the LORD. <sup>25*</sup> Because Rahab the prostitute had hidden the messengers whom Joshua had sent to reconnoiter Jericho, Joshua let her live, along with her father’s house and all her family, who dwell in the midst of Israel to this day.

<sup>26v</sup> On that occasion Joshua imposed the oath: Cursed before the LORD be the man who attempts to rebuild this city, Jericho. At the cost of his firstborn will he lay its foundation, and at the cost of his youngest son will he set up its gates. *

<sup>27</sup> Thus the LORD was with Joshua so that his fame spread throughout the land. <sup>w</sup>

CHAPTER 7

See RG 180–82

Defeat at Ai. <sup>1</sup>But the Israelites acted treacherously with regard to the ban; Achan, son of Carmi, son of Zabdi, son of Zerah of the tribe of Judah, took goods that were under the ban,<sup>x</sup> and the anger of the LORD flared up against the Israelites.

<sup>2y</sup> Joshua next sent men from Jericho to Ai, which is near Beth-aven and east of Bethel, with the order, “Go up and reconnoiter the land.” When they had explored Ai, <sup>3</sup>they returned to Joshua and advised, “Do not send all the people up; if only about two or three thousand go up, they can attack and overcome Ai. You need not tire all the people: the enemy there are few.”

<sup>4</sup>About three thousand of the people made the attack, but they fled before the army at Ai, <sup>5</sup>who killed some thirty-six of them. They pursued them from the city gate to the Shebarim, and defeated them on the descent, so that the confidence of the people melted away like water.

<sup>6</sup>Joshua, together with the elders of Israel, tore their garments and fell face down before the ark of the LORD until evening; and they threw dust on their heads. <sup>7</sup>“Alas, Lord GOD,” Joshua prayed, “why did you ever allow this people to cross over the Jordan, delivering us into the power of the Amorites, that they might destroy us? Would that we had been content to dwell on the other side of the Jordan. <sup>8</sup>Please, Lord, what can I say, now that Israel has turned its back to its enemies? <sup>9</sup>When the Canaanites and the other inhabitants of the land hear of it, they will close in around us and efface our name from the earth. What will you do for your great name?”<sup>z</sup>

<sup>10</sup>The LORD replied to Joshua: Stand up. Why are you lying there? <sup>11a</sup>Israel has sinned: they have transgressed the covenant* which I enjoined on them. They have taken goods subject to the ban. They have stolen and lied, placing the goods in their baggage. <sup>12</sup>If the Israelites cannot stand up to their enemies, but must turn their back to them, it is because they are under the ban. I will not continue to be with you unless you remove that which is banned from among you. <sup>13</sup>Get up, sanctify the people.<sup>b</sup> Tell them, “Sanctify yourselves before tomorrow, for thus says the LORD, the God of Israel: That which is banned is in your midst, Israel. You cannot stand up to your enemies until you remove it from among you. <sup>14</sup>In the morning you must come forward by tribes. The tribe which the LORD designates shall come forward by clans; the clan which the LORD designates shall come forward by families; the family which the LORD designates shall come forward one by one. <sup>15</sup>Whoever is designated as having incurred the ban shall be destroyed by fire, with all that is his, because he has transgressed the covenant of the LORD and has committed a shameful crime in Israel.”<sup>c</sup>

Achan's Guilt and Punishment. <sup>16</sup>Early the next morning Joshua had Israel come forward by tribes, and the tribe of Judah was designated.* <sup>17</sup>Then he had the clans of Judah come forward, and the clan of Zerah was designated. He had the clan of Zerah<sup>d</sup> come forward by families, and Zabdi was designated. <sup>18</sup>Finally he had that family come forward one by one, and Achan, son of Carmi, son of Zabdi, son of Zerah of the tribe of Judah, was designated. <sup>19</sup>Joshua said to Achan, “My son, give glory to the LORD, the God of Israel, and praise him by telling me what you have done; do not hide it from me.” <sup>20</sup>Achan answered Joshua, “I have indeed sinned against the LORD, the God of Israel. This is what I have done: <sup>21</sup>Among the spoils, I saw a beautiful Babylonian mantle, two hundred shekels of silver, and a bar of gold fifty shekels in weight; I coveted them and I took them. They are now hidden in the ground inside my tent, with the silver underneath.” <sup>22</sup>Joshua sent messengers and they ran to the tent and there they were, hidden in the tent, with the silver underneath. <sup>23</sup>They took them from the tent, brought them to Joshua and all the Israelites, and spread them out before the LORD.

<sup>24</sup>Then Joshua and all Israel took Achan, son of Zerah, with the silver, the mantle, and the bar of gold, and with his sons and daughters, his ox, his donkey and his sheep, his tent, and all his possessions, and led them off to the Valley of Achor. <sup>25</sup>Joshua said, “What misery have you caused us? May the LORD bring misery upon you today!”<sup>e</sup> And all Israel stoned him to death. They burnt them with fire and they stoned them. <sup>26</sup>Over Achan they piled a great heap of stones, which remains to the present day.<sup>f</sup> Then the LORD turned from his anger. That is why the place is called the Valley of Achor* to this day.

Capture of Ai. <sup>1g</sup> The LORD then said to Joshua: Do not be afraid or dismayed. Take all the army with you and prepare to attack Ai.<sup>h</sup> I have delivered the king of Ai into your power, with his people, city, and land. <sup>2</sup>Do to Ai and its king what you did to Jericho and its king—except that you may take its spoil and livestock as plunder.<sup>i</sup> Set an ambush behind the city. <sup>3</sup>So Joshua and all the soldiers prepared to attack Ai. Picking out thirty thousand warriors,* Joshua sent them off by night <sup>4</sup>with these orders: “See that you ambush the city from the rear. Do not be very far from the city. All of you must be ready. <sup>5</sup>The rest of the people and I will come up to the city, and when they make a sortie against us as they did the last time, we will flee from them. <sup>6</sup>They will keep coming out after us until we have drawn them away from the city, for they will think, ‘They are fleeing from us as they did the last time.’ When we flee, <sup>7</sup>then you rise from ambush and take possession of the city, which the LORD, your God, will deliver into your power. <sup>8</sup>When you have taken the city, set it on fire in obedience to the LORD’s command. These are my orders to you.”<sup>j</sup> <sup>9</sup>Then Joshua sent them away. They went to the place of ambush, taking up their position to the west of Ai, toward Bethel. Joshua, however, spent that night with the army.

<sup>10</sup>Early the next morning Joshua mustered the army and went up to Ai at its head, with the elders of Israel. <sup>11</sup>When all the troops he led were drawn up in position before the city, they pitched camp north of Ai, on the other side of the ravine. <sup>12</sup>He took about five thousand warriors and set them in ambush between Bethel and Ai, west of the city. <sup>13</sup>Thus the people took up their stations, with the main body north of the city and the ambush west of it, and Joshua waited overnight in the valley. <sup>14</sup>The king of Ai saw this, and he and all his army came out very early in the morning to engage Israel in battle at the place in front of the Arabah, not knowing that there was an ambush behind the city. <sup>15</sup>Joshua and the main body of the Israelites fled toward the wilderness, pretending defeat, <sup>16</sup>until the last of the soldiers in the city had been called out to pursue them. Since they were drawn away from the city, with everyone pursuing Joshua, <sup>17</sup>not a soldier remained in Ai or Bethel. They abandoned the city, leaving it open, as they pursued Israel.

<sup>18</sup>Then the LORD directed Joshua: Stretch out the javelin in your hand toward Ai, for I will deliver it into your power. Joshua stretched out the javelin in his hand toward the city, <sup>19</sup>and as soon as he did so, the men in ambush rose from their post, rushed in, captured the city, and immediately set it on fire. <sup>20</sup>By the time the army of Ai looked back, the smoke from the city was going up to the heavens. Escape in any direction was impossible, because the Israelites retreating toward the wilderness now turned on their pursuers; <sup>21</sup>for when Joshua and the main body of Israelites saw that the city had been taken by ambush and was going up in smoke, they struck back at the forces of Ai. <sup>22</sup>Since those in the city came out to intercept them, Ai's army was hemmed in by Israelites on both sides, who cut them down without any fugitives or survivors<sup>k</sup> <sup>23</sup>except the king, whom they took alive and brought to Joshua.

<sup>24</sup>When Israel finished killing all the inhabitants of Ai in the open, who had pursued them into the wilderness, and all of them to the last man fell by the sword, then all Israel returned and put to the sword those inside the city. <sup>25</sup>There fell that day a total of twelve thousand men and women, the entire population of Ai. <sup>26l</sup> Joshua kept the javelin in his hand stretched out until he had carried out the ban on all the inhabitants of Ai. <sup>27</sup>However, the Israelites took for themselves as plunder the livestock and the spoil of that city, according to the command of the LORD issued to Joshua. <sup>28</sup>Then Joshua destroyed Ai by fire, reducing it to an everlasting mound of ruins, as it remains today.<sup>m</sup> <sup>29</sup>He had the king of Ai hanged on a tree until evening;<sup>n</sup> then at sunset Joshua ordered the body removed from the tree and cast at the entrance of the city gate, where a great heap of stones was piled up over it, which remains to the present day.

Altar on Mount Ebal. <sup>30* o</sup> Later, on Mount Ebal, Joshua built to the LORD, the God of Israel, an altar <sup>31</sup>of unhewn stones on which no iron tool had been used,<sup>p</sup> just as Moses, the servant of the LORD, had commanded the Israelites, as recorded in the book of the law. On this altar they sacrificed burnt offerings to the LORD and made communion sacrifices. <sup>32</sup>There, in the presence of the Israelites, Joshua inscribed upon the stones a copy of the law written by Moses. <sup>33</sup>And all Israel, resident alien and native alike, with their elders, officers, and judges, stood on either side of the ark facing the levitical priests who were carrying the ark of the covenant of the LORD.<sup>q</sup>

Half of them were facing Mount Gerizim and half Mount Ebal, just as Moses, the servant of the LORD, had first commanded for the blessing of the people of Israel. <sup>34r</sup> Then were read aloud all the words of the law, the blessings and the curses, exactly as written in the book of the law. <sup>35s</sup> Every single word that Moses had commanded, Joshua read aloud to the entire assembly, including the women and children, and the resident aliens among them.

CHAPTER 9

Confederacy Against Israel. <sup>1</sup>When the news reached all the kings west of the Jordan, in the mountain regions and in the Shephelah, and all along the coast of the Great Sea as far as the Lebanon: Hittites, Amorites, Canaanites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites,<sup>t</sup> <sup>2</sup>they gathered together to launch a common attack against Joshua and Israel.

The Gibeonite Deception. <sup>3</sup>On hearing what Joshua had done to Jericho and Ai, the inhabitants of Gibeon<sup>u</sup> <sup>4</sup>formed their own scheme. They chose provisions for a journey, making use of old sacks for their donkeys, and old wineskins, torn and mended. <sup>5</sup>They wore old, patched sandals and shabby garments; and all the bread they took was dry and crumbly. <sup>6</sup>Thus they journeyed to Joshua in the camp at Gilgal, where they said to him and to the Israelites, “We have come from a far-off land; now, make a covenant with us.”<sup>v</sup> <sup>7</sup>But the Israelites replied to the Hivites,* “You may be living in land that is ours. How, then, can we make a covenant with you?” <sup>8</sup>But they answered Joshua, “We are your servants.” Then Joshua asked them, “Who are you? Where do you come from?” <sup>9</sup>They answered him, “Your servants have come from a far-off land, because of the fame of the LORD, your God. For we have heard reports of all that he did in Egypt<sup>w</sup> <sup>10</sup>and all that he did to the two kings of the Amorites beyond the Jordan,<sup>x</sup> Sihon, king of Heshbon, and Og, king of Bashan, who lived in Ashtaroth. <sup>11</sup>So our elders and all the inhabitants of our land said to us, ‘Take along provisions for the journey and go to meet them. Say to them: “We are your servants; now make a covenant with us.”’ <sup>12</sup>This bread of ours was still warm when we brought it from home as provisions the day we left to come to you, but now it is dry and crumbly. <sup>13</sup>Here are our wineskins, which were new when we filled them, but now they are torn. Look at our garments and sandals; they are worn out from the very long journey.” <sup>14</sup>Then the Israelite leaders partook of their provisions, without inquiring of the LORD.<sup>y</sup> <sup>15</sup>So Joshua made peace with them and made a covenant to let them live,<sup>z</sup> which the leaders of the community sealed with an oath.

Gibeonites Made Vassals. <sup>16</sup>Three days after the covenant was made, the Israelites heard that these people were from nearby, and would be living in Israel. <sup>17</sup>The third day on the road, the Israelites came to their cities of Gibeon, Chephirah, Beeroth, and Kiriathjearim, <sup>18</sup>but did not attack them, because the leaders of the community had sworn to them by the LORD, the God of Israel. When the entire community grumbled against the leaders, <sup>19</sup>these all remonstrated with the community, “We have sworn to them by the LORD, the God of Israel, and so we cannot harm them. <sup>20</sup>Let us therefore let them live, and so deal with them that no wrath fall upon us because of the oath we have sworn to them.”<sup>a</sup> <sup>21</sup>Thus the leaders said to them, “Let them live, and become hewers of wood and drawers of water* for the entire community.” So the community did as the leaders advised them.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>22</sup>Joshua summoned the Gibeonites and said to them, “Why did you deceive us and say, ‘We live far off from you’?—You live among us! <sup>23</sup>Now are you accursed: every one of you shall always be a slave, hewers of wood and drawers of water, for the house of my God.” <sup>24</sup>They answered Joshua, “Your servants were fully informed of how the LORD, your God, commanded Moses his servant that you be given the entire land and that all its inhabitants be destroyed before you. Since, therefore, at your advance, we were in great fear for our lives, we acted as we did.”<sup>c</sup> <sup>25</sup>And now that we are in your power, do with us what is good and right in your eyes.” <sup>26*</sup>Joshua did what he had decided: while he saved them from being killed by the Israelites, <sup>27</sup>on that day he made them, as they still are, hewers of wood and drawers of water for the community and for the altar of the LORD, in the place the LORD would choose.

CHAPTER 10

The Siege of Gibeon. <sup>1</sup>Now when Adonizedek, king of Jerusalem, heard that Joshua had captured Ai and put it under the ban, and had done to that city and its king as he had done to Jericho and its king,<sup>d</sup> and that the inhabitants of Gibeon had made their peace with Israel, remaining among them, <sup>2</sup>there was great fear abroad, because Gibeon was a great city, like one of the royal cities, greater even than Ai, and all its men were warriors. <sup>3</sup>So Adonizedek, king of Jerusalem, sent to Hoham, king of Hebron, Piram, king of Jarmuth, Japhia, king of Lachish, and Debir, king of Eglon, with this message: <sup>4</sup>“Come and help me attack Gibeon, for it has made peace with Joshua and the Israelites.”<sup>e</sup> <sup>5</sup>The five Amorite kings, of Jerusalem, Hebron, Jarmuth, Lachish, and Eglon,* gathered with all their forces, and marched against Gibeon to make war on it. <sup>6</sup>Thereupon, the Gibeonites sent an appeal to Joshua in his camp at Gilgal: “Do not abandon your servants. Come up here quickly and save us. Help us, because all the Amorite kings of the mountain country have joined together against us.”<sup>f</sup>

Joshua’s Victory. <sup>7</sup>So Joshua marched up from Gilgal with all his army and all his warriors. <sup>8</sup>The LORD said to Joshua: Do not fear them, for I have delivered them into your power. Not one of them will be able to withstand you. <sup>9</sup>After an all-night march from Gilgal, Joshua made a surprise attack upon them, <sup>10</sup>and the LORD threw them into disorder before Israel. The Israelites inflicted a great slaughter on them at Gibeon and pursued them down the Beth-horon slope, attacking them as far as Azekah and Makkedah.

Sun, stand still at Gibeon,
Moon, in the valley of Aijalon!

<sup>13</sup>The sun stood still,
the moon stayed,

while the nation took vengeance on its foes.<sup>h</sup>

This is recorded* in the Book of Jashar. The sun halted halfway across the heavens; not for an entire day did it press on. <sup>14</sup>Never before or since was there a day like this, when the LORD obeyed the voice of a man; for the LORD fought for Israel. <sup>15</sup>Then Joshua and all Israel returned to the camp at Gilgal.

Execution of Amorite Kings. <sup>16</sup>The five kings who had fled hid in the cave at Makkedah. <sup>17</sup>When Joshua was told, “The five kings have been found, hiding in the cave at Makkedah,” <sup>18</sup>he said, “Roll large stones to the mouth of the cave and post guards over it. <sup>19</sup>But do not remain there yourselves. Pursue your enemies, and harry them in the rear. Do not allow them to reach their cities, for the LORD, your God, has delivered them into your power.”

<sup>20</sup>Once Joshua and the Israelites had finally inflicted the last blows in this very great slaughter, and the survivors had escaped from them into the fortified cities, <sup>21</sup>all the army returned to Joshua and the camp at Makkedah in victory; no one uttered a sound against the Israelites. <sup>22</sup>Then Joshua said, “Open the mouth of the cave and bring me those five kings from the cave.” <sup>23</sup>They did so; they brought out to him from the cave the five kings, of Jerusalem, Hebron, Jarmuth, Lachish, and Eglon. <sup>24</sup>When they brought the five kings out to Joshua, he summoned all the army of Israel and said to the commanders of the soldiers who had marched with him, “Come forward and put your feet on the necks of these kings.” They came forward and put their feet upon their necks. <sup>25i</sup> Then Joshua said to them, “Do not be afraid or dismayed, be firm and steadfast. This is what the LORD will do to all the enemies against whom you fight.” <sup>26j</sup> Thereupon Joshua struck and killed the kings, and hanged them on five trees, where they remained hanging until evening. <sup>27</sup>At sunset Joshua commanded that they be taken down from the trees and be thrown into the cave where they had hidden; over the mouth of the cave large stones were placed, which remain until this very day.

Conquest of Southern Canaan. <sup>28k</sup> Makkedah, too, Joshua captured and put to the sword at that time. He put the city, its king, and every person in it under the ban, leaving no survivors. Thus he did to the king of Makkedah what he had done to the king of Jericho. <sup>29</sup>Joshua then passed on with all Israel from Makkedah to Libnah, and attacked it, <sup>30</sup>and the LORD delivered it, with its king, into the power of Israel. He put it to the sword with every person there, leaving no survivors. Thus he did to its king what he had done to the king of Jericho. <sup>31</sup>Joshua next passed on with all Israel from Libnah to Lachish, where they set up a camp during the attack. <sup>32</sup>The LORD delivered Lachish into the power of Israel, so that on the second day Joshua captured it and put it to the sword with every person in it, just as he had done to Libnah. <sup>33</sup>At that time Horam, king of Gezer, came up to help Lachish, but Joshua defeated him and his people, leaving him no survivors. <sup>34</sup>From Lachish, Joshua passed on with all Israel to Eglon; encamping near it, they attacked it <sup>35</sup>and captured it the same day, putting it to the sword. On that day he put under the ban every person in it, just as he had done at Lachish. <sup>36</sup>From Eglon, Joshua went up with all Israel to Hebron, which they attacked <sup>37</sup>and captured. They put it to the sword with its king, all its cities, and every person there, leaving no survivors, just as Joshua had done to Eglon. He put it under the ban and every person in it. <sup>38</sup>Then Joshua and all Israel turned back to Debir and attacked it, <sup>39</sup>capturing it with its king and all its cities. They put them to the sword and put under the ban every person in it, leaving no survivors. Thus he did to Debir and its king what he had done to Hebron, as well as to Libnah and its king.

<sup>40</sup> Joshua conquered the entire land; the mountain regions, the Negeb, the Shephelah, and the mountain slopes, with all their kings. He left no survivors, but put under the ban every living being, just as the LORD, the God of Israel, had commanded. <sup>41</sup>Joshua conquered them from Kadesh-barnea to Gaza, and all the land of Goshen* to Gibeon. <sup>42</sup>All these kings and their lands Joshua captured all at once, for the LORD, the God of Israel, fought for Israel. <sup>43</sup>Thereupon Joshua with all Israel returned to the camp at Gilgal.

CHAPTER 11

Northern Confederacy. <sup>1</sup>When Jabin, king of Hazor,* learned of this, he sent a message to Jobab, king of Madon, to the king of Shimron, to the king of Achshaph, <sup>2</sup>and to the northern kings in the mountain regions and in the Arabah near Chinneroth, in the Shephelah, and in Naphath-dor to the west.<sup>m</sup> <sup>3</sup>These were Canaanites to the east and west, Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, and Jebusites in the mountain regions, and Hivites at the foot of Hermon in the land of Mizpah.<sup>n</sup> <sup>4</sup>They came out with all their troops, an army numerous as the sands on the seashore, and with a multitude of horses and chariots.<sup>o</sup> <sup>5</sup>All these kings made a pact and together they marched to the waters of Merom,* where they encamped to fight against Israel.

<sup>6</sup>The LORD said to Joshua, “Do not fear them, for by this time tomorrow I will present them slain to Israel. You must hamstring their horses and burn their chariots.” <sup>7</sup>Joshua with his whole army came upon them suddenly at the waters of Merom and fell upon them. <sup>8</sup>The LORD delivered them into the power of the Israelites, who defeated them and pursued them to Greater Sidon, to Misrephoth-maim,<sup>p</sup> and eastward to the valley of Mizpeh. They struck them all down, leaving no survivors. <sup>9</sup>Joshua did to them as the LORD had commanded: he hamstrung their horses and burned their chariots.

Conquest of Northern Canaan. <sup>10</sup>At that time Joshua, turning back, captured Hazor and struck down its king with the sword; for Hazor formerly was the chief of all those kingdoms. <sup>11</sup>He also struck down with the sword every person there, carrying out the ban, till none was left alive. Hazor itself he burned. <sup>12</sup>All the cities of those kings, and the kings themselves, Joshua captured and put to the sword, carrying out the ban on them, as Moses, the servant of the LORD, had commanded.<sup>q</sup> <sup>13</sup>However, Israel did not destroy by fire any of the cities built on their mounds, except Hazor, which Joshua burned. <sup>14</sup>All the spoil and livestock of these cities the Israelites took as plunder; but the people they put to the sword, until they had destroyed the last of them, leaving none alive. <sup>15</sup>As the LORD had commanded his servant Moses, so Moses commanded Joshua, and Joshua acted accordingly.<sup>r</sup> He left nothing undone that the LORD had commanded Moses should be done.

Survey of the Conquest. <sup>16</sup>So Joshua took all this land: the mountain regions, the entire Negeb, all the land of Goshen, the Shephelah, the Arabah, as well as the mountain regions and Shephelah of Israel,<sup>s</sup> <sup>17</sup>from Mount Halak that rises toward Seir<sup>t</sup> as far as Baal-gad in the Lebanon valley at the foot of Mount Hermon. All their kings he captured and put to death. <sup>18</sup>Joshua waged war against all these kings for a long time. <sup>19</sup>With the exception of the Hivites who lived in Gibeon, no city made peace with the Israelites; all were taken in battle.<sup>u</sup> <sup>20</sup>For it was the LORD's doing to make their hearts obstinate to meet Israel in battle, that they might be put under the ban without mercy, and be destroyed as the LORD had commanded Moses.<sup>v</sup>

CHAPTER 12*

See RG 180–82

Lists of Conquered Kings. <sup>1</sup>These are the kings of the land whom the Israelites conquered and whose lands they occupied, east of the Jordan, from the River Arnon to Mount Hermon, including all the eastern section of the Arabah: <sup>2y</sup> First, Sihon, king of the Amorites, who lived in Heshbon. His domain extended from Aroer, which is on the bank of the Wadi Arnon, to include the wadi itself, and the land northward through half of Gilead to the Wadi Jabbok at the border with the Ammonites, <sup>3</sup>as well as the Arabah from the eastern side of the Sea of Chinnereth, as far south as the eastern side of the Salt Sea of the Arabah in the direction of Beth-jeshimoth,<sup>z</sup> southward under the slopes of Pisgah. <sup>4</sup>Secondly, the border of Og, king of Bashan, a survivor of the Rephaim, who lived at Ashtaroth and Edrei.<sup>a</sup> <sup>5</sup>He ruled over Mount Hermon, Salecah, and all Bashan as far as the boundary of the Geshurites and Maacathites, and over half of Gilead as far as the territory of Sihon, king of Heshbon. <sup>6</sup>It was Moses, the servant of the LORD, and the Israelites who conquered them; Moses, the servant of the LORD, gave possession of their land to the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>7</sup>This is a list of the kings of the land whom Joshua and the Israelites conquered west of the Jordan, from Baal-gad in the Lebanon valley to Mount Halak which rises toward Seir; Joshua apportioned their land and gave possession of it to the tribes of Israel; <sup>8</sup>it included the mountain regions and Shephelah, the Arabah, the slopes, the wilderness, and the Negeb, belonging to the Hittites, Amorites, Canaanites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites: <sup>9</sup>The king of Jericho, one;<sup>c</sup> the king of Ai, which is near Bethel, one; <sup>10</sup>the king of Jerusalem, one; the king of Hebron, one; <sup>11</sup>the king of Jarmuth, one; the king of Lachish, one;<sup>d</sup> <sup>12</sup>the king of Eglon, one; the king of Gezer, one;<sup>e</sup> <sup>13</sup>the king of Debir, one; the king of Geder, one;<sup>f</sup> <sup>14</sup>the king of Hormah, one; the king of Arad, one; <sup>15</sup>the king of Libnah, one; the king of Adullam, one;<sup>g</sup> <sup>16</sup>the king of Makkedah, one; the king of Bethel, one;<sup>h</sup> <sup>17</sup>the king of Tappuah, one; the king of Hepher, one;<sup>i</sup> <sup>18</sup>the king of Aphek, one; the king of Lasharon, one;<sup>j</sup> <sup>19</sup>the king of Madon, one; the king of Hazor, one;<sup>k</sup> <sup>20</sup>the king of Shimron, one; the king of Achshaph, one;<sup>l</sup>

CHAPTER 13

See RG 182–84

Division of Land Commanded. <sup>1</sup>When Joshua was old and advanced in years, the LORD said to him:<sup>p</sup> Though now you are old and advanced in years, a very large part of the land still remains to be possessed. <sup>2</sup>This is the remaining land: all Geshur* and all the districts of the Philistines <sup>3</sup>(from the stream adjoining Egypt to the boundary of Ekron in the north is reckoned Canaanite territory, though held by the five lords of the Philistines in Gaza, Ashdod, Ashkelon, Gath, and Ekron); <sup>4</sup>also where the Avvim are in the south;<sup>q</sup> all the land of the Canaanites from Mearah of the Sidonians to Aphek, and the boundaries of the Amorites;<sup>r</sup> <sup>5</sup>and the Gebalite territory; and all the Lebanon on the east, from Baal-gad at the foot of Mount Hermon to Lebo-hamath. <sup>6</sup>All the inhabitants of the mountain regions between Lebanon and Misrephoth-maim, all Sidonians, I will drive out before the Israelites;<sup>s</sup> at least include these areas in the division of the Israelite heritage, just as I have commanded you. <sup>7</sup>Now, therefore, apportion among the nine tribes and the half-tribe of Manasseh the land which is to be their heritage.

The Eastern Tribes. <sup>8t</sup> Now the other half of the tribe of Manasseh, as well as the Reubenites and Gadites, had taken as their heritage what Moses, the servant of the LORD, had given them east of the Jordan: <sup>9</sup>from Aroer on the bank of the Wadi Arnon and the city in the wadi itself, through the tableland of Medeba and Dibon, <sup>10</sup>with the rest of the cities of Sihon, king of the Amorites, who reigned in Heshbon, to the boundary of the Ammonites; <sup>11</sup>also Gilead and the territory of the Geshurites and Maacathites, all Mount Hermon, and all Bashan as far as Salecah, <sup>12</sup>the entire kingdom in Bashan of Og, who was king at Ashtaroth and Edrei (he was a holdover from the remnant of the Rephaim). These Moses defeated and dispossessed. <sup>13</sup>But the Israelites did not dispossess the Geshurites and Maacathites, so that Geshur and Maacath dwell in the midst of Israel to this day. <sup>14u</sup> However, Moses assigned no heritage to the tribe of Levi; the LORD, the God of Israel, is their heritage, as the LORD had promised them.

Arnon, and the city in the wadi itself, through the tableland about Medeba,<sup>17</sup> to include Heshbon and all its towns on the tableland, Dibon, Bamoth-baal, Bethbaal-meon,<sup>18</sup> Jahaz, Kedemoth, Mephaath,<sup>19</sup> Kiriathaim, Sibmah, Zereth-shahar on the knoll within the valley,<sup>20</sup> Beth-peor, the slopes of Pisgah, Beth-jeshimoth,<sup>21</sup> and the other cities of the tableland and of the whole kingdom of Sihon. This Amorite king, who reigned in Heshbon, Moses had defeated, with the princes of Midian, vassals of Sihon who were settled in the land: Evi, Rekem, Zur, Hur, and Reba;<sup>x</sup> <sup>22</sup>Balaam, son of Beor, the diviner, the Israelites killed with the sword, together with those they struck down.<sup>y</sup> <sup>23</sup>The boundary of the Reubenites was the Jordan. These cities and their villages were the heritage of the Reubenites by their clans.

Gad. <sup>24z</sup> This is what Moses gave to the tribe of the Gadites by their clans: <sup>25</sup>Their territory included Jazer, all the cities of Gilead, and half the land of the Ammonites as far as Aroer, toward Rabbah <sup>26</sup>(that is, from Heshbon to Ramath-mizpeh and Betonim, and from Mahanaim to the boundary of Lodebar); <sup>27</sup>and in the Jordan valley: Beth-haram, Beth-nimrah, Succoth, Zaphon, the other part of the kingdom of Sihon, king of Heshbon, with the bank of the Jordan to the southeastern tip of the Sea of Chinnereth. <sup>28</sup>These cities and their villages were the heritage of the clans of the Gadites.

Manasseh. <sup>29a</sup> This is what Moses gave to the half-tribe of Manasseh; the half-tribe of the Manassites, by their clans, had <sup>30</sup>territory including Mahanaim, all of Bashan, the entire kingdom of Og, king of Bashan, and all the villages of Jair, which are sixty cities in Bashan. <sup>31</sup>Half of Gilead, with Ashtaroth and Edrei, royal cities of Og in Bashan, fell to the descendants of Machir, son of Manasseh, to half the Machirites, by their clans.

<sup>32</sup>These are the heritages which Moses gave when he was in the plains of Moab, beyond the Jordan east of Jericho. <sup>33</sup>But Moses gave no heritage to the tribe of Levi: the LORD, the God of Israel, is their heritage, as he had promised them.<sup>b</sup>

CHAPTER 14

See RG 182–84

The Western Tribes. <sup>1</sup>These are the portions which the Israelites received as heritage in the land of Canaan.<sup>c</sup> Eleazar the priest, Joshua, son of Nun, and the heads of families in the tribes of the Israelites determined <sup>2</sup>their heritage by lot, as the LORD had commanded through Moses concerning the remaining nine and a half tribes.<sup>d</sup> <sup>3</sup>To two and a half tribes Moses had already given a heritage beyond the Jordan; to the Levites he had given no heritage among them:<sup>e</sup> <sup>4</sup>the descendants of Joseph formed two tribes, Manasseh and Ephraim. But the Levites were given no share of the land except cities to live in, with their pasture lands for the herds and flocks.<sup>f</sup>

<sup>5</sup>As the LORD had commanded Moses, so the Israelites did: they apportioned the land.

Caleb's Portion. <sup>6g</sup> When the Judahites approached Joshua in Gilgal, the Kenizzite Caleb, son of Jephunneh, said to him: "You know the word the LORD spoke to Moses, the man of God, concerning you and concerning me in Kadesh-barnea. <sup>7h</sup> I was forty years old when Moses, the servant of the LORD, sent me from Kadesh-barnea to reconnoiter the land; and I brought back to him a frank report. <sup>8i</sup> My fellow scouts who went up with me made the people's confidence melt away, but I was completely loyal to the LORD, my God. <sup>9</sup> On that occasion Moses swore this oath, 'The land where you have set foot shall become your heritage and that of your descendants forever, because you have been completely loyal to the LORD, my God.' <sup>10</sup> Now, as he promised, the LORD has preserved me these forty-five years since the LORD spoke thus to Moses while Israel journeyed in the wilderness; and now I am eighty-five years old,<sup>j</sup> <sup>11</sup> but I am still as strong today as I was the day Moses sent me forth, with no less vigor whether it be for war or for any other tasks.<sup>* k</sup> <sup>12</sup> Now give me this mountain region which the LORD promised me that day, as you yourself heard. True, the Anakim are there, with large fortified cities, but if the LORD is with me I shall be able to dispossess them, as the LORD promised."<sup>l</sup> <sup>13</sup> Joshua blessed Caleb, son of Jephunneh, and gave him Hebron as his heritage.<sup>m</sup> <sup>14</sup> Therefore Hebron remains the heritage of the Kenizzite Caleb, son of Jephunneh, to the present day, because he was completely loyal to the LORD, the God of Israel.

<sup>15</sup>Hebron was formerly called Kiriatharba, for Arba, the greatest among the Anakim.<sup>n</sup> And the land had rest from war.

CHAPTER 15

The northern boundary climbed northward from the tongue of the sea, toward the mouth of the Jordan,<sup>6q</sup> up to Beth-hoglah, and ran north of Beth-arabah, up to Eben-Bohan-ben-Reuben. <sup>7</sup>Thence the boundary climbed to Debir, north of the Valley of Achor,<sup>r</sup> in the direction of the Gilgal that faces the pass of Adummim, on the south side of the wadi; from there it crossed to the waters of En-shemesh and emerged at En-rogel. <sup>8</sup>Climbing again to the Valley of Ben-hinnom* on the southern flank of the Jebusites (that is, Jerusalem), the boundary rose to the top of the mountain at the northern end of the Valley of Rephaim,<sup>s</sup> which bounds the Valley of Hinnom on the west. <sup>9</sup>From the top of the mountain it ran to the fountain of waters of Nephtoah,<sup>t</sup> extended to the cities of Mount Ephron, and continued to Baalah, or Kiriath-jearim. <sup>10</sup>From Baalah the boundary curved westward to Mount Seir and passed north of the ridge of Mount Jearim (that is, Chesalon); it descended to Beth-shemesh, and ran across to Timnah. <sup>11</sup>It then extended along the northern flank of Ekron, continued through Shikkeron, and across to Mount Baalah, from there to include Jabneel, before it came out at the sea. <sup>12</sup>The western boundary was the Great Sea* and its coast. This was the complete boundary of the Judahites by their clans.

Conquest by Caleb. <sup>13u</sup> As the LORD had commanded, Joshua gave Caleb, son of Jephunneh,<sup>v</sup> a portion among the Judahites, namely, Kiriath-arba (Arba was the father of Anak), that is, Hebron. <sup>14w</sup> And Caleb dispossessed from there the three Anakim, the descendants of Anak:

Sheshai, Ahiman, and Talmai. <sup>15</sup>From there he marched up against the inhabitants of Debir,<sup>x</sup> which was formerly called Kiriath-sepher. <sup>16</sup>Caleb said, "To the man who attacks Kiriath-sepher and captures it, I will give my daughter Achsah in marriage." <sup>17*</sup>Othniel captured it, the son of Caleb's brother Kenaz; so Caleb gave him his daughter Achsah in marriage. <sup>18</sup>When she came to him, she induced him to ask her father for some land. Then, as she alighted from the donkey, Caleb asked her, "What do you want?" <sup>19</sup>She answered, "Give me a present! Since you have assigned to me land in the Negeb, give me also pools of water." So he gave her the upper and the lower pools.

CHAPTER 16

The Joseph Tribes.* <sup>1</sup>The lot that fell to the Josephites extended from the Jordan at Jericho to the waters of Jericho east of the wilderness; then the boundary went up from Jericho to the heights at Bethel.* <sup>2</sup>Leaving Bethel for Luz, it crossed the ridge to the border of the Archites at Ataroth, <sup>3</sup>and descended westward to the border of the Japhletites, to that of the Lower Beth-horon, and to Gezer, and from there to the sea.<sup>a</sup>

Ephraim. <sup>4</sup>Within the heritage of Manasseh and Ephraim, sons of Joseph, <sup>5</sup>the dividing line* for the heritage of the Ephraimites by their clans ran from east of Ataroth-addar to Upper Beth-horon<sup>b</sup> <sup>6</sup>and thence to the sea. From Michmethath<sup>c</sup> on the north, their boundary curved eastward around Taanathshiloh, and continued east of it to Janoah; <sup>7</sup>from there it descended to Ataroth and Naarah, and reaching Jericho, it ended at the Jordan. <sup>8</sup>From Tappuah the boundary ran westward to the Wadi Kanah and ended at the sea. This was the heritage of the Ephraimites by their clans, <sup>9</sup>including the villages that belonged to each city set aside for the Ephraimites within the heritage of the Manassites. <sup>10</sup>But they did not dispossess the Canaanites living in Gezer;<sup>d</sup> they live within Ephraim to the present day, though they have been put to forced labor.

CHAPTER 17

Manasseh. <sup>1e</sup> Now as for the lot that fell to the tribe of Manasseh<sup>f</sup> as the firstborn of Joseph: since Manasseh's eldest son, Machir, the father of Gilead, was a warrior, who had already obtained Gilead and Bashan, <sup>2</sup>the allotment was now made to the rest of the Manassites by their clans: the descendants of Abiezer, Helek, Asriel, Shechem, Hephher, and Shemida; these are the other male children of Manasseh, son of Joseph, by their clans.

<sup>3g</sup> Furthermore, Zelophehad, son of Hephher, son of Gilead, son of Machir, son of Manasseh, had no sons, but only daughters, whose names were Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah. <sup>4</sup>These presented themselves to Eleazar the priest, to Joshua, son of Nun, and to the leaders, saying, "The LORD commanded Moses to give us a heritage among our relatives." So in accordance with the command of the LORD a heritage was given them among their father's relatives. <sup>5</sup>Thus ten shares fell to Manasseh apart from the land of Gilead and Bashan beyond the Jordan,<sup>h</sup> <sup>6</sup>since these female descendants of Manasseh received each a portion among his sons. The land of Gilead fell to the rest of the Manassites.

<sup>11j</sup> Moreover, in Issachar and in Asher Manasseh was awarded Bethshean and its towns, Ibleam and its towns, the inhabitants of Dor and its towns, the inhabitants of Endor and its towns, the inhabitants of Taanach and its towns, the inhabitants of Megiddo and its towns (the third is Naphath-dor). <sup>12</sup>Since the Manassites were not able to dispossess these cities, the Canaanites continued to inhabit this region. <sup>13</sup>When the Israelites grew stronger they put the Canaanites to forced labor, but they did not dispossess them.

Protest of Joseph Tribes. <sup>14</sup>The descendants of Joseph said to Joshua, “Why have you given us only one lot and one share as our heritage?<sup>k</sup> Our people are too many, because of the extent to which the LORD has blessed us.” <sup>15</sup>Joshua answered them, “If you are too many, go up to the forest and clear out a place for yourselves there in the land of the Perizzites and Rephaim, since the mountain regions of Ephraim are so narrow.” <sup>16</sup>For the Josephites said, “Our mountain regions are not enough for us; on the other hand, the Canaanites living in the valley region all have iron chariots, in particular those in Beth-shean and its towns, and those in the valley of Jezreel.” <sup>17</sup>Joshua therefore said to Ephraim and Manasseh, the house of Joseph, “You are a numerous people and very strong. You shall not have merely one share, <sup>18</sup>for the mountain region which is now forest shall be yours when you clear it. Its adjacent land shall also be yours if, despite their strength and iron chariots, you dispossess the Canaanites.”

CHAPTER 18

The Seven Remaining Portions.<sup>2</sup>There remained seven tribes among the Israelites that had not yet received their heritage. <sup>3</sup>Joshua therefore said to the Israelites, “How much longer will you put off taking steps to possess the land which the LORD, the God of your ancestors, has given you? <sup>4</sup>Choose three representatives from each of your tribes; I will send them to go throughout the land and describe it for purposes of acquiring their heritage. When they return to me <sup>5</sup>you shall divide it into seven parts. Judah is to retain its territory in the south,<sup>m</sup> and the house of Joseph its territory in the north. <sup>6</sup>You shall bring to me here the description of the land in seven sections. I will then cast lots for you here before the LORD, our God. <sup>7</sup>For the Levites have no share among you,<sup>n</sup> because the priesthood of the LORD is their heritage; while Gad, Reuben, and the half-tribe of Manasseh have already received the heritage east of the Jordan which Moses, the servant of the LORD, gave them.”

<sup>8</sup>When those who were to describe the land were ready for their journey, Joshua commanded them, “Go throughout the land and describe it; return to me and I will cast lots for you here before the LORD in Shiloh.” <sup>9</sup>So they went through the land, described its cities in writing in seven sections, and returned to Joshua in the camp at Shiloh. <sup>10</sup>Joshua then cast lots for them before the LORD in Shiloh, and divided up the land for the Israelites into their separate shares.

Benjamin.<sup>11</sup>One lot fell to the tribe of Benjaminites by their clans. The territory allotted them lay between the descendants of Judah and those of Joseph. <sup>12o</sup> Their northern boundary* began at the Jordan and went over the northern flank of Jericho, up westward into the mountains, until it reached the wilderness of Beth-aven. <sup>13</sup>From there it crossed over to the southern flank of Luz (that is, Bethel). Then it ran down to Ataroth-addar, on the mountaintop south of Lower Beth-horon.<sup>p</sup> <sup>14</sup>For the western border, the boundary line swung south from the mountaintop opposite Beth-horon until it reached Kiriath-baal (that is, Kiriath-jearim; this city belonged to the Judahites). This was the western boundary. <sup>15</sup>The southern boundary began at the limits of Kiriath-jearim and projected to the spring at Nephtoah. <sup>16</sup><sup>q</sup> It went down to the edge of the mountain on the north of the Valley of Rephaim, where it faces the Valley of Ben-hinnom; and continuing down the Valley of Hinnom along the southern flank of the Jebusites, reached En-rogel. <sup>17</sup>Inclining to the north, it extended to En-shemesh, and thence to Geliloth, opposite the pass of Adummim. Then it dropped to Eben-Bohan-ben-Reuben, <sup>18</sup>across the northern flank of the Arabah overlook, down into the Arabah. <sup>19</sup>From there the boundary continued across the northern flank of Beth-hoglah and extended northward to the tongue of the Salt Sea, toward the southern end of the Jordan. This was the southern boundary. <sup>20</sup>The Jordan bounded it on the east. This was how the heritage of the Benjaminites by their clans was bounded on all sides.

<sup>21</sup>Now the cities belonging to the tribe of the Benjaminites by their clans were: Jericho, Beth-hoglah, Emek-keziz, <sup>22</sup>Beth-arabah, Zemaraim, Bethel, <sup>23</sup>Avvim, Parah, Ophra, <sup>24</sup>Chephar-ammoni, Ophni, and Geba; twelve cities and their villages. <sup>25</sup>Also Gibeon, Ramah, Beeroth, <sup>26</sup>Mizpeh, Chephirah, Mozah, <sup>27</sup>Rekem, Irpeel, Taralah, <sup>28</sup>Zela, Haeleph, the Jebusite city (that is, Jerusalem), Gibeah, and Kiriath; fourteen cities and their villages. This was the heritage of the clans of Benjaminites.

Zebulun. <sup>10*</sup> The third lot fell to the Zebulunites by their clans. The boundary of their heritage was at Sarid. <sup>11</sup>Their boundary went up west and through Mareal, reaching Dabbesheth and the wadi that is near Jokneam. <sup>12</sup>From Sarid eastward it ran to the district of Chisloth-tabor, on to Daberath, and up to Japhia. <sup>13</sup>From there it continued eastward to Gath-hepher and to Eth-kazin, extended to Rimmon, and turned to Neah. <sup>14</sup>Skirting north of Hannathon, the boundary ended at the valley of Iphtahel. <sup>15</sup>Thus, with Kattath, Nahalal, Shimron, Idalah, and Bethlehem, there were twelve cities and their villages. <sup>16</sup>This was the heritage of the Zebulunites by their clans, these cities and their villages.

valley of Iphtahel; then north of Beth-emek and Neiel, it extended northward to Cabul, <sup>28</sup>Ebron, Rehob,<sup>s</sup> Hammon, and Kanah, near Greater Sidon. <sup>29</sup>Then the boundary turned back to Ramah and to the fortress city of Tyre; thence it cut back to Hosah and ended at the sea. Thus, with Mahalab, Achzib, <sup>30</sup>Ummah, Acco, Aphek, and Rehob, there were twenty-two cities and their villages. <sup>31</sup>This was the heritage of the tribe of the Asherites by their clans, these cities and their villages.

Joshua's City. <sup>49</sup>When the last of them had received the portions of the land they were to inherit, the Israelites assigned a heritage in their midst to Joshua, son of Nun. <sup>50</sup>According to the command of the LORD, they gave him the city he requested, Timnah-serah<sup>w</sup> in the mountain region of Ephraim. He rebuilt the city and made it his home.

<sup>51</sup>These are the heritages which Eleazar the priest, Joshua, son of Nun, and the heads of families in the tribes of the Israelites apportioned by lot in the presence of the LORD, at the door of the tent of meeting in Shiloh. Thus they finished dividing the land.

CHAPTER 20

See RG 182–84

Cities of Refuge. <sup>1x</sup> The LORD said to Joshua: * <sup>2</sup>Tell the Israelites: Designate for yourselves the cities of refuge of which I spoke to you through Moses, <sup>3</sup>to which anyone guilty of inadvertent and unintentional homicide may flee for asylum from the avenger of blood. <sup>4</sup>To one of these cities the killer shall flee, and standing at the entrance of the city gate, shall plead his case in the hearing of the elders of the city, who must receive him and assign him a place in which to live among them. <sup>5</sup>Though the avenger of blood pursues him, they shall not deliver up to him the one who killed a neighbor unintentionally, when there had been no hatred previously. <sup>6</sup>Once he has stood judgment before the community, he shall live on in that city until the death of the high priest who is in office at the time. Then the killer may return home to the city from where he originally fled.

List of Cities. <sup>7</sup>So they set apart Kedesh in Galilee in the mountain region of Naphtali, Shechem in the mountain region of Ephraim, and Kiriath-arba (that is, Hebron) in the mountain region of Judah. <sup>y</sup> <sup>8</sup>And beyond the Jordan east of Jericho they designated Bezer in the wilderness on the tableland in the tribe of Reuben, Ramoth in Gilead in the tribe of Gad, and Golan in Bashan in the tribe of Manasseh. <sup>z</sup> <sup>9</sup>These are the designated cities to which any Israelite or alien residing among them who had killed a person unintentionally might flee to escape death at the hand of the avenger of blood, until the killer could appear before the community.

CHAPTER 21

Levitical Cities.<sup>1</sup>The heads of the Levite families* approached Eleazar the priest, Joshua, son of Nun, and the heads of families of the other tribes of the Israelites<sup>a</sup> <sup>2</sup>at Shiloh in the land of Canaan, and said to them, “The LORD commanded, through Moses, that cities be given us to dwell in, with pasture lands for our livestock.”<sup>b</sup> <sup>3</sup>Out of their own heritage, according to the command of the LORD, the Israelites gave the Levites the following cities with their pasture lands.

<sup>4</sup>When the first lot among the Levites fell to the clans of the Kohathites, the descendants of Aaron the priest obtained by lot from the tribes of Judah, Simeon, and Benjamin, thirteen cities. <sup>5</sup>From the clans of the tribe of Ephraim, from the tribe of Dan, and from the half-tribe of Manasseh, the rest of the Kohathites obtained by lot ten cities.<sup>c</sup> <sup>6</sup>From the clans of the tribe of Issachar, from the tribe of Asher, from the tribe of Naphtali, and from the half-tribe of Manasseh, the Gershonites obtained by lot thirteen cities. <sup>7</sup>From the tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Zebulun, the clans of the Merarites obtained twelve cities. <sup>8</sup>These cities with their pasture lands the Israelites gave by lot to the Levites, as the LORD had commanded through Moses.

Cities of the Priests. <sup>9d</sup> From the tribes of the Judahites and Simeonites they gave the following cities <sup>10</sup>and assigned them to the descendants of Aaron in the Kohathite clan of the Levites, since the first lot fell to them: <sup>11</sup>first, Kiriath-arba (Arba was the father of Anak), that is, Hebron, in the mountain region of Judah, with the adjacent pasture lands, <sup>12</sup>although the open country and villages belonging to the city had been given to Caleb, son of Jephunneh, as his holding.<sup>e</sup> <sup>13</sup>Thus to the descendants of Aaron the priest were given the city of refuge for homicides at Hebron, with its pasture lands; also, Libnah with its pasture lands, <sup>14</sup>Jattir with its pasture lands, Eshtemoa with its pasture lands, <sup>15</sup>Holon with its pasture lands, Debir with its pasture lands, <sup>16</sup>Ain with its pasture lands, Juttah with its pasture lands, and Beth-shemesh with its pasture lands: nine cities from these two tribes. <sup>17</sup>From the tribe of Benjamin they obtained Gibeon with its pasture lands, Geba with its pasture lands, <sup>18</sup>Anathoth<sup>f</sup> with its pasture lands, and Almon with its pasture lands: four cities. <sup>19</sup>These cities which with their pasture lands belonged to the priestly descendants of Aaron, were thirteen in all.

Cities of the Other Kohathites. <sup>20g</sup> The rest of the Kohathite clans among the Levites obtained by lot, from the tribe of Ephraim, four cities. <sup>21</sup>They were assigned, with its pasture lands, the city of refuge for homicides at Shechem in the mountain region of Ephraim; also Gezer with its pasture lands, <sup>22</sup>Kibzaim with its pasture lands, and Beth-horon with its pasture lands. <sup>23</sup>From the tribe of Dan they obtained Elteke with its pasture lands, Gibbethon with its pasture lands, <sup>24</sup>Aijalon with its pasture lands, and Gath-rimmon with its pasture lands: four cities. <sup>25</sup>From the half-tribe of Manasseh, Taanach with its pasture lands, and Gath-rimmon with its pasture lands: two cities. <sup>26</sup>These cities which with their pasture lands belonged to the rest of the Kohathite clans were ten in all.

Cities of the Gershonites. <sup>27h</sup> The Gershonite clan of the Levites received from the half-tribe of Manasseh the city of refuge for homicides at Golan in Bashan, with its pasture lands; and also Beth-Astharoth with its pasture lands: two cities. <sup>28</sup>From the tribe of Issachar they obtained Kishion with its pasture lands, Daberath with its pasture lands, <sup>29</sup>Jarmuth with its pasture lands, and En-gannim with its pasture lands: four cities. <sup>30</sup>From the tribe of Asher, Mishal with its pasture lands, Abdon with its pasture lands, <sup>31</sup>Helkath with its pasture lands, and Rehob with its pasture lands: four cities. <sup>32</sup>From the tribe of Naphtali, the city of refuge for homicides at Kedesh in Galilee, with its pasture lands; also Hammath with its pasture lands, and Kartan with its pasture lands: three cities. <sup>33</sup>The cities which belonged to the Gershonite clans, with their pasture lands, were thirteen in all.

Jazer with its pasture lands: four cities in all. <sup>40</sup>The cities allotted to the Merarite clans, the last of the Levites, were therefore twelve in all.

Levitical Cities

<sup>41</sup>Thus the total number of cities<sup>j</sup> within the territory of the Israelites which, with their pasture lands, belonged to the Levites, was forty-eight.

<sup>43</sup>And so the LORD gave Israel the entire land he had sworn to their ancestors he would give them.<sup>k</sup> Once they had taken possession of it, and dwelt in it, <sup>44</sup>the LORD gave them peace on every side, just as he had promised their ancestors. Not one of their enemies could withstand them; the LORD gave all their enemies into their power. <sup>45</sup>Not a single word of the blessing<sup>l</sup> that the LORD had promised to the house of Israel failed; it all came true.

III. Return of the Transjordan Tribes and Joshua's Farewell

CHAPTER 22

See RG 182–84

The Eastern Tribes Dismissed. <sup>1</sup>At that time Joshua summoned the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh <sup>2</sup>and said to them:<sup>m</sup> “You have observed all that Moses, the servant of the LORD, commanded you, and have listened to my voice in everything I commanded you. <sup>3</sup>For many years now, even until today, you have not abandoned your allies, but have taken care to observe the commands of the LORD, your God. <sup>4</sup>Now that the LORD, your God, has settled your allies as he promised them, you may return to your tents, to your own land, which Moses, the servant of the LORD, gave you, across the Jordan.<sup>n</sup> <sup>5</sup>But be very careful to observe the commandment and the law which Moses, the servant of the LORD, commanded you: love the LORD, your God,<sup>o</sup> follow him in all his ways, keep his commandments, hold fast to him, and serve him with your whole heart and your whole self.” <sup>6</sup>Joshua then blessed them and sent them away, and they went to their tents.

<sup>7</sup>(For, to half of the tribe of Manasseh Moses had assigned land in Bashan;<sup>p</sup> and to the other half Joshua had given a portion along with their allies west of the Jordan.) When Joshua sent them away to their tents and blessed them, <sup>8</sup>he said, “Now that you are returning to your own tents with great wealth, with abundant livestock, with silver, gold, bronze and iron, and with a very large supply of clothing, divide these spoils of your enemies with your allies there.”<sup>q</sup> <sup>9</sup>So the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh left the other Israelites at Shiloh in the land of Canaan and returned to the land of Gilead, their own land, which they had received according to the LORD’s command through Moses.<sup>r</sup>

The Altar Beside the Jordan. <sup>10</sup>When the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh came to the region of the Jordan in the land of Canaan, they built an altar there at the Jordan, an impressively large altar. <sup>11</sup>The other Israelites heard the report:<sup>s</sup> “The Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh have built an altar” in the region of the Jordan facing the land of Canaan,* across from the Israelites. <sup>12</sup>When the Israelites heard this, they assembled at Shiloh, as the entire Israelite community to take military action against them.*

Accusation of the Western Tribes. <sup>13</sup>The Israelites sent Phinehas, son of Eleazar the priest, to the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh in the land of Gilead,<sup>t</sup> <sup>14</sup>and with him ten leaders, one from each tribe of Israel, each one the head of an ancestral house among the clans of Israel. <sup>15</sup>When these came to the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh in the land of Gilead, they said to them: <sup>16</sup>“Thus says the whole community of the LORD: What act of treachery is this you have committed against the God of Israel? This day you have turned from following the LORD; by building an altar of your own you have rebelled against the LORD this day. <sup>17</sup>Is the iniquity of Peor not enough, by which we made ourselves impure, even to this day, and a plague came upon the community of the LORD?<sup>u</sup> <sup>18</sup>If today you turn away from following the LORD, and rebel against the LORD, tomorrow he will be angry with the whole community of Israel! <sup>19</sup>If you consider the land you now possess unclean,* cross over to the land the LORD possesses, where the tabernacle of the LORD stands, and share that with us. But do not rebel against the LORD, nor involve us in rebellion, by building an altar of your own in addition to the altar of the LORD, our God. <sup>20</sup>When Achan, son of Zerah,<sup>v</sup> acted treacherously by violating the ban, was it not upon the entire community of Israel that wrath fell? Though he was but a single man, he did not perish alone* for his guilt!”

Reply of the Eastern Tribes. <sup>21</sup>The Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh replied to the heads of the Israelite clans: <sup>22</sup>“The LORD is the God of gods. The LORD, the God of gods,* knows and Israel shall know. If now we have acted out of rebellion or treachery against the LORD, our God, do not try to save us this day, <sup>23</sup>and if we have built an altar of our own to turn from following the LORD, or to sacrifice burnt offerings, grain offerings, or communion sacrifices upon it, the LORD himself will exact the penalty. <sup>24</sup>We did it rather out of our anxious concern lest in the future your children should say to our children: ‘What have you to do with the LORD, the God of Israel? <sup>25</sup>For the LORD has placed the Jordan as a boundary between you and us, you Reubenites and Gadites. You have no share in the LORD.’ Thus your children would prevent ours from revering the LORD. <sup>26</sup>So we thought, ‘Let us act for ourselves by building this altar of our own’—not for burnt offerings or sacrifice, <sup>27w</sup> but as witness between us and you and our descendants, that we have the right to provide for the service of the LORD in his presence with our burnt offerings, sacrifices, and communion sacrifices. Now in the future your children cannot say to our children, ‘You have no share in the LORD.’ <sup>28</sup>Our thought was that, if in the future they should speak thus to us or to our descendants, we could answer: ‘Look at the copy of the altar of the LORD which our ancestors made, not for burnt offerings or for sacrifices, but to witness* between you and us.’ <sup>29</sup>Far be it from us to rebel against the LORD or to turn now from following the LORD by building an altar for burnt offering, grain offering, or sacrifice in addition to the altar of the LORD, our God, which stands before his tabernacle.”

<sup>30</sup>When Phinehas the priest and the leaders of the community, the heads of the Israelite clans, heard what the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the Manassites had to say, they were satisfied. <sup>31</sup>Phinehas, son of Eleazar the priest, said to the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the Manassites, “Today we know that the LORD is in our midst. Since you have not rebelled against the LORD by this act of treachery, you have delivered the Israelites from the hand of the LORD.”

<sup>32</sup>Phinehas, son of Eleazar the priest, and the leaders returned from the Reubenites and the Gadites in the land of Gilead to the Israelites in the land of Canaan, and reported the matter to them. <sup>33</sup>The report satisfied the Israelites, who blessed God and decided not to take military action against the Reubenites and Gadites nor to ravage the land where they lived.

<sup>34</sup>The Reubenites and the Gadites gave the altar its name* as a witness among them that the LORD is God.

CHAPTER 23

Joshua's Final Plea. <sup>1</sup>Many years later, after the LORD had given the Israelites rest from all their enemies round about them, and when Joshua was old and advanced in years,<sup>x</sup> <sup>2</sup>he summoned all Israel, including their elders, leaders, judges, and officers, and said to them: "I am old and advanced in years.<sup>y</sup> <sup>3</sup>You have seen all that the LORD, your God, has done for you against all these nations; for it has been the LORD, your God, who fought for you. <sup>4z</sup> See, I have apportioned among your tribes as their heritage the nations that survive, as well as those I destroyed, between the Jordan and the Great Sea in the west. <sup>5</sup>The LORD, your God, will drive them out and dispossess them at your approach, so that you will take possession of their land as the LORD, your God, promised you. <sup>6</sup>Therefore be strong and be careful to observe all that is written in the book of the law of Moses, never turning from it right or left,<sup>a</sup> <sup>7</sup>or mingling with these nations that survive among you. You must not invoke their gods by name, or swear by them, or serve them, or bow down to them,<sup>b</sup> <sup>8</sup>but you must hold fast to the LORD, your God, as you have done up to this day. <sup>9</sup>At your approach the LORD has dispossessed great and strong nations; not one has withstood you up to this day. <sup>10</sup>One of you puts to flight a thousand, because it is the LORD, your God, himself who fights for you,<sup>c</sup> as he promised you. <sup>11</sup>As for you, take great care to love the LORD, your God. <sup>12</sup>For if you ever turn away from him and join with the remnant of these nations that survive among you, by intermarrying and intermingling with them,<sup>d</sup> <sup>13</sup>know for certain that the LORD, your God, will no longer dispossess these nations at your approach. Instead they will be a snare and a trap for you, a scourge for your sides and thorns for your eyes, until you perish from this good land which the LORD, your God, has given you.<sup>e</sup>

<sup>14</sup>"Today, as you see, I am going the way of all the earth.* So now acknowledge with your whole heart and soul that not one of all the promises the LORD, your God, made concerning you has failed. Every one has come true for you; not one has failed. <sup>15f</sup> But just as every promise the LORD, your God, made to you has come true for you, so will he bring upon you every threat,* even so far as to exterminate you from this good land which the LORD, your God, has given you. <sup>16</sup>If you transgress the covenant of the LORD, your God, which he enjoined on you, to go and serve other gods and bow down to them, the anger of the LORD will flare up against you and you will quickly perish from the good land he has given you.”

CHAPTER 24

Covenant Ceremony. <sup>1g</sup> Joshua gathered together all the tribes of Israel at Shechem, summoning the elders, leaders, judges, and officers of Israel. When they stood in ranks before God, <sup>2</sup>Joshua addressed all the people: “Thus says the LORD, the God of Israel: In times past your ancestors, down to Terah,<sup>h</sup> father of Abraham and Nahor, lived beyond the River* and served other gods. <sup>3</sup>But I brought your father Abraham from the region beyond the River and led him through the entire land of Canaan.<sup>i</sup> I made his descendants numerous, and gave him Isaac. <sup>4</sup>To Isaac I gave Jacob and Esau.<sup>j</sup> To Esau I assigned the mountain region of Seir to possess, while Jacob and his children went down to Egypt.

<sup>5</sup>“Then I sent Moses and Aaron, and struck Egypt with the plagues and wonders that I wrought in her midst.<sup>k</sup> Afterward I led you out. <sup>6</sup>And when I led your ancestors out of Egypt, you came to the sea, and the Egyptians pursued your ancestors to the Red Sea with chariots and charioteers.<sup>l</sup> <sup>7</sup>When they cried out to the LORD,<sup>m</sup> he put darkness between you and the Egyptians, upon whom he brought the sea so that it covered them. Your eyes saw what I did to Egypt. After you dwelt a long time in the wilderness,<sup>8n</sup> I brought you into the land of the Amorites who lived east of the Jordan. They fought against you, but I delivered them into your power. You took possession of their land, and I destroyed them at your approach. <sup>9o</sup> Then Balak, son of Zippor, king of Moab, prepared to war against Israel. He summoned Balaam, son of Beor, to curse you, <sup>10p</sup> but I would not listen to Balaam. Instead, he had to bless you, and I delivered you from his power. <sup>11</sup>Once you crossed the Jordan<sup>q</sup> and came to Jericho, the citizens of Jericho fought against you, but I delivered them also into your power. <sup>12</sup>And I sent the hornets* ahead of you which drove them—the Amorites, Perizzites, Canaanites, Hittites, Girgashites, Hivites, and Jebusites—out of your way; it was not your sword or your bow.<sup>r</sup> <sup>13</sup>I gave you a land you did not till and cities you did not build, to dwell in; you ate of vineyards and olive groves you did not plant.<sup>s</sup>

<sup>14t</sup> “Now, therefore, fear the LORD and serve him completely and sincerely. Cast out the gods your ancestors served beyond the River and in Egypt, and serve the LORD. <sup>15u</sup> If it is displeasing to you to serve the LORD, choose today whom you will serve, the gods your ancestors served beyond the River or the gods of the Amorites in whose country you are dwelling. As for me and my household, we will serve the LORD.”

<sup>16</sup>But the people answered, “Far be it from us to forsake the LORD to serve other gods. <sup>17</sup>For it was the LORD, our God, who brought us and our ancestors up out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of slavery. He performed those great signs before our very eyes and protected us along our entire journey and among all the peoples through whom we passed. <sup>18</sup>At our approach the LORD drove out all the peoples, including the Amorites who dwelt in the land. Therefore we also will serve the LORD, for he is our God.”

<sup>19</sup>Joshua in turn said to the people, “You may not be able to serve the LORD, for he is a holy God; he is a passionate God<sup>v</sup> who will not forgive your transgressions or your sins. <sup>20</sup>If you forsake the LORD and serve strange gods, he will then do evil to you and destroy you, after having done you good.”

<sup>21</sup>But the people answered Joshua, “No! We will serve the LORD.” <sup>22</sup>Joshua therefore said to the people, “You are witnesses against yourselves that you have chosen to serve the LORD.” They replied, “We are witnesses!” <sup>23</sup>“Now, therefore, put away the foreign gods that are among you and turn your hearts to the LORD, the God of Israel.” <sup>24</sup>Then the people promised Joshua, “We will serve the LORD, our God, and will listen to his voice.”

<sup>25</sup>So Joshua made a covenant with the people that day and made statutes and ordinances for them at Shechem. <sup>26</sup>Joshua wrote these words in the book of the law of God. Then he took a large stone and set it up there under the terebinth that was in the sanctuary of the LORD.<sup>w</sup> <sup>27</sup>And Joshua said to all the people, “This stone shall be our witness,<sup>x</sup> for it has heard all the words which the LORD spoke to us. It shall be a witness against you, should you wish to deny your God.” <sup>28</sup>Then Joshua dismissed the people, each to their own heritage.<sup>y</sup>

Death of Joshua. <sup>29z</sup> After these events, Joshua, son of Nun, servant of the LORD, died at the age of a hundred and ten, <sup>30</sup>and they buried him within the borders of his heritage at Timnath-serah<sup>a</sup> in the mountain region of Ephraim north of Mount Gaash.* <sup>31</sup>Israel served the LORD during the entire lifetime of Joshua, and of those elders who outlived Joshua and who knew all the work the LORD had done for Israel. <sup>32b</sup> The bones of Joseph,* which the Israelites had brought up from Egypt, were buried in Shechem in the plot of ground Jacob had bought from the sons of Hamor, father of Shechem, for a hundred pieces of money. This was a heritage of the descendants of Joseph. <sup>33</sup> When Eleazar, son of Aaron, also died, he was buried on the hill which had been given to his son Phinehas<sup>c</sup> in the mountain region of Ephraim.

1:2–9 The beginning of the Book of Joshua strongly emphasizes the credentials of Joshua as Moses' worthy successor (vv. 2, 3, 4, 7; cf. v. 17; 3:7; 4:14; 5:15). The movement Joshua leads, whereby the Israelites take possession of the land of Canaan, is thus made continuous with the exodus from Egypt, even though (except for Joshua and Caleb) the generation that left Egypt under Moses' leadership has died out (5:4, 6), and the people who will make the land of Canaan the land of Israel are a new generation. Thus the book is at pains to establish the continuity between exodus and conquest.

1:4 The frontiers are as follows: in the south the wilderness of Sinai, in the north the Lebanon range, in the east the Euphrates, and in the west the Great Sea, the Mediterranean. These boundaries are ideal rather than actual.

2:6 Stalks of flax spread out: to dry in the sun, after they had been soaked in water, according to the ancient process of preparing flax for linen-making. In the Near East the flax harvest occurs near the time of the feast of the Passover (4:19; 5:10); cf. Ex 9:31.

2:9–11 Rahab's speech is Deuteronomic in content and style. Through her, the author expresses a theological conviction: the Lord, the God of Israel, is God above all gods; the formation of the people Israel and its success is the Lord's doing; and all the rulers of the neighboring nations do well to panic at what the Lord is doing (cf. 5:1). Rahab the prostitute is pointedly mentioned in the Matthean genealogy of Jesus (Mt 1:5) and in Jas 2:25.

2:15 A house built into the city wall: the city wall formed the back wall of the house; remains of such houses have been found at ancient sites. The upper story of Rahab's house was evidently higher than the city wall. It was through the window of such a house that St. Paul escaped from Damascus; cf. Acts 9:25; 2 Cor 11:33.

3:13 Heap: Heb. nēd, the same word found in Ex 15:8; the narrative echoes the ancient Song of Miriam (Ex 15:1–18), which celebrates the crossing of the Red Sea. Thus the language provides another parallel between Joshua and Moses, conquest and exodus.

3:15 Season of the harvest: toward the end of March and the beginning of April, when the barley and other crops that grew during the rainy season of winter were reaped. The crossing took place "on the tenth day of the first month" of the Hebrew year, which began with the first new moon after the spring equinox; cf. 4:19. At this time of the year the Jordan would be swollen as a result of the winter rains and the melting snow of Mount Hermon.

3:16 Some scholars have suggested that this account may reflect an annual ritual reenactment of the event near the sanctuary of Gilgal.

4:6 When your children ask you: reminiscent of the question and response at the Passover meal, Ex 12:26–27.

4:10–18 After the digression about the memorial stones, the author resumes the narrative by briefly repeating the story of the crossing, which had already been told in 3:14–17.

5:3 Gibeath-haaraloth: “Hill of the Foreskins.”

5:9 The place is called Gilgal: by popular etymology, because of the similarity of sound with the Hebrew word gallothi, “I have removed.” Gilgal probably means “circle,” i.e., the place of the circle of standing stones. Cf. 4:4–8.

5:10 The month: the first month of the year, later called Nisan; see note on 3:15. The crossing of the Jordan occurred, therefore, about the same time of the year as did the crossing of the Red Sea; cf. Ex 12–14.

5:13–6:26 The account of the siege of Jericho embraces: (1) the command of the Lord to Joshua (5:13–6:5); (2) Joshua’s instructions to the Israelites, with a brief summary of how these orders were carried out (6:6–11); (3) a description of the action on each of the first six days (6:12–14); (4) the events on the seventh day (6:15–26).

5:14 Commander: the leader of the heavenly army of the Lord of hosts is either the Lord or an angelic warrior; if the latter, he is a messenger who speaks in the person of the one who sent him. I have come: the solemn language of theophany; cf., e.g., Ps 50:3; 96:13.

6:18 Under the ban: doomed to destruction; see notes on Lv 27:28; Nm 18:14; 21:3.

6:20 The blowing of the horns and the shouting, features of the ritual procession with the ark of the covenant (cf. 1 Chr 15:28; 2 Chr 5:11–14), are the people’s counterpart of the Lord’s theophany; cf. note on Jgs 5:4–5; and Jgs 7:15–22; 2 Chr 13:15. The Lord gives the victory; this is the theological point of the story.

6:25 The genealogy of Jesus in Matthew (1:2–16) presents Rahab the prostitute as the wife of Salmon (1:5) and so the ancestor of David (Ru 4:18–22) and of Jesus.

6:26 At the cost of his firstborn ... its gates: this curse was fulfilled when Hiel rebuilt Jericho as a fortified city during the reign of Ahab, king of Israel; cf. 1 Kgs 16:34.

7:11 Transgressed the covenant: the Hebrew word translated “transgressed” appears frequently in the first five chapters where it is used to describe how Israel “crossed” the Jordan River. There is a wordplay here to emphasize Israel’s responsibility to follow God to the promised land and so to obey and not transgress the divine command.

7:16–18 Was designated: probably by means of the Urim and Thummim; cf. 1 Sm 14:38–42. See note on Ex 28:30.

7:26 Achor: “misery,” or “disaster.” The reference is to the saying of Joshua in v. 25, with an allusion also to the similar-sounding name of Achan.

8:3 Thirty thousand warriors: this figure of the Hebrew text, which seems extremely high, may be due to a copyist’s error; some manuscripts of the Septuagint have “three thousand,” which is the number of the whole army in the first, unsuccessful attack (7:4); the variant reading in v. 12 mentions “five thousand.” More likely, the word for “thousand” here and in other military contexts may designate a squad or fighting unit, itself composed of significantly fewer warriors.

8:30–35 These ceremonies were prescribed in Dt 11:29 and 27:2–26.

9:7 The Hivites: apparently the Gibeonites belonged to this larger ethnic group (cf. also 11:19), although in 2 Sm 21:2 they are classed as Amorites; both groups are listed among the seven nations of Canaan whom, according to Dt 7:1–2, the Israelites were to dispossess.

9:21 Hewers of wood and drawers of water: proverbial terms for those who do menial work; cf. Dt 29:10–11.

9:26–27 Later on, Saul violated the immunity of the Gibeonites, but David vindicated it; cf. 2 Sm 21:1–9.

10:5 Hebron ... Eglon: these four cities were to the south and southwest of Jerusalem.

10:11 Great stones from the heavens: the hailstones mentioned in the next sentence.

10:13 This is recorded: the reference is to the preceding poetic passage. Evidently the Book of Jashar, like the Book of the Wars of the Lord (Nm 21:14), recounted in epic style the exploits of Israel's early heroes. The sun halted: lit., "the sun stood"; this obscure passage may suppose a longer than natural day caused when the sun stopped moving across the sky, or it may refer to the sun stopping its light-giving function, perhaps through an eclipse. In any case it was seen as a sign that God fought Israel's battle (v. 42; cf. Ex 14:14).

10:41 Goshen: a town and its surrounding district at the southern end of the Judean mountains (cf. 11:16; 15:51); not to be confused with the land of Goshen in northeastern Egypt (Gn 45:10).

11:1–3 Hazor, Madon, Shimron, and Chinneroth: cities and their surrounding districts in eastern Galilee. Achshaph and Naphath-dor: southwest of Galilee. The mountain regions: in central and northern Galilee.

11:5 The waters of Merom: of uncertain identification, perhaps Tel Qarnei Hittin, about seven and a half kilometers west of modern Tiberias.

11:21–23 Most of the land assigned to the tribe of Judah was not conquered by it until the early period of the Judges. See note on Jgs 1:1–36.

11:23 The land had rest from war: later passages (15:13–17; 17:12–13) show individual tribes still fighting against the remaining Canaanites. This verse forms the conclusion to the first part of the book.

12:1–24 This chapter, inserted between the two principal parts of the book (chaps. 1–11 and 13–21), resembles the lists of conquered cities which are inscribed on monuments of Egyptian and Assyrian rulers. Perhaps this list was copied here from some such public Israelite record.

13:2 Geshur: not to be confused with the large Aramean district of the same name in Bashan (vv. 11–13; Dt 3:14); here it is a region to the south of the Philistine country, since vv. 2–5 list the unconquered lands along the coast from south to north; cf. also 1 Sm 27:8.

14:11 War ... other tasks: lit., "to go forth and to come in," i.e., to conduct military expeditions and to return after victory; cf. 1 Sm 18:16; 2 Sm 5:2.

15:2 Salt Sea: the Dead Sea. The "tongue," a prominent feature of the landscape, is a spit of land thrusting into the Dead Sea from its eastern shore; it is now called by its Arabic name, 'el lisân, "tongue."

15:4 Wadi of Egypt: the natural boundary between Gaza and the Sinai Peninsula.

15:8 The Valley of Ben-hinnom: the southern limit of Jerusalem. Ben-hinnom means "son of Hinnom." The place was also called Valley of Hinnom, in Hebrew ge-hinnom, whence the word "Gehenna" is derived.

15:12 Great Sea: the Mediterranean.

15:17–19 The story of Othniel is told again in Jgs 1:13–15; cf. also Jgs 3:9–11.

15:20–62 This elaborate list of the cities of Judah was probably taken from a document made originally for administrative purposes; the cities are divided into four provincial districts, some of which have further subdivisions. For similar lists of the cities of Judah, cf. 19:2–7; 1 Chr 4:28–32; Neh 11:25–30. This list has suffered in transmission, so that the totals given in vv. 32 and 36 are not exact; many of the cities cannot be identified.

15:61 In the wilderness: in the Jordan rift near the Dead Sea.

16:1–17:18 After the boundaries and cities of Judah, the most important tribe, are given, the land of the next most important group, the two Joseph tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, is described, though it was separated from Judah by the territories of Benjamin (18:11–20) and Dan (19:40–48).

16:1–3 This line formed the southern boundary of Ephraim and the northern boundaries of Benjamin and of Dan.

16:5 The dividing line: separating Ephraim from Manasseh. Ephraim's northern border (v. 5) is given in an east-to-west direction; its eastern border (vv. 6–7) in a north-to-south direction.

17:7 Manasseh bordered on Asher: only at the extreme northwestern section of Manasseh's territory. The boundary given in the following sentences (vv. 7–10) is a more detailed description of the one already mentioned in 16:5–7, as separating Manasseh from Ephraim.

18:12–20 Benjamin's northern boundary (vv. 12–13) corresponded to part of the southern boundary of Ephraim (16:1–2). Their western border (v. 14) was the eastern border of Dan (cf. 19:40–47). Their southern boundary (vv. 15–19) corresponded to part of the northern boundary of Judah (15:5–9).

19:10–16 Zebulun's territory was in the central section of the Jezreel Valley and of southern Galilee; it was bounded on the south by Manasseh, on the southeast by Issachar, on the northeast and north by Naphtali, and on the west by Asher. The site of the later city of Nazareth was within its borders. Bethlehem of Zebulun was, of course, distinct from the city of the same name in Judah. Twelve cities: apparently seven of the names are missing from v. 15, unless some of the places mentioned in vv. 12–14 are to be included in the number.

19:17–23 Issachar's land was on the eastern watershed of the Jezreel Valley, but also included the southeastern end of the Galilean mountains. It was surrounded by Manasseh on the south and east, by Naphtali on the north, and by Zebulun on the west. Jezreel (v. 18) dominated the valley to which it gave its name, the later form of which was Esdraelon.

19:24–31 Asher inherited the western slope of the Galilean hills as far as the Mediterranean, with Manasseh to the south, Zebulun and Naphtali to the east, and Phoenicia to the north.

19:32–39 Naphtali received eastern Galilee; Asher was to the west and Zebulun and Issachar were to the south, while the upper Jordan and Mount Hermon formed the eastern border. Part of the tribe of Dan later on occupied the northern extremity of Naphtali's lands, at the sources of the Jordan (v. 47).

19:40–46 The original territory of Dan was a small enclave between Judah, Benjamin, Ephraim, and the Philistines.

19:47 Leshem: called Laish in Jgs 18, where the story of the migration of the Danites is told at greater length.

20:1–9 The laws concerning the cities of refuge are given in Nm 35:9–28; Dt 19:1–13; see notes on Nm 35:16–25; Dt 19:2.

21:1 The order to establish special cities for the Levites is given in Nm 35:1–8. The forty-eight cities listed here were hardly the exclusive possession of the Levites; at least the more important of them, such as Hebron, Shechem, and Ramoth in Gilead, were certainly peopled for the most part by the tribe in whose territory they were situated. But in all these cities the Levites had special property rights which they did not possess in other cities; cf. Lv 25:32–34.

22:11 In the region of the Jordan facing the land of Canaan: on the eastern side of the Jordan valley. The river itself formed the boundary between these eastern tribes and the rest of the tribes who lived in what was formerly Canaan—though the term “Canaan” could also be used of both sides of the Jordan valley (cf. v. 10). The Transjordan tribes naturally built their altar in their own territory.

22:12 To take military action against them: the western Israelites considered this altar, which seemed to violate the customary unity of the sanctuary (cf. Lv 17:1–9; Dt 12:4–14), as constituting rebellion against the Lord and compromising national unity.

22:19 Unclean: not sanctified by the tabernacle.

22:20 Achan ... did not perish alone: his guilt caused the failure of the first attack on Ai (7:4–23); this fact is adduced as an argument for the solidarity and mutual responsibility of all the Israelites.

22:22 The Lord, the God of gods: the Hebrew, which cannot be adequately rendered in English here, adds to the divine name Yhwh (“the Lord”) two synonymous words for “God,” ’el and ’elohim. The repetition of these three sacred words adds force to the protestations of fidelity and innocence.

22:28 To witness: far from being destined to form a rival sanctuary, the copy of the altar is intended by the eastern tribes solely as a means of teaching their children to be faithful to the one true sanctuary beyond the Jordan.

22:34 The name of this altar was the Hebrew word for “witness,” ‘ed.

23:14 Going the way of all the earth: drawing near to death, the inevitable end of all; cf. 1 Kgs 2:1–2.

23:15 Every threat: mentioned especially in the list of curses in Dt 28:15–68.

24:2 Beyond the River: east of the Euphrates; cf. Gn 11:28–31.

24:12 The hornets: see note on Ex 23:28.

24:30 Following this verse the Greek translation of the Bible (the Septuagint) adds: “They laid with him there, in the tomb where they buried him, the flint knives with which he had circumcised the Israelites at Gilgal, when he brought them out of Egypt, as Yhwh commanded them. There they are to this very day.”

24:32 Joseph’s bones (Gn 50:24–26) and Jacob’s purchase of the burial ground (Gn 33:18–20) relate Joshua with Genesis. A hundred pieces of money: see note on Gn 33:19.

The Book of Judges

The Hebrew word translated “Judges” in the English title of the book refers not to specialized judicial officers or magistrates but to leaders in general. According to the biblical narrative these judges led Israel from the end of the conquest of Canaan until the beginning of the monarchy. The period of the Judges, therefore, extended from the death of Joshua (Jos 24:29–31; cf. Jgs 1:1) until the installation of Saul as Israel’s first king by the prophet Samuel, who was also the last judge (see 1 Sm 7:15–17).

The Book of Judges begins with two introductory passages. The first (chap. 1) gives a description of the situation in Canaan after the Israelite conquest. It emphasizes the continued existence of the indigenous inhabitants of Canaan in many parts of the land because of Israel’s inability to drive them out completely. The second passage (2:1–3:6) is a thematic introduction to the period of the Judges, describing a cyclical pattern of infidelity, oppression, “crying out,” and deliverance (see note on 2:10–19).

The main part of the book (3:7–16:31) consists of a series of stories about thirteen leaders whose careers are described in greater or lesser detail. The exploits of six of these—Othniel, Ehud, Deborah, Gideon, Jephthah, and Samson—are related at length, and all are shown to have delivered Israel from oppression or danger. They are customarily called “major judges,” whereas the other six—Shamgar, Tola, Jair, Ibzan, Elon, and Abdon—who appear only in brief notices, are designated “minor judges.” The thirteenth, Abimelech, is included in neither group, since his story is essentially a continuation of that of Gideon and his career is presented as deplorable, a cautionary tale of royal ambition.

The final section of the book consists of two episodes, one about the migration of the tribe of Dan (chaps. 17–18) and the other about an intertribal war directed against the tribe of Benjamin (chaps. 19–21). These stories illustrate the religious and political disorder that prevailed at the time when, as yet, “there was no king in Israel” (see note on 17:6).

The principal contribution of the Deuteronomistic historian to the Book of Judges is the thematic introduction to—and theological evaluation of—the period of the Judges in 2:1–3:6, as well as editorial comments structuring the narrative throughout, e.g., 3:7; 4:1; etc. The historian drew the stories of the judges themselves from older sources, which could have existed in written form but derive ultimately from oral tradition.

Thus the principal divisions of the book in outline are as follows:

- I. The Situation in Canaan Following the Israelite Conquest (1:1–3:6)
- II. Stories of the Judges (3:7–16:31)
- III. Further Stories of the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin (17:1–21:25)

CHAPTER 1

See RG 187–88

Canaanites in Palestine. <sup>1*</sup> After the death of Joshua the Israelites consulted the LORD, asking, “Who shall be first among us to attack the Canaanites and to do battle with them?” <sup>2</sup>The LORD answered: Judah shall attack: I have delivered the land into his power.<sup>a</sup> <sup>3</sup>Judah then said to his brother Simeon, “Come up with me into the territory allotted to me, and let us do battle with the Canaanites. I will likewise go with you into the territory allotted to you.” So Simeon went with him.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>4</sup>When Judah attacked, the LORD delivered the Canaanites and Perizzites into their power, and they struck down ten thousand of them in Bezek. <sup>5c</sup> They came upon Adonibezek in Bezek and fought against him. When they struck down the Canaanites and Perizzites, <sup>6</sup>Adonibezek fled. They pursued him, and when they caught him, they cut off his thumbs and big toes. <sup>7</sup> “Seventy kings,” said Adonibezek, “used to pick up scraps under my table with their thumbs and big toes cut off. As I have done, so has God repaid me.” He was brought to Jerusalem, and he died there. <sup>8</sup> * The Judahites fought against Jerusalem, captured it, and put it to the sword, setting the city itself on fire.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>9</sup>Afterward the Judahites went down to fight against the Canaanites who lived in the mountain region, in the Negeb, and in the foothills.<sup>e</sup> <sup>10</sup>Judah also marched against the Canaanites who lived in Hebron, which was formerly called Kiriath-arba, and defeated Sheshai, Ahiman, and Talmi.<sup>f</sup> <sup>11</sup>They marched from there against the inhabitants of Debir, which was formerly called Kiriath-sepher. <sup>12</sup>Caleb said, “To the man who attacks Kiriath-sepher and captures it, I will give my daughter Achsah in marriage.” <sup>13g</sup> Othniel captured it, the son of Caleb’s younger brother Kenaz; so Caleb gave him his daughter Achsah in marriage. <sup>14</sup>When she came to him, she induced him to ask her father for some land. Then, as she alighted from the donkey, Caleb asked her, “What do you want?” <sup>15</sup>She answered, “Give me a present. Since you have put me in the land of the Negeb, give me pools of water.” So Caleb gave her what she wanted, both the upper and the lower pool.

<sup>16h</sup> The descendants of Hobab the Kenite, Moses' father-in-law,* came up with the Judahites from the City of Palms to the wilderness of Arad, which is in the Negeb, and they settled among the Amalekites. <sup>17i</sup> Then Judah went with his brother Simeon, and they defeated the Canaanites who lived in Zephath. They put the city under the ban and renamed it Hormah.* <sup>j</sup> <sup>18</sup> Judah captured Gaza with its territory, Ashkelon with its territory, Ekron with its territory, and Ashdod* with its territory. <sup>k</sup> <sup>19</sup> The LORD was with Judah, so they gained possession of the mountain region. But they could not dispossess those who lived on the plain, because they had iron chariots. <sup>20l</sup> As Moses had commanded, they gave Hebron to Caleb, who then drove the three sons of Anak away from there.

<sup>21*</sup> As for the Jebusites dwelling in Jerusalem, the Benjaminites did not dispossess them, so that the Jebusites live with the Benjaminites in Jerusalem to the present day. <sup>m</sup>

<sup>22</sup> The house of Joseph, too, went up against Bethel, and the LORD was with them. <sup>23</sup> The house of Joseph reconnoitered Bethel, which formerly was called Luz. <sup>n</sup> <sup>24</sup> The scouts saw a man coming out of the city and said to him, "Tell us the way into the city, and we will show you mercy." <sup>25</sup> He showed them the way into the city, and they put the city to the sword; but they let the man and his whole clan go free. <sup>26</sup> The man then went to the land of the Hittites, where he built a city and called it Luz, which is its name to this day.

<sup>27o</sup> Manasseh did not take possession of Beth-shean with its towns or of Taanach with its towns. Nor did they dispossess the inhabitants of Dor and its towns, those of Ibleam and its towns, or those of Megiddo and its towns. The Canaanites continued to live in this district. <sup>28</sup> When Israel grew stronger, they conscripted the Canaanites as laborers, but did not actually drive them out. <sup>29p</sup> Ephraim did not drive out the Canaanites living in Gezer, and so the Canaanites lived among them in Gezer.

<sup>30q</sup> Nor did Zebulun dispossess the inhabitants of Kitron or those of Nahalol; the Canaanites lived among them and became forced laborers.

<sup>31r</sup> Nor did Asher dispossess the inhabitants of Acco or those of Sidon, or take possession of Mahaleb, Achzib, Helbah, Aphik, or Rehob. <sup>32</sup> So the Asherites settled among the Canaanite inhabitants of the land, for they had not dispossessed them.

<sup>33s</sup> Nor did Naphtali drive out the inhabitants of Beth-shemesh or those of Beth-anath. They settled among the Canaanite inhabitants of the land and the inhabitants of Beth-shemesh and Beth-anath became forced laborers for them.

<sup>34</sup>The Amorites hemmed in the Danites in the mountain region, not permitting them to come down onto the plain. <sup>35</sup>So the Amorites continued to live in Harheres, Aijalon, and Shaalbim, but as the power of the house of Joseph grew, they were conscripted as laborers.

Infidelities of the Israelites. <sup>1</sup>A messenger of the LORD went up from Gilgal to Bochim and said, I brought you up from Egypt and led you into the land which I promised on oath to your ancestors. I said, I will never break my covenant with you, <sup>2</sup>but you must not make a covenant with the inhabitants of this land; you must pull down their altars.<sup>t</sup> But you did not listen to me. Look what you have done! <sup>3</sup>For I also said,* I will not clear them out of your way; they will become traps for you, and their gods a snare for you.<sup>u</sup>

<sup>4</sup>When the messenger of the LORD had spoken these things to all the Israelites, the people wept aloud. <sup>5</sup>They named that place Bochim,* and they offered sacrifice there to the LORD.

<sup>6v</sup> Then Joshua dismissed the people, and the Israelites went, each to their own heritage, to take possession of the land. <sup>7</sup>The people served the LORD during the entire lifetime of Joshua, and of those elders who outlived Joshua and who had seen all the great work the LORD had done for Israel. <sup>8</sup>Joshua, son of Nun, the servant of the LORD, died at the age of a hundred and ten, <sup>9</sup>and they buried him within the borders of his heritage at Timnath-heres in the mountain region of Ephraim north of Mount Gaash.<sup>w</sup>

<sup>10*</sup> When the rest of that generation were also gathered to their ancestors, and a later generation arose that did not know the LORD or the work he had done for Israel, <sup>11x</sup> the Israelites did what was evil in the sight of the LORD. They served the Baals,* <sup>12</sup>and abandoned the LORD, the God of their ancestors, the one who had brought them out of the land of Egypt. They followed other gods, the gods of the peoples around them, and bowed down to them, and provoked the LORD.

<sup>13</sup>Because they had abandoned the LORD and served Baal and the Astartes,* <sup>14</sup>the anger of the LORD flared up against Israel, and he delivered them into the power of plunderers who despoiled them. He sold them into the power of the enemies around them, and they were no longer able to withstand their enemies. <sup>15</sup>Whenever they marched out, the hand of the LORD turned against them, as the LORD had said, and as the LORD had sworn to them;<sup>y</sup> and they were in great distress. <sup>16</sup>But the LORD raised up judges to save them from the power of their plunderers; <sup>17</sup>but they did not listen to their judges either, for they prostituted themselves by following other gods, bowing down to them. They were quick to stray from the way their ancestors had taken, who obeyed the commandments of the LORD; but these did not. <sup>18</sup>When the LORD raised up judges for them, he would be with the judge and save them from the power of their enemies as long as the judge lived. The LORD would change his mind when they groaned in their affliction under their oppressors. <sup>19</sup>But when the judge died, they would again do worse than their ancestors, following other gods, serving and bowing down to them, relinquishing none of their evil practices or stubborn ways.<sup>z</sup>

<sup>20a</sup> The anger of the LORD flared up against Israel, and he said: Because this nation has transgressed my covenant, which I enjoined on their ancestors, and has not listened to me, <sup>21</sup>I for my part will not clear away for them any more of the nations Joshua left when he died. <sup>22b</sup> They will be made to test Israel, to see whether or not they will keep to the way of the LORD and continue in it as their ancestors did. <sup>23</sup>Therefore the LORD allowed these nations to remain instead of expelling them immediately. He had not delivered them into the power of Joshua.

CHAPTER 3

<sup>1</sup>These are the nations the LORD allowed to remain, so that through them he might test Israel, all those who had not experienced any of the Canaanite wars— <sup>2</sup>to teach warfare to those generations of Israelites who had never experienced it: <sup>3c</sup> the five lords of the Philistines,* and all the Canaanites, the Sidonians, and the Hivites who lived in the mountain region of the Lebanon between Baal-hermon and Lebo-hamath. <sup>4</sup>These served as a test for Israel, to know whether they would obey the commandments the LORD had enjoined on their ancestors through Moses. <sup>5</sup>So the Israelites settled among the Canaanites, Hittites, Amorites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites.<sup>d</sup> <sup>6</sup>They took their daughters in marriage, and gave their own daughters to their sons in marriage,<sup>e</sup> and served their gods.

II. Stories of the Judges

Othniel. <sup>7f</sup> Then the Israelites did what was evil in the sight of the LORD; they forgot the LORD, their God, and served the Baals and the Asherahs,* <sup>8</sup>and the anger of the LORD flared up against them. He sold them into the power of Cushan-rishathaim,* king of Aram Naharaim; and the Israelites served Cushanrishathaim for eight years. <sup>9</sup>But when the Israelites cried out to the LORD,<sup>g</sup> he raised up a savior for them, to save them. It was Othniel, son of Caleb's younger brother Kenaz.<sup>h</sup> <sup>10</sup>The spirit of the LORD came upon him,<sup>i</sup> and he judged Israel. When he marched out to war, the LORD delivered Cushan-rishathaim, king of Aram, into his power, and his hold on Cushan-rishathaim was firm. <sup>11</sup>So the land was at rest for forty years,<sup>j</sup> until Othniel, son of Kenaz, died.

Ehud. <sup>12</sup>Again the Israelites did what was evil in the sight of the LORD, so he strengthened Eglon, king of Moab, against Israel because they did what was evil in the sight of the LORD. <sup>13</sup>Taking the Ammonites and Amalek as allies, he went and defeated Israel, taking possession of the City of Palms. <sup>14</sup>So the Israelites served Eglon, king of Moab, for eighteen years.

<sup>15</sup>But when the Israelites cried out to the LORD, he raised up for them a savior, Ehud, son of Gera, a Benjaminite who was left-handed.* The Israelites would send their tribute to Eglon, king of Moab, by him. <sup>16</sup>Ehud made himself a two-edged dagger a foot long, and strapped it under his clothes on his right thigh. <sup>17</sup>He presented the tribute to Eglon, king of Moab; now Eglon was a very fat man. <sup>18</sup>When he had finished presenting the tribute, he dismissed the troops who had carried the tribute. <sup>19</sup>But he himself turned back at the sculptured stones near Gilgal, and said, "I have a secret message for you, O king." And the king said, "Silence!" Then when all his attendants had left his presence, <sup>20</sup>Ehud went in to him where he sat alone in his cool upper room. Ehud said, "I have a word from God for you." So the king rose from his throne. <sup>21</sup>Then Ehud with his left hand drew the dagger from his right thigh, and thrust it into Eglon's belly. <sup>22</sup>The hilt also went in after the blade, and the fat closed over the blade because he did not withdraw the dagger from the body.

<sup>23</sup>Then Ehud went out onto the porch, shutting the doors of the upper room on Eglon and locking them. <sup>24</sup>When Ehud had left and the servants had come, they saw that the doors of the upper room were locked, and thought, "He must be easing himself in the cool chamber." <sup>25</sup>They waited until they were at a loss when he did not open the doors of the upper room. So they took the key and opened them, and there was their lord lying on the floor, dead.

<sup>26</sup>During their delay Ehud escaped and, passing the sculptured stones, took refuge in Seirah. <sup>27</sup>On his arrival he sounded the horn in the mountain region of Ephraim, and the Israelites went down from the mountains with him as their leader. <sup>28</sup> "Follow me," he said to them, "for the LORD has delivered your enemies the Moabites into your power."<sup>k</sup> So they followed him down and seized the fords of the Jordan against the Moabites, permitting no one to cross. <sup>29</sup>On that occasion they slew about ten thousand Moabites, all of them strong warriors. Not one escaped. <sup>30</sup>So Moab was brought under the power of Israel<sup>l</sup> at that time; and the land had rest for eighty years.<sup>m</sup>

Shamgar. <sup>31</sup>After him there was Shamgar,* son of Anath,<sup>n</sup> who slew six hundred Philistines with an oxgoad.<sup>o</sup> He, too, was a savior for Israel.

CHAPTER 4

Deborah and Barak. <sup>1p</sup> The Israelites again did what was evil in the sight of the LORD; Ehud was dead. <sup>2</sup>So the LORD sold them into the power of the Canaanite king, Jabin, who reigned in Hazor. The general of his army was Sisera, who lived in Harosheth-ha-goiim.<sup>q</sup> <sup>3r</sup> But the Israelites cried out to the LORD; for with his nine hundred iron chariots Jabin harshly oppressed the Israelites for twenty years.

<sup>4</sup>At that time the prophet Deborah, wife of Lappidoth, was judging Israel. <sup>5</sup>She used to sit under Deborah's palm tree, between Ramah and Bethel in the mountain region of Ephraim, where the Israelites came up to her for judgment. <sup>6</sup>She had Barak, son of Abinoam,<sup>s</sup> summoned from Kedesh of Naphtali. She said to him, "This is what the LORD, the God of Israel, commands: Go, march against Mount Tabor, and take with you ten thousand men from Naphtali and Zebulun. <sup>7</sup>I will draw Sisera, the general of Jabin's army, out to you at the Wadi Kishon,<sup>t</sup> together with his chariots and troops, and I will deliver them into your power." <sup>8</sup>But Barak answered her, "If you come with me, I will go; if you do not come with me, I will not go." <sup>9</sup> "I will certainly go with you," she replied, "but you will not gain glory for the expedition on which you are setting out, for it is into a woman's power that the LORD is going to sell Sisera." So Deborah arose and went with Barak and journeyed with him to Kedesh.

<sup>10</sup>Barak summoned Zebulun and Naphtali to Kedesh, and ten thousand men followed him.<sup>u</sup> Deborah also went up with him. <sup>11</sup> * Now Heber the Kenite had detached himself from Cain, the descendants of Hobab, Moses' father-in-law,<sup>v</sup> and had pitched his tent by the terebinth of Zaanannim, which was near Kedesh.

<sup>12</sup>It was reported to Sisera that Barak, son of Abinoam, had gone up to Mount Tabor. <sup>13</sup>So Sisera called out all nine hundred of his iron chariots and all his forces from Harosheth-ha-goiim to the Wadi Kishon. <sup>14</sup>Deborah then said to Barak, "Up! This is the day on which the LORD has delivered Sisera into your power. The LORD marches before you." So Barak went down Mount Tabor, followed by his ten thousand men. <sup>15</sup>And the LORD threw Sisera and all his chariots and forces into a panic before Barak.<sup>w</sup>

Sisera himself dismounted from his chariot and fled on foot, <sup>16</sup>but Barak pursued the chariots and the army as far as Harosheth-ha-goiim. The entire army of Sisera fell beneath the sword, not even one man surviving.

<sup>17</sup>Sisera fled on foot to the tent of Jael, wife of Heber the Kenite, for there was peace between Jabin, king of Hazor, and the family of Heber the Kenite. <sup>18</sup>Jael went out to meet Sisera and said to him, “Turn aside, my lord, turn aside with me; do not be afraid.” So he went into her tent, and she covered him with a rug. <sup>19</sup>He said to her, “Please give me a little water to drink. I am thirsty.” So she opened a skin of milk, gave him a drink, and then covered him.<sup>x</sup> <sup>20</sup> “Stand at the entrance of the tent,” he said to her. “If anyone comes and asks, ‘Is there someone here?’ say, ‘No!’”<sup>21</sup>Jael, wife of Heber, got a tent peg and took a mallet in her hand. When Sisera was in a deep sleep from exhaustion, she approached him stealthily and drove the peg through his temple and down into the ground, and he died.<sup>y</sup> <sup>22</sup>Then when Barak came in pursuit of Sisera, Jael went out to meet him and said to him, “Come, I will show you the man you are looking for.” So he went in with her, and there lay Sisera dead, with the tent peg through his temple.

Important Cities Mentioned in Judges

Song of Deborah.<sup>1z</sup> On that day Deborah sang this song—and Barak, son of Abinoam:

<sup>2*</sup> When uprising broke out in Israel, when the people rallied for duty—bless the LORD!

<sup>3</sup> Hear, O kings! Give ear, O princes!
I will sing, I will sing to the LORD,
I will make music to the LORD, the God of Israel.

<sup>4*</sup> <sup>a</sup> LORD, when you went out from Seir, when you marched from the plains of Edom,

The earth shook, the heavens poured,
the clouds poured rain,

<sup>5</sup> The mountains streamed, before the LORD, the One of Sinai, before the LORD, the God of Israel.

<sup>6</sup> In the days of Shamgar, son of Anath,<sup>b</sup>
in the days of Jael, caravans ceased:
Those who traveled the roads

now traveled by roundabout paths.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>7</sup> Gone was freedom beyond the walls, gone indeed from Israel.

When I, Deborah, arose, when I arose, a mother in Israel.*

<sup>8</sup> New gods were their choice;
then war was at the gates.

No shield was to be found, no spear, among forty thousand in Israel!

<sup>9</sup> My heart is with the leaders of Israel, with the dedicated ones of the people—bless the LORD;

<sup>10</sup> Those who ride on white donkeys, seated on saddle rugs,
and those who travel the road,
Sing of them

<sup>11</sup>to the sounds of musicians at the wells.
There they recount the just deeds of the LORD,
his just deeds bringing freedom to Israel.

<sup>12</sup>Awake, awake, Deborah!
Awake, awake, strike up a song!
Arise, Barak!
Take captive your captors, son of Abinoam!

<sup>13</sup>Then down went Israel against the mighty, the army of the LORD went down for him against the warriors.

<sup>14</sup>* From Ephraim, their base in the valley; behind you, Benjamin, among your troops.
From Machir came down commanders, from Zebulun wielders of the marshal's staff.

<sup>15</sup>The princes of Issachar were with Deborah,
Issachar, faithful to Barak;
in the valley they followed at his heels.
Among the clans of Reuben
great were the searchings of heart!

<sup>16</sup>Why did you stay beside your hearths listening to the lowing of the herds?
Among the clans of Reuben
great were the searchings of heart!

<sup>17</sup>Gilead stayed beyond the Jordan;
Why did Dan spend his time in ships?
Asher remained along the shore,
he stayed in his havens.

<sup>18</sup>Zebulun was a people who defied death,
Naphtali, too, on the open heights! <sup>d</sup>

<sup>19</sup>The kings came and fought;
then they fought, those kings of Canaan,
At Taanach by the waters of Megiddo;
no spoil of silver did they take.

<sup>20</sup>From the heavens the stars * fought; from their courses they fought against

Sisera.<sup>e</sup>

21 The Wadi Kishon swept them away;
the wadi overwhelmed them, the Wadi
Kishon.<sup>f</sup>

Trample down the strong!*

22 Then the hoofs of the horses hammered, the galloping, galloping of steeds.

23 “Curse Meroz,”* says the messenger of the LORD,

“curse, curse its inhabitants!
For they did not come when the LORD helped, the help of the LORD against the warriors.”

24 Most blessed of women is Jael,<sup>g</sup>
the wife of Heber the Kenite, blessed among tent-dwelling women!

25 He asked for water, she gave him milk, in a princely bowl she brought him
curds.<sup>h</sup>

26<sup>i</sup> With her hand she reached for the peg, with her right hand, the workman’s hammer.

She hammered Sisera, crushed his head;
she smashed, pierced his temple.

27 At her feet he sank down, fell, lay still;
down at her feet he sank and fell;
where he sank down, there he fell,
slain.

28* From the window she looked down, the mother of Sisera peered through the lattice:

“Why is his chariot so long in coming?
why are the hoofbeats of his chariots delayed?”

29 The wisest of her princesses answers her;
she even replies to herself,

30 “They must be dividing the spoil they took:
a slave woman or two for each man,

Spoil of dyed cloth for Sisera, spoil of ornate dyed cloth,
    a pair of ornate dyed cloths for my neck in the spoil.”

<sup>31</sup>So perish all your enemies, O LORD!<sup>j</sup>

But may those who love you be like the sun rising in its might!

And the land was at rest for forty years.<sup>k</sup>

See RG 188–93

The Call of Gideon. <sup>1</sup>The Israelites did what was evil in the sight of the LORD, who therefore delivered them into the power of Midian for seven years, <sup>2</sup>so that Midian held Israel subject. From fear of Midian the Israelites made dens in the mountains, the caves, and the strongholds. <sup>3</sup>For it used to be that whenever the Israelites had completed sowing their crops, Midian, Amalek, and the Kedemites* would come up, <sup>4</sup>encamp against them, and lay waste the produce of the land as far as the outskirts of Gaza, leaving no sustenance in Israel, and no sheep, ox, or donkey. <sup>5</sup>For they would come up with their livestock, and their tents would appear as thick as locusts. They would be too many to count when they came into the land to lay it waste. <sup>6m</sup> Israel was reduced to utter poverty by Midian, and so the Israelites cried out to the LORD.

<sup>7</sup>When Israel cried out to the LORD because of Midian, <sup>8n</sup> the LORD sent a prophet to the Israelites who said to them: Thus says the LORD, the God of Israel: I am the one who brought you up from Egypt; I brought you out of the house of slavery. <sup>9</sup>I rescued you from the power of Egypt and all your oppressors. I drove them out before you and gave you their land. <sup>10</sup>And I said to you: I, the LORD, am your God; you shall not fear the gods of the Amorites in whose land you are dwelling. But you did not listen to me.

<sup>11</sup>Then the messenger of the LORD came and sat under the terebinth in Ophrah that belonged to Joash the Abiezrite. Joash's son Gideon<sup>o</sup> was beating out wheat in the wine press to save it from the Midianites, <sup>12</sup>and the messenger of the LORD appeared to him and said: The LORD is with you, you mighty warrior! <sup>13</sup> “My lord,” Gideon said to him, “if the LORD is with us, why has all this happened to us? Where are his wondrous deeds about which our ancestors told us when they said, ‘Did not the LORD bring us up from Egypt?’ For now the LORD has abandoned us and has delivered us into the power of Midian.” <sup>14p</sup> The LORD turned to him and said: Go with the strength you have, and save Israel from the power of Midian. Is it not I who send you? <sup>15</sup>But he answered him, “Please, my Lord, how can I save Israel? My family is the poorest in Manasseh, and I am the most insignificant in my father's house.”<sup>q</sup> <sup>16</sup>The LORD said to him: I will be with you,* and you will cut down Midian to the last man. <sup>17</sup>He answered him, "If you look on me with favor, give me a sign that you are the one speaking with me. <sup>18</sup>Please do not depart from here until I come to you and bring out my offering and set it before you." He answered: I will await your return.

<sup>19</sup>So Gideon went off and prepared a young goat and an ephah* of flour in the form of unleavened cakes. Putting the meat in a basket and the broth in a pot, he brought them out to him under the terebinth and presented them. <sup>20r</sup> The messenger of God said to him: Take the meat and unleavened cakes and lay them on this rock; then pour out the broth. When he had done so, <sup>21</sup>the messenger of the LORD stretched out the tip of the staff he held. When he touched the meat and unleavened cakes, a fire came up from the rock and consumed the meat and unleavened cakes. Then the messenger of the LORD disappeared from sight. <sup>22</sup> * Gideon, now aware that it had been the messenger of the LORD, said, "Alas, Lord GOD, that I have seen the messenger of the LORD face to face!"<sup>s</sup> <sup>23</sup>The LORD answered him: You are safe. Do not fear. You shall not die. <sup>24</sup>So Gideon built there an altar to the LORD and called it Yahweh-shalom. <sup>*t</sup> To this day it is still in Ophrah of the Abiezrites.

<sup>25</sup>That same night the LORD said to him: Take your father's bull, the bull fattened for seven years, and pull down your father's altar to Baal. As for the asherah* beside it, cut it down <sup>26</sup>and build an altar to the LORD, your God, on top of this stronghold with the pile of wood. Then take the fattened bull and offer it as a whole-burnt sacrifice on the wood from the asherah you have cut down. <sup>27</sup>So Gideon took ten of his servants and did as the LORD had commanded him. But he was too afraid of his family and of the townspeople to do it by day; he did it at night. <sup>28</sup>Early the next morning the townspeople found that the altar of Baal had been dismantled, the asherah beside it cut down, and the fattened bull offered on the altar that was built. <sup>29</sup>They asked one another, "Who did this?" They inquired and searched until they were told, "Gideon, son of Joash, did it." <sup>30</sup>So the townspeople said to Joash, "Bring out your son that he may die, for he has dismantled the altar of Baal and cut down the asherah that was beside it." <sup>31</sup>But Joash replied to all who were standing around him, "Is it for you to take action for Baal, or be his savior? Anyone who takes action for him shall be put to death by morning. If he is a god, let him act for himself,<sup>u</sup> since his altar has been dismantled!”<sup>32</sup> So on that day Gideon was called Jerubbaal,<sup>* v</sup> because of the words, “Let Baal take action against him, since he dismantled his altar.”

<sup>33</sup> Then all Midian and Amalek and the Kedemites mustered and crossed over into the valley of Jezreel, where they encamped. <sup>34</sup> And Gideon was clothed with the spirit of the LORD,<sup>* w</sup> and he blew the horn summoning Abiezer to follow him. <sup>35</sup> He sent messengers throughout Manasseh, and they, too, were summoned to follow him; he also sent messengers throughout Asher, Zebulun, and Naphtali, and they advanced to meet the others. <sup>36</sup> Gideon said to God, “If indeed you are going to save Israel through me, as you have said, <sup>37</sup> I am putting this woolen fleece on the threshing floor, and if dew is on the fleece alone, while all the ground is dry, I shall know that you will save Israel through me, as you have said.” <sup>38</sup> That is what happened. Early the next morning when he wrung out the fleece, he squeezed enough dew from it to fill a bowl. <sup>39</sup> Gideon then said to God, “Do not be angry with me if I speak once more. Let me make just one more test with the fleece. Let the fleece alone be dry, but let there be dew on all the ground.” <sup>40</sup> That is what God did that night: the fleece alone was dry, but there was dew on all the ground.

CHAPTER 7

See RG 188–93

Defeat of Midian. <sup>1</sup>Early the next morning Jerubbaal<sup>x</sup> (that is, Gideon) encamped by the spring of Harod with all his soldiers. The camp of Midian was north of him, beside the hill of Moreh in the valley. <sup>2</sup>The LORD said to Gideon: You have too many soldiers with you for me to deliver Midian into their power, lest Israel vaunt itself against me and say, “My own power saved me.”<sup>* y</sup> <sup>3</sup>So announce in the hearing of the soldiers, “If anyone is afraid or fearful, let him leave!<sup>z</sup> Let him depart from Mount Gilead!”* Twenty-two thousand of the soldiers left, but ten thousand remained. <sup>4</sup>The LORD said to Gideon: There are still too many soldiers. Lead them down to the water and I will test them for you there. If I tell you that a certain man is to go with you, he must go with you. But no one is to go if I tell you he must not. <sup>5*</sup> When Gideon led the soldiers down to the water, the LORD said to him: Everyone who laps up the water as a dog does with its tongue you shall set aside by himself; and everyone who kneels down to drink raising his hand to his mouth you shall set aside by himself. <sup>6</sup>Those who lapped up the water with their tongues numbered three hundred, but all the rest of the soldiers knelt down to drink the water. <sup>7</sup>The LORD said to Gideon: By means of the three hundred who lapped up the water I will save you and deliver Midian into your power. So let all the other soldiers go home. <sup>8</sup>They took up such supplies as the soldiers had with them, as well as their horns, and Gideon sent the rest of the Israelites to their tents, but kept the three hundred men. Now the camp of Midian was below him in the valley.

Battles of Gideon

<sup>9</sup>That night the LORD said to Gideon: Go, descend on the camp, for I have delivered it into your power. <sup>10</sup>If you are afraid to attack, go down to the camp with your aide Purah <sup>11</sup>and listen to what they are saying. After that you will have the courage to descend on the camp. So he went down with his aide Purah to the outposts of the armed men in the camp. <sup>12a</sup> The Midianites, Amalekites, and all the Kedemites were lying in the valley, thick as locusts. Their camels could not be counted, for they were as many as the sands on the seashore. <sup>13</sup> * When Gideon arrived, one man was telling another about a dream. “I had a dream,” he said, “that a round loaf of barley bread was rolling into the camp of Midian. It came to a certain tent and struck it and turned it upside down, and the tent collapsed.” <sup>14</sup> “This can only be the sword of the Israelite Gideon, son of Joash,” the other replied.

“God has delivered Midian and all the camp into his power.” <sup>15</sup>When Gideon heard the account of the dream and its explanation, he bowed down. Then returning to the camp of Israel, he said, “Arise, for the LORD has delivered the camp of Midian into your power.”

<sup>16</sup>He divided the three hundred men into three companies, and provided them all with horns and with empty jars and torches inside the jars. <sup>17</sup>“Watch me and follow my lead,” he told them. “I shall go to the edge of the camp, and as I do, you must do also. <sup>18</sup>When I and those with me blow horns, you too must blow horns all around the camp and cry out, ‘For the LORD and for Gideon!’ ” <sup>19</sup>So Gideon and the hundred men who were with him came to the edge of the camp at the beginning of the middle watch,* just after the posting of the guards. They blew the horns and broke the jars they were holding. <sup>20</sup>When the three companies had blown their horns and broken their jars, they took the torches in their left hands, and in their right the horns they had been blowing, and cried out, “As word for the LORD and for Gideon!” <sup>21</sup>They all remained standing in place around the camp, while the whole camp began to run and shout and flee. <sup>22</sup>When they blew the three hundred horns, the LORD set the sword of one against another throughout the camp, and they fled as far as Beth-shittah in the direction of Zeredah, near the border of Abel-meholah at Tabbath.

<sup>23b</sup> The Israelites were called to arms from Naphtali, from Asher, and from all Manasseh, and they pursued Midian. <sup>24</sup>Gideon also sent messengers throughout the mountain region of Ephraim to say, “Go down to intercept Midian, and seize the water courses against them as far as Beth-barah, as well as the Jordan.” So all the Ephraimites were called to arms, and they seized the water courses as far as Beth-barah, and the Jordan as well. <sup>25c</sup> They captured the two princes of Midian, Oreb and Zeeb, killing Oreb at the rock of Oreb and Zeeb at the wine press of Zeeb. Then they pursued Midian, but they had the heads of Oreb and Zeeb brought to Gideon beyond the Jordan.

CHAPTER 8

<sup>1d</sup> But the Ephraimites said to him, “What have you done to us, not summoning us when you went to fight against Midian?” And they quarreled bitterly with him. <sup>2</sup>But he answered them, “What have I done in comparison with you? Is not the gleaning of Ephraim better than the vintage of Abiezer? <sup>e</sup> <sup>3</sup>It was into your power God delivered the princes of Midian, Oreb and Zeeb. <sup>f</sup> What have I been able to do in comparison with you?” When he said this, their anger against him subsided.

<sup>4</sup>When Gideon reached the Jordan and crossed it, he and his three hundred men were exhausted and famished. <sup>5</sup>So he said to the people of Succoth, “Will you give my followers some loaves of bread? They are exhausted, and I am pursuing Zebah and Zalmunna, kings of Midian.” <sup>6</sup>But the princes of Succoth replied, “Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna already in your possession, that we should give food to your army?”* <sup>7</sup>Gideon said, “Very well; when the LORD has delivered Zebah and Zalmunna into my power, I will thrash your bodies with desert thorns and briers.” <sup>8</sup>He went up from there to Penuel and made the same request of them, but the people of Penuel answered him as had the people of Succoth. <sup>9</sup>So to the people of Penuel, too, he said, “When I return in peace, I will demolish this tower.”

<sup>10</sup>Now Zebah and Zalmunna were in Karkor with their force of about fifteen thousand men; these were all who were left of the whole Kedemite army, a hundred and twenty thousand swordsmen having fallen. <sup>11</sup>Gideon went up by the route of the tentdwellers east of Nobah and Jogbehah, and attacked the force when it felt secure. <sup>12</sup>Zebah and Zalmunna fled and Gideon pursued them. He captured the two kings of Midian, Zebah and Zalmunna, terrifying the entire force.

<sup>13</sup>Then Gideon, son of Joash, returned from battle by the pass of Heres. <sup>14</sup>He captured a young man of Succoth and questioned him, and he wrote down for him the seventy-seven princes and elders of Succoth. <sup>15</sup>So he went to the princes of Succoth and said, “Here are Zebah and Zalmunna, with whom you taunted me, ‘Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna already in your possession, that we should give food to your weary men?’ ” <sup>16</sup>He seized the elders of the city, and with desert thorns and briers he thrashed the people of Succoth. <sup>17</sup>He also demolished the tower of Penuel and killed the people of the city.

<sup>18</sup>Then he said to Zebah and Zalmunna, “What about the men you killed at Tabor?” “They were all like you,” they replied. “They appeared to be princes.” <sup>19</sup>“They were my brothers, my mother’s sons,” he said. “As the LORD lives, if you had spared their lives, I would not kill you.” <sup>20</sup>Then he said to his firstborn, Jether, “Go, kill them.” But the boy did not draw his sword, for he was afraid, for he was still a boy. <sup>21g</sup> Zebah and Zalmunna said, “Come, kill us yourself, for as a man is, so is his strength.” So Gideon stepped forward and killed Zebah and Zalmunna. He also took the crescents that were on the necks of their camels.

<sup>22h</sup> The Israelites then said to Gideon, “Rule over us—you, your son, and your son’s son—for you saved us from the power of Midian.” <sup>23</sup>But Gideon answered them, “I will not rule over you, nor shall my son rule over you. The LORD must rule over you.”<sup>i</sup>

<sup>24</sup>Gideon went on to say, “Let me make a request of you. Give me, each of you, a ring from his spoils.” (Since they were Ishmaelites,* the enemy had gold rings.) <sup>25</sup>“We will certainly give them,” they replied, and they spread out a cloak into which everyone threw a ring from his spoils. <sup>26</sup>The gold rings he had requested weighed seventeen hundred gold shekels, apart from the crescents and pendants, the purple garments worn by the kings of Midian, and apart from the trappings that were on the necks of their camels. <sup>27j</sup> Gideon made an ephod out of the gold and placed it in his city, Ophrah. All Israel prostituted themselves there, and it became a snare to Gideon and his household.

<sup>28</sup>Midian was brought into subjection by the Israelites; they no longer held their heads high, and the land had rest for forty years,<sup>k</sup> during the lifetime of Gideon.

Gideon’s Son Abimelech. <sup>29</sup>Then Jerubbaal, son of Joash, went to live in his house. <sup>30l</sup> Now Gideon had seventy sons, his own offspring, for he had many wives. <sup>31</sup>His concubine* who lived in Shechem also bore him a son, whom he named Abimelech. <sup>32</sup>At a good old age Gideon, son of Joash, died and was buried in the tomb of Joash his father in Ophrah of the Abiezrites. <sup>33m</sup> But after Gideon was dead, the Israelites again prostituted themselves by following the Baals, making Baal-berith* their god. <sup>34</sup>The Israelites did not remember the LORD, their God, who had delivered them from the power of their enemies all around them. <sup>35</sup>Nor were they loyal to the house of Jerubbaal (Gideon) for all the good he had done for Israel.

CHAPTER 9

<sup>1</sup>Abimelech, son of Jerubbaal, went to his mother's kin in Shechem,<sup>n</sup> and said to them and to the whole clan to which his mother's family belonged, <sup>2</sup>“Put this question to all the lords of Shechem: ‘Which is better for you: that seventy men, all Jerubbaal's sons, rule over you, or that one man rule over you?’ You must remember that I am your own flesh and bone.”<sup>o</sup> <sup>3</sup>When his mother's kin repeated these words on his behalf to all the lords of Shechem, they set their hearts on Abimelech, thinking, “He is our kin.” <sup>4</sup>They also gave him seventy pieces of silver from the temple of Baal-berith, with which Abimelech hired worthless men and outlaws as his followers. <sup>5</sup>He then went to his father's house in Ophrah, and killed his brothers, the seventy sons of Jerubbaal, on one stone. Only the youngest son of Jerubbaal, Jotham, escaped, for he was hidden. <sup>6</sup>Then all the lords of Shechem and all Beth-millo came together and made Abimelech king by the terebinth at the memorial pillar in Shechem.

<sup>7</sup>When this was reported to Jotham, he went and stood at the top of Mount Gerizim and cried out in a loud voice:

“Hear me, lords of Shechem, and may God hear you!

<sup>8</sup>One day the trees went out to anoint a king over themselves.
So they said to the olive tree,
‘Reign over us.’

<sup>9</sup>But the olive tree answered them, ‘Must I give up my rich oil, whereby gods and human beings are honored,*
and go off to hold sway over the trees?’

<sup>10</sup>Then the trees said to the fig tree,
‘Come; you reign over us!’

<sup>11</sup>But the fig tree answered them, ‘Must I give up my sweetness and my sweet fruit,
and go off to hold sway over the trees?’

<sup>12</sup>Then the trees said to the vine,

‘Come you, reign over us.’

<sup>13</sup>But the vine answered them, ‘Must I give up my wine that cheers gods* and human beings,
and go off to hold sway over the trees?’

<sup>14</sup>Then all the trees said to the buckthorn,
‘Come; you reign over us!’

<sup>15</sup>The buckthorn answered the trees,
‘If you are anointing me in good faith,
to make me king over you,
come, and take refuge in my shadow.
But if not, let fire come from the buckthorn

and devour the cedars of Lebanon.’<sup>P</sup>

<sup>16</sup>“Now then, if you have acted in good faith and integrity in appointing Abimelech your king, if you have acted with good will toward Jerubbaal and his house, and if you have treated him as he deserved— <sup>17</sup>for my father fought for you at the risk of his life when he delivered you from the power of Midian, <sup>18</sup>but you have risen against my father’s house today and killed his seventy sons upon one stone and made Abimelech, the son of his maidservant,<sup>Q</sup> king over the lords of Shechem, because he is your kin— <sup>19</sup>if, then, you have acted in good faith and integrity toward Jerubbaal and his house today, then rejoice in Abimelech and may he in turn rejoice in you! <sup>20</sup>But if not, let fire come forth from Abimelech and devour the lords of Shechem and Beth-millo, and let fire come forth from the lords of Shechem and Beth-millo and devour Abimelech.” <sup>21</sup>Then Jotham fled and escaped to Beer, where he remained for fear of his brother Abimelech.

<sup>22</sup>When Abimelech had ruled Israel for three years, <sup>23</sup>God put an evil spirit<sup>R</sup> between Abimelech and the lords of Shechem, and the lords of Shechem broke faith with the house of Abimelech. <sup>24</sup>This was to repay the violence done to the seventy sons of Jerubbaal and to avenge their blood upon their brother Abimelech, who killed them, and upon the lords of Shechem, who encouraged him to kill his brothers. <sup>25</sup>The lords of Shechem then set men in ambush for him on the mountaintops, and they robbed all who passed them on the road. It was reported to Abimelech.

<sup>26</sup>Now Gaal, son of Ebed, and his kin came, and when they passed through Shechem, the lords of Shechem put their trust in him. <sup>27</sup>They went out into the fields, harvested the grapes from their vineyards, trod them out, and held a festival. Then they went to the temple of their god, where they ate and drank and cursed Abimelech. <sup>28s</sup> Gaal, son of Ebed, said, “Who is Abimelech? And who is Shechem that we should serve him? Did not the son of Jerubbaal and his lieutenant Zebul serve the men of Hamor, father of Shechem?<sup>t</sup> So why should we serve him? <sup>29</sup>Would that these troops were entrusted to my command! I would depose Abimelech. I would say to Abimelech, ‘Get a larger army and come out!’ ”

<sup>30</sup>When Zebul, the ruler of the city, heard what Gaal, son of Ebed, had said, he was angry <sup>31</sup>and sent messengers to Abimelech in Arumah to say, “Gaal, son of Ebed, and his kin have come to Shechem and are stirring up the city against you. <sup>32</sup>So take action tonight, you and the troops who are with you, and set an ambush in the fields. <sup>33</sup>Promptly at sunrise tomorrow morning, make a raid on the city. When he and the troops who are with him come out against you, deal with him as best you can.”

<sup>34</sup>During the night Abimelech went into action with all his soldiers and set up an ambush outside of Shechem in four companies. <sup>35</sup>Gaal, son of Ebed, went out and stood at the entrance of the city gate. When Abimelech and his soldiers rose from their place of ambush, <sup>36</sup>Gaal saw the soldiers and said to Zebul, “There are soldiers coming down from the mountaintops!” But Zebul answered him, “It is the shadow of the hills that you see as men.” <sup>37</sup>But Gaal went on to say, “Soldiers are coming down from the region of Tabbur-haarez, and one company is coming by way of Elon-meonenim.” <sup>38</sup>Zebul said to him, “Where now is your boast, when you said, ‘Who is Abimelech that we should serve him?’ Are these not the troops for whom you expressed contempt? Go out now and fight with them.” <sup>39</sup>So Gaal went out at the head of the lords of Shechem to fight against Abimelech; <sup>40</sup>but when Abimelech went after him, he fled from him. Many fell slain right up to the entrance of the gate. <sup>41</sup>Abimelech returned to Arumah, and Zebul drove Gaal and his kin away so that they could no longer remain at Shechem.

<sup>42</sup>The next day, the army marched out into the field, and it was reported to Abimelech. <sup>43</sup>He divided the troops he had into three companies, and set up an ambush in the fields. He watched until he saw the army leave the city and then went on the attack against them. <sup>44</sup>Abimelech and the company with him rushed in and stood by the entrance of the city gate, while the other two companies rushed upon all who were in the field and attacked them. <sup>45</sup>That entire day Abimelech fought against the city. He captured it, killed the people who were in it, and demolished the city itself, sowing it with salt.* <sup>u</sup>

<sup>46</sup>When they heard of this, all the lords of the Migdal-shechem went into the crypt of the temple of El-berith. <sup>47</sup>It was reported to Abimelech that all the lords of the Migdal-shechem were gathered together. <sup>48</sup>So he went up Mount Zalmon with all his soldiers, took his ax in his hand, and cut down some brushwood. This he lifted to his shoulder, then said to the troops with him, "Hurry! Do just as you have seen me do." <sup>49</sup>So all the soldiers likewise cut down brushwood and, following Abimelech, placed it against the crypt. Then they set the crypt on fire over them, so that every one of the people of the Migdal-shechem, about a thousand men and women, perished.

<sup>50</sup>Abimelech proceeded to Thebez, encamped, and captured it. <sup>51</sup>Now there was a strong tower in the middle of the city, and all the men and women and all the lords of the city fled there, shutting themselves in and going up to the roof of the tower. <sup>52</sup>Abimelech came up to the tower and fought against it. When he came close to the entrance of the tower to set it on fire, <sup>53</sup>a certain woman cast the upper part of a millstone* down on Abimelech's head, and it fractured his skull.<sup>v</sup> <sup>54</sup>He immediately called his armor-bearer and said to him, "Draw your sword and put me to death so they will not say about me, 'A woman killed him.'"<sup>w</sup> So his attendant ran him through and he died. <sup>55</sup>When the Israelites saw that Abimelech was dead, they all left for their homes.

The Twelve Judges

<sup>56</sup>Thus did God repay the evil that Abimelech had done to his father in killing his seventy brothers. <sup>57</sup>God also brought all the wickedness of the people of Shechem back on their heads, for the curse of Jotham, son of Jerubbaal, overtook them.

CHAPTER 10

Tola. <sup>1</sup>After Abimelech, Tola,* son of Puah, son of Dodo, a man of Issachar, rose up to save Israel; he lived in Shamir in the mountain region of Ephraim. <sup>2</sup>When he had judged Israel twenty-three years, he died and was buried in Shamir.

Jair. <sup>3</sup>Jair the Gileadite came after him and judged Israel twenty-two years. <sup>4x</sup> He had thirty sons who rode on thirty donkeys* and possessed thirty cities in the land of Gilead (these are called Havvoth-jair to the present day).<sup>y</sup> <sup>5</sup>Jair died and was buried in Kamon.

Oppression by the Ammonites. <sup>6z</sup> The Israelites again did what was evil in the sight of the LORD, serving the Baals and Ashtarts, the gods of Aram, the gods of Sidon, the gods of Moab, the gods of the Ammonites, and the gods of the Philistines. Since they had abandoned the LORD and would not serve him, <sup>7</sup>the LORD became angry with Israel and he sold them into the power of the Philistines and the Ammonites. <sup>8</sup>For eighteen years they afflicted and oppressed the Israelites in Bashan, and all the Israelites in the Amorite land beyond the Jordan in Gilead. <sup>9</sup>The Ammonites also crossed the Jordan to fight against Judah, Benjamin and the house of Ephraim, so that Israel was in great distress.

<sup>10a</sup> Then the Israelites cried out to the LORD, “We have sinned against you, for we have abandoned our God and served the Baals.” <sup>11b</sup> The LORD answered the Israelites: Did not the Egyptians, the Amorites,<sup>c</sup> the Ammonites, the Philistines, <sup>12</sup>the Sidonians, the Amalekites, and the Midianites<sup>d</sup> oppress you? Yet when you cried out to me, and I saved you from their power, <sup>13</sup>you still abandoned me and served other gods. Therefore I will save you no more.<sup>e</sup> <sup>14</sup>Go and cry out to the gods you have chosen; let them save you in your time of distress. <sup>15</sup>But the Israelites said to the LORD, “We have sinned. Do to us whatever is good in your sight. Only deliver us this day!” <sup>16</sup>And they cast out the foreign gods from their midst and served the LORD, so that he grieved over the misery of Israel.

<sup>17</sup>The Ammonites were called out for war and encamped in Gilead, while the Israelites assembled and encamped at Mizpah. <sup>18</sup>The captains of the army of Gilead said to one another, “The one who begins the war against the Ammonites shall be leader of all the inhabitants of Gilead.”<sup>f</sup>

Jephthah. <sup>1</sup>Jephthah<sup>g</sup> the Gileadite was a warrior. He was the son of a prostitute, fathered by Gilead. <sup>2</sup>Gilead's wife had also borne him sons. When they grew up the sons of the wife had driven Jephthah away, saying to him, "You shall inherit nothing in our father's house, for you are the son of another woman." <sup>3</sup>So Jephthah had fled from his brothers and taken up residence in the land of Tob.<sup>h</sup> Worthless men had joined company with him, and went out with him on raids.<sup>i</sup>

<sup>4</sup>Some time later, the Ammonites went to war with Israel. <sup>5</sup>As soon as the Ammonites were at war with Israel, the elders of Gilead went to bring Jephthah from the land of Tob. <sup>6</sup>"Come," they said to Jephthah, "be our commander so that we can fight the Ammonites." <sup>7</sup>"Are you not the ones who hated me and drove me from my father's house?" Jephthah replied to the elders of Gilead, "Why do you come to me now, when you are in distress?" <sup>8j</sup>The elders of Gilead said to Jephthah, "This is the reason we have come back to you now: if you go with us to fight against the Ammonites, you shall be the leader of all of the inhabitants of Gilead." <sup>9</sup>Jephthah answered the elders of Gilead, "If you bring me back to fight against the Ammonites and the LORD delivers them up to me, I will be your leader." <sup>10</sup>The elders of Gilead said to Jephthah, "The LORD is witness between us that we will do as you say." <sup>11</sup>So Jephthah went with the elders of Gilead, and the army made him their leader and commander. Jephthah gave all his orders in the presence of the LORD in Mizpah.

<sup>12</sup>Then he sent messengers to the king of the Ammonites to say, "What do you have against me that you come to fight with me in my land?" <sup>13</sup>The king of the Ammonites answered the messengers of Jephthah, "Israel took away my land from the Arnon to the Jabbok and the Jordan when they came up from Egypt.<sup>k</sup> Now restore it peaceably."

<sup>14</sup>Again Jephthah sent messengers to the king of the Ammonites, <sup>15</sup>saying to him, "This is what Jephthah says: 'Israel did not take the land of Moab or the land of the Ammonites.'<sup>l</sup> <sup>16</sup>For when they came up from Egypt, Israel went through the wilderness to the Red Sea and came to Kadesh. <sup>17</sup>Israel then sent messengers to the king of Edom saying, "Let me pass through your land.” But the king of Edom did not give consent.<sup>m</sup> They also sent to the king of Moab, but he too was unwilling. So Israel remained in Kadesh.<sup>n</sup> <sup>18</sup>Then they went through the wilderness, and bypassing the land of Edom and the land of Moab, they arrived east of the land of Moab and encamped across the Arnon.<sup>o</sup> Thus they did not enter the territory of Moab, for the Arnon is the boundary of Moab.<sup>p</sup> <sup>19q</sup> Then Israel sent messengers to the Amorite king Sihon, who was king of Heshbon. Israel said to him, “Let me pass through your land to my own place.” <sup>20</sup>But Sihon refused to let Israel pass through his territory. He gathered all his soldiers, and they encamped at Jahaz and fought Israel. <sup>21</sup>But the LORD, the God of Israel, delivered Sihon and his entire army into the power of Israel, who defeated them and occupied all the land of the Amorites who lived in that region. <sup>22</sup>They occupied all of the Amorite territory from the Arnon to the Jabbok and the wilderness to the Jordan.<sup>r</sup> <sup>23</sup>Now, then, it was the LORD, the God of Israel, who dispossessed the Amorites for his people, Israel. And you are going to dispossess them? <sup>24</sup>Should you not take possession of that which your god Chemosh* gave you to possess, and should we not take possession of all that the LORD, our God, has dispossessed for us? <sup>25</sup>Now, then, are you any better than Balak, son of Zippor, king of Moab? Did he ever quarrel with Israel or make war against them?<sup>s</sup> <sup>26</sup>Israel has dwelt in Heshbon and its villages, Aroer and its villages, and all the cities on the banks of the Arnon for three hundred years.<sup>t</sup> Why did you not recover them during that time? <sup>27</sup>As for me, I have not sinned against you, but you wrong me by making war against me. Let the LORD, who is judge, decide this day between the Israelites and the Ammonites!’ ” <sup>28</sup>But the king of the Ammonites paid no heed to the message Jephthah sent him.

Jephthah’s Vow. <sup>29</sup>The spirit of the LORD came upon Jephthah.<sup>u</sup> He passed through Gilead and Manasseh, and through Mizpah of Gilead as well, and from Mizpah of Gilead he crossed over against the Ammonites. <sup>30</sup>

* Jephthah made a vow to the LORD.<sup>v</sup> “If you deliver the Ammonites into my power,” he said, <sup>31</sup> “whoever comes out of the doors of my house to meet me when I return from the Ammonites in peace shall belong to the LORD. I shall offer him up as a burnt offering.”

<sup>32</sup>Jephthah then crossed over against the Ammonites to fight against them, and the LORD delivered them into his power. <sup>33</sup>He inflicted a very severe defeat on them from Aroer to the approach of Minnith—twenty cities in all—and as far as Abel-keramin. So the Ammonites were brought into subjection by the Israelites. <sup>34</sup>When Jephthah returned to his house in Mizpah, it was his daughter who came out to meet him, with tambourine-playing and dancing. She was his only child: he had neither son nor daughter besides her. <sup>35</sup>When he saw her, he tore his garments and said, “Ah, my daughter! You have struck me down and brought calamity upon me. For I have made a vow* to the LORD and I cannot take it back.”<sup>w</sup> <sup>36</sup>“Father,” she replied, “you have made a vow to the LORD. Do with me as you have vowed, because the LORD has taken vengeance for you against your enemies the Ammonites.” <sup>37</sup>Then she said to her father, “Let me have this favor. Do nothing for two months, that I and my companions may go wander in the mountains to weep for my virginity.” <sup>38</sup>“Go,” he replied, and sent her away for two months. So she departed with her companions and wept for her virginity in the mountains. <sup>39</sup>At the end of the two months she returned to her father, and he did to her as he had vowed. She had not had relations with any man.

It became a custom in Israel <sup>40</sup>for Israelite women to go yearly to mourn the daughter of Jephthah the Gileadite for four days of the year.

The Shibboleth Incident. <sup>1</sup>The men of Ephraim were called out, and they crossed over to Zaphon. They said to Jephthah, “Why did you go to fight with the Ammonites without calling us to go with you?<sup>x</sup> We will burn your house on top of you.” <sup>2</sup>Jephthah answered them, “My soldiers and I were engaged in a contest with the Ammonites. They were pressing us hard, and I cried out to you, but you did not come to save me from their power. <sup>3</sup>When I saw that you were not coming to save me, I took my life in my own hand and crossed over against the Ammonites, and the LORD delivered them into my power. Why, then, should you come up against me this day to fight with me?”

<sup>4</sup>Then Jephthah gathered together all the men of Gilead and fought against Ephraim. The men of Gilead defeated Ephraim, <sup>5</sup>and Gilead seized the fords of the Jordan against Ephraim. When any of the fleeing Ephraimites said, “Let me pass,” the men of Gilead would say to him, “Are you an Ephraimite?” If he answered, “No!” <sup>6</sup>they would ask him to say “Shibboleth.”* If he said “Sibboleth,” not pronouncing it exactly right, they would seize him and kill him at the fords of the Jordan. Forty-two thousand Ephraimites fell at that time.

<sup>7</sup>Jephthah judged Israel for six years, and Jephthah the Gileadite died and was buried in his city in Gilead.<sup>y</sup>

Ibzan. <sup>8</sup>After him Ibzan* of Bethlehem judged Israel. <sup>9z</sup> He had thirty sons and thirty daughters whom he gave in marriage outside the family, while bringing in thirty wives for his sons from outside the family. He judged Israel for seven years. <sup>10</sup>Ibzan died and was buried in Bethlehem.

Elon. <sup>11</sup>After him Elon the Zebulunite judged Israel; he judged Israel for ten years. <sup>12</sup>Elon the Zebulunite died and was buried at Aijalon in the land of Zebulun.

Abdon. <sup>13</sup>After him Abdon, son of Hillel, the Pirathonite, judged Israel. <sup>14a</sup> He had forty sons and thirty grandsons, who rode on seventy donkeys. He judged Israel for eight years. <sup>15</sup>Abdon, son of Hillel, the Pirathonite, died and was buried in Pirathon in the land of Ephraim in the mountain region of the Amalekites.

The Birth of Samson.<sup>1b</sup> The Israelites again did what was evil in the sight of the LORD, who therefore delivered them into the power of the Philistines for forty years.

<sup>2</sup>There was a certain man from Zorah, of the clan of the Danites,* whose name was Manoah. His wife was barren and had borne no children.<sup>c 3d</sup> An angel of the LORD appeared to the woman and said to her: Though you are barren and have had no children, you will conceive and bear a son.<sup>4e</sup> Now, then, be careful to drink no wine or beer and to eat nothing unclean,<sup>5</sup> for you will conceive and bear a son. No razor shall touch his head, for the boy is to be a nazirite for God* from the womb. It is he who will begin to save Israel from the power of the Philistines.

<sup>6</sup>The woman went and told her husband, “A man of God came to me; he had the appearance of an angel of God, fearsome indeed. I did not ask him where he came from, nor did he tell me his name. <sup>7</sup>But he said to me, ‘You will conceive and bear a son. So drink no wine or beer, and eat nothing unclean. For the boy shall be a nazirite for God from the womb, until the day of his death.’ ” <sup>8</sup>Manoah then prayed to the LORD. “Please, my Lord,” he said, “may the man of God whom you sent return to us to teach us what to do for the boy who is to be born.”

<sup>9</sup>God heard the prayer of Manoah, and the angel of God came again to the woman as she was sitting in the field; but her husband Manoah was not with her. <sup>10</sup>The woman ran quickly and told her husband. “The man who came to me the other day has appeared to me,” she said to him; <sup>11</sup>so Manoah got up and followed his wife. When he reached the man, he said to him, “Are you the one who spoke to my wife?” I am, he answered. <sup>12</sup>Then Manoah asked, “Now, when what you say comes true, what rules must the boy follow? What must he do?” <sup>13</sup>The angel of the LORD answered Manoah: Your wife must be careful about all the things of which I spoke to her. <sup>14</sup>She must not eat anything that comes from the vine, she must not drink wine or beer, and she must not eat anything unclean. Let her observe all that I have commanded her. <sup>15</sup>Then Manoah said to the angel of the LORD, “Permit us to detain you, so that we may prepare a young goat for you.” <sup>16</sup>But the angel of the LORD answered Manoah: Though you detained me, I would not eat your food. But if you want to prepare a burnt offering, then offer it up to the LORD. For Manoah did not know that he was the angel of the LORD. <sup>17*</sup> Then Manoah said to the angel of the LORD, “What is your name, that we may honor you when your words come true?” <sup>18f</sup> The angel of the LORD answered him: Why do you ask my name? It is wondrous. <sup>19g</sup> Then Manoah took a young goat with a grain offering and offered it on the rock to the LORD, who works wonders. While Manoah and his wife were looking on, <sup>20</sup>as the flame rose to the heavens from the altar, the angel of the LORD ascended in the flame of the altar. When Manoah and his wife saw this, they fell on their faces to the ground; <sup>21</sup>but the angel of the LORD was seen no more by Manoah and his wife. <sup>h</sup> Then Manoah, realizing that it was the angel of the LORD, <sup>22</sup>said to his wife, “We will certainly die, * for we have seen God.” <sup>23</sup>But his wife said to him, “If the LORD had meant to kill us, he would not have accepted a burnt offering and grain offering from our hands! Nor would he have let us see all this, or hear what we have heard.”

<sup>24</sup>The woman bore a son and named him Samson, and when the boy grew up the LORD blessed him. <sup>25</sup>The spirit of the LORD came upon him for the first time <sup>i</sup> in Mahaneh-dan, between Zorah and Eshtaol.

CHAPTER 14

Marriage of Samson. <sup>1</sup>Samson went down to Timnah where he saw one of the Philistine women. <sup>2</sup>On his return he told his father and mother, “I saw in Timnah a woman, a Philistine. Get her for me as a wife.” <sup>3j</sup> His father and mother said to him, “Is there no woman among your kinsfolk or among all your people, that you must go and take a woman from the uncircumcised Philistines?” But Samson answered his father, “Get her for me, for she is the one I want.” <sup>4k</sup> Now his father and mother did not know that this had been brought about by the LORD, who was seeking an opportunity against the Philistines; * for at that time they ruled over Israel.<sup>l</sup>

<sup>5</sup>So Samson went down to Timnah with his father and mother. When he turned aside to the vineyards of Timnah, a young lion came roaring out toward him. <sup>6m</sup> But the spirit of the LORD rushed upon Samson, and he tore the lion apart barehanded,<sup>n</sup> as one tears a young goat. Without telling his father or mother what he had done, <sup>7</sup>he went down and spoke to the woman. He liked her. <sup>8</sup>Later, when he came back to marry her, he turned aside to look at the remains of the lion, and there was a swarm of bees in the lion’s carcass, and honey. <sup>9</sup>So he scooped the honey out into his hands and ate it as he went along. When he came to his father and mother, he gave them some to eat, but he did not tell them that he had scooped the honey from the lion’s carcass.
